The new structure is planned to be ready for occupancy next January. It will have a floor space of 7,500 feet, including four projection rooms, fireproof storage vaults, branch express office and an assembly room for the Film Board of Trade.

Child for Adoption Was Exploitation Stunt Used for Nazimova Production

GETTING away from the usual exploitation methods, Harry Goldberg, of the Sun theatre, Omaha, pulled something really new when he offered a child for adoption as a promotion scheme for Nazimova in "The Heart of a Child."

He had a new idea and he worked it all the way from "A to &c." He did not overlook a stunt. He knew he had something good, so he took the trouble to do it just right, and it went over with a rush. And like most of the good ideas it can be worked by a house of any size. It does not even have to be confined to the Nazimova picture, though it needs to be worked with some similar title.

First Get the Orphan.

First of all he went out to the orphan asylum and picked out the best looking boy he could find; a little chap between four and five. He told the authorities the scheme and convinced them that the child would be properly placed.

Then he started a series of teasers; a black bordered heart with the lettering "Win the heart of a child." This was accepted as an advertisement of the title, but when he came out with the scheme, the announcement had a kick like a raisin-ladened home brew.

Hooking up with "Win the Heart of a Child," he announced that during the run of the play he would offer for adoption the prettiest orphan boy Omaha ever saw.

That Got Them.

That got the women; young and old, married, single and divorced. It got them whether they had no kiddies or too darned many. They all wanted to see the baby who was going to find a home.

That was easy. All they had to do was to go to the Sun any afternoon between two and five to find "Sunny" playing in the sun room of the theatre.

Let's Get It RIGHT

In the last issue of the Motion Picture News, dated May 29, there is shown a photograph of the pennant stunt as used for "Excuse My Dust," captioned "How California Theatre Put Over 'Excuse My Dust!'"

The identical photograph was shown in The Moving Picture World in the issue dated April 24—FIVE WEEKS before—properly credited to George E. Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City.

If you want it FIRST and RIGHT, look for it in The Moving Picture World.

The stage was all set. Sunny had been tricked out in the prettiest velvet suit that the Omaha stores afforded. A department store had supplied him with toys in abundance, and from two o'clock until five each afternoon the women crowded into the sun parlor and raved over his beauty.

Had a Bodyguard.

Sunny stood a good chance of being kissed to death, but Mr. Goldberg had provided a body guard in the shape of a nurse, who answered all questions and rode close herd on Sunny.

She was needed, for the questions were numerous and the osculatory attacks almost continuous, but thanks to her care Sunny came through the week without coldsores.

And the best part of it is that Sunny did not have to go back to the asylum at the end of his week's engagement. From a number of applications a committee picked out the most promising, and Sunny has a real home now where there are no prune strikes, and glories in a new set of parents.

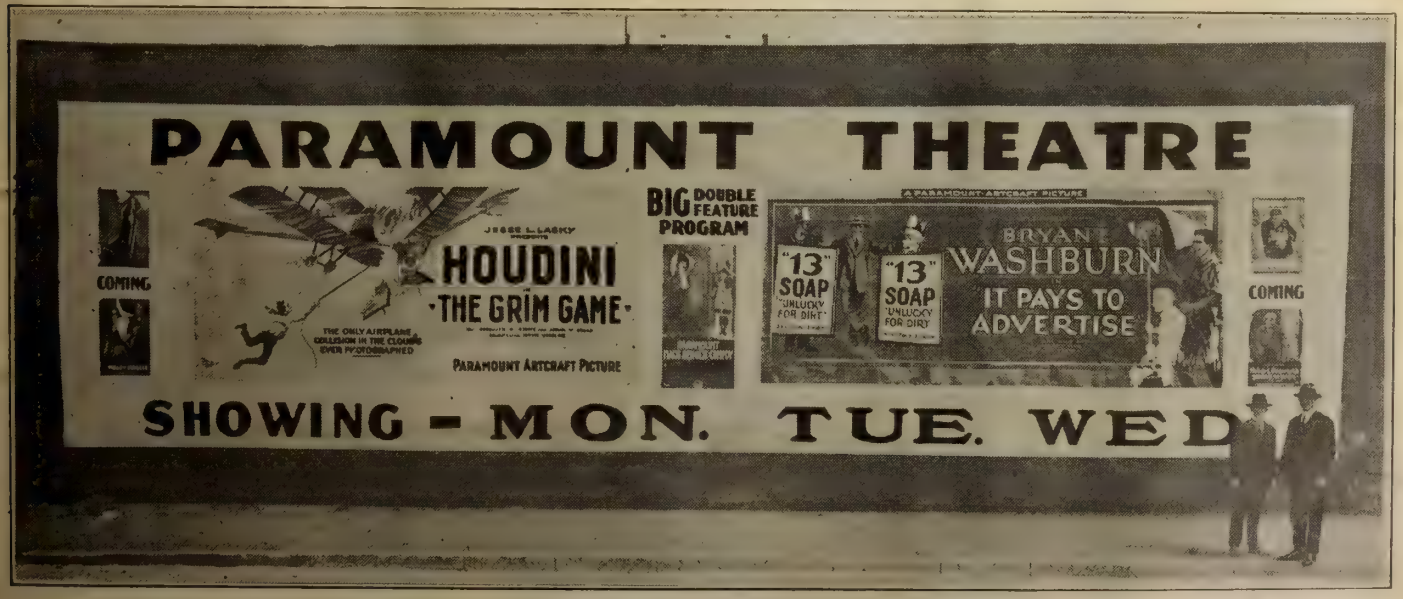
Goldberg did something.

How Australia Uses Paper to Build Up Big Business

OUTSIDE of the fact that the stand of bills shown at the bottom of this page is in New South Wales, this boarding does not differ much from the showings of some of the theatres here. It is the main showing of the Paramount theatre, Leichart, N. S. W., and is changed at a cost of $18.36, which includes the original cost of the paper and the import duty.

Alec Lorimore, who is "down under" for the Paramount, and is managing director of Feature Films, Ltd., is conducting an aggressive campaign to educate Australian managers in the use of paper, and this stand forms one of the features of a film sent out under the title of "Where Shall We Go Tonight?"

Ordinarily the stand runs for a split week, but the photograph shows the entire space taken for a three day showing, using two 24-sheets and a three for the current show and four ones for coming attractions.



"It Pays to Advertise," Says America. "I'll Say So," Agrees Australia.

This might be a stand on Broadway, New York, but it isn't. It's a pair of 24-sheets, a three and four ones on the Broadway of Leichart, New South Wales, where mutton is cheap, but they slap an import tax on lithographs that would make you laugh at a little thing like the income tax and little things like that.

Raffles Works for "Alias Jimmy Valentine"

All Plainfield Asked Ouija What Was To Be Discovered at "The River's End"

SOMETIMES a chance remark will lead to a better exploitation that the most carefully planned campaign. Over at Plainfield, N. J., one of the many New York bedroom towns, one of the employees of Proctor's theatre asked another what was "The River's End." The other one laughingly suggested that he ask Ouija.

He was overheard and very shortly thereafter appeared cards with a picture of a Ouija board and the legend "Ask Ouija what is at 'The River's End.'" There was nothing more on the card but the union label and the very general distribution of the cards had the town guessing. A lot of people take Ouija seriously and they probably put the question.

Breaking the News.

Giving that a little time to sink in, the theatre next arranged for displays in the book store, with copies of the book, and a white crepe paper trimming suggestive of a snow effect. A six sheet was used for a backing. The local ten cent store featured the plugger song. Both tied up with the showing at Proctor's and had a display of the cards to hook this in, too.

The day of the showing an express wagon with an "A" board was put out, top lettered "Ouija has answered the mysterious question." There followed the announcement of the showing.

Each evening this perambulator was escorted around town by the fife and drum corps of twenty pieces.

Helped All.

Dealers handling Ouija boards came in on the scheme and reported additional sales, the book store disposed of a lot of copies and the theatre got sell outs nightly, and all because a couple of stage hands indulged in a little joking and happened to be overheard.

The stunt got over better than many carefully planned campaigns because it was timely and a bit mysterious. Sometimes inspiration beats deep thought, but not always. The trick is to tell when each will work the best. The Proctor manager must have put the question up to Ouija himself, for he had the right answer.

Sugar Shortage Is a Help in Exploiting "Willow Tree"

EVERY orphaned calf means cheaper beef and every bereaved cow contributes to the visible supply of chops and cutlets. Even a sugar shortage has its uses, for right away restaurants ration their supply. Just as soon as the Minneapolis restaurateurs had a halfway good excuse for cutting down the sugar, the New Garrick had several thousand envelopes printed up.

The envelopes are cheap and may be cheaply printed up. The New Garrick uses a white stock, but the manila "pay" envelopes will serve as well. If you want to be exceptionally swagger, or make your appeal to a fashionable establishment, ask for glassine confectioners' envelopes opening on the end. Printed in colored ink they are the last word, but generally the cheap manila will be welcomed. We may have to do without all the sugar we need, but think what it means to the exploitation men—and cheer up.

Come in with Your Stunt.

Ouija Told 'Em They Would Not Be Bored.
So most of the people in Plainfield went to Proctor's to see what was at "The River's End," and no one damned it."

Too Sensational Stunts May React Against the Theatre

GOOD advertising is advertising which stays good. An advertising stunt which may cause a sensation for the time being may possess a back kick such as home brew never dreamed of.

Just the other day an enterprising theatre tailed onto a flying circus with an extra plane carrying a dummy, which at a convenient point was dropped overboard.

It fell, and as chance would have it, was impaled on an iron fence. No one was killed by the dummy nor did anyone drop dead of shock, but it is probable that more than one woman in the crowd determined she would never visit the theatre pulling the stunt. She could never feel safe in such a place; never be assured that her comfort and safety were placed ahead of the brainstorms of a mentally redheaded press agent.

It was a great advertisement, but not of the right sort. Hundreds of people were lost to the house. Few friends were made.

Raffles Stunt Will Work as Well for "Alias J. Valentine"

THAT good old "Raffles" stunt, time tried and bewhiskered, is going over the jumps for "Alias Jimmy Valentine" just as it did for "Raffles" and innumerable other plays.

The stunt got a strong spread in Los Angeles lately where the Kinema worked it in connection with the Record. The greeting phrase, which had to be given absolutely correctly, was forty-four words long, and it is no wonder that the stunt ran the week out.

The usual hook-up was made with stores and these declared in on the idea, and the Record started it off with a front page story with a cross-page head.

The Raffles idea has probably been used more often than any single stunt of major size, and it always seems to clean up. The Kinema worked it for about all that can be gotten out of the scheme.

Cleveland Put Overalls on "The Idol Dancer" Prologue

GENERALLY there are two good reasons for a fashion show; to build up on the costume idea—or the lack of it. Working under section two, Loew's Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, hooked in with the golden jubilee of the leading department store on the showing of "The Idol Dancer."

The department store was out to bust the boiler, and such a little thing as the use of an 85-piece Symphony Orchestra was just an incidental. Jack Kunn, Loew district manager, and Fred Klein, the resident manager, felt they could use some of that publicity, so they offered to hook up with a fashion show.

Overalls and Underalls.

The store supplied eight girls, engaging a local coach to whip them into shape, and the house supplied the setting and the music. The display of costumes ran all the way from a saucy little overalls girl to an equally saucy little underalls girl person, and the house drew a lot of newspaper and window space costing nothing, and had a good prologue attraction at small cost.

This supplemented an unusually heavy billboard showing, extra stands being used to get over the Griffith production.

Here Is a Fine Idea for New Equipment

Battle Creek Invents Good Prologue On "The Copperhead"

PROLOGUES are not always within the reach of the small town man, but the Post Theatre, Battle Creek, Mich., has invented a prologue for "The Copperhead" which is well within the reach of any small house or can be made to fit the big time.

Using a straight wood drop, this was built up with a couple of stacks of guns, a tent, a campfire and a cannon into the semblance of a military camp.

In this set the Battle Creek Fife and Drum Corps, composed entirely of veterans of the Civil War, played the old time airs and the shrilling of the fifes and the rattle of the drums stirred the blood and left the spectators ready for the play. They also played on the street in the early evening.

Where a fife and drum corps is not available, singers can be used in a medley of old time war airs with almost equally good effect, and this can be worked even where there is no stage or setting. Try it if you have not yet played the story.

Orowitz Takes an Encore on Navy Tie-up for Hart

ALREADY we have told how Eli M. Orowitz, the Paramount exploitation man in Detroit, got free a stand he had already offered $500 for by tying up with the Navy recruiting posters.

But Orowitz did not figure that he was through when he worked this stunt once. It was a "just once" stunt, but he figured that perhaps he could beat the flag—and he did.

The very next week red, white and blue one sheets told the town

You Will Never Be Held Up at THE TOLL
G A T E
if you
Join the
and Learn to Earn.

Pin a medal on Orowitz. He surely deserves one for taking an encore on a once only stunt.

Made Machines and Stills Announce House Reopening

WHEN N. P. Sackett, of the Sampson, Penn Yan, N. Y., began his preparations for reopening the house under the new management, he did not content himself with announcing that he was going to have new machines. He figured that comparatively few persons had ever seen a projection apparatus, so he arranged to have his two Simplexes shipped early, and he put them in one of the leading stores in town. With a nice attention to detail, he had them pointing in opposite directions, so that both sides of the machine would show. Down in the front are descriptions of how the machine is run. The machines form the attractors for a display of stills showing the stars booked, and it gives not only the theatre, but the store a corking good advertisement. It is in little points such as this the live wire manager proves his value. No amount of advertising could have one-tenth of the value of this practical showing. It substitutes the fact for the word and is of greater value just as the pictured educational sinks in deeper than does the text book.

"Shore Acres" a Cleanup in Washington Helped by Unusual Newspaper Campaign

RUNNING on its long-established popularity, plus a clever newspaper campaign, "Shore Acres" got over so strongly at the Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, that after Wednesday the special advertising was stopped and the attraction coasted the remainder of the week on the usual forty lines, single.

For the opening Sunday, Nelson B. Bell, the Crandall publicity man, went out of his way in the shape of a four-column space, against his usual two or three. The foundation cut was a reproduction of part of the 24-sheet, taken from the press book, and retouched by the local engraver, a circle head of Alice Lake being added.

How About It?

WE will appreciate an expression of opinion as to the helpfulness of prologues, or rather as to the value to the exhibitor of photographs showing how such prologues are put on.

It is our belief that in the present paper shortage, the limited space at our disposal is more helpful if given to promotion stunts which may be more generally copied. We believe that exploitation schemes are more generally helpful, even though they may not make as pretty pictures.

Which do you want?

This touched up cut is a stunt Mr. Bell has worked out to the limit, often working on the negative instead of art copy. The use of the illustration from the big sheet hooked the paper stands to the newspaper display, and gained that advantage.

A Five Day Week.

There was an all-type announcement on Saturday, across two columns, and a similar space was taken Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, but by that time it was clear that the play was good for the week, so the spreads were cut out and the regular house space resorted to.

Mr. Bell knew that if he once got the play over, the old time popularity of the play, plus the word-of-mouth report of the excellence of the new production would do the work, so he devoted his energy to the Sunday smash, following this up only long enough to be certain that the title was driven home.

Try the Scheme.

This is well to remember when you come to play this attraction, if you have it booked. For years the play has been a favorite above the average, classing with "The Old Homestead" and plays of similar type. The chief requirement is to get the title over in connection with your house, and once this is done, the big spaces can be dropped. In planning a "Shore Acres" campaign it is good policy to plan to spend two-thirds of the advertising appropriation before the opening, since less than usual will be needed for the latter days of the run.

Here's the Latest Way to Use the "No Bull" Exploit

SOME weeks ago we printed a picture of a cow being led down Broadway with the statement that "This is no bull" on a blanket advertising Locklear. The same idea was lately used in Youngstown, Ohio, where a cow on a truck tailed a circus parade. The calliope music soured her milk, but otherwise they got good results. Because of the crowd, it was deemed expedient to elevate the animal and a truck was procured which, appropriately bore the legend, "We haul anything, any where." This lay just outside the circus lot until the parade came off and tailed in just behind the steam piano and stuck there over the route. It got a lot of business from the crowd and for once the dreaded circus day showed better results than any day of the run except the Sunday opening.

Of Course, the Sampson Needed a Strong Attraction.

So before the opening N. P. Sackett put the projection machines in a phonograph window and even the dumb are telling the deaf about the Sampson.

Small House in Big Town Corner Windows

Many Novel Exploitation Schemes Are Devise by Grauman for New Ince Film

OPENING last Sunday at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, Thomas H. Ince's new Bosworth production, "Below the Surface," has been industriously exploited and some of the means used were novel in the extreme.

Perhaps the most unusual idea was a hook-up between the theatre, studio and the Record, which lately ran a campaign against the fake schools of photoplay acting. This took the form of a free camera test.

All who desired to participate were to drop their names and addresses in a box at the Rialto and were to be notified when to present themselves at the studio for a "collective test."

Got Headlines.

This carried a cross-page line on the front and a four-column drop with a turn to another page. The applicants for a test were advised to see the picture, though this was not required. Most of them did. The test was a group picture, and those who showed up well were promised consideration for parts in a forthcoming production.

Large daily stories were carried and photographs of the groups and winners were used following the test.

As an offset, the Herald used a series of articles by Ince on production; a series of signed stories which aroused much interest. This ran for the full first week of the showing.

Two divers in full equipment were sent around town on a platform street car. Banners on either side told of the showing, and the sight of deep-sea divers taking a street car ride gave point to the title.

Even more effective was a contest held at Venice, a beach resort, for divers, breath-holding contest, and similar diversions, Bosworth acting as the judge of the events. Of course this brought out a large entry, for the prize was $500, and the papers carried spread stories.

Mailing campaigns, posters and generous newspaper advertising are also being used, and for next week, to start off the second period of the run with proper jazz, new stunts will be sprung.

The picture deals with deep-sea diving, and offers an almost virgin field for the stunt man.

New York Uptown Manager Gets Many Window Displays

WITH most neighborhood houses in the cities claiming that it is not possible to pull window stunts because the town is too big, Frank A. Gorman, of the Yorkville Casino, New York, got fourteen window displays for a Hodkinson Week, which covered "Desert Gold," "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" and "His Temporary Wife." Mr. Gorman does not say that the town is too big. He went out and made friends with the merchants and when he wants an exploitation drive he can get about what he wants. It's merely a question of nerve and hustle, and a lot of small houses in the big towns would change hands less frequently if their conductors possessed these two essentials of showmanship. If you are "buried" in a large town your immediate locality does not differ a particle from the entire town. You merely work your section of it, and to argue that it cannot be done is merely an excuse for laziness.

For the left hand side of a stand is the right side to be on, and when Johnny Ray saw how he was topping the bill he went right out and struck for a raise in salary. Los Angeles is no place to pull publicity for the stars. It puts bad notions into their heads.

Post Card Teaser Helped Tell Omaha About Jimmy

WARNING recipients to keep their safes locked because Jimmy Valentine was abroad in the land formed the major half of a postcard teaser campaign for the Sun theatre, Omaha; part of the "Light circuit" of which the Moon and Star are sister houses. The card was printed up in imitation of handwriting and read:

> Dear Sir—Lock your safe. The world's most notorious crook, Alias Jimmy Valentine, will be in Omaha next week. Committee of Safety.
> P. S.—You will receive another communication to-morrow.

The second card announced the showing at the Sun and found the prospects interested in that fact. Such a card should be sent only to a selected list of business men. For more general use it should advise householders to see to it that their lower windows are securely locked and the silver put away.

Backing this up, Mr. Goldberg borrowed a safe which he planted on the sidewalk with fifty silver dollars inside and the iron men were to go to anyone who could Valentine the safe; professionals barred and "soup" strictly forbidden.

And when Mr. Goldberg put the fifty back in the bank he had a lot more to go with them—a whole lot.

Boston After Another Record

HAVING made a record of twenty weeks at close to capacity with "Daddy Long Legs," the Tremont Temple, Boston, is out to beat this for "The River's End," and if the hot weather does not cut in too badly, a report may be expected about Thanksgiving. The Temple is not primarily a picture house, and the Pickford run was stopped by a contract for the house held by an evangelist.

Don't imagine that because the stunt you read about was for "Slugged in the Subway" and you have not that title booked, you cannot use the idea. Change it over to work for "Butchered in a Balloon." It can be done.

Hearst Papers Press Agents for a Person Named "Jiggs"

WORKING in with the local theatres showing the cartoon pictures of "Bringing Up Father," the Hearst newspapers give a running line to the local appearances, as shown by this strip from the Los Angeles Examiner and the theatre, to come back, takes an extra bill board space to put over the title, splitting with the drama.

The Los Angeles Examiner Hook-up.

Six sheets are built up by means of block letters to make a large stand, and the cartoon is given the position of honor, largely because it is the better advertised elsewhere. Even those papers which merely use the syndicated strip come in heavily, but the Hearst string go the limit, which is nice for the exhibitor.

Albright Discovers Sixteen Distinct Sexes

Worked Eight Good Stunts for Late Janis Production

GEORGE J. SCHADE, of Sandusky, working with Eddie Carrier, a Selznick first aid man, put over eight stunts for Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl," and packed them in. He found it necessary to hold overflow meetings in the Plaza, a sister house, in order to take care of them all.

He put a banner across the street reading, "Join the American Red Cross with Elsie Janis in 'A Regular Girl.'" The Red Cross hook-up made the stringing of the banner easy.

A boys' band worked for two days in advance and during the run, parading the streets, and prizes were given the school children selling the greatest number of seats.

A parade of girl and boy Scouts, the American Legion and some cadets, strung out over four blocks, and the whole town turned out to see, and the Sandusky Register got ou a special edition of which more than 2,000 were sold, the profits going to a fund for flowers for the soldier dead in France. Soap box orators who sold tickets and gave each purchaser a booster button of the American Legion and a liberal paper display, brought the number of special stunts up and filled both houses.

Fifteen per cent. of the gross was contributed to the American Legion, which stunt formed the foundation for all the others.

Capitalized Local Talent

Knowing that local appearances are always ticket sellers, C. C. Deardouff, Goldwyn publicity man in Cleveland, persuaded P. G. Theophelus, of the Lorain Opera House to put on a local production arranged by Mrs. McCoy, a dramatic coach.

Two numbers were put on, each employing ten young women of Lorain, and of course all of the friends of the amateurs helped to crowd the house. Extensive use of lithographs and window cards helped, but the local angle proved to be the big winner.

This Lighthouse on a Lake Guided Them In.
Part of the scheme of the Moon Theatre, Omaha, for getting the crowds to see Alice Lake in "Shore Acres." The other part was a big searchlight on the roof. Sure this is a lake lighthouse. Look at the base of the structure.

Funny! A Lighthouse Was Reason for Heavy Houses

BUILDING a lighthouse atop a painting showing the waves gave the Moon Theatre, Omaha, an appropriate and striking attractor for the Metro production of "Shore Acres." The idea was carried further by the establishment on the roof of the theatre of a powerful searchlight which threw its beam far and wide. The marquis does not appear to have been provided with illumination, but this is where Phil Gersdorf's idea of an electric fan flasher might have been worked to advantage with the alternate swings of the fan throwing in red and white lights. Even the still model helped to increase the business, or rather to call attention to the attraction which is popular enough to sell itself. With "Shore Acres" the chief thing is to tell them that you have it. The title should do the rest.

Calls for Eyes of Age for Eyes of Youth Prize Offer

STARTING off the summer picture season at Keith's Theatre, Cincinnati, New Hastings opened with "Eyes of Youth" and offered a prize of $25 to the oldest resident of Cincinnati who can read without the aid of glasses.

All contestants over seventy years of age who qualify are given free admissions. At the close of the contest the most ancient of these will be given the $25. It's simple, but it is making a lot of talk.

It Is the Title Which Sells So Tell Them All the Title

CHERISHING the idea that when a title will sell best the best advertising is to sell the title, H. A. Albright, of the American, Butte, manages to repeat the title sixteen times in his lobby showing for Louise Glaum in "Sex." He argues that the title will do most of the selling, even above the name of the star, so he played it up and adds that business was good. It will be noted that the style of lettering is the same in all of the examples, and the color scheme was similarly uniform; black on orange. This three-letter title offered exceptional advantages, but the hint is helpful for other titles and is about the best thing Mr. Albright has done since he invented the "lady" sign painter.

There Used to Be Only Two Sexes: Male and Female.
But Cecil De Mille took out a patent or copyright or something and now H. A. Albright offers sixteen. Some offer.

There are three classes of managers. One man does something and tells the rest. Another does something, but doesn't tell. The third kind are dead from the heels up. What's your number?

Gosh! Auction of Souls Is Still Selling

Utica Got Treadmill to Offset Ball Opening Day

BECAUSE the opening of the local ball league season promised to blanket the opening of "In Old Kentucky," Barney Lumberg called in the aid of Lt. J. P. Anderson, of the First National Exchange, Buffalo. Then things began to spin. Contracts were made for 450 inches of newspaper space for advance advertising, and the treadmill effect was sent for, the advertising hammering home the fact that a really and truly race was to be run.

To give emphasis to this fact, the police were asked to interfere on the grounds that the race scene was contrary to the city ordinance permitting the showing of pictures on Sunday. It was playing with fire, but the stunt went over and got the first page in all the local papers.

Local Singer "Plugged" Songs.

A local singer was employed to sing the plugger song and it was announced that she would ride "Queen Bess" in the race scene. This stirred a lot of interest, because the wearer of the silks was well known in town.

Between the two stunts the picture went over big, and kept going. It was a pretty example of intensive campaigning, for Anderson was not called in until three days before the opening, and he and Lumberg had to work quickly.

Try Ticker Tape to Tell of Coming of "The Silver Horde"

HARRY R. GUEST, Goldwyn exploitation man at Detroit, got out something new for the Washington, Bay, City, Mich., for "The Silver Horde." He had printed up cards about 3 by 1¾. Above a blank space was "Learn to read the ticker tape." Below was the legend: "The grasping fingers of Wall Street greed—the courage and might of strong men fighting for fortune and a woman's love." In between was wound about 22 inches of ticker tape, printed in all capitals, with the message: "Don't pass up 'The Silver Horde'—the biggest entertainment investment of the year —a drama of fiery hearts and frozen trails —Rex Beach wrote it—Goldwyn made it—the Washington is playing it five days, commencing Sunday." This was wound three times around the card, one end being pasted on, so that it might not become lost. It will work on any financial story.

Apparently it was set several times (in all capitals, the same as the telegraph printer), and then cut into strips. Four thousand were put out and excellent results are reported.

Lost One Fashion Show But Put on a Second Edition

MAKING such a hit with a fashion show that the other theatres complained to the hook-up store and forced a withdrawal, Harry Watts, of the Strand, Omaha, put on another show at a few hours' notice and made more of a hit than ever.

He had booked in "Why Change Your Wife?" for a ten-day run, and arranged with one of the local stores for a fashion show in connection with the picture. There were fashion shows for mixed audiences in the evening, with ladies' matinees for a display of undies, and the mayor and the police and fire chiefs all raised a kick about the way the sidewalk was blocked.

The success of the show caused pressure to be brought by the other houses, and the store backed down after ten days, though the run had been extended to the full two weeks. Watts got notice in the morning and by matinee time he had hooked up with another store and some more models and advertised a second edition which brought a lot of the first patrons back.

Worked a Side Stunt.

As a side stunt he had a competition based on the title with eight prizes ranging from $25 to tickets for the best essays against the divorce habit, limited to married people who could talk inside of 200 words—and a lot of husbands were surprised to find that their wives could keep inside that limit if the reward was large enough.

"Trailing, Trailing, Over the Belgian Blocks."
This was the bloodthirsty song of the Seattle pirates, whose home port was the Strand Theatre, and they cleaned up big.

Spry's New Idea in Passes Advertises Current Program

NOVELTY ideas in passes usually take the form of checks, but Tom Spry, of the Tremont Temple, Boston, gets something really new when he offers printed passes showing a cut for the current attraction. That reproduced was used when he had Marshall Neilan's production of "The River's End," and is illustrated with a single column press-book cut for the production.

Tom Spry's Novelty Pass.

The passes are 5½ by 4 inches, rather large, but worth the more ample stock in the advertising it returns. Most managers would argue that there is no use advertising to the pass fiends, but there is undoubted advertising value to the idea in that the possessors will show them around, and each showing is virtually a personal solicitation.

The Paper Bags Work Again

Once more the paper bags with a film advertisement have worked as they have for the past ten years. The Empire Theatre, Buffalo, was playing "Auction of Souls" rather late in the season and wanted to reach the women. Supplying local grocers with No. 3 bags suitably printed, put the advertising directly into the hands of more women than perhaps any other form of advertising. Ninety per cent. of the shopping is done by women, and it was they who got and read the bags. And don't forget that for resort theatres the ad on the peanut bag is a powerful worker. It goes well on circus days, too, advertising a coming or current attraction.

Tableau Wagon With Pirate Load for "Treasure Island"

BECAUSE a tableau float had not been seen in the streets of Seattle for a year or so, Wyland H. Taylor, explaitation man for Paramount, got up a pretentious display for the Strand when it offered "Treasure Island." Although a very pretentious effect was gained, the building was not as difficult as the cut suggests. The wagon was kept out from two until six o'clock daily, and the bright colors of the costumes did much to get the attention. Small houses cannot well afford heavy building, but the float suggests that a wagon load of pirates roaring about the famous fifteen men would help and be within the means even of the small town house. Three more pirates were used for prolague and they sang the Stein Song! We don't think so much of that, but the float was a good idea.

Human nature is just about the same the world over.

A "stunt" that gets the money in one town will repeat in another.

Cliff Carroll, Now in Rome, Probably Does as Romans Do

CLIFF A. CARROLL has moved to the Carroll Theatre, Rome, N. Y., but does not explain whether or not the house is named in his honor. He gets more space than he did before and he makes better use of it; but he is up against a compositor who does not sleep well nights unless he can fill up advertisements with a lot of Gothic all-caps. Light and heavy Gothic faces have led more than one good printer astray, but there is no excuse for its use for everything below a twelve point. It is better to use a body Roman than to muss the spaces all up with eight inch lines of all caps.

A Four Sixes with Too Many Small Cap Lines.

The objection to the Gothic in quantities is that there is no contrast. There are no ascenders or descenders, but the letters are all the same height and present to the eye no points of contrast. Most persons are sight readers. They do not spell out c-a-t, but they know the word by sight and the combination looks, rather than spelling the word. But the eye is trained to read Roman type and when it encounters the less-familiar Gothic the letters must be spelled into words.

A Three Eights Which Gives a Better Display.

This applies with slightly less force to all capital lines, but Gothic is worse than the others because it is not a shaded letter and there is not even this distinction. To try and read an eight inch line such as those below the title in the four sixes is like trying to climb up a glacier. There is nothing to hold on to; no breaks in the monotony on which the eye can catch for landmarks. You may not realize it, but the stems of the Roman type help you to "keep your place" as the eye shifts along the line.

In all capitals there is no such aid to easy reading. In this display Mr. Carroll plays the star above the title, which is the safest policy, but since the title has a novel origin it is worth a better display than it is given here on the chance of appealing to some who do not know the star and do know the book. A better display is found in the three eights for William Farnum, and here the printer has found an upper and lower case line which works better than the Gothic.

In this instance the tall and narrow form seems to work better than the wider display, but this is largely due to the cut and its placement. Apparently the proportions of the cut determines the sizing of the space. Generally he dispenses with the cut after the first splash and uses a smaller space. He is writing better copy and he has more room, but he needs to have a very serious talk with the compositor before he gets all he is paying for.

Sheet Programs Save the Cost of Two or More Handlings

PRINTING the programs for three houses on a single sheet saves the Joseph Stern Enterprises, of Newark, the cost of handling two of the three jobs. The programs for the three houses are printed on a sheet 12½ by 17 inches, worked on both sides. The programs are than cut apart for distribution. The printing is one of the costly operations and, where a large edition is to be run off, money can be saved by duplicating the plates.

In cases where the cost of additional composition will exceed the cost of presswork a saving may be effected by printing the programs for two weeks at once and cutting them apart. With printing costs increasing so rapidly, anything which serves to cut down expense is worthy of study. Even the general stunt of printing both sides of the sheet at once, running half the number of sheets through, and reversing for the second feed will cut down the presswork charges, and where the press is large enough this should always be done.

Pat Dowling Smiles When He Looks at This Photograph

HERE is one of the reasons for the smile Pat Dowling of the Christie Films habitually wears. It shows the front of the Rosemary Theatre, Ocean Park, Cal., with a Christie comedy sharing the space with "Why Change Your Wife?" Between "Petticoats and Pants" and the dress hooking up in the DeMille subject we think the manager lost a chance in not advertising it as "Dress Up Week," but he made a pretty lobby showing largely because he gives the natural prettiness of the house a chance. Too much lithographic work around a house front is always fatal. Meantime, Pat smiles because he has to sell the Christie comedies instead of throwing them in with a dramatic feature, and he likes to have these proofs of the fact that he can sell them.

Did It Up Brown for New House Warming Invitation

BROWN was the color scheme of the Rialto, Akron, Ohio, for its house warming. The envelopes were brown, matching the four-page slip, printed in brown, with a one-point rule panel in blue. The cover merely announced "The Motion Picture Event of Akron." Inside the second page carried "This will admit yourself and friend," while the third page was given to a brief announcement of the opening of the new house.

It was all done in excellent taste and got the house off to a good start. First impressions always count for much, and more could not well have been done, short of engraved plates, and it is a question whether engraving would have been better than straight printing. It is probable that a large percentage of patrons were more favorably impressed by this arrangement.

Gersdorf Used Them, Too

Phil Gersdorf was another to use pennants for "Excuse My Dust." He had his printed on cloth-backed paper, red ink on white stock, with the corners turned under to give a firm grip to brass grommets. This made the best pennant we have seen yet for use of this title. Nothing but the title appeared on the sheet, which was 8 by 36 inches, so there was a big demand for the markers, and Gersdorf was overrun with requests for an additional supply. He had Richards & Flynn Will Produce.

RICHARDS & FLYNN, of the First National Film Co., have bought a large quantity of short reel and feature productions. Their list includes single reel Snakeville comedies, two-reel dramas, Taylor Holmes features, and the "Return of Eve" with Eugene O'Brien. They have also made a contract with Jack Gardner to produce a series of twelve pictures. The Jack Gardner studio is being arranged for in California.

Goldwyn Man Gives Dinner.

Felix Mendelssohn, home office representative for Goldwyn, spent last week in Kansas City. While here, Mr. Mendelssohn was the host at a dinner given at the Hotel Muehlebach in honor of W. E. Truog, who is the new manager of the K. C. branch, and P. A. Block, who has been changed to the Cleveland office.

Installs New Branch Manager.

E. C. Jensen, division manager for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, spent the week in Kansas City for the purpose of assisting W. E. Truog to assume his duties as the local branch manager. Cecil Mayberry, manager of Goldwyn's St. Louis branch, was in Kansas City recently.

Metro's Coming to K. C.

"Shore Acres," Metro's new feature production, is coming to the Royal for a seven-day run the week of May 23. "Should a Woman Tell?" featuring Alice Lake will be attraction at the Regent the week of May 23. Metro's new release, "The Heart of a Child," starring Nazimova, will be shown at the Newman Theatre the week of June 6.

Republic Exchange Improving.

Jack Weil, manager of Republic Pictures Corporation, will take a trip out into the territory for a few days to see the exhibitors and close contracts for their big features. New Simplex machines are soon to be installed in the projection room of Republic for the accommodation of the exhibitors.

Pathe Moves K. C. Exchange.

The Pathe Exchange has moved to the Film Exchange Building, where they occupy the entire fourth floor. The offices are a work of art. The projection room, where pictures will be screened for exhibitors will be arranged in form of a miniature theatre and will contain every desired comfort.

Republic Salesmen Active.

Charles Gregory, salesman for Republic Pictures Corporation, has just returned from a two-weeks' trip through Kansas territory. Republic has also secured the services of R. W. Brashear as a salesman, whose special work is serials and short reel productions.

K. C. Film Personals.

The United Artists Corporation has moved to the seventh floor of the new Film Exchange Bldg.

J. W. Brill has built a theatre at Sedalia, Mo., called the Iona. The house is a model of elegance and beauty on the order of the Liberty Theatre, this city, but in some ways much nicer.

William Parsons, former salesman in the Oklahoma territory, has taken over the Ideal Theatre in Joplin, Mo., and is having a big success.

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" will open a two weeks' engagement June 6 at the Doric. Inquiries on the picture from all over the territory promise many bookings.

A. A. Molder, owner of the Empress, Theatre, Sapulpa, Okla., and Arma, Kans., visited the Realart Exchange while in Kansas City.

Ridgeway Theatre Changes.

R. D. DeSeve is now owner of the New Orpheum, Ridgeway, Pa., succeeding Mr. Jepson, who bought the house from Mrs. Stout only recently. Mr. DeSeve is an experienced showman, having had houses in different parts of the State. The theatre was closed for a week at which time it was given a complete overhauling.

Death of Popular Showman.

Charles J. "Chick" Phillips, of the Chickquitty Theatre, North East, Pa., passed away suddenly at his home on May 1 from an attack of heart failure. Mr. Phillips was a gentleman whose kindliness and good fellowship made him a favorite among all picture salesmen. He always had a word of greeting for the tired salesman and was known as the salesman's friend. He leaves a widow and two children, Dorothy, living at home, and Phil, who has returned from Florida to take over his father's interests. The Chickquitty Theatre is continuing under the management of A. H. McQuitty, who was associated with the deceased since the opening of the theatre in 1915.

Opens House of Novel Construction.

E. L. Brand & Bro. have built a moving picture theatre and dance hall combined in Sutton, W. Va., which is quite a novelty in its way. The house is built on the bleacher style, with a space 20x60 feet between the seats and screen for dancing. The seating capacity is 400 and a stage has also been installed for road shows, which will also be used as a bandstand when dances are being held. The house was opened to the public last week and has been doing a good business.

Charleston Rialto Remodeling.

Manager Weir, of the Rialto, Charleston, W. Va., is doing considerable remodeling. The stage is being redecorated and a $15,000 organ is being installed. The decorations are being carried out in buff and old rose.

Correcting Wrong Impression.

In our Cincinnati correspondence it was recently stated that McMahan & Jackson are running the Lyrick Theatre in that city. C. C. Hite Attractions Co., through John J. Weiss, president and general manager, now advises us that we should correct the error unintentionally made. Mr. Weiss states that his company has a lease from the Heuck Opera House Company to operate the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, until September, 1920.

Walter Long in New Neilan Picture

Walter Long, one of the most talented character actor on the screen, makes his debut in the third Marshall Neilan productions. Mr. Long, according to the Neilan offices, has a most unusual character in this picture. The story is understood to be a big mystery drama and its success is said to depend largely upon the haracterization by Mr. Long.

The title and all details concerning this production have not been made public.

Robert Bruce Sails to Film Beauties of Lands Overseas

ROBERT C. BRUCE, creator of "Scenics Beautiful," which are released by Educational Films Corporation, sailed on May 18 for England, where he will make a new series of pictures. He expects to be abroad for practically a year and to visit various parts of the British Isles and several of the Continental countries.

This is the first time Mr. Bruce has left North America for the purpose of seeking material, except for a recent brief trip to Cuba and Jamaica. Practically all of his work has been done in the United States, the remainder in Canada. His work has been released by Educational since the day that company was formed.

In his visits to England, Scotland and Wales, Mr. Bruce will avoid the big cities and do the main portion of his work in the quaint villages and countryside. His efforts will be to bring to the screen new matter and to avoid the usual "travel stuff." Mr. Bruce holds that the scenery of a country is as typical as the people themselves and he expects to interpret the spirit of each of the lands he visits in his visualizations.

Holmes Sails for Europe

Burton Holmes, author, lecturer and creator of the Paramount Travel pictures bearing his name, sailed on Wednesday, May 19, for Cherbourg as the initial step of another film expedition. Except for Mr. Holmes and the friends who came to the pier to bid him farewell, Mr. Holmes was practically a stranger among the crowds on the boat as he is making the present tour alone except for his cameraman, who will join him from Spain.

Mr. Holmes' first destination is Jerusalem, where he will film scenes of the Holy Land as well as developments in the Zionist movement and agrarian and colonizing undertakings which have flourished in Palestine.

Mr. Holmes will return to America the end of August and the pictures taken during his trip will be released later as Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel series.

Installs Commission Management at Home Office of Universal; Lederman Resigns

MANAGEMENT of Universal activities hereafter will be directed by a commission of three high officials of that organization, it is announced by Carl Laemmle, president of the corporation. The commission form of management, inaugurated recently at Universal City, has proved such a success that Mr. Laemmle decided to install a similar body in the Universal home office.

The newly formed committee consists of Abe Stern, treasurer; E. H. Goldstein, secretary to the president, and H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges. Their word will be final in most of the general affairs of the film concern. By the formation of this commission, Mr. Laemmle hopes to unburden himself and his chief aid, R. H. Cochrane, vice-president, of much of the routine details of the business. Hereafter these two officials will confine themselves to important questions of policy and picture betterment.

Lederman Resigned.

The formation of this commission was possible by reason of several important changes just announced in Universal's executive staff. Daniel B. Lederman, formerly assistant to the president, has resigned.

E. H. Goldstein has just been appointed to a newly created executive position, secretary to Mr. Laemmle. Among other activities, he will assume the duties formerly shouldered by Lederman.

Goldstein has been general sales manager of the company for two years. His present promotion is the reward of many years of efficient and valuable service to Universal, with which concern he started as salesman when the company was organized. Previous to his appointment as general sales manager, he was manager of the Big "U" (New York) exchange for several years.

Sedran Made Purchasing Agent.

Another important change is the appointment of Samuel Sedran as purchasing agent. Sedran also is the head of the Universal supply department. The new appointment consolidates the co-functions of the two positions, and is expected to be a far-reaching step toward maximum efficiency. Sedran's appointment follows the recent resignation of the former Purchasing Agent Albert Tuchman.

"Trial of the commission form of government for Universal City has convinced me in less than a month that it is the ideal method for handling the many phased activities of a film company," explained Mr. Laemmle.

"For years I had difficulty at Universal City. Manager after manager had to give it up. The absolute rule of the vast studio plant was too much for one man. When I established a commission of three there this spring, I must confess that I was skeptical. The three commissioners, Isadore Bernstein, Sam Von Ronkle and Louis Loeb, assisted by my personal representative, Irving Thalberg, have accomplished wonders, however. Today Universal City is a regular Utopia. Production is at high tide and what is more important, everyone is contented and enthusiastic.

Biggest Step in Reorganization.

"Naturally such a state of affairs caused me to consider the same plan for the Universal executive offices. There are too many matters of more or less importance coming up continually for one man to pass upon effectively. That is why I have created this new triumvirate for Universal. It is the biggest step I have taken so far in the reorganization of the company. It is another milestone in my plan to make Universal the most powerful film company in the country.

Have Acquired Powers' Interest.

"I have taken many steps toward that goal in the last few months. The first, of course, was the acquisition by R. H. Cochrane and myself of the Universal stock held by P. A. Powers, my former associate. That gave me power to put my plans for Universal into effect.

"The second important step was the reorganization of the management of Universal City and the placing of the studios on an efficient and harmonious basis. The third step was the building up of the scenario department and the assurance that Universal will put out the best possible stories by the best writers. The establishment of the commission in the home office is the fourth great step. The next step will be—well, it will be announced when I take it.

Laemmle Going to Europe.

"Mr. Cochrane has just gone away for a six weeks' vacation and rest. In a few weeks I will do likewise. I am going to Europe for a few months. When I get back the film world will begin to appreciate what I mean when I say that Universal has the greatest future of any film concern."

Representative of Irish Producers Is Here with "In the Days of St. Patrick"

NORMAN WHITTEN, of General-Film Supply Cinematograph Specialists, of Dublin, Ireland, is stopping at the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York. He brought to this country a six-reel feature entitled "In the Days of St. Patrick," with Gaelic and English titles and depicted entirely by Irish players, the actual characters selected from among the Irish gentry, with the collorateur of the real Irish scenery and atmosphere.

This feature will be the General Film's first offering for the approval of the American public. In addition to special features, the General Film is making a weekly entitled "Irish Events." The National Board of Review has seen "In the Days of St. Patrick," and has given it seven "excellents." Mr. Whitten says the General Film has already established an exchange in New York.

Mr. Whitten also says that the Irish people prefer American pictures and 80 per cent. shown are from this country. In Old Castle, a town of only 250 inhabitants, there is a modern cinema theatre, with Power's projection machines and its own electric plant.

Mr. Whitten runs a film exchange in connection with the General Film and says towns like Sligo, Galloway, Ennis, Cahair and Bundoran have established theatres and no longer are troubled by the traveling cinema outfit.

Most theatres in Ireland compare favorably with any of the 600 and 1,000-seat houses here, and make four changes of program weekly. Mr. Whitten will be glad to show his production and co-operate with American exhibitors and producers in the exchange of interests here and in Ireland. The demand for pictures in Ireland is such that it is impossible to secure dates for their pictures less than eighteen months in advance; pictures selling now may not get a showing for two years. Mr. Whitten will remain at the Pennsylvania until June 15.

Faversham Feature First Film Offering at Hartman Theatre

THE Man Who Lost Himself," starring William Faversham in his first Selznick production, will be the opening attraction on June 6 at the first motion picture show that has ever been seen in the Hartman Theatre of Columbus, Ohio. This theatre, one of the finest in Columbus, will run nothing but superproductions at advanced prices throughout the summer. The choosing of "The Man Who Lost Himself" by the management is considered another tribute to the popularity of Mr. Faversham as a Selznick star.

"The Man Who Lost Himself" is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by H. DeVere Stackpoole. It was directed by George E. Baker. Mr. Faversham, ably supported by a strong cast, is said to reveal an impressive dual characterization. He portrays Victor Jones, an American commercal agent who finds himself stranded in London owing to his inability to get certain contracts for his firm, and the Earl of Rochester, known as one of the worst bounders in London.

Hedda Hopper plays the leading feminine role as "Teresa, Countess of Rochester."

"Best of Luck" Now Scheduled as First Release of Metro's Drury Lane Dramas

UNDER a rearrangement of its releasing schedule Metro returns to its original intention of issuing "The Best of Luck" as the first of its five all-star picturizations of Drury Lane melodramas. "The Best of Luck" was the first of this quintet to be put in production, but suffered a slight delay in the making by reason of the extra time required in shooting a series of submarine scenes.

These scenes under water, photographed with the aid of a diving bell, sub-surface lights and other elaborate paraphernalia, have been finished to the entire satisfaction of Metro officials, who, after viewing the picture at a private projection, declared it in every respect worthy of the distinction of being the first of Drury Lane plays to reach the public.

Kathryn Adams, Jack Holt, Lilie Leslie and Fred Malatesta are featured at the head of the all-star cast. Miss Adams was selected for the role of Leslie Macleod, an intrepid Scottish girl, because of her willingness and ability to undertake a number of thrilling stunts.

For instance, in the course of unfoldment of the plot, Miss Adams makes several airplane flights; she rides a high-powered motorcycle at night at high speed, winding up by dashing madly across a narrow suspension bridge that spans a chasm; she submerges in an undersea craft and engages in a physical conflict with Fred Malatesta in one of the big scenes of the melodrama.

The action of the melodrama revolves about a chest of jewels, once the property of a Spanish queen, which lies at the bottom of the sea in a wrecked galleon. Leslie Macleod, a daring and beautiful Scottish girl, is pitted against General Lanzana, rich and unscrupulous Spaniard, who seeks to possess not only the lost treasure but Leslie herself.

The play was scenarioized by Albert Shelby Le Vino, of the Metro scenario staff on the West Coast. It was directed by Ray C. Smallwood. Harold Wenstrom was the cameraman and the special art settings were designed by Edward J. Shulter.

Big Character Talent Seen in Mary Pickford's "Suds"

IN casting the characters for her next production for the United Artists, Mary Pickford has gathered an exceptional array of character talent. Every member of the cast is well cast, to say the least, and each member has done exceptionally clever character parts on prior occasions.

Prominent in her support is Mme. Rose Dione, for a long time one of the leading members of Sarah Bernhardt's company in Paris, and who since the outbreak of the war has appeared in French dramas at the French Theatre in New York, and more recently came to California to appear in the silent art.

The principal lead, the possessor of the shirt upon which this story is founded, is Albert Austin, an English comedian of note, who for the past four years has been prominent in all of Charlie Chaplin's productions and who was loaned by the world famous comedian to Miss Pickford for this production.

Harold Goodwin, who scored such a success in support of Miss Pickford in "The Heart of the Hills," is also seen in the production as Benjamin Pillsbury Jones, master of transportation for the laundry, his occupation being to drive the dilapidated old nag.

Nadyne Montgomery, the clever English character actress, who has played in a number of eastern productions, but who more recently has appeared at the Little Theatre in Los Angeles, has a splendid part.

Moral Crusaders Most Unintentionally Help "Sex" Break Records in Lawrence

BECAUSE three women, members of the Lawence Betterment League, found fault with J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, "Sex," Andrew J. Cobe, proprietor of the Rialto Theatre, Lawrence, Mass., abandoned a specially devised exploitation campaign on the powerful W. W. Hodkinson release and allowed first-page newspaper publicity and a two-column editorial to pack his house.

The controversy had its inception when the three league members cornered Mr. Cobe after the opening performance of "Sex" Monday afternoon and demanded that he eliminate a number of incidents in the picture which they deemed objectionable. His prompt refusal brought Marshal Thomas O'Brien, who is delegated by the Town Council to pass on all amusements in Lawrence, to the theatre within an hour. Reporters also made their appearance.

The protesting parties remained to view the picture with the official censor and the newspapermen. At its conclusion the complainants waxed indignant when "Sex" was given a clean bill of health by the marshal and the reporters. That evening both the Sun and the Telegram printed half-column stories on the first page, closing with a statement from Mr. Cobe that "if there is a demand from my audiences tonight that the Louise Glaum picture be stopped, its engagement will end at once.

Filled 1,300 Capacity House.

The Rialto with a seating capacity of 1,300 was packed to the doors at both evening performances, and the audiences, knowing they were there as tribunals as well as spectators, rendered their decisions with applause at the conclusion of each showing. The following day the Sun devoted half of its editorial section to commending Mr. Cobe's sportsmanship.

Needless to say, "Sex" broke all attendance records at the Rialto and only the previous booking of one of the big specials prevented Mr. Cobe from continuing the "Sex" engagement for another week. The Rialto management is now arranging with W. H. Dunbar, Hodkinson Boston manager, for a return week's engagement in July.

Pseudo Wesley Barry Runs Into Real Wesley Barry's Grandma—And Runs Away

ONEONTA may be provincial, but its citizens are not so easy as many might surmise," says a newspaper published in that town in New York State in describing how Manager Rose, of the Strand Theatre, put one over on one Alfred Scott, who had promised to have Wesley Barry, the Marshall Neilan boy star, on hand for a personal appearance.

"That isn't Barry," said Manager Rose when the boy and his "manager" stepped off the train.

Scott insisted that it was.

Manager Barry escorted them to the Oneonta Hotel, where the real Barry's grandmother, Mrs. Laura Barry, of Brooklyn, was stopping. When the grandmother took the boy by the shoulders and looked him squarely in the face, she said: "You are not Wesley Barry; I know him too well to permit such an imposition."

Scott broke down and admitted that the boy was his son, Sidney Scott. Then he signed a statement exonerating Manager Rose and agreed to reimburse him for the expense and damage sustained. Manager Rose in turn informed the public that Wesley Barry would not appear, as advertised, and now he is in stronger with his clientele than ever before.

The next time Scott wishes his son to pose as Wesley Barry he should try New York City, not Oneonta.

Prepare Elaborate Press Book for "Old Wives for New"

THE progress made in press book exploitation of motion pictures during the last three years is evidenced by the press book issued by the publicity and advertising department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount picture, "Old Wives for New," which is to be released June 6. This is a revised edition of Mr. De Mille's production first released June 16, 1918.

The demand for a new and improved version of "Old Wives for New" was so heavy that Famous Players-Lasky decided to present it in a new form with new accessories. The prints were revised, new and beautiful titles arranged and the picture itself carefully edited. When the original picture was released a press book, 8 by 11 inches, was prepared, and this amply served its purposes for that period.

But picture exploitation methods change almost daily, and to keep up with the march of improvement, the revised version of the picture required a new press book. It is a magazine of twelve pages, 11 by 16 inches in size, printed on heavy super-paper, while the cover is India tinted and printed in soft brown and green.

The second page presents a series of production cuts printed in blue, while on the third page are brief editorial paragraphs presenting in concise form all facts needful to exhibitors for the proper exploitation of the photoplay. On page 4 there is a special feature story on the production and a half page of publicity stories.

All Details Are Complete.

Buys "Determination" for Europe

The United States Photoplay Corporation has recently contracted for the entire European rights for the super-feature production "Determination" with the Stoll Film Company of London.

Howard Hall, a well-known author, dramatic writer, screen star and actor, has been added to the scenario staff. He has been placed in charge of the continuity. This production will be first released in New York City and then follow into London. Arrangements are being made to show it in one of the largest houses in the the Stoll chain in Drury Lane.

"We have been in our studio at Grantwood, N. J., since May 1 and are working day and night," said an official of the United States Photoplay Corporation.

Harry Rapf
Who is West Coast studio manager for Selznick.

"Human Dynamo" Keeps Selznick's Plant Buzzing

HARRY RAPF, western production manager of Selznick Enterprises, is often referred to as the human dynamo. Thinking that exhibitors in general are interested in the man who has a hand in preparing and producing the motion pictures which they show in their theatres and that they would be exceptionally interested in a man of the human dynamo variety, the Selznick organization has revealed that under Mr. Rapf's capable guidance the West Coast studios are buzzing along like the proverbial bee.

Many West Coast Activities.

At the Selznick plant on the West Coast, which is located at Hollywood, many of the productions of Selznick Enterprises are made. It is here that "Just a Wife," the first production of National Picture Theatres, Inc., was produced. Being in personal charge of the production work of this picture at the West Coast plant, Mr. Rapf looked after the building of the sets, selecting of the cast and the making of the titles. "Blind Youth," the second picture of National Picture Theatres, Inc., was also made there, as well as the third production, "The Invisible Divorce." At the present time the fourth subject for National Picture Theatres, Inc., is being made there under the title of "The Palace of Darkened Windows," Henry Kolker directing.

Myron Selznick, who is in charge of production work of Selznick Enterprises, frequently sends a Selznick company to the West Coast to make a subject. At the present time Owen Moore is there and has been there for some weeks.

All in all, the position of western production manager of the Selznick organization is no small task, and it requires a human dynamo such as Harry Rapf to carry out the plans of Mr. Selznick to successful completion.

Kelly Heads National in Pittsburgh

James B. Kelly, formerly manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, Boston, has assumed the management of the National Picture Theatres at Pittsburgh. Mr. Kelly, having formerly operated in the Pennsylvania territory, has many friends thereabouts who are glad to welcome his return to his old stamping ground.

Albert E. Smith Names "Trumpet Island," by Morris, as Next Big Vitagraph Special

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, announces that "Trumpet Island" will be the next special of that company. The first of this series, James Oliver Curwood's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," is booked at New York's Capitol Theatre for next week. Final scenes, requiring the Hudson River as a background for airplane scenes, will be taken in New York, and Director Tom Terriss and several members of his company will shortly leave for the East.

This is believed to be the first picture ever made in which airplanes supplanted trains and automobiles in transporting players and technical staff from the studio to locations. This air commutation service was maintained between the Vitagraph studios in Hollywood and Catalina Island, Long Beach and Palm Springs during the course of the production and while these locations were being used.

The use of the 'planes in this service was not designed merely to be spectacular. Six were used almost constantly in the picture, so the double duty of transporting people to locations was a logical and modern idea.

The theme of the story is ultra-romantic. A young American, seeking a lonely place to forget his confused past and to regain his self-respect, has a bride drop to him from out of the sky, victim of an airplane wreck in a heavy storm. True settings, so beautiful as to appear almost fantastic, have been obtained for the exteriors. Yet the story is not allegorical and runs from beginning to end in logical sequence without weird imagery.

New York and the Hudson River are backgrounds for a large portion of the scenes, making a romantic contrast with the semi-tropical scenes obtained in Southern California.

This special production will introduce Marguerite De La Motte in the most important part she has had, one that she fits admirably and a role that is certain to establish her, despite her youth, as a leading star.

Cohan Hails Picturization of His Popular Comedy-Drama

GEORGE M. Cohan, the actor-playwright, expressed extreme gratification over the picturization of his comedy-drama, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," in a letter to Charles Ray, who is now engaged in Los Angeles adapting the stage piece to the screen.

Mr. Cohan not only assured the screen star that in his opinion the play was inimitably suited to film adaptation but expressed his satisfaction that such an actor as Charles Ray was to give to the country a high-class picturization of a George M. Cohan success, and one which, because of theatrical associations, was particularly dear to the playwright.

"It is with the greatest pleasure," wrote Mr. Cohan to the First National star, "that I learn you are now working on the picture version of my play, 'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway.' As one of the most popular of my dramatic pieces to reach the screen, I am gratified to find the play in such capable hands, with every prospect of reaching the public in a form which does credit to the traditions of the piece and to the favor it has enjoyed.

"I have no doubt that your final results will give to the public one of those distinctly different and high-class film characterizations which do so much to raise the plane of the cinema art in the estimation of intelligent people."

Selznick Leases Solax Studio

The steady growth of Selznick Pictures was cited in concrete form this week when the Selznick organization took active possession of the Solax studio at Fort Lee under a long term lease. With the completion of extensive alterations and the installation of a new lighting system Selznick began its tenancy.

Equipped with all the up-to-date paraphernalia essential to a first class studio, the first scenes taken were for "The Dangerous Paradise," starring Louise Huff, who makes her initial bow as a Selznick star in this production. William P. S. Earle is directing.

Selznick now has three studios in the East and one on the West Coast.

"The Invisible Divorce" Is Hailed as Great Attraction

WITH a strong combination of both cast and story, "The Invisible Divorce," the third and current release of National Picture Theatres, Inc., is announced as surpassing in box office value the first and second National Theatres pictures "Just a Wife" and "Blind Youth." Lewis J. Selznick is head of National Picture Theatres.

Heading the cast are Walter McGrail, a screen actor with many successes to his credit, who plays the role of J. B. Ryder, and Leatrice Joy, an actress of ability, portraying Pidgie Ryder. Other prominent members include Grace Darmond, known for her characteristics as a leading woman; Walter Miller and Tom Bates.

"The Invisible Divorce" was produced at the Selznick West Coast studios and was directed by Thomas R. Mills. The story, written by Leila Burton Wells, was adapted for the screen by Katherine Reed.

Lloyd Ready to Embark on Second Series of Comedies

HAROLD LLOYD has embarked on his second series of multiple reelers for distribution by Pathe, according to an announcement made by the Rolin Film Company, makers of the Lloyd Comedies. "High and Dry" is the title of the Lloyd production that will inaugurate the second series of mirth makers. While the books for the second Lloyd series have virtually just been opened, many prominent exhibitors are placing bookings on the series, among them being Jack Eaton, of the Strand; Bowes, of the Capitol; Clemmer, of Seattle; Shea, of Buffalo; Harris, of Pittsburgh; Gustanovic of Cleveland; Moss, of New York; Talbot, of Denver, and Keith, of New York.

This list is growing daily. The thousands of exhibitors who played the first series of Lloyds, which marked among their number such impressive comedies as "Bumping Into Broadway," "Haunted Spooks," "Captain Kidd's Kids," "His Royal Slyness," "From Hand to Mouth" and "An Eastern Westerner" will be augmented by other thousands.

Lichtman Announces Promotions

In line with his policy of promoting capable men in his department to more important positions, Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, this week announced changes in the personnel of two exchanges.

To fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of G. W. Erdman, Herbert E. Elder, formerly branch manager at Pittsburgh, has been made branch manager at Cleveland. E. M. Strube, who has been sales manager in the Pittsburgh exchange, has been made manager of that office.

Goldwyn Closes Foreign Deal

Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn, has closed a contract at a high figure for the marketing of Goldwyn's third year product in Chile, Bolivia and Peru. The deal negotiated brings the largest return to Goldwyn ever realized in these South American countries.

The success of the first and second year Goldwyn pictures in South America is said to have established firmly this brand of productions in the theatres in Chile, Bolivia and Peru, where the film business is being conducted along far more systematic lines than in the past, according to advices received from the Goldwyn representative touring the South American countries.

Hampton's "A Broadway Cowboy" Distributed by Pathe

A BROADWAY COWBOY," featuring William Desmond, has just been taken over for distribution by Pathe Exchange, Inc. The production was made by Jesse D. Hampton from the story "The Man from Make Believe," written by Byron Morgan. It is a comedy that jumps from Broadway to the Golden West, and while making the transcontinental trip offers wholesome amusement. George Plympton, who made the screen adaptation, proved himself a master of continuity, for the story is related without a hitch or a single instance of the slowing up of action.

Desmond is supported by a strong supporting cast. His leading woman is Betty Francisco, who for some time charmed New York audiences at the "Follies." Thomas Delmar, J. P. Lockney, Paddy McGuire, Clark Comstock and Evelyn Selbie are others who help in furnishing the amusement. Date of the picture's release probably will be announced within a week or two.

Employes to Present Selznick With Testimonial of Loyalty

ACTUAL work upon the testimonial of friendship and loyalty to Lewis J. Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures, from his employes, began recently when sheets of indestructible parchment were sent out to the various branch offices and to the home departments of the Selznick Enterprises. These will be signed by the various men and women of the organization as an expression of their appreciation of their chief.

This is following out a plan adopted at the recent convention of the branch managers in New York, when it was decided that instead of a gift to Mr. Selznick to show that they were with him to a man, the employes should prepare a testimonial —something lasting.

The sheets of parchment are all of uniform size and handsomely illuminated. All persons connected with the organization will be given an opportunity of signing these sheets. The address to Mr. Selznick, which was read at the convention banquet, will be engrossed upon similar sheets, and when the signatures are completed all these sheets will be assembled and joined together in a permanent binding.

Sylvia Breamer Is Ill

Sylvia Bremer, who played the title role in "Athalie," is suffering from a nervous collapse, according to word received from Los Angeles by the New York office of Mayflower. Ten weeks of constant work in the difficult role of a psychic, resulting in an overstrain of the nerves, is given as the reason for the star's breakdown.

As soon as she is able to travel, the little actress will be taken to the mountains for a rest of six weeks, after which it is expected she will return to New York for a short time.

Montagu Love to Have Important Part in Geraldine Farrar's "The Riddle: Woman"

MONTAGU LOVE, one of the best known stars of the motion picture firmament, has just been engaged by Edward Jose to play an important part in Geraldine Farrar's first Associated Exhibitors production, "The Riddle: Woman," which will be distributed by Pathe. Coincident with this announcement, Associated Exhibitors reports that Miss Farrar has returned from her southern operatic tour and that preparations have been completed for her to begin work on the picture on Wednesday, May 26. The production is to be filmed under direction of Mr. Jose in the Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle.

The signing of Montagu Love, following the engagement of Adele Blood for the role of Kristine, is evidence to the Associated Exhibitors' statement that the cast will be a great one. Montagu Love for several years was a star in his own right, being featured in pictures produced by William A. Brady. One of the most vigorous actors on stage or screen, he has given the motion picture some great character delineations. He was starred in "Rasputin, the Black Monk," which had a sensational career just about the time of the Russian collapse. Mr. Jose did not state which part would be intrusted to him. Two characterizations are under consideration.

Mr. Love also is internationally known for his work as an artist. It was a strange happening of chance that started him on his way to theatrical honors. He originally was an artist, and during the Russian-Japanese war, he was at Port Arthur sketching for London newspapers. He remained there after the war and then went to China, where he became interested in a travelling stock company playing Hong Kong. When one of the players was taken ill, Mr. Love stepped into the role. He immediately showed that he had remarkable talent.

A real stage career in London followed, and finally Cyril Maude brought him to America with "Grumpy." Mr. Love then felt the lure of the motion picture, and from the time he stepped into a studio he headed for the top rung, which he soon attained. His screen career in America is familiar to showmen and fans.

Stanton Gets Offer to Be Director of Floating Studio

RICHARD STANTON, the noted director of "Checkers" and other box-office successes, has received an offer from the largest Italian film organization, which calls for a series of film features to be produced by him under most unusual conditions.

The company in question has constructed a floating motion picture studio. A large ocean-going steamship has been converted into a veritable production palace. Two decks are devoted to the stages and an elaborate array of dressing rooms, laboratory equipment and living quarters for the studio personnel have taken the place of the former staterooms of the ship.

Mr. Stanton's offer involves a weekly salary well up in the four figures, to be paid him as director general of the floating studio. The ship will house three entire producing units and will spend a year in cruising among the beauty spots of Europe. The perfection of a unique stabilizing device permits the photographing of pictures as efficiently while the ship is in motion as when taken in a stationary studio.

Mr. Stanton at the present time is engaged in production for William Fox, and at the completion of this picture in June will announce the full details of his European project.

Vitagraph's Eastern Units Not to be Moved to the Coast; Map Out 1920 Production Plan

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has returned to New York after a ten weeks' stay in Hollywood, where he combined a rest with work on the production plans for his company's western studios. Mr. Smith also completed "Hidden Dangers," a new serial, in collaboration with Cleveland Moffett, well known fiction writer, who went west at the same time. This serial is now being produced with Joe Ryan and Jean Paige in the leading roles.

Mr. Smith's plans for Vitagraph include the production of specials from books by well known authors for release at regular intervals. "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," by James Oliver Curwood, has just been completed by Director David Smith, who is now preparing another Curwood story for the screen.

Another special adapted from "Trumpet Island," by Gouverneur Morris, is being completed at the Hollywood studios under the direction of Tom Terriss, with an all-star cast. Earle Williams will continue to make his features in Los Angeles, Mr. Smith announces, under the direction of Chester Bennett.

Speaks on Story Problem.

In interviews granted to newspapers on the coast before leaving for New York, Mr. Smith spoke chiefly of the problem of obtaining stories for the screen—something that has not yet become a serious obstacle to Vitagraph because of its large purchases of rights to standard fiction classics and plays. He says that the altered attitude and growing interest shown by famous authors toward motion pictures offers a promising future to the industry.

"They are learning to write action, not merely words," said Mr. Smith.

"Authors of the greatest art and skill have now discovered that a thousand words of description can be duplicated in a few seconds on the screen; also that characters must be doing something all the while in front of these beautiful backgrounds. A description of the heroine's eyes and hair may take up a considerable section of a piece of printed fiction, but on the screen the spectators will know in one second whether she is beautiful or not."

Mr. Smith has written nearly a score of serials and numerous other works for the screen and has had as collaborators some of the best fiction writers. And he thinks that the new attitude of standard writers is the best step forward in motion pictures of the past year.

To Produce in the East.

Although Vitagraph has considerably enlarged its facilities at the western studios, the space is required by the companies at present working there and the eastern Vitagraph units will continue to produce at the Brooklyn studios. This corrects a report current recently that Vitagraph planned to concentrate all its production in Hollywood. The companies headed by Alice Joyce, Corinne Griffith and Harry T. Morey will stay in the East. The rumor resulted when Vitagraph purchased ten more acres of ground in Los Angeles, but this was needed by the ten units already operating in the West.

Work Out Production Schedule.

With W. S. Smith, manager of western Vitagraph, Mr. Smith worked out a production schedule for 1920 which in addition to specials will keep three serials in the course of production. A. E. Smith and Cleveland Moffet supervised the editing of the final episodes of "The Silent Avenger," William Duncan's current serial, while in the west, and also started work on "The Veiled Mystery," for another month before returning east to continue writing with Mr. Smith at the latter's summer headquarters in Oyster Bay.

Larry Semon will continue to produce his special comedies at the western studios. An unlimited production cost has been awarded him by Mr. Smith.

United War Veterans Outline Plans of Their Organization

"WE are the pioneer veteran organization of the world war, having been organized on November 12, 1918," says a statement of the aims and activities of the United American War Veterans, which was incorporated in New York State on December 23, 1918, and which now has its headquarters at 417 Lexington avenue, New York City. The headquarters will soon move to Washington, D. C. The organization's Congressional charter was applied for, presented to Congress and referred to the judiciary committee on January 23, 1919.

It is organized along military lines. Divisions are composed of five or more states, departments are composed of a certain number of posts in a state and posts are composed of twenty-five comrades. The rules and regulations and rituals are compiled from those of the G. A. R., the Spanish-American War Veterans and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The organization is governed by a board of trustees of seven comrades. It makes no distinctions in race, color or creed, but bars conscientious objectors and draft dodgers. Men and women who served in the army, navy, marine corps or auxiliary branches and were honorably discharged are eligible to membership. Annual dues are $3 a year.

The first announced aim is to "weld into one compact, nationwide federation all veterans of the military and naval service of the United States of all wars." Aid for disabled or sick veterans, including relief funds and homes, is promised, and the organization will seek legislation now and in the future that will assure justice to veterans.

Monarche Theatre Is Improved

Erected in 1916 by Mrs. Edith H. Williams at a cost of $30,000, the Monarche Theatre of Porterville, Cal., has been recently remodeled by its present owners, A. R. Moore, Everett and C. C. Howell, and is now considered one of the finest in the San Joaquin valley. Its auditorium seats 596, with a depth of only twenty rows of seats, and has a balcony seating 220. All equipment is modern and the house is as near to being fireproof as it is possible to be. Features are a large organ, enlarged last year at a cost of $3,000, and the ventilation system. Its operating booth is lined with metal and equipped with automatic closing shutters. Only quality pictures are shown.

Clawson Heads Walsh Cameramen

Del Clawson, one of the best known cameramen in the profession, has arrived in New York from the Pacific Coast to assume the post of head cameraman for the the R. A. Walsh organization. Clawson will supervise the photographing of the director's forthcoming independent production to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation through First National. Preparatory to beginning actual work on the Walsh production, the cameraman is at the Paragon Studio, Fort Lee, experimenting with new lighting devices which he will use in the forthcoming subject.

New York Office for London Interests

H. Winik, in association with a number of well known screen interests of London and New York, has bought from the Hilda Holding Corporation the twelve-story office building at 141-143 West 45th street, on a plot 68 by 100 feet. The property shows an annual rental of $130,000 and the asking price was $1,250,000. The same interests recently bought the entire block front known as the Aero properties, at Westchester avenue and Simpson street, the Bronx, a $1,000,000 transaction.

Director Jack Dillon Is in New York and Likes the City

JACK DILLON, Mary Pickford's director, was in New York City last week on a vacation, having completed "Suds," Little Mary's second United Artists production. After two weeks in and around the metropolis Mr. Dillon will speed west to direct Douglas Fairbanks in that star's fourth "Big Four" production.

The director is another one of these men who announce themselves as "easterners by birth but westerners by choice." It is five years since he has visited his friends in the East, and he admits very candidly for a Californian that "New York is the greatest spot on earth for a vacation."

Jack Dillon is credited with having put over something out of the ordinary in arranging the settings for "Suds." It seems that G. P. Huntley, the noted English comedian, gave him the once-over and exclaimed at the faithful reproduction of London streets and characters. He recognized one of the Westminster arches, Knight's Bridge and other landscape features, and Mrs. Huntley paid Little Mary the compliment of saying: "We used to have a scullery maid in our London home who looked very much like you do in the pictures, Miss Pickford."

A REGULAR studio set complete, where scenes will be taken, and a model theatre, equipped up to the minute and showing pictures, are only two of the features promised for Denver's annual moving picture exposition convention and grand ball that has been set for July 1 and 2. The original dates were June 18 and 19. The postponement was decided upon when the directors conceived some strikingly original ideas and asked for two more weeks in which to develop them.

A Big Time for All.

It should be a glorious "get-together" for everybody in the film business in that territory, and for a great many others in all parts of the country. The governor of Colorado, the mayor of Denver and city and state officials are co-operating with the Rocky Mountain Screen Club to make this a gala occasion. Distributing companies in New York City are lending their assistance, and many screen stars are already telling "Marie" and "Suzette" to see what there is in the wardrobe to fit the occasion.

All the exchanges, supply houses and producing companies will have special exhibits. Every article used in and around a picture house will be on exhibition. At the morning sessions of the convention the exhibitors will have their say. Matters of vital importance will be considered. There is a general invitation extended all members of the industry and the public as well. "We expect to have a great gathering and a great time," say the committee.

Famous Players Representatives Sail to Establish Production Studios in India

CARRYING plans for the erection of a studio and the establishment of an exchange system throughout the Far East, Frank Meyer, assistant secretary of the Famous-Lasky Corporation, and Tarkington Baker have sailed for Bombay as the first step in the plans which Adolph Zukor has made for the production of Paramount pictures in India.

Their departure follows the announcement recently made by Mr. Zukor of the formation of the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., a $3,000,000 corporation organized by the American company acting in conjunction with prominent London and Indian bankers.

As soon as they arrive in Bombay Mr. Meyer and Mr. Baker will begin at once the erection of a large studio equipped with all the most modern appliances that characterize Famous Players studios in this country. American methods will prevail throughout and the equipment will be installed by a staff of American technical experts working under the supervision of Mr. Meyer.

Films of Geographical Interest.

As soon as the studio is ready, it is the plan of Mr. Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president, in charge of production, to send a stock company of American players to India where well known stories with Indian backgrounds will be filmed in their native settings. This is in line with Mr. Zukor's policy of producing pictures that are accurate in all their historical and geographical details.

In view of the fact that 400,000,000 people, or one-fifth of the entire population of the world, live in India, Mr. Zukor felt that pictures truthfully reflecting the lives and ideals of this great nation should be placed on the screen, and the only way such pictures can be done well is to make them on the spot. The pictures will be distributed in this country as well as in India. Thus, American exhibitors will benefit immeasurably by getting a new and distinctive note in the productions they show. The first of these pictures is expected to be available for distribution by Christmas.

Mr. Meyer, who has been in charge of the construction and real estate division of the corporation, will lay the plans and supervise the erection of the studio, and will arrange production details. Mr. Baker will remain as the general representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in India. Plans call for a distribution system that will have exchanges in the principal cities of India, Straits Settlements and other parts of the Far East.

New Theatre for Danville, Va.

The Southern Amusement Company plans a new $150,000 picture theatre for Danville, Va. It now operates the Bijou, Broadway and Majestic theatres in that places. A site costing $60,000 and having a frontage on Main street of sixty-four feet and a depth of 195 feet has been purchased. Plans are being prepared. The proposed theatre will seat 1,400 on the ground floor. Two galleries will bring the total seating capacity to 2,000. The stage will be large enough to stage road shows. Two stores will be included in the structure and the rest of the front will be devoted to the lobby and foyer. The cost of the building will be about $150,000.

To Film Stories in Texas Oil Fields

The Superior Pictures Productions has been formed to make a series of "Liquid Gold Stories" in the Texas oil fields. The headquarters will be at Eastland in that state. The direction will be under the personal supervision of Marion A. Kent and the prints will be made by Rothacker. The company will spend this summer on location in the oil fields. It will have winter studios either at Los Angeles or San Antonio, Texas. The names of the stars are withheld for the present, but an all-star cast will be used throughout the entire series of six pictures of six reels each. Distribution will be through the open market.

Callaghan Announces Formation of New Unit Known as Ida May Park Productions

ANDREW J. CALLAGHAN, head of the Los Angeles producing company which is starring Bessie Love, has announced plans for the formation of the Ida May Park Productions. Miss Park has already been engaged, together with Joseph de Grasse, to direct the second film offering of Bessie Love. The projected formation of an Ida May Park Productions unit is in recognition of the work accomplished by Miss Park in the adaptation of "The Midlanders" to the screen as the first Bessie Love film for Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc.

"The Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., is pleased to announce the projected creation of a new unit to be known as the Ida May Park Productions which is now in process of formation," said Mr. Callaghan. "Officials of this company have long been aware of the distinctive quality of Miss Park's directorial work, and now with the definite results of 'The Midlanders' which is rapidly nearing completion to confirm our highest faith in Miss Park, we are able to take this step as a means of recognition and announce the plans for the organization of her own producing unit.

"Miss Park, in co-operation with Mr. Joseph de Grasse, has vindicated our belief in the screen possibilities of Bessie Love. Their photoplay adaptation of 'The Midlanders' brings out the charm and dramatic ability of the actress in a big way. It was our intention to place this star before the industry in surroundings such as she has never had, and to this end we secured well-known novels and popular plays, the first of these vehicles being 'The Midlanders.'

"The projected formation of the Ida May Park Productions will not interfere with the existing arrangements whereby Miss Park will again act as co-director with Joseph de Grasse in the production of Bessie Love's second Callaghan photoplay, the vehicle for which is now under consideration from several well-known copyrighted novels and stage successes."

Famous Players to Open New Exchange in Albany

PLANS made by Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, call for the opening of the new Famous Players exchange at Albany by June 7.

The new exchange, which will be a model of exchange housing and facilities, will be at 33 Orange street. Joseph H. Seidleman, who has been appointed exchange manager, has been busy for the last month whipping things into shape preparatory to the opening. He states that when the doors are thrown open exhibitors of the Albany district will find one of the most completely equipped and efficiently laid out branch offices that they have ever done business with. Mr. Seidleman is planning a reception at which the exhibitors of his territory will be given an opportunity to make an inspection of the offices.

In the establishment of the Albany exchange exhibitors whose theatres are in the territory between New York City and Buffalo will be able to get quicker and better service than heretofore has been possible. In the appointments of the new exchange exhibitors will find, it is said, unusual facilities for making their transacting business in comfort.

Manager Seidleman has practically completed the engagement of his office staff. In this and in arranging for the opening of the office he has had the assistance of Marvin W. Kemptner, who has been appointed sales manager.

Hodkinson Pamphlet Is Called "An Appeal to Common Sense"

W. W. HODKINSON has published for free distribution to exhibitors a pamphlet which he calls "An Appeal to Common Sense." The pamphlet deals in a brief and lucid manner with present conditions in the industry. Mr. Hodkinson's contention is that many of the evils which now beset theatre owners arise from the fact that the same financial interests control producing and distribution.

Mr. Hodkinson says that under the system now followed by producer-distributors all the picture failures are charged as a debit against the exhibitor, thereby saddling on him the cost of unfortunate experiments. An independent distributing agency forcing the producer to bear the cost of failures on his own shoulders is one of the remedies proposed by Mr. Hodkinson.

"The booklet," he said, "embodies the observations and experience of many years, together with the sincere desire to help the exhibitor out of his present difficulties. In our organization I have created a selective machinery automatically rejecting pictures of low commercial value. We are offering to the exhibitor a complete and thoroughly effective mechanism by the use of which he may safeguard his investment and be sure of a steady supply of high quality pictures."

Elks Fete Eric Von Stroheim as Judge in Beauty Contest

ERIC VON STROHEIM, one of Universal's foremost directors and noted screen actor, arrived in Chicago Friday, May 21, to act as chief judge in the beauty contest which was instituted about two months ago by the Elks' Club, and in which the winners are to be starred in at least one Universal production.

On Saturday a luncheon was given in honor of Mr. von Stroheim by the Elks' Club at its headquarters, 170 Washington street. About one hundred guests were present, including many members of the club and representatives from the Universal and other film exchanges in Chicago. William J. Sinek, exalted ruler of the Elks' lodge in Chicago, was toastmaster. At the close of the luncheon Mr. Sinek stated he had a surprise announcement to make, namely, that Mr. von Stroheim was about to be married, and he thereupon introduced the prospective bride, Miss Valerie Germonprez.

Mr. von Stroheim, in an entertaining talk, thanked Mr. Sinek and the Elks Club for their hospitality and acknowledge a debt of gratitude to Carl Laemmle.

He was easily recognized as the Hun-villain of several well-known war pictures, including "Hearts of the World," "The Heart of Humanity," "For France" and "Blind Husbands."

About seventyfive of the girl contestants gathered in Chicago's Universal office Saturday afternoon, May 22. Six judges were present to decide which ones will make the best camera types.

Signs Josephson on Long Contract

Julien Josephson, one of the most successful scenario writers in the profession, has just been engaged under a long-term contract to write original stories and the continuities therefor for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Josephson will have his headquarters at the West Coast studio of the organization.

Buffalo's Famous Star Theatre Leased by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

ACCORDING to reliable information, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has invaded the Buffalo exhibiting field in closing a deal for the taking over of the Star Theatre, Buffalo's historic house, where it is expected the company will show its super-features. While no information is available as to the probable date of the reopening of the Star, it is learned that Famous Players will spend quite a large sum on the redecoration and renovation of the house, the plans also calling for the erection of a marquee in front of the theatre and the changing of the entrance to the Pearl street corner.

According to Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, a representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation approached the Shea Amusement Company on a proposition to co-operate with the latter company in operating the Star, under which it was proposed to present the "super-features" in the Star and the remainder of the F. P.-L. product in Shea's Hippodrome. Mr. Franklin informed the representative that the plan was impossible, with the result that arrangements were made for the taking over of the Star, for which it is declared the papers have been signed.

House a Theatrical Landmark.

Allan S. Moritz, Buffalo manager for Famous Players-Lasky, when asked about the proposition, declared that he knew nothing whatever about it. The company's current feature, "Why Change Your Wife?" is scheduled for a three-week and possibly four-week presentation in the Family Theatre. It is possible that following super-productions may be presented in the Star.

Rumors of the coming of the Famous Players-Lasky Company into the Buffalo exhibiting game have been frequent during the past several months and the taking over of the Star is the climax of the proposition.

A. A. Fennyvessy, of Rochester, is one of the largest—in fact, the principal—stockholders in the Star. The house has been playing popular vaudeville and pictures. Last fall the Famous Players Company and the Shea Company co-operated in putting on "The Miracle Man" in the Star, but the presentation was not a howling success.

Henry Lehrman Begins Work on Two-Reel Comedy Series

THINGS are booming again at the Henry Lehrman studios at Culver City, where Mr. Lehrman is beginning work on a series of two-reel comedies under the business management of C. L. Chester, producer of Chester Comedies, Chester Outings and Screenics. The company has taken over a contract with the First National Exhibitors' to supply twelve of the Lehrman Comedies to this organization during the coming year.

Operations began last week on the first picture of the farce-comedy series, which has received the temporary title of "Springtime." Albert Ray, a juvenile who worked with Mr. Lehrman in Sunshine Comedies, and Charlotte Dawn, a 17-year-old ingenue, are being featured. Besides "Springtime" Mr. Lehrman has obtained stories for two other comedies which will keep him busy for some weeks. A. B. W. Hodges, vice-president of Henry Lehrman Comedies, Inc., is in active charge of the business end, while Allan Dudley is treasurer.

A third Chester Comedy featuring Alexander, the trained chimpanzee, and Arthur Nowell, the baby whom New York critics named "the infant Douglas Fairbanks," has just been completed under the direction of William S. Campbell at the Chester Studios near Lincoln Park. These comedies are being released through the Educational Films Corporation, which is also taking care of the distribution of Chester Outings and Screenics.

Mr. Chester is at present negotiating for the sale and distribution of another well known series of comedies.

Selznick Squelches O'Brien Report

Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, this week squelched the report that Eugene O'Brien was to conclude his association with Selznick, and announced that Mr. O'Brien's contract has had its termination date extended to April 27, 1924.

"Mr. O'Brien will continue under the Selznick banner for four more years," said Mr. Selznick. It has been common knowledge that various producers have been bidding for the services of Mr. O'Brien since his recent return from the coast. As a matter of fact, at no time did he consider appearing on the screen other than a Selznick star."

Blackton Reaches High Point of Production with "Passers By," a Pathe June Release

EXHIBITORS following the progress of J. Stuart Blackton's releases through Pathe have been impressed by the steady increase in the box office value of each new Blackton attraction. "The Blood Barrier," last of the series to be released, has developed into the biggest winner of the list. Each succeeding picture has shown marked improvement in technical and story value, as well, and in "Passers By" reaches the same high point of production in his career under the Pathe banner.

"Passers By" stars Herbert Rawlinson, and was adapted from the stage success by C. Haddon Chambers. Effects new to the motion picture have been introduced by Mr. Blackton. Most of the action is laid in London and in the time of the year when fogs are densest. He obtained remarkable results from his "fog" photography, which lends to the production an atmosphere as true as could have been obtained in London itself.

The Blackton studio in Brooklyn was transformed into a section of London during the filming of "Passers By." The feminine interest is maintained by Leila Valentine. Ellen Cassity and Pauline Coffyn, while considerable appeal is won by little Charles Stuart Blackton, son of the producer-director, who portrays the role of Little Peter. Leila Valentine is cast as Margaret Summers; Ellen Cassity as Beatrice Dainton, and Pauline Coffyn as Lady Hurley.

Herbert Rawlinson, as Peter Waverton, is admirably assisted by Tom Lewis, Dick Lee, and W. J. Ferguson, three capable character actors, whose work stands out as a conspicuous tribute to their art.

Strand Books Faversham Picture

During the week of May 30, the Strand Theatre of New York will show William Faversham in his first Selznick picture, "The Man Who Lost Himself," written by the well-known author H. DeVere Stackpoole, and directed by George E. Baker.

Simplex's Great Britain Distributor Long Associated with Edwin S. Porter

DURING the year 1910, when Edwin S. Porter, vice-president of Precision Machine Company, together with others whose names are associated with the earlier and generally exciting days, were producing pictures under the Rex banner, J. Frank Brockliss was already a well-established film distributor, with general offices in London and branches in Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Moscow, Petrograd, Barcelona and Milan.

At that time Mr. Brockliss had the foreign rights to the "Imp," "Powers" and other American films, as well as the George Melies and Le Lion films of Paris and the Aquila of Italy. It was upon Mr. Brockliss' first visit to the United States that he met Edwin S. Porter and the latter's associates in the affairs of the Rex Company. The meeting resulted in the foreign rights to the Rex pictures going to Mr. Brockliss, who continued to successfully market them until the formation of the Universal Film Company. Mr. Brockliss then took over the foreign rights of the Lubin product, which at that time was at the height of its popularity.

In 1912, Mr. Porter delegated Mr. Brockliss as his personal representative to negotiate with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt for the picturization of "Queen Elizabeth," a play in which she was touring Europe at that time.

Engaged Sarah Bernhardt.

That these early satisfactory associations were remembered, probably accounts for the fact that J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., has been the exclusive distributor for Great Britain of the Simplex Projector, manufactured by the Precision Machine Company since 1918.

The general headquarters are located at 167-169 Wardour street, London, which includes a five-story building, situated in the heart of the greatest film district in Europe. In the basement are two theatres for reviewing and trade showing purposes. Both have well-equipped projection rooms, each of which contains a complete and up-to-date equipment of two Simplex projectors. Buyers thus have an opportunity of viewing the Simplex projectors in operation.

The entire street floor houses the general offices, which occupy the greater portion of this area, while the front portion of the first floor is devoted to the showing of all late models of the Simplex. In the large show-windows facing Wardour street are placed various exhibition models of the Simplex with special lighting effects and announcements.

With its many connections throughout the United Kingdom, the company has been unusually successful in the distribution of the Simplex. The efficient sales organization is supported by a high grade repair and service department in charge of an expert electrical mechanic, under whose supervision repairs of all kinds of theatrical equipment are readily effected.

Von Claud Jensen Celebrates His First Birthday with Notable Kiddie Show

IMAGINE a year-old youngster having 700 children at his birthday party and borrowing one of his daddy's theatres to hold it in, while half a score municipal organizations jump in to help along with the arrangements and the Drama League puts on a special playlet! That's how Von Claud Jensen, son of C. S. Jensen, of Jensen & Von Herberg, put in the morning of his first anniversary.

His proud daddy decided that the best way to celebrate the passing of the first milestone was to make other kiddies happy, and he planned a special show at the Columbia for the institutional children of Portland, Ore.

The children of every public institution were invited, but an epidemic of measles was responsible for regrets from several homes. About seven hundred children accepted.

As soon as the affair was announced the Portland Ad Club interested itself and enlisted one hundred cars; the Knights of Columbus arranged to transport the children in the Catholic homes, and the Rotary Club also declared in.

Drama League, Too.

The Drama League, which has lately gone on record against the motion pictures, agreed to help, and staged a bright little playlet, "Quite by Ourselves," in which a number of juvenile amateurs appeared. The play dealt with a children's entertainment for the delectation of their mother, in which, as usual, poor mother did most of the work.

The performance was announced for 10 o'clock Saturday morning, but the guests began to arrive as early as half-past eight. The house was open for their reception, and each child, upon entering, was presented with a whistle balloon and a tin horn.

Henry Murtgh, the organist, was at his console and entertained the early comers with organ solos and delighted them with animal imitations on the huge organ. Then representatives of the Portland Community Service, headed by Walter Jenkins, taught them new songs until the hour for the formal entertainment arrived.

The Host in Pictures.

In addition to the drama there were 600 feet of pictures of the tiny host showing how he conceived the idea, and for the first time the kiddies realized just how it happened that they could have toy balloons and horns and auto rides and movies all in one glorious morning.

The chief feature was Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," and the small guests were provided with stick candy and animal crackers as they left the house.

The autos took the longest way home, to prolong the fun, and the kiddies are looking forward to Von Claud's second birthday.

Among Those Present.

More than one hundred women from the socially elect were hostesses and more than 150 business men dropped in to see the fun and stayed until they had to be chased out that the house might be prepared for the regular matinee. All told it was a wonderful affair.

Mr. Jensen was so pleased with the enjoyment of the children that he plans to give a morning matinee with a six-cent admission each Saturday.

Invite Neilan to Speak at Columbia

Marshall Neilan has just received an invitation from Miss M. S. Ayers in behalf of the Cinema Composers of the Columbia University to address this body some evening during his visit here in August when he sails from New York to London. It is the desire of the students to have Mr. Neilan given "a heart to heart talk" about matters involving the treatment of scenarios.

Read to Have Agents in Key Cities

Pursuant to the J. Parker Read, Jr., cooperative exploitation policy, the producer will dispatch personal representatives in each key section of the country, whose duty it will be to get in personal touch with the exhibitor and the distributer in the key centers. Mr. Read believes that the exhibitor and producer can come to a better understanding by the personal touch rather than by means of correspondence.

Jack Eaton Leaves Strand

Jack Eaton, managing director of the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, has tendered his resignation to the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation to take effect on June 14. Mr. Eaton will enter the producing field, in which he had been engaged prior to his appointment as managing director of the Strand.

Fire Destroys Green Bay House

Film momentarily retarded in passing through the projection machine caught fire and as a result the Royal Theatre, Green Bay, Wis., was recently destroyed, causing a loss approximating $20,000. An audience estimated at 300 people filed out of the exits without panic.

Victor Kremer.

Says 80 Per Cent. of Capacity of Picture Houses Controlled by the Independent Showmen

VICTOR KREMER, president of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., in discussing the question of the effect of the producer-exhibitor upon the industry, takes the position that the exhibitor has nothing to fear. "Although the producer-exhibitor has at his command financial means to buy and build theatres and enough productions backed by national advertising for his programs, yet on the other hand the independent exhibitor owns and controls eighty per cent. of the seating capacity of moving picture houses," says Mr. Kremer.

"The independent exhibitor also prefers to be his own boss and although his class is not at present presenting a united front it will eventually do so, and will then have more resources than the producer-exhibitor. Further, new capital is organizing, waiting only for united action at Cleveland, to take its place among the independent producers who will make better productions and still better productions."

Edward J. Shalvey Dies

Edward J. Shalvey, president of the V. B. K. Film Corporation, producers of Paramount-Drew comedies, died on the evening of Wednesday, May 19, at the Post-Graduate Hospital in New York City. Mr. Shalvey was on the road to recovery from a serious operation and suffered a reaction which resulted in his death. He passed away in a coma.

In the amusement business Mr. Shalvey was actively identified with Amedee J. Van Beuren. In addition to his executive position with the V. B. K. Corporation, Mr. Shalvey was treasurer of the AyVeeBee Corporation, producers of Ernest Truex two-reel comedies; secretary of the Notlek Amusement Company and secretary of the Van-Kelton Amusement Corporation.

The deceased was a director in all of these corporations.

Add Three to Hutchison Serial

Robert Brunton, supervising the serial in which Charles Hutchison is to star for Pathe, has selected three well known players to make up the supporting company for the first episode—Jack Mathers for a heavy role; Natalie Warfield for the role of the vamp; and William Brown, also for a character part.

Admission Tax Frauds Stir Government; Federal Agents Now Trailing Suspects

AFTER several months of quiet investigation, agents of the Treasury Department have come to the conclusion that the government is being defrauded out of many thousands of dollars in admission taxes each month, and the Bureau of Internal Revenue has inaugurated a nation-wide campaign to collect these delinquent taxes, together with the full penalties provided by law.

The first step in this campaign was taken several weeks ago, when eight ticket brokers were arrested in Chicago. Evidence in these cases secured by government agents showed conclusively that the agents were not accounting for the admission and speculators' taxes which they were collecting on tickets sold by them.

A further investigation of the situation developed the belief that not only were ticket brokers failing to make proper returns of taxes collected, but there was an effort on the part of moving picture and other theatres to defraud the government of the full admission taxes due. It is estimated by officials of the Bureau of Internal Revenue that many hundreds of thousands of dollars will be collected in delinquent taxes and penalties as a result of its campaign.

To Make "Sample" Prosecutions.

The exhibitor who is caught by the bureau attempting to defraud the government of any part of the admission taxes collected, or who is failing to collect the tax in every instance, will be in a sorry plight indeed, for the government is now looking for a few theatre men of whom it can make examples.

Information furnished the Bureau of Internal Revenue by the Washington bureau of Moving Picture World has assisted government officials in planning raids upon the crooked theatres. Basing its figures upon facts furnished by the bureau, the Internal Revenue Bureau some time ago came to the conclusion that there was a great discrepancy between what should be collected and what was actually being received.

This was first evidenced in New York, it is said, where the collections for that district were only about a tenth of what they should be. Investigation of this case, however, developed the fact that the full amount was being collected, but that, in making up his reports, the collector for the district had entered most of the collection under another item.

In checking up the New York office, however, men were sent to other large cities for investigations along similar lines, and it was then that the failure of some of the theatres fully to account for admission taxes was first uncovered. Since then the investigation has been proceeding quietly, as the government's agents set about their big task of checking up on the theatres.

Selznick Buys More Stories

Following the announcement last week that Selznick had purchased the screen rights to the much sought for story, "The Daughter Pays," it was announced this week that "The Fib" and "Yesterday's Wife," two additional magazine stories which have enjoyed wide popularity in two nationally known periodicals, have been purchased by Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation.

"The Daughter Pays," written by Mrs. Baillie Reynolds, is said to have set all England talking about its unusual plot, and which, since publication, has attracted widespread attention in America.

The two other stories, "Yesterday's Wife" and "The Fib," were written by Evelyn Campbell and George H. Hodenpyl respectively.

New Jersey State Association Called to Newark Convention

EVERY exhibitor in New Jersey knows that the time has come that in order to protect his investment he must become a part of the state organization.

Today the producers are becoming your competitors. They are buying and building theatres to compete with you, who have provided the funds that have made them successful in operating their producing concerns, and perhaps have provided them with so much profit that they feel now that the time has arrived when they will produce, distribute and exhibit their product. If for no other reason than this you are called to the state convention at the Hotel Robert Treat, Newark, June 2, 1920, at 10 a. m., to perfect an organization which will be representative of the great interest of the motion picture theatre owners of the state.

Do not fail to attend. You are wanted—your voice and your vote. It is for you to decide your own questions, not for any selected committee, self-appointed, as has often been the case heretofore. The biggest thing that you can do to insure your business against attacks from within and without the industry, is to be on time and ready to form a state organization on June 2.

JOHN T. COLLINS,
Temporary Chairman.

German Film Firms Merge to Fight for World Trade

REPORTS to the Department of Commerce from the commercial attache at the Hague report great activity in the German film industry and the merger of several of the important producers.

It is reported that the Decla and Bioscop films companies, which have been considering consolidation for some time, have merged. The capital of the new concern will be 50,000,000 marks.

The two film concerns, Muenchener Lichtspielkunst and Robert Reinerts Monumentalfilmwerke, have also joined forces in forming a Bavarian film enterprise with a capital of several million marks, financed by the leading large Bavarian banks. Another large South German undertaking is the Cinoscop-Company-Commandite, in which principally foreign capital is invested. Other firms are also being extended.

In German Austria the Sascha-Film A. G. is raising its capital from 5,000,000 to 20,000,000 marks and has entered into negotiations with American interests with the idea of placing its film production on a broader basis.

The most important event in the German film world is to be the so-called internationalization of the Ufa concern. A director of the company recently paid visits to Rome and Copenhagen, and it is said that an agreement for community of interests has been closed with the Unione Cinematografica Italiana and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Winfield Sheehan of Fox Returns from Trip Through Many European Countries

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, has returned from his European trip and is back at his desk in the new William Fox building on West Fifty-fifth street, New York.

As a result of his trip, which covered Fox branch offices in England, France, Germany, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Italy and Belgium, and also brought him in close touch with Spain and Algiers, Mr. Sheehan brought back with him most enthusiastic reports of Fox Films status abroad. During his visits to the countries named, he made a systematic study of conditions surrounding the motion picture trade generally, and the outlook in particular for Fox.

Mr. Sheehan reports that throughout those territories which have recently been opened to films following a long period under war conditions, the exhibitors are looking forward with eager interest to Fox films. This, he says, is the feeling generally in the foreign markets, and all European branches of the organization have made great strides in contracting with exhibitors for pictures now listed for release.

London Offices Opened.

During Mr. Sheehan's stay in London the new Fox offices at 13 Berners street were officially opened with ceremonies at which Justin Huntly McCarthy, author of the famous story, "If I Were King," presided. Many notables attended a luncheon in the directors' room of the Fox building—which, by the way, served during the war, as headquarters of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in London. It is a beautiful structure, and required but little remodeling to adapt it to the service of the Fox branch organization.

General Manager Sheehan opened in England and France new plants for the production of Fox films in those countries. These two branch plants will enable the European offices of this firm to supply prints on a far bigger scale than hitherto. Also they will supply for America Fox Films made in France with French companies.

In London, which registers the pulse of the motion picture fans of Great Britain and Ireland, Mr. Sheehan found that the English exhibitors are anxiously awaiting the arrival of the Fox Sunshine Special Comedy which soon will be released. This big five-reel Sunshine has a market ready and waiting for it in Europe, judging from the enthusiasm evinced by the theatre men who use the regular two-reel Sunshines as fast as they can obtain them. To date this brand of film fun is apparently as popular abroad as it is at home.

No announcement is yet forthcoming from the Fox office of next season's plans, or the names of new stars or plays which may have arrived with General Manager Sheehan. It is expected, however, that such an announcement will soon be issued.

Winfield R. Sheehan,
General manager of Fox Film Corporation, who has just returned from Europe.

Rothapfel to Direct Shows at Capitol; Lower Scale of Prices for the Summer

EDWARD BOWES, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, New York, announces the appointment of S. L. Rothapfel, who will assume charge of the future presentations. Mr. Rothapfel's assumption of office in "the world's largest theatre" is a significant step in the advancement of pictorial entertainment and will mean much to theatre patrons of New York.

With the advent of Mr. Rothapfel, Managing Director Bowes announces the inauguration of a summer policy. The theatre will be closed after next Tuesday's performance and will not reopen until the Friday night following, when the type of program that Mr. Rothapfel devised for motion picture presentation and which has brought him world-wide fame through its universal adoption will be ushered in. During the two days of intermission there will be extensive physical embellishment of the interior of the theatre, with particular reference to the stage, and rehearsals for the inaugural program will be actively carried on.

There will also be a radical reduction in prices with the opening Friday, June 4, under the summer policy. The top price will be $1 for the choicest seats, with the scale down to 40 cents. Matinee prices will be on an even more popular scale—30 and 40 cents. It is Mr. Rothapfel's idea that every effort should be made to minimize the price of amusements, and that the $1 mark is the logical top expenditure that will allow ample return for the theatre, and economic outlay for the patron.

It was Mr. Rothapfel who inaugurated the amusement policy of the Strand Theatre in April, 1914, and it was he who subsequently stepped in at the birth of the Rialto Theatre and made his own interesting type of program the most talked-of thing on Broadway. The Rivoli Theatre was next added to Mr. Rothapfel's list of theatre successes.

To Make Ralph Connor Stories

Winnipeg, May 26.

The Board of Trade and leading citizens of Winnipeg signed contracts today with Ernest Shipman, president of Dominion Films, controlling screen rights to Ralph Connor stories. Unlimited backing was pledged for the making of "The Foreigner," a story of Winnipeg. Mayor Grey, hero of the big strike, will assist Ralph Connor in story construction. It was voted to grant Calgary the right to film two of the Ralph Connor stories. "The Sky Pilot" will be reserved. Shipman left for New York to organize the producing company. The pictures will be released through First National.

To Produce "Old Homestead" in East

Although it was originally announced that "The Old Homestead," Denman Thompson's play, was to be made by George H. Melford for Paramount at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, announced this week that the picture would be made in the East.

Mr. Lasky explained that the switch in plans was caused by the fact that a large number of the scenes require New England settings, which cannot be duplicated outside of New England.

New $50,000 Nebraska House Has Clientele of Only 2,000

THE new Pastime Theatre owned by Albert Gehrke and Gus Holub of Ravenna, Nebraska, cost $50,000—just exactly $25 for every man, woman and child in Ravenna. There are 2,000 people in the busy little city.

Messrs. Gehrke and Holub started the theatre twelve years ago, occasionally enlarging it, but in the summer of 1919 the crowds became too large. Despite the cost of building material, additonal space was bought, the frame buildings were torn down and the big, new $50,000 structure was built. It seats 650 on the main coor and 150 in the gallery. Every evening the show runs, winter and summer, rain or shine, booking some of the best pictures obtainable.

The ticket office is in the inside lobby. The house is well heated in winter and well ventilated in summer, and the interior decoration is a pride of the owners. A neatly furnished rest room is provided for women. Th projection room is modern in every way, with two machines. The theatre has its own electric power plant and is free from the occasional failure of the local plant.

"It took a little nerve to spend $50,000 on a 50 by 120-foot building in a town this size, to be used exclusively for pictures, but the crowds we entertain every night, often crowding our house to capacity, proves that it is necessary to have something in order to sell it," is the way Gus Holub, who is the active manager, looks at it.

Mr. Holub has $25,000 invested and his partner, Mr. Gehrke, also has $25,000 in the business. Mr. Holub does the booking and looks after the operating end of the theatre.

Neilan's "River's End" Has Big Opening at the Tremont Temple

MARSHALL NEILAN'S initial independent production, "The River's End," received its premier for the New England territory at the Tremont Temple recently. After an auspicious opening, Tom Spry, manager of Tremont Temple, sent the following wire to the Neilan company: "'River's End' opened Monday night to one of the most enthusiastic audiences ever gathered together in Tremont Temple for any picture. No question but that we have the biggest hit of the year."

The picture is scheduled for an indefinite run and an extensive advertising campaign is being used to exploit it. Quarter page advertisements and special publicity displays in the newspapers are proving unusually effective.

In addition to the newspaper publicity a billboard campaign covering Boston and all the surrounding towns is being used. An elaborate tie-up campaign between the theatre, the publishers of the book, the local book stores and stores handling "The River's End" song is another feature of the campaign.

Universal's Star Series Will Consist of Forty-eight Specials by Six Stars

UNIVERSAL is well launched into the production of its Star Series, the new schedule of feature releases for the 1920-1921 season. This series contemplates forty-eight five-reel specials, turned out by six popular stars. Each star is to produce eight high-class photoplays. The series was planned so that any exhibitor can select a series of eight pictures by the Universal stars most popular among his patrons.

The stars are Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, working together, and Frank Mayo, Carmel Myers and Anne Cornwall. Two of the new series already have been completed. They are "The Girl in the Rain," featuring Anne Cornwall, and "The Red Lane," with Frank Mayo. The former is an adaptation of Varick Vanardy's novel, "The Girl by the Roadside." It was put into continuity form by Doris Schroeder and directed by Rollin Sturgeon. The latter is a picturization of Holman Day's novel of that name. It is an action story of the Canadian border. Lynn Reynolds was the director.

Edith Roberts Makes "Marama."

Three other Star Series pictures are under way. Edith Roberts is doing "Marama," a South Sea story by Ralph Stock. Every indication points to an unusual picture. Universal heads debated for some time whether this picture should be released as a Jewel production or placed in the Star Series. The decision to release it in the latter class is an evidence of the determination to make the Star Series a combination of high-class pictures. Norman Dawn is directing it.

Lyons and Moran are producing "La La Lucille," a film version of Fred Jackson's musical farce success of last season. The players have summoned all their eight years of screen comedy experience to aid them in making this new picture a succession of laughs.

Harry Carey is working on "Fightin' Job," an original screen story by H. H. Van Loan, the author of "The Virgin of Stamboul" and other highly successful photoplays. Carmel Myers, Universal's newest star, has just arrived at the West Coast, after giving up musical comedy work in New York, and is beginning work on a new story by Katherine Leiser Robbins, "In Folly's Trail," directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

Two more of the Star Series soon will be begun. They are "Sundown Slim," an original story for Harry Carey by H. H. Knibbs, the author of "Marked Men," Carey's recent success, and "Out of a Clear Sky," a humorous story by J. U. Giesy, a magazine writer. Edith Roberts will star in "Out of a Clear Sky," directed by Philip Rosen. It is a story of a dainty circus parachute jumper who lands in a young clergyman's garden and of the rollicking complications that result from his attempt to keep her hidden from his parishioners.

The first of the Star Series to be released will be "The Girl in the Rain," which is scheduled for July 12. "The Red Lane" will be released on July 19 and "Fightin' Job" on July 26.

"Marama," "La La Lucille" and "In Folly's Trail" will be released August 9, 16 and 26, respectively. After September 1 the Star Series pictures will be released one a week. Universal announces that the series will be started in the middle of the summer instead of the fall so as to give exhibitors strong drawing cards for the slack summer months.

West Coast Film Specialists Declare That "Mollycoddle" Suits Fairbanks

THAT "Douglas Fairbanks has come through with another winner" is the consensus of opinion of those West Coast experts who were given the opportunity of seeing the first print of "The Mollycoddles." Messages telling of the value from box office and patron standpoints of the picture have been received by Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists Corporation.

Mr. Abrams has set June 13 as the release date for this production, the third "Doug" has made for the Big Four. Expressions of opinion have come from Allan Dwan, the director; Anita Loos, the scenarist; Charles Chaplin and others who were the guests at a private viewing of the working print.

Gets Telegram of Praise.

The message received by Mr. Abrams states: "Just finished cutting working print 'Mollycoddle'; length approximately six thousand feet. Chaplin says brilliant, clever and a wonderful characterization—the best picture he ever saw Douglas in. Dwan says best picture 'Doug' ever made in his entire career. Anita Loos unqualifiedly agrees with Dwan. Mary Pickford very enthusiastic. We all think it a knockout."

Indications point to the premise that "Doug" has come through with another production that will add more laurels to those already won by his "Big Four" pictures. "The Mollycoddle" is unlike anything Fairbanks has yet been seen in, with a new idea and a story which finds him in an agreeable character.

Fairbanks has made a departure from the usual type of picture with which he has been identified. He has done away with much of his "stunting," which has been supplanted by a love story, affording him an opportunity to place himself in a subdued character of a sympathetic nature.

Spectacular "Fight" a Feature.

There is a fight participated in by the star and Wallace Beery, who shoulders the "heavy" work, which is declared to be unusual. For full ten minutes the two batter each other in a spectacular manner that heightens the realism.

Among other outstanding features of "The Mollycoddle" are the scenes which were taken at the Hopi Indian reservation in Arizona. Twenty-five hundred Indians perform their initial engagement in motion pictures.

It was only after considerable debating that Fairbanks was given permission by the chiefs to photograph the members of the tribe. When the redskins finally did get in action they proved to be an impressive asset.

Ruth Renick Is New "Lead."

Considerable attention will also be drawn to Ruth Renick, the new leading woman, who is a newcomer to the screen. The credit for the direction of "The Mollycoddle" falls to Victor Fleming, who for a long period was the head of the photgraphic department of the Fairbanks organization.

Mr. Fleming made his initial bow as a director when the second "Big Four" production, "When the Clouds Roll By," was filmed. Tom Reed assisted in the direction of the picture and the photography was done by William McCann and Harry Thorpe. The production management was in charge of Robert P. Fairbanks.

Claims Half Million Invested.

Among those who figure prominently in the cast are Betty Bouton, Adele Farrington, Charles Stevens, Lewis Hippe, Morris Hughes, George Steward and "Bull" Montana and Albert MacQuarrie. "The Mollycoddle" is the most expensive production ever made by Fairbanks.

The picture required more than ten weeks to make and three weeks for preparation purposes, with an asserted expenditure of $500,000. The scenario is by Tom Geraghty.

Pathe Division Heads Change.

W. S. Wesling, formerly stationed in St. Louis as southern division manager for Pathe, has been transferred to San Francisco to assume the coast division managership while William Yoder has succeeded him as southern division manager with headquarters in Dallas, Tex.

Empire of Portland Extends Bookings on New Neilan Film

THE statement first started at the New York Strand in connection with Marshall Neilan's initial independent production, "The River's End," that this picture proved "the biggest attraction in the history of this theatre," has again been duplicated by the Empire Theatre, Portland, Me.

In a telegram just received at the Marshall Neilan offices in New York Manager Boucher states that the film proved a most successful week's run of any picture in the history of his house. The production was booked through Tom Spry, of the Boston First National exchange for the usual run of three days. It was then extended another day. The business of the fourth day was so great that Manager Boucher again extended the booking two more days.

Henry B. Walthall Heads Big Star Cast in "A Splendid Hazard," A Mayflower Feature

ONE of the noteworthy features of "A Splendid Hazard," Allan Dwan's third independent production presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is the appearance of a five-star cast. Headed by Henry B. Walthall, it consists of seven prominent players, five of whom have been starred individually.

In the role of Karl Breitman, "the man who took the greatest sporting chance," Walthall gives one of the most brilliant characterizations he has ever contributed to the screen. The feminine lead is played by Rosemary Theby whose work in serials and dramatic features has brought her to the fore as a screen star. The young American newspaper correspondent who figures prominently in the story which was written by Harold MacGrath and published originally as a book is essayed by Norman Kerry, one of filmdom's best known leading men.

Joseph Dowling Heads Support.

Others in the five-star cast are Joseph Dowling, whose performance as "The Miracle Man" in George Loane Tucker's sensational success of that name, created a furor and who is also featured in "The Kentucky Colonel," and Ann Forrest, who has starred in a number of Western subjects produced by Universal.

The supporting company includes Thomas Jefferson, son of Joseph Jefferson, who attained everlasting fame in the role of "Rip Van Winkle." The former is recognized as one of the most skillful character actors on stage and in pictures and has a score of successes to his credit. Others in the cast of the Dwan production are Philo McCullough and Jiquel Lanoe.

"A Splendid Hazard" is scheduled for release during the early part of June. According to a statement from Mayflower, reports received from First National franchise holders throughout the country indicate that exhibitor interest has been keyed to a high pitch by the box office potentialities of the Dwan production.

"Girl Who Dared" Is Strong Western Drama.

For sheer western atmosphere running riot with fascinating outdoor shots and daring horsemanship, Edythe Sterling in "The Girl Who Dared," scheduled for release by Republic toward the close of May, is calculated to delight those audiences who flock to western melodrama, according to general manager Sam E. Morris of Select Pictures and Republic Distributing Corporation, who speaks for Republic.

"The Girl Who Dared" was written by Alvin J. Seitz and directed by Cliff Smith. It is said to tell the story of a plucky western girl who, in order to win the favor of the voters, captures a wild pinto horse roaming the plains.

The Secret Is "The Silent Barrier." What's It All About? Guess It Must Be Hidden Up in the Alps.

Scene 3 shows the heroine on her way up the mountains, but perhaps there's a barrier that will bring her to a halt. Three good views of this new Hodkinson release, made by the Louis Tracy Productions, with Florence Dixon and Gladys Hulette.

Make Scenes in San Francisco Chinatown for Vitagraph Film

CHESTER BENNETT will take his company, headed by Earle Williams, from Hollywood to San Francisco to spend two weeks in obtaining colorful Chinatown scenes and in filming submarine incidents in the bay. The story is "The Purple Cipher," announced by Albert E. Smith as the next Williams release. It is taken from a popular magazine novel, and happily combines its plot with a locale on the Pacific coast which enables the Vitagraph players to perform in the actual settings of the story all within a few hundred miles of the studio.

The story links China and the United States in a melodramatic plot of action and a surprise finish. The unseen hand of a Chinese tong affects and threatens the lives of a group of young Americans, men and women.

Vitagraph's permanent street set was enlarged to twice its size and redone into a Chinese atmosphere for Chinatown scenes requiring special lighting effects. These scenes were taken at night. The rest of the like scenes will be taken in San Francisco's Chinatown amid the actual setting pictured in the original story.

U. S. Navy submarines will play a part in the final climax, where the international band which signs its threats with "The Purple Cipher" is revealed. A surprise finish, totally unexpected, gives the plot an unique angle, it is said, and far out of the ordinary.

Vola Vale, who appeared with Mr. Williams in "A Master Stroke," his most recent feature, again is opposite him in this story. Henry A. Barrow, Allen Forest and Ernest Shields have important parts.

Morris Reports Big Exhibitor Returns on Six Republic Films

FROM coast to coast, east and west, north and south, in practically every town and hamlet boasting a motion picture theatre, six Republic productions have been creating big box office returns for exhibitors, according to Sam E. Morris, general manager of the Republic Distributing Corporation.

The six productions are "Trilby," starring Clara Kimball Young, "Twelve Ten," with Marie Doro, "The Gift Supreme," with Bernard Durning, "The One Way Trail," starring Edythe Sterling, "The Blue Pearl" and "Romany, Where Love Runs Wild," with all star casts.

"These box office returns reported to us by our branch managers," said Mr. Morris, "are the surest guarantees of the productions as worth while attractions. If they have created bigger patronage with its attendant returns for exhibitors, then other exhibitors who have not booked the pictures should fall in line and profit in a similar manner.

"Our notices to exhibitors are made as persistently and intensely as the advertising, campaign books and exploitation we carry on. With the combined efforts of our organization always available for exhibitors, the productions we offer must of necessity be out of the beaten track and sure-fire winners."

"The Valley of Doubt" to Be Released by Selznick May 24

CONTAINING all the power and dramatic force that has made Willard Mack, the famous playwright, known as a writer of virile stage dramas, "The Valley of Doubt," his screen creation for Selznick Pictures released on May 24, is said to reveal in the trend of its unfolding the master stroke of Director Burton George.

Director George, in his handling of the story and the cast of well known screen players, is credited with effectively throwing to the foreground the dynamic flow and stirring scenes of the Willard Mack drama. Thurston Hall, who plays the leading male role in the production, is ably supported by Arline Pretty, Anna Lehr, Jack Costello, Bobby Agnew, John Ardizoni and other talented screen players.

Exhibitor aids in the form of an interesting press book are offered by Selznick to help push the production over the top.

"Dangerous Paradise" First Louise Huff-Selznick Picture

LOUISE HUFF, in her forthcoming Selznick production, "The Dangerous Paradise," in which she makes her initial bow as a Selznick star, is supported by a stellar array of talent, according to an announcement this week.

Included in the cast are Ida Darling, Templar Saxe, Jack Raymond and Harry Benham.

Work on the production is said to be well under way, and expectations point to a production that in its entirety will embody the composite artistic endeavors of both the stars.

The story was written by Edmund Goulding.

"Common Clay" Still Going Strong.

Probably no other picture in the long list of Pathe release has enjoyed the longevity of "Common Clay," Pathe's cinema version of the stage play in which Fannie Ward had the leading role. At this time "Common Clay" is in the period of its career when most pictures, even those of the higher type, are resting comfortably on shelves, yet is being booked weekly in scores of theatres. This fact is attributed to the unusually high class presentation given the stage drama.

Mary Miles Minter Pictures Are Praised by Exhibitors

THE recent sensational quotations on the stock of a popular make of automobile offer a dull comparison to the sharp upward break Mary Miles Minter's name has made as a box-office asset with her last two Realart pictures, "Nurse Marjorie" and "Jenny Be Good," according to reports received from well-known exhibitors.

Dan Michalove, director of theatres for Southern Enterprises, Inc., declares that when these two productions have concluded their run over that circuit, Miss Minter "will be second to none in drawing power in our territory." He has proved his faith in this by scheduling the pictures for the maximum play dates for the circuit.

M. L. Finkelstein, of Finkelstein & Ruben, managers of the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate, personally viewed the two pictures and considered them the best Mary Miles Minter had ever made. Finkelstein & Ruben recently staged a record exploitation campaign for "Anne of Green Gables," Miss Minter's first Realart picture, and are planning to follow through with the star's latter pictures.

The Olympia Theatre, in Lynn, Mass., showed "Nurse Marjorie" for a week and, according to an official statement, "fully 25,000 persons witnessed the picture and were loud in their praise of her work."

As a result of reports of this nature that have had a wide circulation among exhibitors, maximum play dates have been reserved on circuits holding the contract for the Realart star series and extra days have been engaged by a number of exhibitors.

"Close-Up" of Tail Spin Shown for First Time in Pathe News

PATHE NEWS, No. 40, presents for the first time in motion pictures a "close-up" of a war plane looping the loop, taking a tail spin, and the views of the revolving earth and sky as the "stunt" plane was making its evolutions. The cameraman was actually grinding while he was upside down. The remarkable "shots" were secured at Bolling Field, D. C., where army "birdmen" hold their first Air Meet to maintain their wartime prowess.

To obtain the desired "close-up" required considerable daring on the part of the Pathe cameraman, as it was necessary that his plane should follow the army plane as closely as safety would permit. Several attempts were made before the coveted shot was secured, and even then it looked as though the planes were going to crash until the army flyer skillfully swerved his machine to safety.

Buffalo Showman Makes Plea for Films Holding Particular Appeal for Kiddies

THE attention of producers should be called to the shortage of suitable pictures for children, not of the slapstick comedy type, but picturizations of nursery rhymes and fairy tales so well known to the little folks, said Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood Theatre, one of Buffalo's largest neighborhood theatres, which caters to the children by staging weekly "matinees for kiddies."

"No doubt it is quite true that in the past those producers who have given us productions with a special appeal for children have lost money on the project, owing to the limited number of houses that can use subjects of this character and also owing to the short runs, often for matiness only. However, theatres situated in a community such as the Elmwood are always in the market for children's stories," said Mr. Fowler to the Moving Picture World representative.

"The great majority of pictures released today have no appeal to the little folks, and they crave entertainment as well as the grown-ups," Mr. Fowler continued. "Mothers are careful in the selection of amusement for their children, and if pictures are produced to appeal to the young mind, then the older folks will become interested in the picture plays; thus new patrons are created.

"Almighty Dollar" Not Only Goal.

"Undoubtedly producers will not net big profits on pictures of this class, neither will the theatres, but the almighty dollar should not be the only goal at this time. The kiddies of today are our citizens of tomorrow, and the moving picture industry has a big responsibility on its shoulders in catering to our future citizens.

"I am confident that every municipality would welcome active co-operation with every representative theatre in lowering the ban on admission to children for special matinees, providing the trade could guarantee pictures for the kiddies.

"This problem rests solely with the producer," Mr. Fowler concluded, "and if they will lay the foundation for making these pictures they will not only be cementing a closer friendship with the family circle but will be doing a real service for the citizens of a coming day."

Leading First Run Exhibitors Booking "Riders of the Dawn"

RIDERS OF THE DAWN," the Benjamin B. Hampton production of Zane Grey's novel, "The Desert of Wheat," is receiving the same enthusiastic exhibitor approval that was accorded Mr. Hampton's previous author-supervised pictures, judging from a banner first week's business reported from many of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation exchanges.

Tom Moore, of Washington, D. C.; James Q. Clemmer, of Seattle, and James Beatty, with big first run houses in Fresno and San Jose, are the leaders among the larger houses of the country that booked and gave immediate play dates during the past week to the Zane Grey production. Word of its successful premiere at the Mark Strand, New York, prompted Mr. Moore to shelve another picture and open his "Riders of the Dawn" presentation at his Strand Theatre on May 30 instead of June 6, as originally planned.

Mr. Beatty's Liberty theatres at Fresno and San Jose will give "Riders of the Dawn" a week's day and date engagement that will be inaugurated with a powerful promotion campaign. Mr. Clemmer promises a campaign that will equal in power his promotion of Benjamin B. Hampton's "The Westerners," the Seattle showman already planning a sixteen-column newspaper advertising spread such as he used on the previous Hodkinson release.

Goldwyn to Distribute New Series of Two-Reel Comedies

A NEW series of twenty-six two-reel comedies, produced by the National Film Corporation of America, will be released through Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, according to an announcement received from Goldwyn. The exact nature of these comedies is not revealed but it is said that they are modeled along unusual lines and feature players who are well known to both stage patrons and motion picture audiences.

Captain Harry M. Rubey, president of the National corporation, is authority for the statement that these will be the most costly two-reel photoplays ever made at the company's studios in Hollywood. The first four releases, "The Road to Ruin," "His Wife's Husband," "In and Out" and "Knocking 'Em Cold" have been completed and prints soon will be in the hands of Goldwyn exchange managers.

Criterion Books "Humoresque" for an Indefinite Engagement

HUMORESQUE," Fannie Hurst's story of mother love, done in motion pictures by Cosmopolitan Productions, will be shown for the first time at the Criterion Theatre, beginning Sunday, May 30, where it opens for an indefinite run.

"As a portrait of a fascinating part of New York's—and therefore America's—life, as a portrait of the spirit of the ghetto, it surpasses any cinema description of that field that I have ever seen," said Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Criterion, in announcing the booking of the production.

"The sympathetic drawing of the Jewish character, with its strength, its meekness, its idealism and its proverbial love of all that is of the family, is interpreted by the actors with a skill that makes me believe they have lived and breathed in the spirit of that race.

"As I sat and watched Miss Hurst's effort on the screen I felt that I was seeing my own youth revealed—the never-ending struggle for an education, in my case musical, as in the case of the hero of this picture; the recurrent sacrifice of the Jewish mother that her child may have the place denied to her, and the crusty old father who protests against these sacrifices and labors even more than she to see that the sacrifices are made possible.

"As I saw myself in the photoplay, so will thousands of others see themselves. The picture is great because it reflects reality."

Selznick Buys Van Loan Story

Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures, has purchased from H. H. Van Loan, a well-known motion picture writer, an original story which will be put into production in the near future, according to present plans. The title of the story is "The Nobleman," in which the writer has embodied a plot and counterplot which is declared to be of decidedly unique interest.

Mr. Selznick has engaged Mary Murillo to prepare the story for the screen. Production is expected to begin as soon as all necessary preparations have been completed.

Educational Opens Buffalo Branch

Educational Films Corporation announces the opening early in June of an additional exchange in Buffalo, which will handle a considerable share of the bookings for New York State. The office will be located at 327 Main street, Buffalo, and will be under the management of D. J. Savage. Exhibitors will be able to see a number of Educational pictures at the Buffalo exchange in advance of their release dates.

Alice Brady Quits Stage to Star for Year with Realart

ALICE BRADY has decided to discontinue temporarily her work on the speaking stage and to devote her entire time and energies to the making of pictures for Realart. The decision comes after two seasons as the star in Owen Davis' successful play, "Forever After."

Miss Brady is now in Chicago, where, in addition to playing at the Princess Theatre in "Forever After," she is working on her third Realart picture, "A Dark Lantern," under the direction of John S. Robertson. As soon as her stage engagement is finished and the final scenes for "A Dark Lantern" taken Miss Brady will return to New York City and will take a rest before starting work on her next season's productions for Realart.

Played Both Films and Stage.

For several seasons Miss Brady has devoted almost her entire time to the stage. Her return to the screen, therefore, for a year at least, during which time she will appear solely in Realart pictures, will be of considerable interest to exhibitors who in past years have built up large Brady followings.

It has not been definitely decided whether Miss Brady will produce her pictures on the West Coast or in New York City, but it is believed that the latter will be the choice. This will enable the star to have the range of the country's fashion center and to maintain her reputation as among the best and most stylishly dressed women of the screen.

Gasnier and Skinner Ready to Start Work on "Kismet"

FOR the first time since organizing his own company, Louis J. Gasnier, head of Gasnier Productions, will take up the megaphone and assume personal direction of the coming production of "Kismet," with Otis Skinner in the leading role. Announcement of Mr. Gasnier as director for "Kismet" is made by Robertson-Cole, which company will distribute the picture.

Mr. Gasnier has been in New York in conference with Mr. Skinner, who appeared for three solid years in "Kismet," in which he had the central role of Hadji. All arrangements have been made and the director and the star will soon begin work.

New Fanny Ward Picture

J. A. Ferrand, New York representative for the DeLac & Vandal Company of France, announces that Fanny Ward will appear in the stellar role of "She Played and Paid," the newest DeLac & Vandal picture to reach the market, instead of "Storm-Swept," as announced last week.

The story is a screen adaptation of Henri Bernstein's masterpiece, "La Rafale," and the title of "Storm-Swept" was originally given this picture during its production period in Paris. Upon bringing the picture to the American market, however, the producers changed the title to "She Played and Paid," which they consider a more apropos and fitting title.

Tie-up with Legion Insured Big Crowds for Premiere of Carpentier Production

ONE of the greatest ovations ever given a motion picture star is predicted for Georges Carpentier, war hero and boxer, when his first screen production, "The Wonder Man," presented by Robertson-Cole, is shown in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, New York, for one week, beginning Saturday evening, May 29.

The showings are under the auspices of the American Legion of New York County. Carpentier is extremely popular with the Legion, not only because of his war record—he was decorated three times and wounded twice—but for other reasons. One week before the initial showing every seat was sold and the advance sale of seats for the other performances was progressing satisfactorily. Much enthusiasm was worked up and the way paved for a heavy advance sale at prices ranging from $1 to $2.

Ex-Soldiers Much Interested.

It is estimated that 4,000,000 ex-soldiers and their friends and families, aggregating several more millions, all will want to see Carpentier. This is one of the strongest angles of exploitation on which the exhibitor can dwell. Here is the way the Robertson-Cole home office in New York put over the premier showing of "The Wonder Man."

When the New York County Committee of the Legion decided to hold the showings under its auspices, President Henry Buxton appointed a committee of representative business men to work in co-operation with Robertson-Cole. Tickets were put on sale with all of the branch agencies of a prominent amusement ticket seller. The committee also placed women members of the Legion in the lobbies of the big hotels as voluntary workers in selling tickets.

Advertising accessories were distributed by the county organization to the various local posts, and Legion and post members saw to it that the advertising was displayed in their sections. Oil paintings of Carpentier were placed in store windows. A specially mapped out campaign was followed in newspaper and trade paper advertising. The newspaper campaign began the Sunday before the showings and extended throughout the week.

The paper, consisting of twenty-four sheet stands, six, three and one sheets, was distributed liberally throughout the city, and one sheets were posted in subway and elevated stations. The management of the Hotel Astor decorated the grand ballroom with the French and American colors, placed advertising matter in its lobby and permitted the display of electric signs.

Governor Smith of New York and Governor Edwards of New Jersey accepted invitations to attend the opening performance, as did Admiral Glennon, commandant of the Third Naval District, comprising New York, and Lieutenant General Bullard. Arrangements were made for distributing handsome Carpentier souvenirs to women attending the opening performance.

Private View of "Restless Sex"

A special private showing of Marion Davies' latest starring feature, "The Restless Sex," a Cosmopolitan production released by Paramount-Artcraft, will be held Wednesday, June 2, at 8:30 p. m., in the grand ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel.

"The Restless Sex," which is by Robert W. Chambers and hailed by critics as one of the best things he has ever written, appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Robertson-Cole Prepares Elaborate Press Book on Carpentier's Special Production

ROBERTSON-COLE has published as an aid to the exhibitor in showing "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, the most pretentious of the many elaborate press books which it recently has issued. The book has been forwarded to the twenty-five Robertson-Cole branches.

The front cover is to be used as a lobby display. It contains in the centre a large smiling likeness of Carpentier with the popular Frenchman at each corner, smaller, in different garbs.

Just inside the book is tipped in a beautiful picture of Carpentier for the same sort of use. In this picture he is seen standing in evening dress before a background of the French tricolor. Following this there is a sales talk, by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation.

Contains Regular News Stories.

A complete set of display advertisements of various sorts appealing both to the sporting element and to women who form the greater bulk of picture audiences are included.

Another page contains the press comments which were made on Carpentier upon his arrival in this country, including excerpts from editorials, special stories and regular news stories. A page is also devoted to a sketch of the life of Carpentier with all its romance.

On the following page is shown pictures of the cast supporting him which includes Faire Binney, Robert Barrat, Downing Clarke, Francois Descamps, Florence Billings, P. C. Hartigan and Charles Craig. Lobby displays including reproductions of the various still photographs available and an elaborate list of excessories occupy more space.

Eight Pages on Exploitation.

The exploitation section takes up fully eight pages of the book. It contains teaser ads, co-operative advertising, commercial tie-ups, stunts, booklet and novelty, stickers and heralds, mailing list, contests, lobby display, prologue. Included also is a detailed program for the exhibitor to follow, chronologically arranged.

Following this are pages devoted to complete program copy, to more scenes from the production, to the posters provided, and a page to the career of Director John G. Adolfi. In addition to this there is a twelve-page newspaper publicity insert divided into two parts. The first six pages are designed for use by dramatic editors and news editors. The second section is for use by sporting editors exclusively and contains news and special stories to meet all the needs of the exhibitors showing the picture in a city of any size. Accompanying this is a complete line of cuts.

"Cynthia-of-the-Minute" Has Hardly Any Interior Scenes

"CYNTHIA-OF - THE - MINUTE," starring Leah Baird, the Gibraltar picture version of Louis Joseph Vance's widely read novel for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, is one of the very few plays completed since 1914 to represent the great outdoors by land and sea practically to the exclusion of interiors.

The story has little to do with drawing room scandal, although there is plenty of intrigue and spirited action develops almost from the beginning. The attempt of a band of sea brigands to scuttle a ship in which the heroine has become interested through her association with the titled woman owning it, and her thwarting of the plan through her knowledge of wireless telegraphy, suggest something of the sort of play this is, but it is impossible to convey except by witnessing the picture a correct notion of the dramatic interest maintained throughout the six parts of "Cynthia- of-the-Minute."

Besides Burr McIntosh and Hugh Thompson, the cast assembled by Arthur F. Beck to support Miss Baird includes Alexander Gaden, Mathilde Brundage, John Webb Dillon, Wallace Widdecombe and William Welch.

Hammerstein's Supporting Cast Given for "The Point of View"

FIRST announcement of the cast supporting Elaine Hammerstein in her forthcoming Selznick production, "The Point of View," was made this week by Myron Selznick, supervisor of productions for Selznick Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Selznick stated that the picture, now in the course of production, will be a revelation in picture making, in that it will contain striking and elaborate interior sets. The story is said to offer unusual opportunities for the display of Miss Hammerstein's acting ability, affording her a role distinctly different from anything she has ever essayed under the Selznick banner.

In the cast are included the names of several prominent screen players. Arthur Housman, the well known portrayer of heavy roles, is scheduled to play the heavy. Other players are Warren Cook and Cornish Beck, both of whom have appeared creditably in several Selznick productions, Rockliffe Fellowes, who appeared with Ethel Barrymore on the stage and who among other productions is equally well known to screen fans for his appearance in the Selznick picture, "The Easiest Way," Helen Lindroth, also a prominent figure in screen circles, and Hugh Huntley, known to both stage and screen circles, and Hugh Hutley, known to both st ge and screen as a talented actor.

"The Point of View" is a screen adaptation of Edith Ellis' stage play of the same name. Alan Crosland is directing.

Work Progressing Rapidly on Viola Dana's Next Metro Film

WORK is now well under way at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood on Viola Dana's next starring vehicle, which has been retitled "The Chorus Girl's Romance." It is a picturization of F. Scott Fitzgerald's Saturday Evening Post story, "Head and Shoulders" and follows Miss Dana's characterization of Eliza, in "Dangerous to Men," adapted from the stage play by H. V. Esmond.

Miss Dana now has the role of a chorus girl whose specialty is shimmy dancing.

F. Scott Fitzgerald's story was adapted to the screen by Percy Heath and William C. Dowlan is directing.

Miss Dana's leading man, Gareth Hughes, has the part of Horace Tarbox, the studious college boy who falls in love with the little dancer. Phil Ainsworth has been cast for an important part as Steve Reynolds, a cabaret performer.

Others in the exceptional cast are William Quinn, Jerre Sundin, Sidney De Grey, Lawrence Grant, Tom Gallery, Edward Jobson and Martyn Best.

John Arnold is photographing the production, and the special art settings are by A. E. Freuderman.

Many Goldwyn Productions Are in the Course of Completion

HAVING finished his work in "Cupid, the Cowpuncher," a story by Eleanor Gates, produced by Goldwyn at the Culver City Studios, Will Rogers is waiting for the completion of the continuity of "Old Hutch," Garret Smith's story that ran in The Saturday Evening Post. In the new picture, as in his previous successes, Rogers will be directed by Clarence Badger.

The production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Empire Builders," a story of "prep" school life, is progressing under the direction of E. Mason Hopper, who at present has an army of 500 colored people on an island north of Santa Monica where scenes representing life among South Sea Island savages are being filmed.

"Just Out of College," George Ade's play, has been selected as the next starring vehicle for Jack Pickford, who, directed by Al Green, is nearing the final episodes of "The Man Who Had Everything." "Just Out of College" is one of the finest comedies ever written by America's premiere humorist and provides a central character in every way suited to the personality of Goldwyn's youthful male star.

By the latter part of this week, Tom Moore will be engaged on the production of the mystery farce, "Stop Thief," with Hazel Daly as his leading woman. Harry Beaumont is directing. Wallace Worsley has just finished editing Gouverneur Morris' "The Penalty," a Goldwyn Eminent Authors Picture.

"Honey Bee" Goes Big at the Casino.

Manager W. Z. Boyd, of the Casino, Chester, Pa., had a big two-day run when he put over "The Honey Bee." "One of the best film plays seen in Chester in many months" was the comment. "The scenes in the play were gripping and the attention of the audience was intense as the picture unfolded a thrilling story of romance" is the word which reached the producers of this "Flying A" Special after its first run. "Unusual" is the way Mr. Boyd advertised this picture.

Goldwyn-Bray Comics Well Received.

Throughout the world of motion pictures the new Goldwyn-Bray Comics, which are made in co-operation with the International Film Service, have won an assured place on the comedy end of programs. Such characters as Judge Rumhausor and Happy Hooligan are as well known to picture patrons as some of the best advertised screen stars. In their new animated form, these grotesque characters of the daily newspapers are winning new converts to their style of fun-making.

Picturization of His Novel Gratifies Sir Louis Tracy

SIR LOUIS TRACY, author of "The Silent Barrier," witnessed a private showing of the feature production just finished by Gibraltar Pictures for W. W. Hodkinson release, before his departure from New York, a few days ago, and expressed himself as delighted with the pictorial results achieved by Director William Worthington.

After viewing the picture as presented in its incomplete stage by Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., the producing organization headed by C. C. Burr, Sir Louis remarked on the success with which Swiss Alpine scenes has been reproduced. These scenes, which were made at Lake Placid, with sixty people in the company and such well known artists as Sheldon Lewis, Gladys Hulette, Corinne Barker and Donald Cameron, took eight weeks of hard work in the very depth of winter.

"I have spent some time at St. Moritz in the Swiss Engadine, where these scenes are laid," said Sir Louis, "but the snow scenes would positively deceive me into believing that they were made in Switzerland if I didn't happen to know just where they were enacted."

Allan Dwan Takes Scenes at Camp in California Sierras

RUGGED mountain scenery, weird and colorful effects, innovations in photographic arts, will form important settings in the new Allan Dwan production for Mayflower. Scenes are being taken at Camp Keen, at an elevation of 5,000 feet in the Southern California Sierras, where Director Dwan and company went a week ago.

Cameraman Antonio Gaudio turned the crank almost constantly from sunrise to sunset. Advantage was taken of the photographic morning light and the mountain sunsets. The "shooting" schedule was worked out more than two weeks before the picture was started. Victor Dwan and his assistant, James Hogan, spent several days at Camp Keen, writing the continuity to fit the actual scenes which they planned to film.

"This method of fitting the continuity to the scenes on location rather than seeking locations that fit the continuity," declared Allan Dwan, "has proved a great success. We have been able to make the scenes in about half the time, thereby allowing more chance to perfect the artistic details."

Mary Thurman and Niles Welch play the leading roles. Joseph Dowling and Frank Campeau play "heavies"; Eugenie Besserer, an emotional mother role, and George Hackathorn appears in a sympathetic part. Stanton Williams is also in the cast.

Begin Work on Storyart Scenics.

Work on the filming of the first of the Storyart Scenics, which Charles Clemens Husted is producing, has been started and it is said that the initial release will be in readiness for a private showing within a short time.

Mr. Husted has as his cameraman Earl W. Rossman, formerly one of the experts with the Prizma organization and a man who thoroughly understands the technique of photography and laboratory work.

A specially engaged cast of players has been used in the first of the Storyart Scenics, which are not only to depict unusual nature stories, but be enhanced by the appearance of models to properly illustrate some of the poetic incidents of the stories.

Mr. Husted expects to go ahead rapidly with the work of production now that he has started and will complete at least four of his Storyart Scenics before making any release, although private showings will be given as each one is completed.

Universal Director Reports Completion of Anne Cornwall's "Girl in the Rain"

ROLLIN STURGEON, Universal director, has just announced the completion at Universal City for a new picture starring Anne Cornwall, Universal's most recent stellar find. The picture, "The Girl in the Rain," is an adaptation of Varick Vanardy's popular novel, "The Girl by the Roadside." It will be one of the first releases under the newly established Star Series plan of Universal bookings.

"The Girl in the Rain" is Miss Cornwall's third picture for Universal. Her first was "Everything but the Truth," in which she played a supporting role to Lyons and Moran. She then was starred in a picturization of Ida M. Evans' magazine story, "Virginia," which was released as a picture under the title of "The Path She Chose."

"The Girl in the Rain" is a story of a pretty girl who is marooned by a tempest in a deserted shack with a socially prominent young man. The two fall in love, but the girl is the innocent associate of a pair of lawbreakers. The complications that result from her attempts to break from the crooks and to keep her story from her new found love, form a spirited plot full of action and mystery.

Supporting Miss Cornwall are James Liddy, Lloyd Bacon, Jossalyn Von Trump, James Farley, George Runkel and Neal Hardin.

Both Miss Cornwall and Liddy, who plays opposite her, are newcomers in the films. Both are former musical comedy favorites. Miss Cornwall formerly was one of the prettiest chorus girls who played in the series of intimate musical shows presented at the Princess Theatre, New York. Her principal screen portrayal before joining Universal, was that of the ingenue role in "The Copperhead," with Lionel Barrymore.

Liddy was a star football half-back before he went on the stage. He was a University of Arizona favorite and made the All-Western team.

"The Girl in the Rain" will be released July 12.

Olive Thomas Is Supported by Eight Prominent Artists

OLIVE THOMAS in her forthcoming Selznick production, "Jenny," has an array of supporting talent that includes the names of eight prominent screen players, according to an announcement this week.

The names of the well kown film folk embrace Barney Sherry, well known for his portrayals in the productions of most of the more prominent film concerns; Betty Schade, who has appeared in "Happiness a la Mode," a Selznick picture, and other screen plays; Colin Kenny, who played a part in the National Picture Theatres production, "Blind Youth"; Andrew Arbuckle, well known as a portrayer of western roles; Margaret McQuade and Mrs. George Hernandez.

"Jenny" is in the course of production at the Selznick West Coast studios. This story, written by the noted British author, Roy Horniman, is said to have caused considerable comment in the literary circles of both America and London.

Laurence Trimble, who guided Zena Keefe, the Selznick 1920 star, in "The Woman God Sent," is directing the production.

Working Day and Night on S-L Special Production

TRYING to catch up to the schedule originally mapped out for the S-L special production of "Love, Honor and Obey," the photoplay adapted by Eugene Walter from Charles Neville Buck's novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness," Director Leander de Cordova has started a week of day-and-night work that will leave the company with no time to themselves for anything but sleep.

The original schedule laid out by Maxwell Karger, director general, was upset by the illness of Wilda Bennett, who plays the heroine, Constance Williams. Miss Bennett was new to the screen and the bright lights of the studio caused a case of Klieg eyes and temporary blindness.

Claire Whitney, who plays Marion Holbury, the New York society woman, found her schedule interrupted by rehearsals for "An Innocent Idea," the stage play in which she was preparing to appear with Robert Emmet Keane. Now playing "An Innocent Idea" at night, she will be available for the motion picture in daytime only.

Then the New York Maytime weather stepped in and forbade a number of scheduled exterior scenes to be made.

Marion Davies Starts on New Play.

Marion Davies, who recently completed "The Restless Sex" for Cosmopolitan Productions, has started work on "Buried Treasure," from the story of the same name by F. Austen Britten.

Interrupting a Discussion to Get Their Latest Photograph.

Reading from left to right, they are: William J. Ferguson, playing on the stage in "The Little Whopper"; Tom Lewis, well-known comedian, and J. Stuart Blackton, director of a new Pathe special in which these players appear.

Robertson-Cole Explains Exploitation Possibilities of "The Heart of Twenty"

SOME unusual exploitation angles have been mapped out by Robertson-Cole on "The Heart of Twenty," the Brentwood picture, soon to be released, featuring ZaSu Pitts, the distinctive little actress of quaintly human parts.

The exploitation section of the campaign book on this picture shows a dozen ways of increasing box office receipts, with a minimum of expense. An ingenious plan outlined takes advantage of the electioneering campaigns that are now going on in every section of the country. Although "The Heart of Twenty" is a comedy-drama of youthful aspiration, there is an electioneering angle that is peculiarly timely.

In a general way, the plan is to work up an interest in two mysterious candidates for mayor in the particular city where the exhibitor is located. It is suggested that as far ahead of the presentation of the picture as possible, the exhibitor plasters his town with electioneering one-sheets, giving the impression that two men, Higginbotham and Wiseman, are rival candidates for the mayoralty.

Even though the regular mayoralty campaign is many months away, these one-sheets are calculated to arouse the curiosity. Of couse it is necessary for the exhibitor to keep in the background. If a Higginbotham or a Wiseman live in the exhibitor's town, they might be induced to issue statements to the newspapers denying they are candidates for office.

The connection with the theatre comes about through the insertion of an advertisement, separate and distinct from the regular advertising on the picture, announcing that a joint debate will be held by the two candidates at the theatre. A postscript on the ad states that the debate will not interfere with the regular showings of "The Heart of Twenty" and the debate is a part of the picture. The secret is out after the first showing and a good follow-up stunt is suggested.

De Cordoba in Cast of Second Faversham-Selznick Picture

INCLUDED in the prominent cast supporting William Faversham in his second Selznick production, "The Sin That Was His," in addition to Lucy Cotton is Pedro de Cordoba, well known to both exhibitors and screen fans as a player of no mean ability, who plays an important role in the picture.

Mr. Cordoba's name is linked with many stage and screen productions. On the stage he appeared with Sothern and Marlowe for two seasons in "If I Were King," with Leonore Ulric in "Tiger Rose," and among others in the famous Maurice Maeterlinck play. His screen productions have brought him considerable fame, and it is expected that his engagement in support of Mr. Faversham in "The Sin That Was His" will reveal an unusually effective and impressive characterization that will surpass anything he has ever done on the screen.

"The Sin That Was His" is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man." Hobart Henley is directing.

Schaefer Doing Much Editing and Titling.

Fred Schaefer, formerly of General Film, has been turning his versatility to good account since giving up the publicity directorship of that company. He has been some months with the Vitagraph Company of America editing and titling releases and doing continuity.

He has adapted four pictures for Harry Morey and one for Earle Williams, several of which are in production. The current release from his pen is "The Sea Rider" from a synopsis by H. L. Dittmar, of which Schaefer has made a strikingly colorful marine story.

Schaefer has also written the lines for the Alice Joyce feature, "Dollars and the Woman," is titling a Duncan serial and a Joe Ryan serial, and is editing a number of forthcoming pictures.

"Hatriet and the Piper" Nearing Completion.

Anita Stewart's latest Mayer-made First National production, "Harriet and the Piper," is fast nearing completion in the Los Angeles studios of Louis B. Mayer. Only a few of the scenes remain to be photographed and cutting will begin by the end of the week. The cast includes Irving Cummings, Ward Crane, Charles Richman, Myrtle Stedman, Barbara La Mar Deely, Byron Munson and Margaret Landis.

The picture is being directed by Bertram Bracken, and Monte M. Katterjohn arranged the screen version from the story of the same name by Kathleen Norris.

Coleman Is Lead in New Talmadge Film.

Vincent Coleman, who is now appearing opposite Josephine Victor in "Martinique" at the Eltinge Theatre in New York, has been engaged for the leading male role in Constance Talmadge's next feature. Mr. Coleman has appeared in several films during the past year, but this new feature marks his first attempt at working before the camera and on the stage at the same time.

Exhibitors Await Max Linder Release.

America has not forgotten Max Linder, the popular French comedian. This statement is based upon reports received from Pathe, on the early bookings accorded "The Little Cafe," in which Linder again makes his American appearance as a star. Pathe on June 6 is to release the screen comedy which was adapted from the great Klaw & Erlanger legitimate success of the same name. Early bookings on the production assure Linder of a cordial reception on his return to the screen, after several years spent in the trenches of France.

"Doug" and Mary in an Intimate View at Their Home.

Snapped after the day's work. Mary Pickford is playing in "Suds" and Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mollycoddle," both to be presented by United Artists.

Leonard Company to Come East; "Evil Eye" Is About Completed

WORD comes from the Coast that the last episodes of the Hallmark serial, "The Evil Eye," by Roy L. McCardell, starring Benny Leonard, lightweight champion of the world, are now nearing completion and that the company, which includes supervising Director Wally Van, Director J. Gordon Cooper, Stuart Holmes, Ruth Dwyer, Mme. Marstini and others will soon return to New York.

As the story of "The Evil Eye" parallels the great Wall Street bond mystery and deals most extensively with the elusive "mastermind," it was necessary to make the first three episodes in New York. The company after finishing the Wall Street scenes, in which the Consolidated Stock Exchange figures conspicuously, left for the Coast the latter part of February, where they have been working ever since, with the exception of a week spent in Tijuana, Mexico, where the big race track scenes in the ninth and tenth episodes were made just before the overthrow of the Caranza Government.

Metro Preparing to Picturize "Big Game."

With the completion of the scenario of "Big Game," a virile story of the Northwest, casting will commence immediately, the plan being to make this play into a Metro all-star screen production.

The play was produced during the present season in New York and met with conspicuous success. Willard Robertson and Kilbourne Gordon wrote the original drama. Elliott Clawson of the scenario department at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood translating it to the screen.

Lucy Cotton in Leading Role.

Playing the leading feminine role in the Hobart Henley production, "The Sin That Was His," in which William Faversham will make his second appearance as a Selznick star, is Lucy Cotton, known throughout stage and film circles as an actress who can imbue her portrayals with sheer realism.

Miss Cotton has appeared in leading roles for some of the more prominent film concerns. Her last appearance in a Selznick picture was in "The Broken Melody," starring Eugene O'Brien.

Mayer Putting "Old Dad" in Film.

"Old Dad," the Eleanor Hallowell Abbott serial which was published recently in a popular monthly magazine, is soon to be given to the picture public in motion picture form. The story was purchased by Louis B. Mayer for Mildred Harris Chaplin.

George Stewart, brother of Anita, appears opposite the star and the cast includes Myrtle Stedman, Irving Cummings, John Sainpolis and Hazel Howell.

The picture is now in the course of production and is being directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

"You're Pinched" Is New Rolin Comedy.

"You're Pinched," showing the trials of a motor-cycle cop is the latest Rolin Comedy which Pathe will release June 6. "Snub" Pollard is featured with the little Italian beauty, Marie Mosquini, as his leading woman. Eddie Boland and "Sunshine Sambo" assist in the funmaking. The comedy opens with a burst of speed and maintains this tempo throughout, showing that a full-fledged force of motor-cycle cops can prduce an entirely new brand of humor.

Matt Moore has been engaged for the leading part in "The Passionate Pilgrim," the Cosmopolitan Production to be made from Samuel Merwin's novel of the same name, which appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine. Robert Vignola will direct.

Making Big Scenes for Drury Lane Drama in Connecticut

THE cast of "The Marriages of Mayfair," reinforced by more than 200 extra persons, has started work on location at Stamford, Conn., and at country estates in that vicinity on the Sound. They will be occupied there for several weeks.

"The Marriages of Mayfair," by Cecil Raleigh, is the latest of the five Drury Lane melodramas selected for production by Metro. The screening of most of the interior scenes has already been made at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street.

The first scenes taken at Stamford represent an exclusive clubhouse on the Thames at the time of the Henley Regatta.

The scenes to be taken at Laddin's Rock represent Deerminster Hall, the English estate of the Earl of Deerminster. Here the tenantry turn out to greet the new earl and a rustic festival is held. Scenes taken there will also show the rocky precipice over which Jim Callender is hurled in his final struggle for life. This precipice in the picture is on the Swiss-Italian border overlooking a lake.

Other scenes to be filmed in the Connecticut location show the exterior of the monastery of St. Bernard. The big monastery scenes, which take place in the interior, have already been filmed in the New York studio in a set designed by M. P. Staulcup, art director. The exterior scenes are all night scenes. A building of monastic design has been found and in the night one enormous window will be lighted by flares from inside with a huge cross against the window. These scenes will all show the monastery in the distance.

Other locations representing less important scenes will be taken while the company is on the Connecticut location. The company will then return to New York, where the big scenes about the Tower of London will be taken on a site to be developed by M. P. Staulcup on the East River.

"The Dancin' Fool," Starring Reid, Scheduled for May 23

SCHEDULED for relese May 23 is the Paramount production, "The Dancin' Fool," starring Wallace Reid. The story which Clara G. Kennedy scenarized was written by Henry Payson Dowst and was printed originally in the Saturday Evening Post. Sam Wood was the director.

"The Dancin' Fool" has been aptly described as the story of a jovial jay who jazzed the jug business by day and the jig business by night. In the early part of the picture Mr. Reid, with his leading woman, Bebe Daniels, as his dancing partner, does three sets of what might be called interpretive dancing. The cave man period shows them in skin costumes in a bower of primitive beauty. Then the Apache dance is executed with much skill and abandon, while later the modern steps are performed with exceeding grace.

In the supporting cast Raymond Hatton is said to have a fine character role, while others who are prominent are William Marks, George B. Williams, Sylvia Ashton, Carlos San Martin, W. H. Brown, Tully Marshall, Ernest Joy and Ruth Ashby.

Start Work on Ince's "Beau Revel."

Under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and the direction of John Griffith Wray, the new Thomas H. Ince-Louis Joseph Vance Special, "Beau Revel," he entered production.

Kathleen Kirkham has been engaged to appear with Lewis Stone, Lloyd Hughes and other film lights in the new superspecial.

Night life along the Gay White Way, when the sky was the limit, are reproduced with all their attendant luxuriousness. The theme is a highly interesting and unusual one, and the settings of metropolitan splendor form a fitting background.

50 Day Continuous booking on Universals.

Universal has voted a 100 per cent. service flag to Ed Dolan, owner and operator of the Dream Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash. Dolan is running a 50 day continuous booking of Universal pictures.

Beginning with a three day run of "The Virgin of Stamboul" May 17, he is following it with several other Universal-Jewel productions, a dozen or more Universal feature productions short stuff, and Century and Star comedies, lasting until July 7.

V. M. Shubach, manager of Universal's Seattle branch, says he would have booked Dolan up for many more days if the Universal sales schedule had gone any further into the future.

All of the Dream Theatre's bookings of Universal pictures are for two or three days.

Will Retain Name of Novel for "Flying A" Production

THE producers of the new "Flying A" special, "The House of Toys," have decided to retain for the screen version the title given the novel by its author, Henry Russell Miller, a practicing lawyer in Pittsburgh. The drama presented by the American Film Company is anything but on the juvenile order, and there was some thought that the name might mislead the public into expecting some child's story. The drama shows how through experience and suffering the lovers' house of toys was strengthened with sound foundation and framework.

Seena Owen is the star in this six-act drama. A large and strong supporting cast is headed by Pell Trenton. Helen Jerome Eddy and George Hernandez have important roles, in which they display histrionic ability of a high order. Other members of the cast are Henry Barrows, Marian Skinner, Lillian Leighton and Perry Banks.

Metro's Eastern Companies on Location.

Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street, which have recently been the scene of continuous activity with three productions going on at once, have quieted down to the comparative calm of one photoplay. Taking advantage of the sunshine and fine weather, Director General Maxwell Karger has sent two of the production units out on location.

The S-L production, "Love, Honor and Obey," Eugene Walter's adaptation of Charles Neville Buck's novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness," is having its rural scenes screened on Long Island, in the vicinity of Glen Cove.

Cecil Raleigh's Drury Lane melodrama, "The Marriages of Mayfair," adapted by Julia Burnham, is having some of its outdoor scenes screened at Stamford, Conn., and on country estates nearby.

Only "Clothes," the Avery Hopwood-Channing Pollock drama, adapted by Arthur Zellner, remains at the New York studio.

Navigation Company Books Paramounts.

W. H. Sellender, general passenger agent, Matson Navigation Company, signed a contract to use Paramount pictures exclusively on the four ships of his company between San Francisco and the Hawaiian Islands. Paramount pictures are shown every evening of the 5½-day voyage, Cannot keep off the screen. She is planning to return to her favorite field.

"Dead Line" Offers Showmen Big Values for Exploitation

OF all the subjects issued from the laboratories of Fox Film Corporation this season, the recently released picture, "The Dead Line," in which George Walsh is starred, hits the nail on the head for adaptability to the exhibitor's lobby display. Dell Henderson directed.

For those showmen who make it a point to play up the atmosphere of a picture in dressing their lobbies, this film strikes a big chord in the picturesque quality of its scenic effects, and also makes a universal appeal because of the general theme of the play—which is staged in the heart of the "moonshine" country of our own South.

Progressive exhibitors who have booked the production for good runs are planning various effective displays centering around the quaint old illicit stills which figure in the story. For this purpose many devices will be utilized, ranging from the old family copper kettle to the battered remains of some of the original stills still to be found in the mountain territory where the picture was staged.

Among those who contributed essentially to the success of the picture, and who are listed in the support of the star are Irene Doyle, Joseph Hanaway, Al Hart, Henry Pemberton, James Milady, Gus Weinberg, G. A. Stryker, Virginia Valli, James Birdsong, John Hopkins and little Frances McGuinness.

Somebody Is Always Taking the Joy Out of Everything

THE city council of Lincoln, Neb., felt called upon recently to pass a city ordinance making it illegal to hug and kiss in darkened motion picture theatres.

The law does not apply to actors on the screen.

Four Companies Now at Work at Ince's Culver City Studio

FOLLOWING a temporary lull in activities, the Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City once more hum with the rush of production, as four companies are at work on forthcoming Thomas H. Ince productions to be released through Famous Players-Lasky exchanges.

Enid Bennett's current vehicle, "I Wonder If—," which marks her last picture under the supervision and banner of Thomas H. Ince, is progressing under the direction of Fred Niblo. The story is by Frank Dazey. Scenario by Agnes Christine Johnston. Donald MacDonald appears opposite Miss Bennett in the leading masculine role. Other favorite players are included in the cast.

The new Ince-Vance special, "Beau Revel," under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince and the direction of John Griffith Wray, is in its first week of filming, while the Douglas MacLean company, under the direction of Jack Nelson, is on location for exterior scenes. Florence Vidor has been selected for the principal feminine role.

Another company, to film an Ince superfeature, is being assembled by Casting Director Freddie Fralick. The principal performers and the director will be announced in the near future.

Helen Jerome Eddy with the "Flying A."

A charming little actress who was not long in winning the hearts of the picture patrons is Helen Jerome Eddy, who carries an important role in "The House of Toys," a "Flying A" release. In this drama Miss Eddy is "the other woman," but in this case the triangle does not include her as a vamp or even a coquette. She is the high point of the apex, while through several scenes the husband and wife form a rather commonplace base which gives a unique slant to this problem of three. The role fits Miss Eddy, her personality and her character.

Tapestry Art Titles for "Peggy Rebels."

The "Flying A" art titles for "Peggy Rebels" in quaint designs are treated like tapestry, the effect being derived from straight line technique which appears to follow the weave of the fabric by parallel lines. The decorative treatment of the subjects introduced to emphasize or give suitable atmosphere to the action remind one of the days when our grandmothers were working samplers. They are artistic to the last degree, with fade-in lettering on a soft, harmonious background.

Mary Miles Minter is Peggy. George Periolat puts over a strong Captain Ward, a seaman of the old school. Alan Forrest, as leading man, heads the supporting cast, which includes Jack Connolly, in the role of the Judge, and Adele Farrington, the mother of the boy who lost his heart to Peggy. Henry King directed the picturization of this drama, written by Henry Albert Phillips.

George Melford's production for Paramount of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Translation of a Savage," now nearing completion at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, has just been given the new screen title, "Behold My Wife!"

Mabel Juliene Scott plays the leading femine role of the Indian girl and is said to give a most remarkable characterization, depicting the change in the girl from a state of savagery to a beautiful, cultured woman and English social leader. Milton Sills portrays the young Englishman and many other well known players are in the cast, including Elliott Dexter, Winter Hall, Maude Wayne, Ann Forrest and Helen Dunbar. Frank Condon adapted the story of the screen.

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" a Metro Special Nearly Finished

METRO'S all-star picturization of "Parlor, Bedrom and Bath," the boudoir comedy by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan that enjoyed such an unusual Broadway success, promises to develop far more laughs than did the original stage production, according to reports from Metro's West Coast Studios in Hollywood, where the production is being made.

Eugene Pallette, the model husband of "Fair and Warmer," starring May Allison, declares he has found more real spine ticklers in the present picture than in any previous film or stage production in which he has appeared.

Much more time than had been expected has been consumed in Metro's filmization of the farce because of the care that has been taken in the planning of every detail of the dainty sets that serve as a background for the story. Director Edward Dillon, aided by a special staff of technical men and artists, has worked out a decorative scheme for the three rooms that figure in the title of the picture that will bring joy to the hearts of any honeymooners.

Ruth Stonehouse is the adroit dealer in society scandal who entangles Reggie, the model husband.

The opportunities for dainty costumes have not been overlooked by either Miss Stonehouse or any other feminine member of the all-star cast. As the scandal-sheet reporter who breaks into society she makes use of more than a dozen costumes ranging from the most colorful of sport suits to a pair of black net pajamas.

Finishing touches are being added to the picture. It was prepared for the screen by Miss Mathis and A. P. Younger. W. M. Edmond is the cameraman and Sidney Ullman designed and executed the special art interiors.

Exhibitor Acclaims American Film.

"The Dangerous Talent," an American Film Company production, made a hit in Lincoln, Ill., when Manager Steve Bennis ran it at the Lincoln Theatre. Report comes in to the producers that it was heralded "far and away the finest story and strongest role Margarita Fisher has had in a year." One of the local newspaper critics described it as "an adventure-romance of absorbing interest, in which the strange talent possessed by a young business girl leads to her dismissal; her dismissal to her despair; her despair to a bold piece of daring; her daring into real danger; and that danger, straight as a dart, into the arms of a man who becomes her best beloved."

"Knight for a Night" Almost Finished.

Work has been practically completed at the Cliffside studios, Fort Lee, on "A Knight for a Night," the second of the "Torchy" comedies, produced by Master Films, Inc., and to be released through Educational Films Corporation. Johnny Hines, the star, is said to surpass his work in the first of the series. Immediately on the completion of this picture work will start on the third, so that there will be no question about the release schedule being met even in case of some accident. One two-reel picture is to be released each month.

Marian Skinner in "House of Toys."

Marian Skinner, a versatile interpreter of character roles for the silver sheet, convincingly carries the role of Mrs. Blaisdell in "The House of Toys," the new American Special starring Seena Owen, with Pell Trenton as the leading man.

Miss Skinner made her debut on the stage in ingenue and lead parts at the age of twenty, and later played Salome in "The Holy City" for a season. In 1913 she made her motion picture debut with the old Essanay Company, and ever since has devoted her entire time to work in filmland.

Howard Long in "A Winter City Favorite."

Howard Long, who plays the medium in "The Ouija Board" at the Bijou Theatre, has been chosen by Harley Knoles for an important role in "A Winter City Favorite," Dorothy Dalton's forthcoming picture for Paramount.

Consensus of Trade Press Reviews

Here are extracts from available news printed in the five motion picture trade papers. It is the aim to present one sentence that will reflect the spirit of the writer's opinion. The papers are indicated as follows: Moving Picture World (M. P. W.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitor's Trade Review (T. R.); Wid's (W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E. H.).

The Sea Wolf

(Noah Beery—Paramount-Artcraft)

M. P. W.—It is an impressive offering and it will hold almost any audience spellbound to the end.

T. R.—Corking good picture.

E. H.—A very well made second version of Jack London.

The Silver Horde

(Special Cast—Goldwyn)

M. P. W.—Is easily in the same class with other "best sellers" written by Rex Beach.

N.—Interesting, but rather short on drama and action.

T. R.—Should give universal satisfaction wherever it is shown.

W.—Interesting environment given to theme that holds well despite few conventional ideas.

The Path She Chose

(Anne Cornwall—Universal)

M. P. W.—It is well made and suited to any audience, child or adult.

N.—Interesting despite slight story.

T. R.—There are too many sordid details in the development of this slum melodrama to allow of its classification as pleasing entertainment.

W.—Old-time plot handicaps new star's first one.

Leave It to Me

(William Russell—Fox)

M. P. W.—It may be safely estimated as genuinely good entertainment.

N.—Average farce-comedy starring William Russell.

T. R.—A very good comedy, with a number of really humorous situations that give the star ample opportunity to show his ability as a comedian.

W.—Sad attempt to make a farce from totally inadequate material.

The False Road

(Enid Bennett—Paramount)

M. P. W.—A crook story minus the many breath-taking turns and melodramatic climaxes usual in such tales is the Paramount picture.

N.—Crook story is too tame and the action is mild.

W.—Crook picture that peters out after very promising start.

E. H.—It is carefully directed and moves along smoothly to the usual happy ending.

Down on the Farm

(United Artists)

M. P. W.—Is good entertainment.

T. R.—This picture promises to be a sure-fire hit from all angles.

E. H.—A distinct novelty and the production has almost unprecedented exploitation and presentation possibilities.

Everything But the Truth

(Lyons and Moran—Universal)

M. P. W.—Carries a good, light plot, with numerous laughing moments strung along through the action.

N.—Bedroom farce, only mildly amusing.

T. R.—Is just an average program subject.

W.—Is better than average and should please all audiences.

The Thirtieth Piece of Silver

(Margarita Fisher—King Baggot-American)

M. P. W.—It is a comedy above the average and should please every one.

N.—Is well up to standard and should please any audience, no matter where it is played.

T. R.—This picture offers very amusing entertainment and may be listed as a program attraction of sure drawing power.

E. H.—Rather pleasing diversion will be found in the adaptation.

Why Change Your Wife?

(Thomas Meighan and Gloria Swanson—Paramount)

M. P. W.—Is about as near a 100 per cent. perfect picture as it is possible to make one. You can boost it without the slightest fear of disappointment.

N.—Will be a huge money-maker for exhibitors everywhere, for it will appeal to both men and women of all classes and will arouse favorable comment wherever shown.

T. R.—A picture with a combination of theme and title that should prove one of the greatest box office attractions of the season.

W.—Will reach a vast public and doubtless will make striking appeal.

The Inferior Sex

(Mildred Harris-Chaplin—First National)

M. P. W.—There are sufficient comedy and dramatic moments in it to insure satisfaction with most screen audiences.

N.—Fairly interesting domestic drama, with Mildred Harris.

T. R.—Has been elaborately done and is pleasing throughout.

W.—Considering title and star, this should be a big winner.

E. H.—A well-made, attractive screen product which should succeed universally.

Comments on Short Subjects

AN ARTIST'S MUDDLE (Rainbow), June 2.—A two-reel comic, with Harry Mann and Lillian Byron in the cast. The opening scenes occur in a studio and the hero becomes involved with a model whose husband is a husky sailor. The latter appears and there are numerous chase scenes. This number will bring numerous smiles, though it is built along conventional lines and does not contain very much business that is new. It is of about average strength.

SHOULD WAITERS MARRY? (Rainbow).—A two-reel comic, by Thomas Buckingham, with George Ovey in the lead. This subject is full of chuckles, being particularly strong in amusing small business. It leads off with restaurant scenes and then moves down to the beach, where some pretty bathing girls appear. The hero gets into a rivalry with a life guard over a girl and they have some mixups of a typical knockabout sort. The humor in this is good throughout.

A BRONCHO KID (Western), June 5.—A two-reel subject, by Arthur Henry Gooden, with Hoot Gibson and Yvette Mitchell in the leads. Hoot plays the part of a young rancher who rides away on a half-broken broncho. He is suspected of horse stealing and pursued, but retrieves his good name by saving a kidnapped girl and recovering stolen express funds. This number contains some fine riding scenes and carries the interest well despite its conventional plot. It makes a subject well up to the average of its kind.

UNDER SENTENCE (Western), June 12.—An original and wholly unusual type of story, written by George Hively. The story opens with two men in jail watching the erection of a scaffold on which they are to be hung. Next morning, as preparations are being made for the hanging and the nooses are in place, the mother of the younger man arrives on the stage. With true Western hospitality the hanging is postponed so that the young man may have a visit with his mother. Later his partner dies, leaving a written confession in which he clears the younger man. This gets a firm grip on the interest and holds it to the end. The roles of the two men and the mother are very capably acted.

THE WRESTLERS (Fox).—Mutt and Jeff break into a wrestling tournament in this diverting subject. Mutt suffers severe punishment at the hands of a professional, but Jeff comes to the rescue. This animated is one of the most amusing of its kind.

SHOULD DUMMIES WED? (Sunshine).—A two-reel comic, with Ethel Tearle, Dave Morris, Kewpie Morgan and others in the cast. Knockabout scenes prevail all through this, many of which will get a laugh. There is some new small business of an entertaining sort. The chase scenes are not as elaborate as in many productions by this company, but are lively and full of interest.

MOTHER'S ANGEL (Comedyart).—A comboy, his ill-doings and his punishment. In spite of the fact that he is "mother's angel," he stops at nothing that is naughty, until edy in which the plot revolves about a bad finally the boys of the neighborhood call a meeting, at which all wear white masks, and the bad boy is brought before them and sentenced to be tarred and feathered. When the tar is applied, and likewise the feathers, it is found to the consternation of the boys that they are there to stay, and so the bad boy wanders all night in his unhappy condition and is taken for a ghost. Finally he arrives home, vowing never to be a bad boy again.

BOUGHT AND FOUGHT FOR (Western), June 19.—A two-reel subject, adapted by Harvey Gates from a story by Alma Hearn. Magda Lane, Alfred Regnier and Clarence Hodge are in the cast. The plot has a good dramatic kick toward the close, though this is not fully taken advantage of. The scenes were hurried too much at a critical point. But the story runs well above the average of its kind. Magda Lane is quite promising, though her instinct for drama has not been fully developed. The scenic features of this number are pleasing throughout.

PATHE REVIEW, No. 47.—This opens with attractive tinted views taken in the city of Cid, Burgos, Spain. Many forms of ancient architecture are shown. Gathering galax leaves for the use of florists in making bouquets is an interesting feature; also the interpretation of a South American cabaret dance by Eva Barrows Fontaine. The "slow" camera feature pictures a field of horses in action on the race track.

THE LAST NIP (Universal), June 21.—A one-reel comic, dealing with the prohibition question. Lee Kohlmar appears as a popular gentleman with one last case of booze. He has many visitors and finally gets down to the last bottle. This he manages to carry away for his own personal use, but the contents of the bottle turns out to be cold tea. The final scenes are highly amusing.

THE week of May 15 saw a well assorted collection of feature pictures in Times Square. Two of the five picture houses headed their programs with screen versions of famous stage successes, the Strand showing Edward Sheldon's "Romance," with Doris Keane in her original character of the Italian opera singer. At the Capitol James A. Hearne's "Shore Acres" was the principal screen attraction. The Rivoli and the Broadway ran picturized best seller novels, the former theatre having Jack London's "The Sea Wolf," and the latter "The Silver Horde," by Rex Beach. After being shown for a week at the Strand the Beach picture went to the Broadway and, at this writing, is finishing up a three weeks' run. Following its Rivoli engagement the London story is now on the Rialto bill.

Both stage plays and novels have one feature in common—they are all stories of serious purpose. "Shore Acres," first produced about twenty-five years ago, owes its success mainly to one character, an uneducated old man whose unselfish devotion to his brother and that brother's family is like a breath of the strong pure air that blows in from the Atlantic on whose coast line the farm of the Berry family is situated. "Romance," with its realistic reproduction of the social life of New York just after the close of the Civil War, presents a love story that is well outside the modern trend of tales of this nature. "The Silver Horde" is best described by that over worked term-red blooded. But "The Sea Wolf" goes the Beach story several points better on this score.

With this in mind I watched the Jack London tale at the Rivoli one evening, more to note its effect on the spectators than for any other reason. There was no doubt but that they liked the picture. The scenes of bruality that are distributed with a liberal hand through it surprised me by the way they were received. A portion of the spectators found them grimly humorous and seemed inclined to applaud "Wolf" Larsen when he attacked, single-handed, his entire crew and beat man after man into submission. The strength and courage displayed by the master of the ship made a stronger impression on the screen patrons than did the sufferings of the unjustly pounded and kicked victims of Larsen's rage. The actual fighting was watched quietly enough, but there were sounds of amused interest from the spectators the moment Larsen intimated he was ready and eager to accommodate his crew when ever they wanted to give him battle. The old primitive instinct to cheer a lively scrap at the bottom of this feeling was not confined to the male persons present. The shrill, nervous laughter of several of the gentler sex near me could be heard when a fight was brewing. If any man or woman in the audience was shocked at the scene which followed neither he nor she gave any indication of it. This information shows that no man can foretell the precise nature of the "shock" different persons will receive from the same cause when looking at a moving picture. WEITZEL.

"Love's Harvest"

Shirley Mason Wins in Five-Reel Screen Version of Novel by Pearl Dole Bell.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A PHOTOPLAY of exceptional entertainment value has been developed in this five-reel Fox subject, "Love's Harvest," based on a novel by Pearl Dole Bell and directed by Howard M. Mitchell. Shirley Mason is at her very best in this production, her portrayal of the heroine, Jane Day, being one that sets a new pace for this type of characterization. She makes that step from childhood to young womanhood, so often attempted in plays and pictures, in the prettiest possible way.

The story is one of the simple, elemental sort, calculated to touch the common heart. The presentation reaches such a fine degree of artistry that the subject should prove successful in all classes of theatres. The settings and lighting effects are unusually good, and the supporting cast is strong. Edwin Booth Tilton gives a remarkably sympathetic portrayal of the theatrical manager. Incidentally it is pleasant to get a new view of this much-maligned individual, who is so generally pictured as a cold-hearted, predatory creature. Raymond McKee plays the hero role, and Lillie Leslie has an interesting minor part. The dog, Buddie, grows in the affections of the spectator as the story progresses.

The production as a whole is one of cheerful, happy sentiment, mingling smiles with tears, and never lapses into the insipid. The plot makes no bid for special originality, but combines agreeably many situations of recognized universal appeal.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Jane Day, in Love's Harvest," is willed by her stepfather to one of his distant relatives, Jim Atherton, a young man who has accumulated riches in Wall Street. The girl has grown up in her home on the seashore, her chief friends being the housekeeper, a dog named Buddie, and a rose bush.

Jim Atherton calls in due time to see Jane, bringing with him the girl he expects to marry. Jane dislikes the intrusion and forms a particular hatred for Jim's sweetheart because the latter picks the few roses on her bush. The guests depart after a stormy interview.

The heroine, fearing Jim will return, runs away with her dog to the city. Here she applies to a theatrical manager, Allen Hamilton, for a position in the chorus, which is denied her. But she meets Hamilton later. He rescues her from some teasing boys in a park, and takes her to his home. Hamilton and his sister, Eleanor, become fond of Jane, and, discovering that she has a good natural voice, send her to Paris for musical training.

In Paris Jane unexpectedly meets Jim, who has been searching constantly for her. A love affair follows. Hamilton appears later and wishes to wed Jane, but when he learns that her heart has been given to Jim, he plays the good sport and withdraws his suit.

"Polly of the Storm Country"

Excitement and a Sermon Are in This First National Feature Starring Mildred Harris Chaplin.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

INCLUDING almost every type of character and depicting a corresponding variety of human emotions, shifting from scenes of material splendor to those of humble privation, and preaching throughout a lesson of universal love, "Polly of the Storm Country" has that "something" that will put it over anywhere. A time-nurtured feud between squatters and land-owners is the mainspring of the plot. Mutual bitterness and prejudice is shared by all but three—Polly, her saintly grandmother, and her hero from the hilltop. Everything, it seems, that class-hatred can accomplish, threatens to separate the young lovers.

The photography is superb. Spectacular light-and-shade effects, shimmering fade-outs and finely-expressive close-ups are to be seen. There are significant details in the way of scenic equipment. Magnificence and squalor are set forth, there is a vivid storm scene and there are flashes of fire in the war zone, and frequent vistas of natural beauty spots, all of which bespeak infinite care and good taste.

Some of the melodramatic situations are overdrawn for the sake of arousing sympathy for the weaker, and the heroine possibly has more than her legitimate amount of trouble—and optimism. But granting this to be so, these scenes, nevertheless, have been cleverly directed, and will, no doubt, appeal.

The cast is a pleasing, although not an especially gifted one. Mildred Harris Chaplin makes the role of "Pollyop" attractive, but her impassivity is somewhat monotonous. Micky Moore is a winsome wee actor, who gets his share of admiration. The role of the benign grandmother is delicately handled by Ruby Lafayette, and that of Polly's wealthy young suitor by Emory Johnson.

The Cast.

Length, Six Reels.

The Story.

The Hopkins are a family of squatters who are struggling against the selfish and dishonest machinations of the "hill-toppers" or land-owners who are framing plots to get rid of these lowly villagers. Polly Hopkins' brother Jerry is arrested and his wife and baby die as a result of the shock. This serves to aggravate the hatred already existing between the two classes. Then one day Robertson, one of the hill-toppers, chances to ride by the Hopkins hut and attracted by a curious sign which Polly had exhited in front, stops and gets acquainted with her. They immediately like each other.

Later Polly delivers a secret message from Evelyn, Bob's sister, to Oscar Bennett, one of the squatters. Oscar asks Polly to go away with him, but she refuses. Unknown to her, Evelyn is married to Oscar, but is hiding the fact from her parents. Oscar threatens to expose her unless she can influence Polly to become his wife. This Polly refuses, as she is in love with Bob. But when she learns that her father has been arrested by MacKenzie, one of her bitter enemies and a suitor of Evelyn's, she agrees to marry Oscar if Evelyn will free her father. Before she carries out her promise, Oscar is struck by lightning during a terrific storm. She is bending over him, trying to resuscitate him, when Bob enters and mistaking her devotion, sorrowfully leaves.

MacKenzie is not yet satisfied with inflicting suffering upon the squatters. His agents arrive and seize Polly's small brother and disappear with him. Polly and her brother decide to get their revenge, but before they accomplish this Polly's memory of her dead grandmother's faith in love as the greatest remedy for all troubles prevents her. Her nobility has set Evelyn an example, and she promises to set things right again for the Hopkins. Evedyn and Bob then come to a happy understanding.

Exploitation Angles: Mildred Harris Chaplin is still new enough, as a star, to be exploited as the famous comedian's wife. She will attract more attention in that way than by reference to her ability. The moral of the story is a good one and worthy of special consideration. Send invitations to the clergy and win their support, as the picture emphasizes the power of brotherly love. Back up the lesson it teaches by using the title of Henry Drummond's famous book, "The Greatest Thing in the World" and explain that "Polly of the Storm Country" reveals what this greatest thing in the world is.

"Jes Call Me Jim"

Goldwyn Presents Will Rogers in a Delightful High Comedy of Human Nature.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ONE of the finest high comedies shown on the screen, "Jes Call Me Jim," disregards the outworn idea of having one eye on the stage. It is not a representation of "roles" but of human beings. This does not mean it is without strong imaginative feeling for the dramatic. The people in it are vividly, as well as really, those we regard as credible and trustworthy in common existence. Without being the story of the spectators who follow it closely, it has the closest possible connection with what they have lived through. This is because of a veritable genius for detail pervading the treatment and characterization. The theme is the gradual emancipation of a homely man through natural love and the refining influence of a bright and brave woman. It is a fine old motive handled with new skill, a solid foundation to build on.

As might be expected, the subtitles help tremendously. They are exceptionally good of themselves, then they breathe the spirit of Rogers in their quaint humor. Humor and pathos of thought and of situation abound. Whether or not these existed in the novel, "Seven Oaks," from which "Jes Call Me Jim" was adapted, they have been exquisitely brought out in the screen version, are some exteriors chosen with rare taste. Notable among these is one where a small boy is praying amid forest giants, when powerful rays of sunlight come slanting down on his bared head like a response from above.

The personality of Rogers is not wholly demanded on for strong effect. He is modest enough, decent enough, not to continually thrust himself into the spot light to the detriment of other characterizations. In this way he adds to the variety, naturalness and story interest of the product. His support deserves this consideration. Almost without exception it is composed of men and women whose personal apearance represents what the part calls for. This careful typing adds another value to the general sum. Then, as if there could be more required, the presentation at the Strand completed a most delightful entertainment by suitable accompanying music, humorously introducing "Jes Call Me Jim" with "The Year of Jubilo," and sending him on his way with the same melody for a windup. A successful, if not a notable production.

The Story.

Jim Fenton, a good-natured trapper and hunter, living some twenty or more miles from Seven Oaks, is thoroughly informal, "Jes Call Me Jim" he insists when asked for his name. He is alone in the world, but, on his visits to Seven Oaks he pretends to Irene a pretty milliner there that he is buying hats for his mother. He buys more than a half dozen in a couple of months. She does not give him more than kindly attention. She has taken up the cause of an inventor named Benedict, who is confined in an insane asylum, meanwhile looking after Benedict's little boy.

At a meeting of the townspeople, Irene urges an investigation of Benedict's case, but her appeal is discredited by Buffum, the town's richest man. She afterwards bravely confronts him at his house and accuses him of having made his vast fortune from Benedict's inventions. Buffum shows her a bill of sale signed by Benedict, alleging that the latter sold his inventions for the sum of five thousand dollars. She is in despair, when "Jim" tells her not to be worried about the boy, nor if anything "sudden-like" should happen to the inventor. Jim breaks into the asylum and spirits the enfeebled inventor away from the hell in which he has been confined. The town is aroused next day by the supposed escape of the alleged maniac, and a reward is offered for his capture dead or alive. The search reaches to Jim's cabin, but he succeeds in hiding both Benedict and his son until the posse has gone. Benedict's worst enemy is his feeble health. Jim believes the inventor is dying. He sends for Irene and induces the little boy to pray for the life of his father. The latter recovers, but Jim goes to claim the reward from Buffum. He induces Buffum to visit a spot where Jim claims the inventor is buried. That night, in a storm, Buffum is badly frightened by an apparition of Benedict, especially when his pistol, from which Jim has withdrawn the bullets, fails him.

A suit is brought against Buffum for a large sum, this in the name of Benedict's son. Buffum carries most of his points until Benedict appears. Then it is shown that the inventor could not have signed away his rights. His hand was disabled at the date of the bill of sale. The jury finds a verdict for the plaintiff, and the court orders the arrest of Buffum.

After the trial, self-sacrificing Jim makes ready to have Irene marry Benedict, much to their astonishment. His own is greater when he learns that he, just "Jim," is the choice of her heart. She knows him through and through, even to his little lies, but she loves him in spite of all.

"The Broadway Cowboy"

Five-Reel Pathe Western Subject Develops a Good Comedy Wallop at Close.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A JOYOUS light-running comedy is found in this five-reel Pathe release, "The Broadway Cowboy," produced by Jesse D. Hampton and capably directed by Joseph Franz. It is one of those daring concoctions, which start out on a highly extravagant plane and make good by the sheer force of a complicated and amusing plot. It is the same type of subject in which Douglas Fairbanks has so often found success. William Desmond, who is cast as the hero in this production, is scarcely to be classed as a comedian, but he wins out none the less because of his pleasing personality and general readiness in the face of difficulties. He takes a fall, with his horse, down a cliff that is a real thriller.

The story concerns a Broadway actor who has won success in Western melodrama. The opening scenes picture a stage play, in which the heroine saves him from being lynched. Later in the screen story he is saved in this identical manner, an effective return to the original situation that should delight an audience. There is also a complicated love affair, in which the hero finds himself the rival of a sheriff for the hand of Betty Jordan. The sheriff, acting on the theory that "all's fair in love and war," has the hero arrested for horse stealing, but the latter escapes and survives a series of misadventures which give him all he wants of the real West.

One of the pleasant features of the production is the attractive portrayal of the heroine by Betty Francisco. Thomas Delmar plays the hero's rival.

The Story.

Burke Randolph, in "A Broadway Cowboy," is playing in a Western melodrama on Broadway. In one of the scenes he is saved from hanging by the heroine, who cuts the rope and allows him to ride away. Betty Jordan, sitting in the audience, is a Montana girl, who speedily finds herself in love with Randolph. They meet later and Betty pretends she has known him in Montana. The two tell some thrilling stories of a highly fictitious character to Betty's chaperone, of how they shot Indians together in the West.

Betty returns to Montana and in due time Randolph's play is billed to appear in a nearby town. Sheriff Pat McCann, who loves Betty also, finds a picture of Randolph. He sends it to his neighbor, Sheriff Sims, directing him to lock up Randolph for horse stealing. Sims does this, but Randolph escapes by a clever trick. He comes to see Betty, but falls in with some yeggs, who have just robbed a bank. The yeggs quarrel and two of them are fatally shot. Randolph claims the glory of this mighty deed, and later really succeeds in capturing the other two robbers. Randolph, despite this, is about to be lynched, when Betty saves him, just as the girl did in his play. Sheriff Pat, when confronted by his duplicity, gives up the field to his successful rival.

"The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes"

Scientific Facts Gathered by Expedition to Mount Katmai Demonstrated by Educational Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the most remarkable sights that the screen has yet presented in the way of scientific truths, was seen at the Criterion Theatre this week, in the scenes photographed by the National Geographic Society's expedition to investigate the region of Mount Katmai, in southwestern Alaska. These pictures, which are being distributed by the Educational Films Corporation of America, take the spectator over a silent trail to the crater of the great Mount Katmai.

This mountain lies in an uninhabited portion of Alaska, and of previous years has belched forth its anger without harm to any living thing, unless it might be the wild animals of the vicinity. At least there were no humans to witness these terrific eruptions. The latest eruption in 1912 is believed to be the greatest disturbance of its kind known to history.

The "Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" was created by this eruption, and still supplies undiminished evidences of the great upheaval, through the presence of hundreds of smoking fissures or funeroles, and a thick layer of finely powdered lava still remains on the snow slopes and glaciers. In addition to the splendid panoramic views of the valley and its steaming fissures, there is a thrilling scene in which one of the party descendes one of the coolest of the fumeroles for the purpose of taking its temperature. It is a remarkable fact that the heat of the steam which issues from the fissures is hot enough in some instances to melt a bar of lead. An instance of this is given in the picture. The frying of bacon is accomplished with ease, providing the handle on the skillet is long to prevent your hand from being burned by the terrific heat.

This is the first time that Katmai has been photographed. The sight which the screen presents is not one of inspiration, but rather one to invoke fear. The smouldering ruins of its latest eruption are not reassuring, and in pondering the scene one cannot help wondering how soon the volcano will repeat its fury. The picture provides a fine box office attraction.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the best of the Harry T. Morey productions for Vitagraph is "The Sea Rider," a part of the action of which takes place in a New England fishing village. The story is well woven, and the characterization interesting. Although the situation in which a man's trust is betrayed by his brother is not a new one, the manner in which the plot is worked out is interesting. The atmosphere of the picture appears to be genuine, and the ease with which the players handle their respective roles carries conviction.

Harry Morey as Stephen Hardy, a burly fisherman, earnest in his friendships, but clumsy in his lovemaking, is all that could be desired—in fact he has never done better work than in this picture. Van Dyke Brooke as the old fisherman, and Alice Calhoun as his daughter are attractive figures in the early scenes. Louiszita Valentine as a despondent character, and Webster Campbell as Stephen's weakling brother, do as difficult work as any in the east, and do it well. Frank Norcross is also an outstanding figure in a small but effective role.

The Story.

The scene of "The Sea Rider" is set in a small fishing village on the New England coast. The principal characters in the story are Stephen Hardy, a sturdy young fisherman; his brother Tom Hardy, a weakling; Bess Calhoun, Stephen's sweetheart, and a despondent young woman, who has been cheated in love by Tom Hardy.

Stephen Hardy has loved Bess Halcomb since she was a child, and when her father dies he feels it his duty to look after Captain Halcomb's family. He finally plucks up courage to ask Bess to marry him. When the cottage which he builds for her is nearly finished and the day for the wedding about to be set, Stephen's brother Tom, who has been away on a long cruise, returns, sees Bess, falls in love with her, and lures her affections away from his brother.

Feigning indisposition Tom allows Stephen to fill his place on the ship, and when Stephen returns after a long voyage, he finds that Tom has taken advantage of his absence, and also that his intentions toward Bess are not of the best. In spite of protests, Stephen calls a minister and forces Tom to marry Bess. Then he buys a ship and sails away. On entering New York harbor he sees a young woman about to commit suicide by drowning.

This young woman whom he cares for until he is ready to set sail, and who is persistent in her efforts to stick to Stephen and the ship, is afterwards discovered to be a cast-off sweetheart of Tom's. In a desperate fight between Tom and Stephen a lamp is overturned, and the ship set on fire. After a thrilling attempt to get all off the boat before the fire reaches the cargo of gunpowder, an explosion occurs and the vessel sinks. Tom has previously jumped in the water and has drowned. The girl is rescued by Stephen and hurried away in a life boat.

Pat O'Malley in the role of hero catches the instant sympathy of the spectator and maintains it through the entire story. He plays the part easily and shows considerable versatility as the story progresses.

There are many light humorous situations strung along through this subject, which maintains a comedy pace most of the time, with occasional dramatic moments thrown in. There is a touch of mystery and some brief but satisfactory love scenes. A story of this type carries the interest along in an entertaining way, though without any great degree of suspense. The events might have been compressed into a less number of reels, but the continuity is very good and the leisurely development has some points in its favor. The scenes are all laid in pleasant, attractive localities.

The Story.

Sheridan Redpath, hero of "Sherry," is the last member of a wealthy family. He has been living a high life and as the story opens is just finishing up the job of spending half a million dollars. Sherry is well liked by the barkeepers and a policeman named Barney Doyle is his particular friend. When he is entirely out of funds, Sherry bids his friends good-bye and goes to the Compton woods, where he expects to sober up and give nature a chance to straighten him out.

He meets a young girl, named Morna O'Brien, who is running away from her grandmother, Mrs. Compton. Sherry carries h r grips for her and they are caught in a rain storm. He induces the girl to return to her home and thus wins the grandmother's gratitude.

After this adventure he procures work with Andrew Gilman, a wealthy old man who has not spoken to his wife for twelve years. Some burglars come to rob the house, one of them being Gilman's stepson. Sherry effects the cauture of both these fellows. They escape later and he assists the police in rounding them up again. The stepson accidentally shoots his mother and then commits suicide. Prior to this Sherry also saves Mr. Gilman from committing a crime while sleep walking.

The hero again meets Morna and wins her away from his rival, Jimmy Burton, who had tried to break down his resolution to stop drinking. Morna makes him a leap year proposal. Later he is taken into partnership with Gilman.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines: Story of the Adventures of a Young Man Who Has Run Through Half a Million Dollars —See How He Changes His Habits and Haunts and Is Made a Hero in the Eyes of the Girl He Loves.

Heart Interest Story of a Fellow Who Carries the Grips for a Pretty Girl Who Is Running Away—It Is He That Persuades Her to Return Home—This Is the Start of a New Life for This Fellow Who Had Been Hitting the High Spots.

Exploitation Angles: Your best selling angle is the use of McCutcheon's name, linking him up with some of his best known books. For jazz you have the title for these dry times, and the situation of the young man who ran through half a million dollars. You can get a good competition on "What would you do with half a millin dollars." You can also tie up the savings bank on this angle, and you can go it pretty strong if the bank has any live wires.

"Dollars and Sense"

Delightful Mixture of Romance and Commercialism in Goldwyn's Version of Octavus Roy Cohen's Story, Starring Madge Kennedy.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

APPEALINGLY human is "Dollars and Sense" with its youthful optimism, its fine pathos, its quick humor. It is a story of everyday people and of every day experience, but it is not commonplace. As interpreted for the screen, the story furnishes most attractive entertainment. It is light without being frivolous, sentimental without being maudlin. The director has shown the same power that the author has in keeping an even artistic balance and in maintaining that rare quality of consistency.

The romance between a poor baker and an ex-show girl, her attempts at building up his business and their miserable failure because of being two philanthropic by nature, are depicted in charming style. The period before the happy solution of their worries is one of real suspense, and its treatment brings fresh honors to the director.

Madge Kennedy never misses a point. Her faculties for portraying delicate emotion and piquant humor are a source of continuous admiration. Some of her best, most characteristic work is during the champagne scene, and at the crisis when her sweetheart falls in a faint. Her costumes are adorable but appropriately simple. Kenneth Harlan, playing opposite shows a like sympathy with his role, and Willard Louis manages a rather difficult part with shrewdness. The settings are of a sort that lend authenticity to the story and excellent photographic results have been attained.

The Cast.

Hazel Farron .....Madge Kennedy

Story by Octavus Roy Cohen.
Directed by Harry Beaumont.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

One of the chorus girls from an unsuccessful Broadway show is Hazel Farron. On one of her last nights before the footlights a wealthy broker, Geoffrey Stanhope, becomes interested in her and takes her to a midnight meal. He is disappointed in her when she refuses to drink, but promises himself that he will see her again and persuade her to adopt his view of life.

Several days later when she is reduced to her last two cents, she passes a tempting bakery window and under the pretext of buying food for a hungry little dog, asks for two cents worth of stale buns. One of her pennies falls into a crack in the floor and the baker notes her confusion and suspects the cause. She recalls her first order and asks for only one cent's worth.

While biting into one of the buns, in the park, her teeth come in contact with something hard, and she discovers a silver dollar in each of the buns. She rushes back and returns the money to Rogers, the attractive young man in the bake-shop. A conversation ensues and results in her being hired as manager of the establishment whereupon she decides to save Rogers from ruining himself by giving so much of his goods away to the poor. They only get deeper and deeper into debt and finally Rogers becomes so broken-down in health that he is obliged to go to the hospital to recuperate.

Stanhope then shows up and offers his assistance. Hazel refuses at first but is forced to go to him later when Rogers is threatened with complete ruin. Stanhope offers to save the bakery for Rogers, if Hazel will "do her part." For her sweetheart's sake she consents. She is told to meet Stanhope at a hotel on the very night when Rogers is released from the hospital. She visits Rogers, bids him good-bye and keeps her appointment with Stanhope. But Stanhope has a surprise for both of them. All three meet in a suite at the hotel where Stanhope has arranged a bridal supper and has summoned a minister. Rogers and Hazel then understand.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines: "Dollars and Sense"—A Heart-Touching Romance Between a Baker and a Show-Girl.

They were Philanthropic But They Weren't Practical—They Were Lacking in "Dollars and Sense"—But Not in Kindness and Love. See What Happened to Them.

Two Buns for a Cent, Her Last Cent! She Bit Into Them and Found Two Silver Dollars. Back to the Bakery She Went and Found—Romance.

"Dollars and Sense"—The Story of Two Young Poverty-Stricken Philanthropists and How Their Generosity Nearly Bankrupted Them.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the author but go to some pains to explain that this is not one of the negro stories for which he is famous, but the romance of a stranded show girl and a philanthropic baker. Play up Miss Kennedy as well, but the chief interest should lie in this story. You should be able to hook up with bakers, but try for as many displays of stills as possible to show that this story is "white."

"Modern Centaurs"

Educational Films Corporation Has Thrilling Pictures of Portuguese Military Horsemanship.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the most remarkable pictures that has been exhibited in this country on expert horsemanship is "Modern Centaurs," which is being handled by the Educational Film Corporation of America, and was exhibited at the Strand Theatre during the week of May 23. The scenes of the film demonstrate the skill of Portuguese cavalry in riding over rough country. Opening with horses and riders descending a broad stairway from the splendid housing quarters of the equines, a cross-country ride is indulged in, followed by hair-raising stunts, such as leaping from one high embankment to another in the course of a breakneck chase, or into midstream, urged by their riders at a relentless pace. Not infrequently horse and man turn a somersault, which it is hard to believe will not end fatally; and still they rally and go at it again, nor do they falter at obstacles to follow.

This demonstration of equestrian skill, scaling the deepest slopes, reducing to simplicity feats at which the ordinary rider would shudder, pressing fearlessly onward to the conquest of apparently impossible situations, is a sight well worth seeing.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

A Half Thousand Dollars

WHAT is the matter with you chaps, anyhow? We have half a thousand dollars here in the office which three men will carry away with them before long.

We have some contestants, yes, but there should be hundreds. Of course, there may be hundreds, or even thousands, but, to date, those seeking a slice of that prize money are comparatively few.

What are you scared of, anyhow? Gird up your mental loins and get into the game.

Are all you Pacific Coast men asleep? Not a peep from you yet. Don't try to tell us that you don't want the money, for you can't get away with it.

Where are your ideas? Wake up!

Additions to Projectors

From a New York City projectionist comes the following letter. The good brother has paid for a reply by mail, but the matter is of such general interest that, witholding his name and address, we think the matter may well be placed in the department. He says:

I have a device attached to each of my two Simplex projectors which illuminates the aperture in such manner that a clear image of the film photo in the aperture is seen. It is not necessary to light the lamp, or to have a flash light. The device is safe and so simple that it could be made for about fifteen cents—perhaps less. Will the Simplex people oppose the use of these devices on their projectors, other than the ones I have charge of?

The Law?

Is it against the law to sell an article for a Simplex projector? On the projector is a plate on which is something about using parts of another machine, but I cannot understand it.

Would it be better to sell the idea to the Precision Machine Company, and would I have to obtain a patent before I could do so?

Of course my idea could be used on other projectors, but it would require extra parts, although it would be quite simple to add them.

As to Patents.

In the first place the editor knows of no more colossal bluff than the United States patent office. Personally we regard a patent as of not one earthly bit of real value, unless it be what is known as a "basic" patent, and even then its value is slight unless backed by a bank roll of plump dimensions.

Witness the fact that, although the Edison company had a basic patent on the Latham loop, it cost them tens of thousands of dollars and a long drawn out legal battle to defend the patent and make it finally valid.

Yes, to sell your invention to a projector manufacturer would be not only best, but the only way. If you cannot dispose of it that way we doubt if you can get anything out of it.

A Great Game.

And incidentally the patents matter is a great game. Years ago we ran across a German wave bath which struck us as a really splendid thing. We found we could get the exclusive handling of the device in this country, but that because the German company had a U. S. patent, which prevented us from manufacturing the device here without its consent, for which later it wanted the modest sum of a quarter of a million dollars, we must import the device. The U. S. customs then stepped in and said: "We will charge you more than the original cost of the device in Germany to import it. And if that isn't a you-hold-'em-while-I-skin-'em we don't know what is.

But to get at the really important matter: The wording on the plate, which you cannot understand, is a warning against using machine parts other than those made by the Precision Machine Company, makers of the Simplex. It is designed to prevent the use of ill made parts which may cause the whole mechanism to work badly, in which case the machine itself and not the spurious part would probably be blamed. It does not refer to such an attachment as yours seems to be, the addition of which could not in any way affect the performance of the mechanism or optical train. We therefore cannot see any reason why the Simplex folks should or could object to its use. Certainly it would not be against the law.

Notice to All.

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Long Focus Condensers

I. H. Garland, Manager Des Moines Film and Supply Company, says:

We note in issue of March sixth a lens chart for high amperage. Will you advise as to where we can get lenses of the focal length specified in the chart? We especially want 13½ bi-convex.

And while we are writing we will set forth a trouble we have, as follows:

Our distance of projection is 141 feet, with a twenty-foot picture. Use two Gundlach objectives having two-inch apertures. These lenses are six and a half inch E F, and work at five and three-sixteenths inches.

We use 85 amperes, which gives a 9/16-inch crater. We have the optical systems lined up according to your lens charts for sixty amperes and get fair results, though a long way from perfect.

We do not get an absolutely sharp picture and the light is not all that it should be. Use a 6.5 meniscus and a 9.5 biconvex, seven-eighths cored carbon above, and half-inch Holdark below. Distance condenser to aperture 17.5 inches.

We get a fairly clear field, but are usually bothered by a brown spot. The light will be white and perfect, then suddenly this brown spot will appear in the center of the picture, whereupon ensues a battle of adjustments until we get it worked out at the top or sides.

We do not know if the trouble lies in our carbons, or elsewhere. What we want you to do is help us improve our light, if you can.

We have taken the matter up with the Gundlach and Bausch and Lomb people, who inform us that no specially ground lenses would help us at all.

We need your aid in the spot matter and in the matter of focus. Screen is Minusa and there is a nineteen-foot drop from lens to center of screen.

The Brown Spot.

First let us consider the spot, which is due, we think, to two causes, viz: the fact that the center of the floor of your crater is too nearly in exact focus at your film plain—the aperture. When this is the case and the floor of the crater is damaged by the carbon core burning in beyond the crater floor, thus causing a dark spot in the center of the light source, the dark spot will show on the screen because that part of the source is in focus at the film and the film is in focus at the screen.

The remedy is to get your condenser a bit further back, say probably an inch, or to alter the focal length of your condenser combination so as to accomplish the same end. When you have done this I think the brown spot ghost will have been backed off the boards. Under your present condition your light would be perfect as long as the crater floor was perfect.

As to the lack of sharpness of definition, I shall refer the case to Brother Griffith. It is possibly due to wrong condenser distance for your amperage. In fact I think

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN" TITLE PROTECTED
FOR PICTURES AND FOR PLAYS

William Harris, Jr., who controls the producing rights for the United States and Canada of John Drinkwater's "Abraham Lincoln," now at the Cort Theatre (N. Y. C.), has won a sweeping victory in a federal action brought by him in Chicago to protect the title, "Abraham Lincoln," as applied to a play, motion-picture or dramatic composition. He has won a permanent injunction restraining Ralph T. Kettering, who was defendant in the suit, from using this title.

The order entered by Judge Kenesaw M. Landis in the District Court of the United States (in and for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division thereof, May 13, 1920) is as follows: "Ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendant, his agents, attorneys, employes, assistants and licensees are, and each of them is ordered, commanded and enjoined to desist and refrain from using the title 'Abraham Lincoln' as the name, title or designation of any play, drama, spectacle, film, picture, motion-picture or other dramatic composition, and from announcing, advertising, producing, presenting, exhibiting, releasing, licensing or selling any film, photoplay, play or dramatic composition under the title, name, designation or subtitle 'Abraham Lincoln,' and the defendant is further "Ordered, commanded and enjoined from allowing, permitting for licensing any producers, exhibitors or vendors of plays, films, photoplay or dramatic compositions, either directly or indirectly, personally or through others, to present, offer, advertise, exhibit, release, sell, or produce that certain play of the defendant (or any modification thereof) which said defendant has variously designated by the titles, 'Abraham Lincoln,' 'The Commoner,' 'The Greater American,' under the title, name, designation, or subtitle 'Abraham Lincoln,' or in any way whatsoever that will lead the public into the belief that it is the play, 'Abraham Lincoln,' written by John Drinkwater."

"The suit was brought to protect William Harris, Jr.'s, rights in John Drinkwater's great play of that name, the manager claiming that his play was definitely established and any other play with that title would be confusing to the public mind. It has been the custom of the courts to deny injunctions in such cases, but the wisdom of Judge Landis in protecting the public cannot be doubted. Such a play as Drinkwater's should have full protection. It has made a great name and any others with the same title would only confuse the public, but would also trade upon the reputation of the original. The decision is unusual but sound."

likely it is, because the trouble exists the same in both projectors. The drop in projection would hardly cause serious trouble inasmuch as the lower rays would travel but little more than two feet further than the upper ones, which should not prevent a fairly sharp picture all over the screen.

More Optical Controversy

Recently the editor of this department journeyed to Harrison, New Jersey, to attend a meeting of the Committee on Optics of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Dr. Story, of the Research Laboratories of the G. E. at Schenectady, New York, was present, and the old argument of the "diverging ray" was brought up by the Doctor from a new angle, he claiming that if any attempt were made to use the light outside a cone formed by a line from the upper edge of the condenser opening which just misses the upper edge of the aperture and continues on until it meets a similar line from the lower edge of the condenser opening, which just misses the lower edge of the aperture, unevenness of illumination would result.

We were skeptical, having ourselves seen hundreds of apparently evenly illuminated screens where much light outside such a cone was used. We, therefore, asked the doctor to put his views on paper, that we might study them and pass them along to Mr. Griffith. This Dr. Story very kindly consented to do, and here is what he submits:

If AB is an objective, YZ an aperture and LM a condenser of such size that the lines AZ and BY pass through its extremities ML, then the limiting lines AYL and BZM may be drawn as shown in the diagram. The point A of the objective will be illuminated, assuming a proper source, through the entire film, by the part MN of the condenser. Similarly the point B of the objective will be illuminated by the region LO, and every point of the objective between A and B will be illuminated by a corresponding point (Think the doctor must have intended to write "part" instead of "point."—Ed.) of the condenser through the entire film. This, of course, means uniform illumination.

If we now assume that AB be increased to a diameter CD, the line CZ will no longer be a possible path of light, since it does not intersect the condenser. In fact the point C of the condenser (objective is evidently meant.—Ed.) will add nothing to the brightness of the portion XZ of the picture, but will add only to XY. The point D of the objective will add nothing to the brightness of the portion YW, but will add to WZ.

This means that the ring added to the objective light gives us more additional light over the region XW than it does over the region XZ and YW.

Assuming a source of sufficient size, an increase in the size of the objective beyond the size to fill the cone LQM adds more light in the center of the film than at its corners. This condition continues until the size of the objective has increased to the point at which X and W have risen to the center of the film.

For objectives larger than this the edge of the film alone will be given additional light, and so this excessive size will counteract the unevenness of illumination produced by a small increase. Lenses of this extreme size are, however, impractical from the standpoint of definition, hence need not be considered in projection.

All of which is, it seems to us, quite correctly set forth, but will nevertheless be just so much Greek to the average projectionist, because Dr. Story talks in the language of the laboratory and not in the language of the projection room.

We submitted the foregoing to brother Griffith, who has the following to say:

Theory and Practice Clash.

Dr. Story's description of the cause of uneven illumination due to the use of an objective larger than will suffice to cover the cone as described is very lucid, and in my opinion, correct. When we apply his diagram to a practical problem, however, it only shows the absurdity of attempting to limit the light cone within such narrow restrictions.

I have laid out a diagram which may be said to represent working conditions when using a three-eighths crater, which shows that the objective would have to be reduced to .25 of an inch diameter for a working distance of six inches in order to produce even illumination, which is, of course, entirely out of the question.

As Dr. Story has shown, point Q moves along the axis toward the aperture as the condenser diameter is increased, and we apparently again would get uniform illumination when point Q reached the aperture plain—that is to say we would if the aperture were round, but inasmuch as it is rectangular in shape we would have three Q points instead of one; one for the height of the aperture, one for its width and one for the diagonal.

Professor Gage Enters.

Professor Gage very aptly describes the effect of moving point Q toward the condenser, page 591 to 597, Optic Projection, but does not assign any reason therefore. In substance he says that a very striking effect is produced on the screen by opening a diaphram in the objective. You may, however, read it for yourself (can't be done. My Optic Projection is all nicely packed up for moving.—Ed.)

Referring back to the three point Qs, or points of Q, we have three circles of light closing into the center of the screen, instead of one; thus the first circle starts spreading out again while the last one is closing in, so that the screen illumination does not become very uniform while Q is at or near the aperture, hence a further increase in objective diameter is necessary. Dr. Story is quite correct is saying that this further increase only adds light to (seems to me "from" would be more descriptive than "to," unless you substitute "screen" for "film." Why back up when you can just as well turn around and go ahead. You will probably arrive sooner by going forward.—Ed.) the edges of the film, but when Q has passed the aperture the center of the film is already receiving its full quota of light.

The Why of Even Illumination.

The reason we get even illumination when point Q is near the aperture is because each point of the objective between A and B is receiving a full film picture, which has a rectangular section of the condenser behind it. Unevenness of illumination begins when any part of the aforesaid rectangle falls outside the condenser area.

The reason we get even illumination when point Q is near the condenser is because the objective is receiving a rectangular picture of the film within its area from every point of the condenser. When point Q is moved away from the condenser these rectangular areas received by the objective begin to fall outside the objective aperture, hence we begin to get uneven illumination at the screen.

With point Q near the aperture we require a large objective to get even illumination, and with point Q near the objective we require an absurdly small objective in order to get even illumination, and that is all there is to that.

The Editor Talks.

All of which is very good, but if we rightly understand this, the whole thing might be set forth very much more simply and understandably.

Here is my idea of the matter, as I understand it, illustrated in the third diagram, in which we have two cones of light, or rays eminating from the outer margin of the condenser, and the light emanating from condenser area GH, all of which latter reaches the objective under the condition of condenser-to-aperture distance shown.

Now as I understand the matter, all of both Dr. Story's and Griffith's somewhat complicated argument is to show that so long as the light does, not all enter the objective there will be uneven ilumination, which is so obviously true that argument seems hardly necessary.

We Take Issue.

However, we take issue with the idea that the picking up of the light represented by rays IJ must be accomplished by means of a larger diameter objective, or that its picking up will increase unevenness of screen illumination.

On the contrary the picking up of additional light by means of a large diameter objective is objectionable on the score of loss of definition, plus the further fact that large diameter objectives set up additional shutter difficulties.

The additional light gain must, therefore, be accomplished by bringing the objective nearer the aperture when a point of objective diameter, yet to be definitely decided, but which we believe should not exceed 2.25 inches, has been reached.

We also contend that picking up additional marginal light will not increase unevenness of illumination, but on the contrary, will make for increased illumination. That is a proposition which seems to us to be very evident. Maybe we have misunderstood Dr. Story and Griffith, but this is what we get out of it.

In a Class by Itself

Recently a machine manufacturer received a letter, which, it seems to us, should occupy a place all by itself as the prize of all squarehead propositions ever put up by an alleged projectionist. We have had some pretty raw things put up to us during the past ten years or so, but none, we think, which could quite equal the following:

We have two machines, latest model, with your new lamphouses for same, and I contend that the lamphouses should be kept clean. My operator ("Operator" is RIGHT.—Ed.) tells me thy should not be cleaned, as IT PRESERVES THE LAMPHOUSES TO LEAVE THEM DIRTY! I wish you would write and tell me your view regarding this matter.

I contend that if it takes that dirt to preserve the lamphouse you would put it on. I have "operated" and I cleaned my lamphouses daily, believing it was good for them, as they do not retain the heat when clean that they do when dirty, and it is the heat that wears the lamphouse.

Can you beat it! And the letter head reads "high class photoplays." Can you beat it! A handbook! Out upon you. What does that genius want with books! "Naw, Nuttin' doin'. I been op'ratin' fer 'leven years. That gink Richersun is th' cheese," we can almost hear him say.

Well, anyhow it is a classic, as we remarked in the first place.

Edison Home Kinetoscope

Peter J. Prinz, Jamaica, New York, asks: "Will you kindly advise me as to what became of the Edison Home Kinetoscope, patent numbers 578,185 and 586,953? Would I be able to still obtain films, or is there any film on the market which the projector named will take?"

So far as we know the Edison Home Kinetoscope is about as defunct as is the renowned Queen Cleopatra. She is a matter of historic memory, and so is the Edison Home projector. We do not believe there is any film made which could be run on that machine. If any one has any for sale will they kindly communicate that fact to Peter J. Prinz, 44 Canal street, Jamaica, New York.

Impractical Side Throw

Reverend O. I. Merthe, Crookston, Minnesota, orders a handbook and asks:

Am planning the installation of a projector in our school, but the auditorium is so constructed that the projection room cannot be placed square with the screen. Must place it somewhere on the side. It will be in a different room and we will break the ports through the dividing side wall.

The hall from rear to screen measures sixty feet, and the projection room must be about the center of the side wall. Would you kindly advise as to whether or no this is a feasible thing, or altogether impossible. The projector would also be about fifteen feet above the stage level.

Your wording is such that I am not altogether sure I am right in understanding that the lens would be fifteen feet above stage level (which would probably be six to eight feet above center of screen), and that the projector would be only thirty feet from the screen and on the side at that. If that is right, then I would pronounce the thing entirely impractical.

Depends on Picture Size.

Much depends on size of picture, but presumably you would not care to have less than a ten-foot picture, and you could not get even a half way decent result on anything more than a six-foot picture under such a condition.

With a ten-foot picture you would have to have a lense of a little less than two inches E F, and such lenses seldom or never give good screen results. You would have a terrific side keystone effect (see page 154 of handbook), with accompanying distortion of the picture. Your keystone would be such that the picture would have a very odd shape, because it would be both up and down.

We would by all means advise you NOT to attempt projection under such impossible circumstances.

Loew's New Knoxville Theatre Will Play Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System

ONE of the latest of the larger theatres recently opened in the south is Marcus Loew's Knoxville Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., which adds one more theatre to the already large string now being operated by the Loew interests throughout the country.

Marcus Loew's success as a showman has been due in great part to his far-sightedness, and many of his competitors of years ago say that his ability to look after the needs of his people is the principal reason for his success today.

In the equipment of the Knoxville Theatre, nothing has been overlooked that would in any way add to the convenience and comfort of patrons, and much time and attention has been given to the question of cooling and ventilation.

In the South, where the summers are extremely hot, something more than an ordinary system of cooling and ventilation is required, and as a result the Typhoon Fan Company have installed in this theatre a complete cooling and ventilating outfit.

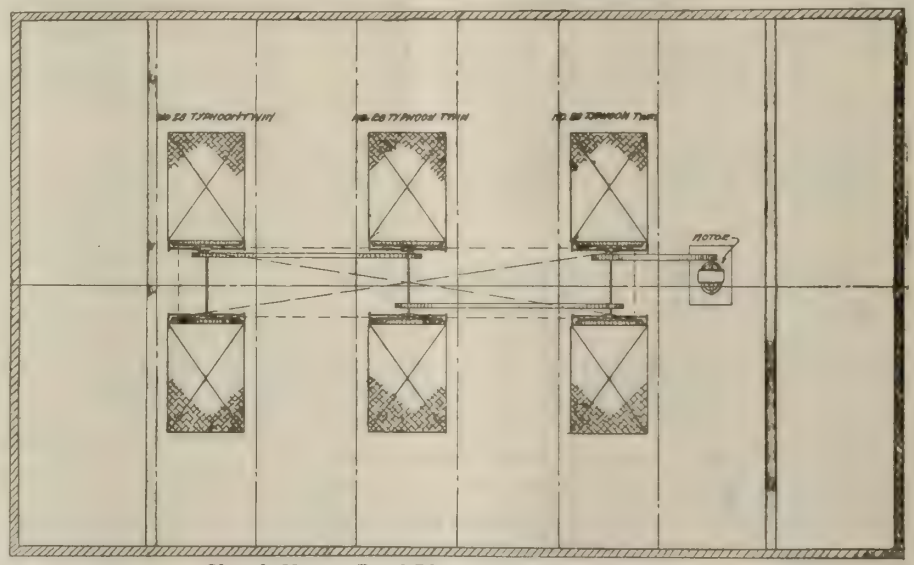
Loew's Knoxville Theatre has a capacity of 360,000 cubic feet, seating about 1,800 people. In addition to the orchestra there are a first and second balcony and also a gallery, each of which will be thoroughly cooled and ventilated by the installation of three No. 28 Typhoon twin outfits which have been installed in the attic space above the theatre, as will be noted by referring to the accompanying sketches.

Sketch No. 1 shows the arrangement of the Typhoons on the roof. Sketch No. 2, or the longitudinal section, shows in addition to the location of the Typhoons, the direction of the air current. Each unit, as will be noted, takes care of its particular part of the house.

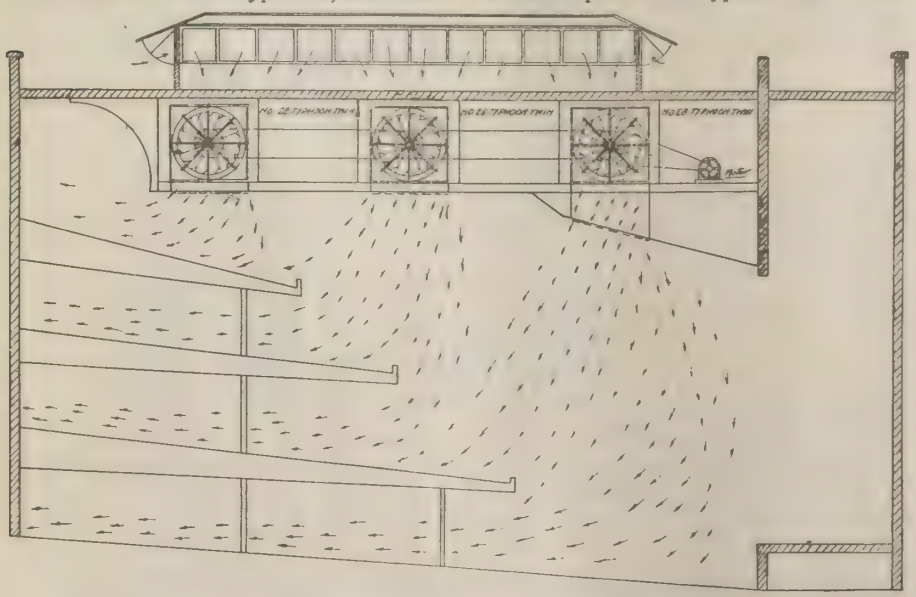
The accompanying illustrations show the grilles in the ceiling through which the air passes from the Typhoons directly into the auditorium. The usual method of installation is to operate the Typhoon twin outfits as separate units. However, in this particular case the Typhoon engineering department found it advisable to drive them in tandem, and operate the three units by one motor.

One Housing for Entire Plant.

One large pent house, or covering, encloses the complete outfit, the pent house being raised four feet above the roof level, thus avoiding the hot layer of air close to the roof.



Sketch No. 1.—Roof Plan of Typhoon Installation.
It will be noted that the entire battery of fans is operated by one motor and also that the equipment is housed under one covering.



Sketch No. 2.—Longitudinal Section Typhoon Installation.
Showing both the positions of the Typhoons and the direction of the currents forced down from same when the fans are blowing fresh air into the house in summer.

This equipment will deliver over 21,500,000 cubic feet of air into the theatre every hour.

The Typhoon system of cooling and ventilation is based upon the simple laws of nature, having been demonstrated years ago by Ernst Glantzberg, patentee of the Typhoon system, that it was possible to maintain absolute comfort in theatres under the most adverse weather conditions throughout the warmer sections of the United States, providing air is supplied into these theatres at sufficient velocity.

This principle is carried out by the Typhoon cooling system, which delivers air to the audience with an air motion of sufficient velocity to break up the aerial envelope surrounding the human body, thus allowing a natural dissipation of the excess bodily heat generated.

Installed on the Roof.

Whenever the structure of the theatre permits, the Typhoon cooling and ventilating apparatus is installed on the roof, and by this means is enabled to draw quantities of pure fresh air from high above the dirt and dust of the street, and blow it down through openings in the roof and through grilles in the ceiling directly into the theatre, where it passes over the audience in the orchestra and balconies with sufficient velocity to maintain a steady breeze without draughts, the air finally passing out at the rear of the theatre through the opening doors or other exits. So completely does the Typhoon system renovate the air in theatres that it requires but one minute to completely change the entire atmosphere.

Owing to the variation in the construction of theatres, it is necessary to plan and design different sized equipments for individual requirements.

Operation Reversed in Winter.

During the winter months perfect ventilation may also be maintained by simply reversing the operations of the summer time. In other words, the Typhoon equipment is reversible, so that instead of blowing air in during the winter months, it is reversed and run at a lower speed, thus drawing out the foul air.

In addition to cooling and ventilating, the apparatus may be used also for heating purposes, the process being quite simple. The air, before passing to the theatre, is forced through a heating chamber, so that when it reaches the audience it is sufficiently warm to immediately make all parts of the theatre comfortable. So popular has become the Typhoon method of cooling, ventilating and heating that hundreds of theatres throughout the country are adopting this system. It is not only economical in its operation, but is absolutely reliable, very little attention being needed to keep the apparatus in perfect running order.

President Glantzberg on Western Trip.

Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, has left New York on a two or three weeks' trip, during which time he will visit several of the larger western cities to inspect several theatres now in the course of construction.

The Typhoon Fan Company has contracted during the last week to equip the following houses with the Typhoon cooling system:

Argus Enterprises Take Over the Calmy Business

THE Argus Enterprises, of Cleveland, have taken over the supply business of Calmy Brothers, 752-784 Olive street, Los Angeles, and will operate under the name of the Calmy Brothers Division of the Argus Enterprises, in the future.

A new building is being erected on a 60x155 fot lot at 842-46 South Olive street, which will house the new organization. This building, devoted entirely to the marketing of Simplex Projectors and Argus products, will be finished in a glazed tile front and will contain many striking examples of Argus progressiveness.

A Theatre Is Planned.

A theatre is planned for this building in which will be demonstrated the many theatre accessories carried by this concern. A novelty in projection room demonstration will be found in the glass booth with which this theatre will be equipped, that will give the observer an opportunity of viewing a practical work-out of all mechanical and electrical apliances in the projection room without the necessity of entering same.

Another feature will be the repair department maintained at this branch, which will be equipped with duplicate factory tools, jigs, and dies, under the supervision of a former Simplex factory expert. The watchword of the Argus Enterprises, which is—SERVICE—will be fully carried out in Los Angeles as it is in other sections of the country where Argus offices are located, thus assuring the trade in the Los Angeles territory of absolute satisfaction at all times.

The Godfrey Building Houses Many Simplexes

THE Godfrey Building, located at 729 Seventh avenue, at 49th street, New York City, houses so many prominent motion picture organizations and celebrities, resulting in astonishing activities, that it has been truly named "The Beehive of the Industry." One may stand in its lobby at any time during the day and be certain of seeing among the hurried groups that are continually entering or leaving, familiar faces of film magnates, editors, stars and directors.

The activities of the hundreds of groups within this eighteen-story building, being truly representative of the industry, it is interesting to note that out of the number of organizations located here, there are seventeen that are equipped for the showing of motion pictures, using a total of thirty-two projectors.

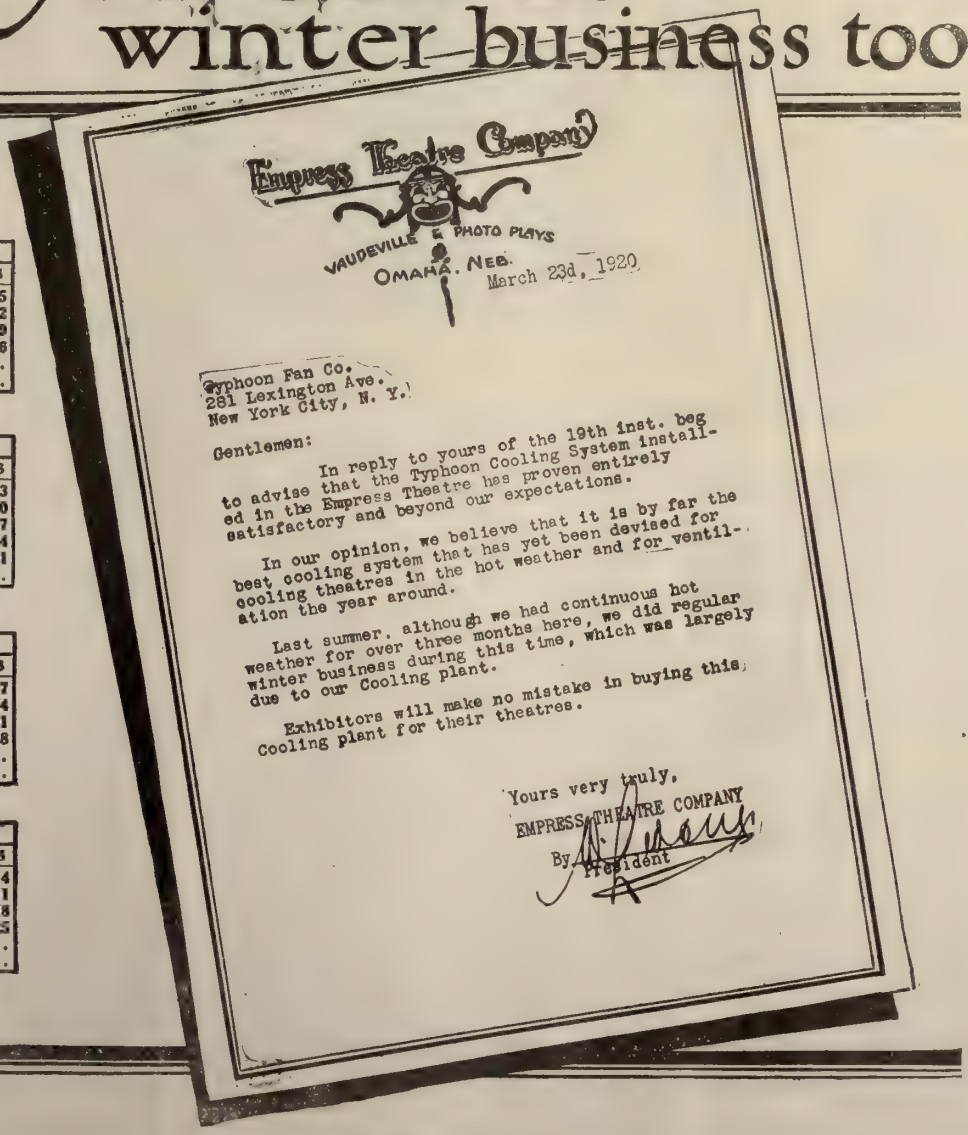
Simplex Is Popular.

That the Simplex Projector is regarded by the industry as being a popular one is being evidenced by the fact that out of the thirty-two projectors in use in the Godfrey Building, thirty of them are Simplexes.

These thirty Simplexes are installed in the projection rooms of the following companies, with the number of machines used as indicated: Famous Players-Lasky Co., 2; Selznick & Select Pictures Corp., 2; J. Frank Brockliss, 2; United Artists Corporation, 2; Hi Silverman's Public Projection Rooms, 6; Reginald Warde, 2; Educational Films Corporation, 2; Republican Laboratories, 2; International Cinema Center, 4; David P. Howells, 2; Trans-Atlantic Film Co., 1; L. Harsten Exchange, 1; Empire State Film Corporation, 2.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

You can do winter business too



Empress Theatre Company

March 23d, 1920

Typhoon Fan Co.
281 Lexington Ave.
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

In reply to yours of the 19th inst. beg to advise that the Typhoon Cooling System installed in the Empress Theatre has proven entirely satisfactory and beyond our expectations.

In our opinion, we believe that it is by far the best cooling system that has yet been devised for cooling theatres in the hot weather and for ventilation the year around.

Last summer, although we had continuous hot weather for over three months here, we did regular winter business during this time, which was largely due to our Cooling plant.

Exhibitors will make no mistake in buying this Cooling plant for their theatres.

Yours very truly,
EMPRESS THEATRE COMPANY

Quitting Sea, Holmstrom Hangs on to the Breeze

THE accompanying photograph will be recognized by exhibitors who have purchased Monsoon cooling systems. But for the benefit of those who are not acquainted with Monsoon and its personnel, we take pleasure in introducing Gustave Holmstrom, the highly efficient superintendent of Monsoon installations.

Gustav Holmstrom
Who prefers the Monsoon to the Nor'easter.

After a long period spent in the service of his country on the high seas, Mr. Holmstrom has been mustered out and is now turning his attention to the installation of Monsoon cooling systems in theatres—to which installations his expert work adds the final touch of perfection.

He has spent so many hours in the rigging of ships that it will seem quite homelike to him to fox-trot in the dizzy heights while looking after a Monsoon roof installation.

We join in voicing a hearty welcome to the returned sailor.

New Powers Distributor.

The Exhibitors' Film Exchange, 916 G street, N. W., Washington, D. C., has recently been appointed exclusive distributors for the Power's Cameragraph for the territory comprised by Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia.

The supply business will be handled under the name of the Washington Theatre Supply Company, which will shortly occupy new quarters.

A. Dresner, general manager of both the exchange and the supply divisions, reports business as being particularly good.

11 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

Nicholas Power Co.,
#90 Gold St.,
New York, N.Y.

Gentlemen:

It may interest you to know that during the past eleven years which we have been conducting moving picture laboratories, we have used every make of moving picture projector except one.

At the present time we have in constant use every day three Powers 6B machines for use in screen examination of our product.

For all round service where hard constant work is required, we consider the Powers machine in a class by itself.

Yours truly,

Wm Horsley.

Penny Wise, Dollar Foolish

THE penny wise policy may be a very good policy, if the other fellow has to stand the resulting dollar loss.

In the case of cheap posters it is the exhibitor who has to stand the big loss and incidentally he gets none of the saving, for the saving is on the initial cost of the posters with which he has nothing to do.

The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. can sympathize with him whole heartedly. Our aim is to make great posters—not cheap ones, for our organization consists of the greatest poster artists and poster printers in the world. If posters were ordered solely on merit the RITCHEY poster would of necessity be specified, for the RITCHEY poster has the unquestioned merit of yielding the maximum box-office receipts, a quality that the exhibitor should insist upon having in every poster that he uses.

To make his demands concise, to the point, and positively definite, he should insist upon having RITCHEY posters all the time!

"in Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

You're not taking any chances when you book John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." It started out by breaking all records everywhere, and it's still going the same clip all over the country.

George Carpenter, Paramount Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City, has just wired:

"Just completed week of splendid business on John Barrymore in 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." My patrons said that this was the greatest character acting ever screened. Thanks for work of exploitation department. Congratulations."

Remember that it's JOHN BARRYMORE the people want to see.

"The Greatest Love Story Ever Told"

Triumphs At Its Initial New York Presentation

"'Romance' is one of the finest examples of screen entertainment seen in New York in many months. Doris Keane gave a performance which might well serve as an object lesson for most of our 'movie' stars. The reality of her 'Rita Cavallini' has seldom been seen on the screen."

—New York World.

"Miss Doris Keane charmed a large audience yesterday by her impersonation of Mme. Cavallini . . . . She is at her best in this picture and her work is as effective on the screen as it was on the stage. The unfolding of the story kept the audience at a high pitch throughout."

—New York Evening Telegram.

"Miss Keane's acting on the screen has lost none of its charm."

—New York Evening Post.

"'Romance' is uncommonly interesting."—New York Times.

"Miss Keane makes a lovely Marguerita Cavallini, just as she did on the stage and as the love story unwound itself, one could easily understand why the stage production had been so great a success."—New York Tribune.

"The screen version shows that Miss Keane has indeed gained in power to stir the emotions . . . . Her work is beautifully shaded."

—New York Sun-Herald.

"Doris Keane in the role that she played over a thousand times in England and many times in this country, in Edward Sheldon's 'Romance,' repeated on the screen at the Strand yesterday, the triumph that she achieved in this charming play on the legitimate stage."—New York Evening Sun.

ANNOUNCING REALART'S NEWEST STAR

BEBE DANIELS

IN GRACE LOVELL BRYAN'S AMAZING STORY

"YOU NEVER CAN TELL!"

(Particulars within)

Here's Our Prediction:

BEBE DANIELS

will place her past successes in the "also ran" class as a star in

"YOU NEVER CAN TELL"

This is the first photoplay she ever has appeared in, which was chosen with her sparkling, vivacious and colorful type of acting only in mind.

Miss Daniels attained success in

"MALE and FEMALE"
"EVERYWOMAN"
"THE DANCIN' FOOL"
"WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?"

But you will like her even better in because it is 100 percent. Bebe Daniels, accentuating her own delicious, inimitable style.

REALART PICTURES

By GRACE LOVELL BRYAN

is an amalgamation of two great recent SATURDAY EVENING POST story successes — "You Never Can Tell" and "Class."

In line with Realart's policy of thoroughness we had to buy the two for one

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

By GIEBLER

 Bennie Ziedman has got something big up his sleeve in the production line that he won't tell about. Mahlon Hamilton is raising a set of whiskers, and Eddie O'Hara, Micky Neilan's publicity dopester, who neglected to take his course of sulphur and molasses this spring, has got a fierce boil on his neck.

 I did a little stepping around this week—stopped in at the Hollywood studios, Jack Casper's community movie foundry, and saw Wesley Barry trying out the automatic buckboard that Micky Neilan gave him as a present for having arrived at his thirteenth birthday with all his freckles intact.

 I did not say much about my visit to Lasky's last week, in spite of the fact that they assaulted me with the remains of a kitchen set. I still hold them in high esteem.

"The Wonder Man"

Directed by John G. Adolfi

Has Smashing Premier in NEW YORK CITY at $2.00 Admissions.

The Grand Ballroom of The HOTEL ASTOR seating 2000 people was packed to capacity.

This Triumph was scored in the face of a three day Holiday that caused an exodus to the country, that was unprecedented in the history of New York.

CRITICISM FROM

THE NEW YORK EVENING TELEGRAM

May 30, 1920

by JANE NIXON

"Last evening, in the grand ballroom of the Astor Hotel, Georges appeared for cinema championship of the world. Beyond preadventure of doubt his is no one-track talent."

A BIG SURPRISE

"The Carpentier picture was one of the big-best surprises Broadway has had in many a season.

"We are wise to the ways of capitalizing celebrities—hundred-thousand-dollar name—ten-twenty-and thirty scenario acting, scenery and support. It always makes us feel as if some one had sold us a toy balloon and then stuck a pin in it.

"Robertson-Cole have not so imposed upon a hero-worshipping public. They have made it possible for us to see one of the most popular athletes of the day in action. This much we expected, but what we did not expect was to find in Carpentier a real actor, an artist with the finish of a French gentleman and the finesse of an habitual stage star."

THE WONDER MAN

"Such is the name under which Robertson-Cole, promoters of the film, have chosen to introduce their boxing star to an already sceptical screen world.

"M. Carpentier not only lived up to the title. He did more. He topped it. Three frozen-faced critics who are wont to use these twilight picture hours for malevolent meditation, were seen to rouse from their stupor and blink their eyes unbelievingly at "The Wonder Man." When our hero caused the villain to kiss the canvas for the fatal ten, one of these three ravens actually committed the critical faux pas of clapping his hands in approval just like an ordinary ticket-buyer. The mistake was overlooked on the part of his fellows owing to the heavy barrage of applause being laid down by a wondering and well-pleased audience."

"MILLION DOLLAR SMILE"

The Carpentier smile is bound to cause the hearts of several million matinee maids to skip a beat every time it lights up his frankly winning face. His is a personality so accentuated as to overcome the silence of the screen, to reach out and make friends among those who have merely meant to pose in the role of onlookers.

The story? Why tell? Suffice to say it is good, substantial, thrilling, sustained, and that it has to do with the French and the United States Secret Service.

A Few Newspaper Criticisms:

The men like his serious scenes, especially when he is pitting his slenderness in scientific combat against a heavier opponent, but the women like the nice boyish smile that so attractively lights up his face. New York Morning Telegraph.

The most striking feature of the entertainment was the revelation of Carpentier as an actor. He has many opportunities for distinctive action, opportunities of which he takes full advantage. New York Tribune.

His (Carpentier's) suppleness is a delight, and he can act, too. New York News.

Surprised his audience at the Hotel Astor by demonstrating real acting ability. The producers have supplied "The Idol of France" with an excellent story and a competent supporting cast. New York Evening Mail.

Moe Mark says:—

"If the exhibitors have any doubts about "THE WONDER MAN" being one of the REAL BIG PICTURES of the year—have them wire me.

There Will Be One Exhibitors' Convention

WRITING on the afternoon of June 3 it may be said with every outward indication of veracity that there will be but one exhibitors' convention in Cleveland on June 8. That such now seems to be the fact is a matter for congratulation on the part of every one who earnestly desires to see in this country a militant national exhibitor organization. It is what the Moving Picture World has contended for, and in this it has been associated with all whose actions were not dictated by motives of fear or indifference or personal or business antagonism. It was not to be expected that the animosities of a dozen years could be entirely eliminated without a thrashing out of issues—without indulging in a few epithets and other unkind words.

In pleading for one convention the World has received little or no support from its contemporaries, from those in New York in any event.

The committee of seventeen, according to schedule, met in New York on the morning of June 3. It is said that the situation was clarified in a comparatively few minutes. Rembusch of Indiana and Van Praag of Kansas, who in the past fortnight have differed somewhat strenuously, walked out of the committee room after the opening session arm in arm. Their action was significant, for in large degree it answered a serious question, one that for several weeks has been concerning all exhibitors interested in a harmonious or at least an undivided convention.

Also it is said that at the opening session of the committee of seventeen there was no suggestion of a convention other than that called for the Hotel Winton.

All reports indicate that the number of motion picture men in the big Ohio city next week will be the largest and the most representative ever gathered within the boundaries of one municipality. The producers and distributors will be well represented. There is to be an annual convention of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and they will be present to attend it. It is likely they would have been present in any event, for the opportunity to exchange opinions with several hundred—and the enthusiasts say several thousand—exhibitors is one not lightly to be ignored.

Altogether it is going to be a big week in Cleveland. There will be fireworks, of course, for what would be an exhibitors' gathering without them. There will be comedy and there will be drama—and there will be large opportunity for constructive work.

The summer is here, your show can run along by itself for a week, you will return to your patrons with new ideas acquired by contact with your fellows. There's no excuse for remaining at home, there are many reasons why you should go to Cleveland. And it is said the water's fine.

Will the Screen Again Be Blamed?

AT the beaches in California—at least on some of them—and within the corporate limits of New York City the police authorities have decreed that the women bathers must wear stockings. So far as we are aware there has been no great public demand for this insistence on the addition to the garb of those females to whom nature has been kind or who at least are satisfied in their own minds that such is the case. Surely the campaign is not in the interest of the war against the high cost of stockings—silk ones, always of course. It must be fathered by the multiplying clans of reformers.

We have not yet seen the charge made, but it is fair to assume it will be made, that the popularity of the screen's bare-legged bathing girls is behind the suddenly developed antagonism against their imitators in the flesh. If instead of trying to ban all sockless bathers the crusaders rather will seek to admit to the privilege of so appearing only those whose lines will contribute to the artistry of the land and sea scape, who shall say they will not be doing a public service? Restricting it, for instance, to such as readily would be accepted in the bathing girls' "chorus"?

Enter the Federated Exchanges

ENTER the Federated Exchanges of America, Inc., the latest contender for distributing honors. It is a husky organization these state rights men have put together, a corporation the individual members of which already have been through the exchange mill. The Federated is fortunate in its leadership. Joseph L. Friedman, the president, is a fine type of business man, one who is capable of doing big things in a big way. There is every reason to believe that in widening the sphere of his influence from the Chicago territory to that of the United States and Canada he will increase the circle of his friends in direct ratio.

Surrounding Mr. Friedman is a capable and experienced board of officers and committeemen. They are men who will do much to stabilize and extend the independent division of the motion picture industry. The state rights men have survived many hard seasons, have thrived in spite of handicaps. The career of Federated will be closely watched, and the best wishes of the trade will go with it.

Screen Advertisers of World Meet in Indianapolis in June

MOTION picture men from all parts of the United States are expected to be in Indianapolis during the second week in June to attend the convention of the Screen Advertisers' Association of the World, which will be held in connection with the general convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of the Universal Film Company, and who is president of the screen association, will be the principal speaker. The sessions will be held Monday and Tuesday afternoons, June 7 and 8, at the Claypool Hotel.

Mr. Levey will speak on "A Dream Realized." This will be followed by a discussion and an address by Tim Thrift, advertising manager of the American Multigraph Sales Company and chairman of the motion picture committee of the Association of National Advertisers. His subject will be "What I Have Learned About the Motion Picture Medium."

"The True Mission of the Motion Picture" is the subject of an address that will be delivered by John Leitch, author of "Man to Man."

The Tuesday session of the convention will be opened with an address by President Levey on "Guaranteed Circulation with the Motion Picture Medium." An "experience meeting" will follow, in which advertising managers will relate their experiences with the motion picture as a medium of advertising.

Industrial and educational pictures will be shown.

I. A. T. S. E. Gives C. C. Shay, Retiring President, $10,000

THE annual meeting of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, whose membership is made up of motion picture machine operators in the majority, saw the retirement of Charles C. Shay, who has been president for ten years. The convention was held in Cleveland, and following the announcement by Mr. Shay that he did not seek re-election, the delegates voted him a purse of $10,000.

The election resulted as follows: James Lemke, of Troy, N. Y., president; William Canavan, St. Louis; Richard R. Green, Chicago; Fred G. Dempsey, Boston; W. P. Covert, Toronto, and H. C. Hollinger, Los Angeles, vice-presidents; F. G. Lemaster, general secretary and treasurer.

One of the decisions of the meeting was a resolution approving the establishment of an Irish republic.

Ralph Ruffner Signs with the Jensen & Von Herberg Houses

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made that Ralph Ruffner, who was called from New York recently on account of the death of Mrs. Ruffner's brother, Will Darling, had accepted a position with the Jensen & Von Herberg chain of theatres, owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for the Seattle territory. Mr. Ruffner had been in the publicity department of the First National home office while in New York.

His affiliations with the Jensen & Von Herberg interests will be in the position of director of exploitations for the Peoples, Star and Majestic Theatres of Portland. Mr. Ruffner had been connected with the Jensen & Von Herberg houses before his work in the First National home office. He has successfully managed theatres in Portland, Butte, Spokane and San Francisco.

Saunders Is Made Controller

Richard W. Saunders has been appointed controller of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. As controller he will have full charge of all the accounting and auditing, including the control of purchases and expenditures, in all departments of the Famous Players and its subsidiary companies.

Mr. Saunders resigned as cashier of the National Bank of Commerce to accept this position with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Colored Searchlights on Grauman's New Theatre to Flash Starting of Shows; Can be Seen for Miles

SID GRAUMAN, proprietor of two high class motion picture theatres in Los Angeles, and a third, The Metropolitan, now in course of construction, is about ready to begin construction work on his new theatre in Hollywood to cost in the neighborhood of $650,000 and to have a seating capacity of approximately 2,200.

The building itself, which will have a frontage of 105 feet, will have a suggestion of the oriental type of architecture, and will be set in a picturesque, garden-like enclosure, with electric fountains and statuary as ornamental features.

Said Mr. Grauman, in speaking of his plans for the new theatre: "The interior will be elaborately decorated. In a sense the general plan of the building will assume the characteristics we have projected for the new Metropolitan. One of the most striking arrangements will be that in the tower of the theatre. We will import French searchlights sending out shafts of different colors. They will be used to announce the start of the performance.

"For instance, a green light will indicate that the next entertainment will begin in, say, fifteen minutes, and then a red light will make apparent the actual starting of the show. I am informed that these colored searchlights will carry a distance of thirty-five miles.

"The theatre will have a thirty-five piece orchestra in all probability. A similar program to that at the Million-dollar Theatre will be given—prologue, special stage acts, short films and orchestral numbers. I also intend to have popular Sunday morning concerts. The bill will be changed twice weekly, and we will specialize in pre-release pictures."

Barthelmess Becomes a Star; Others to Head Own Companies

ANOTHER young Griffith player who soon will be a star in his own right is Richard Barthelmess, whom everybody enjoyed immensely in "Broken Blossoms" and who has been coming fast as a character actor through his work in "Scarlet Days," "The Idol Dancer" and other Griffith pictures.

Mr. Barthelmess is not leaving David W. Griffith. His pictures will be made at the Griffith studio in Mamaroneck and are expected to begin immediately following the completion of "Way Down East," the Griffith feature in which Mr. Barthelmess will be seen as David Bartlett.

Other Griffith players who soon are to head their own companies are Robert Harron and Lillian Gish. Practically all the pictures will be made at the Griffith studio, and the one and only "D. W." will be the best friend any of these players could have.

Require Duplicate of Express Receipts

On and after July 1 the American Railway will keep a duplicate copy of every receipt it issues when receiving business from shippers. Shippers accustomed to prepare their own receipts, or who have their own forms, have been asked to supply duplicates of such receipts to the express driver or receiving clerk who signs them.

The regular receipt forms of the express carrier will be revised to permit their use in duplicate form. In cases where prepaid receipts are now being issued in duplicate, the extra copy being used as a record of charges paid, a third copy will be required under the new system, and in such instances prepaid receipts will be issued in triplicate.

Prominent Exhibitors Unite to Build Big Hollywood House

A PICTURE palace with a seating capacity of 2,500 will be erected on Hollywood Boulevard at Ivar street as a result of a local film merger. Three prominent Hollywood exhibitors this week consolidated their interests with Gore brothers and Sol Lesser to immediately form a half million dollar corporation that will control the new theatre as well as the three smaller Hollywood playhouses now in operation.

The theatre owners who joined Gore and Lesser in the big enterprise are J. L. Swope, owner of the Hollywood Theatre; John Young, of the Apollo Theatre, and Frank Grant, of the Windsor Theatre.

William S. Hart for Sheriff

The popularity of William S. Hart among film patrons was given evidence last week when the democrats of Hood River County, Oregon, nominated him for sheriff. Five Democrats wrote in the name of the Paramount star on their ballots and late returns indicate that Hart had received the nomination, as no other Democrat was voted on.

Mr. Hart said: "I will gladly accept the namination of sheriff of Hood River County, Oregon, if my constituents in that county will allow me to reside in Los Angeles and fulfill my duties up there by periodical visits. I am deeply appreciative of the great honor that has been thrust upon me, but my locations would for the most part be in the Southwest instead of the Northwest. Hence my deputies would have to do most of the work."

Committee of Seventeen in Session; All Agreed on One Convention Only

THE committee of seventeen, appointed at the Independent Exhibitors' Convention held at Chicago, April 26 and 27, met in conference at the Hotel Astor on Wednesday morning, June 3, to discuss several matters to be considered at the National Convention at Cleveland June 8-11. They were unanimously in favor of one united convention and opposed to two separate meetings being held at that time. Those present were:

H. C. Farley, Montgomery, Ala.; M. Van Praag, Kansas City, Kan.; D. W. Chamberlain, Minneapolis, Minn.; Louis F. Blumenthal, New York; L. T. Lester, Columbia, S. C.; John Manheimer, Brooklyn; W. C. Paterson, Atlanta; A. F. Brentlinger, Fort Wayne, Ind.; H. M. E. Pasmezoglu, St. Louis; C. E. Whitehurst, Baltimore; Frank Rembusch, Indianapolis; E. T. Peter, Dallas, and William Brandt, of New York.

Generally speaking, the situation appears decidedly clarified and there is good reason to hope that the convention, or conventions, if there are more than one the first day, will result in a strong, united national exhibitor organization.

As his contribution to the week's news Mr. Rembusch disowns any interest in or connection with the proposed exposition in Cleveland and warns against "money-making schemes." He urges that after the first day's sessions the conventions unite as one. He suggests the formation of a committee of twelve for each distributing zone.

Another cheering announcement is that Vice-President C. W. Gates, of the United Protective Theatrical League of the Northwest, will serve on the committee of arrangements, and that the delegation of thirty from this group will visit Cleveland. Last week the organization voted to stay at home if there were more than one convention or a split of any kind.

Sydney S. Cohen Sees Storm Subsiding and Enthusiasm and Unanimity Growing

SYDNEY S. COHEN, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has issued the following statement:

"Coming events cast their shadows before." Applying this old saying to the Cleveland convention, it will be the greatest event in the history of filmdom. The shadow of it is even now seen in every part of the country.

Getting down to concrete things, one of the signs of the coming tidal wave of enthusiasm and unanimity is the line of responses that are coming into the office of the temporary chairman, Sydney S. Cohen, from many of the representative exhibitors whom, in accordance with the request of the Cleveland arrangements committee, he has recently appointed on a committee on arrangements and registration for the convention at the Hotel Winton, June 8. Almost a 100 per cent. acceptance has been received.

Among those who are expected at Cleveland, although no formal and definite acceptance has been received, is Henry B. Varner, secretary of the North Carolina Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Varner represents one of the strongest, most active and most successful exhibitors' organizations in the country.

Reservations Committee Busy.

The convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be called to order at 11 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, June 8, at the Hotel Winton, and should bring together the most representative gathering of motion picture exhibitors ever held in this country.

Delegates are coming from all parts of the country in great numbers and the Cleveland committee in charge of reservations reports that everything will be done to see that the individual exhibitor receives proper accommodations and that his stay in Cleveland will be as pleasant as it is hoped it will be productive of results.

The committee on registration and arrangements, which represents every important film center in the country, comprising officers of the exhibitor organizations representing these zones, will meet Monday, June 7, at the Hotel Winton to complete detailed arrangements. Every exhibitor who comes to Cleveland with the hope of bringing about a great national organization will be given ample opportunity to lend his help and assistance toward creating an organization which will protect his investments in this industry.

It is hoped that the interests which have been successful for some years in splitting the growing sentiment for genuine organization and keeping exhibitors unorganized and open to attacks from within and without will at least be present to see for themselves the sentiment which they cannot stop organized into a great permanent body.

Six months of preparation, with all the work this kind of effort entails by the leaders of the various exhibitors' organizations, should be brought to a climax more successfully even than the most ardent organized exhibitor ever hoped. Some recent efforts to create in the minds of the exhibiting branch of the industry that exhibitors can never get together, has failed completely. The man who has put his money, his time and his ability into building up a clientele for his picture house is in no mood to see that investment swept aside.

Exhibitors from all parts of the country realize that the convention at the Hotel Winton has been brought about by men who have practically dedicated their life work to bring their fellow exhibitors into a powerful body which cannot be stopped by the few who have been using organization—or the lack of it—for their own selfish interests.

The screen of the country more and more today is being looked upon by our government as a safeguard for the great institutions under which we are living, and we feel that every patriotic American exhibitor who can possibly get to Cleveland will be there to swell the ranks, in order that he may be an individual part of building the foundation of a permanent national exhibitors' organization, officered by independent motion picture theatre owners, backed by independent motion picture theatre owners and financed by independent motion picture theatre owners.

Northwest Delegates Will Attend; Gates on Arrangements Committee

C. W. GATES, vice-president of the United Theatrical Protective League of the Northwest, has accepted a place on the committee of arrangements and registration for the convention of exhibitors to be held at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland. Sydney S. Cohen, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, offered the appointment to President W. A. Steffes, of the northwestern organization, as an evidence of good faith, and he evidently has delegated his vice-president to act for him.

The acceptance means that the exhibitor organization will attend the Cleveland sessions. It had previously wired Moving Picture World that its thirty delegates would not attend "if there are two meetings or a split of any kind."

Sydney S. Cohen, 708 Times Building, New York.

I accept appointment as per wire. Special train of northwestern exhibitors leaves Minneapolis for Cleveland the fifth to put a stop for all time to come to the aggression of organized minorities.

Rembusch Suggests Zone Committees and Warns Against All Money-Making Schemes

THIS week's statement of Frank J. Rembusch urges a consolidated exhibitor defense against business aggression. It reads as follows:

Three national organizations will meet at Cleveland on June 8, 9, 10 and 11, and we hope all will join in one. May I suggest to exhibitors what should be done? The old order of things is past. The motion picture has grown so great and important that we must put our national activities on a very high scale. The bickerings of the past have no place in today's work. Let us build on right principles. Exhibitors must be the head hereafter and not the tail as heretofore. We have moved forward individually; let us gather ourselves together nationally for a still greater and better motion picture.

We have fine local organizations, but remain helpless because every practice and problem in our industry is national and must be handled nationally, and our activities must be national in scope. At the same time we must not interfere with local organizations, which can be done by confining the national activities to big, broad questions such as the producer-exhibitor menace, unfair methods of trade, censorship and the insidious attacks against us from within and without, but especially to make our business greater and better.

We have the most powerful weapon, the screen, allied with the press, which we can use for our protection and betterment.

We must not allow any kind of money-making schemes to support our national organization. These have brought us grief for the last ten years. There are so many angles to this industry that we are sure to injure some one. All the expositions, balls and various schemes have availed us nothing. Pay your cash money like you would to a chamber of commerce.

We must keep away from efforts to influence the picture market, but demand that fair methods of trade be given us. Co-operative booking and collective bargaining have come and taken a place in the industry, but they must never influence the national organization because all picture markets are uncertain and biased.

Each distributing zone could have a committee of, say, twelve, with a chairman. We should have a budget of $100,000 to keep our activities going. We should have a big man like a Charlie Schwab, a McAdoo, a Franklin Lane at our head to keep us out of trouble.

With this arrangement all our troubles will be little ones and our business will increase one hundred fold because of a great team work throughout the nation of all exhibitors.

FRANK REMBUSCH.

Rembusch Disowns Exposition

To all trade journals:

Beg to advise that the insinuation that I am connected with the exposition being put on at Cleveland is an untruth, just as are many more from the same source.

I have been against all of these money-making schemes to carry on a national organization.

F. J. REMBUSCH.

"For the First Time I Believe the Exhibitor to Be Earnest"— Selznick

GOD helps those who help themselves.' Just recall to the exhibitors who go to Cleveland that old saying and ask them to bear it well in mind."

Lewis J. Selznick was in his office in the Godfrey Building talking to a representative of Moving Picture World. His son David was perched in one of the big windows that overlook Broadway toward Columbus Circle.

David seems to have absorbed a lot of "politics" of filmdom. He was able to help the senior Selznick with a name here or a reference there to some move that had been made in the swift whirl of "self-determination" that has been "rocking the industry" of recent months.

Lewis J. Selznick.

"Here's a chance," said the World writer to Mr. Selznick, "for you to say something to exhibitors who meet in Cleveland."

"'God helps those who help themselves,'" he repeated the "old saw."

"There's too much petty politics and personal ambition preceding the convention," Mr. Selznick went on to say.

"In Chicago I met a lot of exhibitors. They all have brains and they all seemed sincere in their desire to form a protective alliance.

"If they'll use the brains they have and everybody pull together there is still this great, big chance in Cleveland. If they don't they might as well give up.

"The exhibitors made me. They have the same chance to make themselves.

"This is the first time I ever believed the exhibitors were really in earnest. If they use the brains they have they will prove they are sincere.

"All the 'opposition' wants is to keep the exhibitor pulling apart, keep them away from organization and agitate this petty politics and personal ambition. It will always be easy for 'opposition' if the exhibitor keeps on as he has done in the past."

Jerseyites Form State Body and Will Attend Convention

SCORES of New Jersey exhibitors met on June 2 at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, and formed the New Jersey Exhibitors' Association. One of the principal actions of the new organization was to vote to send a big delegation to the exhibitors' convention at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland.

John T. Collins, of Rutherford, was elected president; G. J. Hennessy, of Newark, vice-president; S. E. Samuelson, of Newton, executive secretary, and H. P. Nelson, of Elizabeth, treasurer.

Wheat Belt Showmen Merge Leagues and Elect Steffes

WITH the merging of the Exhibitors' Protective and the Theatrical Protective leagues, the exhibitors of the Northwest have joined in one organization, known as the United Theatrical Protective League. The amalgamation of the two bodies took place after long sessions by the directors.

W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis exhibitor, who has been in the fore of many a fight by Twin City exhibitors, was unanimously elected president of the rejuvenated organization. Charles W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D., who served as president of the Exhibitors' Protective League from the date of its inception, voluntarily stepped aside to permit Mr. Steffes to accept the position.

Steffes a Unanimous Choice.

With the notice of the merger, Mr. Steffes announced that a campaign will be begun immediately to obtain a 100 per cent. membership among the exhibitors of the Northwest, that unanimity in all matters affecting the rights of motion picture house owners and managers may be taken. A letter, as the beginning of the campaign, will be sent every Northwest exhibitor, urging immediate affiliation with the league. This step will be followed by other methods designed to bring the new organization to the attention of every exhibitor in the territory.

The territory to be included in the membership of the United Theatrical Protective League is Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Wisconsin and the northern peninsula of Michigan. Headquarters for the league will be maintained at 324 Kasota Block, Minneapolis, the former quarters of the Theatrical Protective League.

Separate Funds for the Twin Cities.

John Collins, Perry, Iowa, and J. P. Gruewell, Grand Rapids, Wis., who were members of the executive committee of the Exhibitors' Protective League, have been made directors of the new organization. One of the features of the new alliance will be the maintenance of two funds for use by Twin City and country exhibitors.

This was necessary, it was decided by the directors, because of the many activities engaged in by the city members in which the country exhibitors had little or no interest. Each group will maintain its own funds and use them as it may decide, although the general activities and interests will be mutual and the members will act as a body.

WITH the Hotel Astor as its scene and the support of the American Legion, the premiere of "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, which took place on the evening of Saturday, May 29, was a big event in motion picture circles.

The premiere showing of the production, which is now released for general distribution by Robertson-Cole, followed a dinner in the Rose Room of the Hotel Astor, at which the releasing company entertained one hundred leading newspaper reviewers, trade paper writers, sporting editors, cartoonists and journalistic figures. The event broke all precedents of Broadway in that it opened at a hotel.

The picture was viewed by one of the most notable assemblies ever gathered, from a standpoint of diversity and prominence. Among them were the French High Commission, the International Sporting Club, representatives of the United States Navy, of the United States Army, Lieutenant-General Robert L. Bullard, head of the Department of the East; the United States Marine Corps, the party of John G. Adolfi, who directed the picture; Frank Hall, Chic Sale, the comedian and party; supporting actors of the production, and the American Legion Committee, representing the organization under whose auspices the picture was presented.

Dinner Opens Premiere.

The premiere opened with the dinner. After this was finished the guests were escorted into a section which had been reserved for them near the middle of the first floor of the ball room.

By 8.30 the grand ball room was filled and a moment later a bugle sounded from the upper balcony, calling attention of the crowded floors to the Marine Band of thirty pieces which came from Ft. Totten for the event. The band played "The Star Spangled Banner" as the crowd stood and a minute later "The Marsallaise" closed its concert, and the program proper was under way. The overture and incidental music was played by an orchestra of twenty-five pieces, especially engaged for the Astor showing and following a special musical setting put out by the Robertson-Cole music service.

Above a specially installed screen were the American and French colors intertwined, and below, on each side of the screen, was an American and French flag. The orchestra was hidden by palms and flowers. After the showing of the Robertson-Cole scenic, "The Wonder Man" was shown to the public for the first time.

Display in Hotel Lobby.

One feature of the showing, which was met with applause, was the exhibition on the screen of a telegram from Georges Carpentier, thanking the American Legion for its support of the picture and praising the American soldier, as he personally had known him in the world war.

The showing at the Astor continued all during the week, with several matinees. For the first time in its history, the Astor gave space in its lobby to advertise a production.

For the first time outside of patriotic purposes advertising was allowed over the main marquise on the Broadway side of the hotel. There was placed a large advertising banner heralding the Carpentier picture above Broadway.

Woodrow Wilson His Own Showman

The President of the United States is a movie fan. He owns his own projection machine, probably rents his films and, in the East Room of the White House, gives his own shows. These facts are set forth in a special telegram from Washington to the New York World.

Detective films like detective stories form Mr. Wilson's chief diversion. It is claimed that hardly a day has passed since he has recovered sufficiently to leave his bed but what the President and whoever may be in the White House at the time "takes in the movies."

Glifograph Screen Makes Hit

The Robertson-Cole Company selected the new Glifograph Screen for the initial presentation of their Georges Carpentier picture, "The Wonder Man," in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor.

The picture was shown for the benefit of the American Legion, and its presentation at the Astor was the first opportunity given other producers and the public to see it.

The officials of the Robertson-Cole Company expressed themselves as exceedingly well pleased with the Glifograph, not only because of the depth it gave the scenes, but because of the excellent lighting and the removal of eye strain and distortion, no matter from what angle the picture was viewed.

Neilan En Route to New York

Through his New York office, Marshall Neilan has refuted the rumor that he was to drop out of the "Big Six" by announcing his recent election as vice-president of the Associated Producers. He is now en route to New York from California for a conference with First National Exhibitors' Circuit officials regarding new productions to be released through that body in accordance with his exhibiting arrangement.

Mr. Neilan promises within a week important announcements concerning future productions. His third production for First National has been just completed. The title and other details will be made public on his arrival. The lead is played by Agnes Ayres, who thus makes her first appearance under the Neilan banner.

With Mr. Neilan on the train is Oscar Price, president of the Associated Producers; Fred Warren, general manager of distribution; Alfred Wright, attorney for George Loane Tucker; Maurice Tourneur and J. R. Grainger, eastern representative for Mr. Neilan.

Universal Signs "Brownie" Again.

"Brownie," the famous wonder-dog of the screen, will continue to star in Century Comedies, it is announced by Universal. So popular have the unique two-reelers become that the Century Company has signed up the canine comedian for another year. "Brownie's" comedies have proved one of the most pleasing novelties of the screen, a welcome variety in short-subject production.

Scenes taken from the Vitagraph Special, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone"—A Story of the North.

Scene 2 shows Marge getting up some of the well-known courage. Perhaps she dashes in on "set" 3 and saves the family from harm. This production was adapted from the story by James Oliver Curwood.

A. MacArthur, Jr.
Who is resigning his position as advertising manager of the Moving Picture World to enter the producing field.

A. MacArthur, Jr., Resigns as Advertising Manager of the World to Enter Business

AFTER a service on the Moving Picture World of practically thirteen years, having come to the paper a few months after its first issue was printed, A. MacArthur, Jr., has resigned to enter the production end of the motion picture industry. During the entire period of Mr. MacArthur's association with the paper he has been connected with the advertising department, nearly all of the time as advertising manager.

Mr. MacArthur is a director of Invincible Photoplays Corporation, which will feature Mae Murray as the initial player of a series of stars to be engaged by the company. Miss Murray will begin work July 15 in "The Net." In a large production company Mr. MacArthur will be more closely associated as business manager. The details of the latter affiliation will be announced later.

Best Wishes of Friends.

The advertising manager of the Moving Picture World will take with him when he departs on June 12 the best wishes of the publishers and all of the men and women with whom for so long he has been associated. Mr. MacArthur's successor will be Wendell P. Milligan, who for the three years, 1915-18, was an assistant to Mr. MacArthur and who a few months ago again entered the advertising department.

"During the thirteen years I have been on the World I have made many friends," said Mr. MacArthur, "some of whom have been 'picturing' as long as I have, but a greater number of whom entered the business after I did. With few exceptions almost all of those with whom I have come in contact have shown an earnest desire to co-operate with me, with the result that the World always has been staunchly supported by the business men of the industry.

"Friendships are rare and invaluable, and I am most desirous of maintaining those I have acquired. Not having the opportunity to visit personally and say goodbye to all, I just want to say I hope soon to see you again. If you visit the coast, look me up.

"My successor, Wen Milligan, needs no introduction. As most of you know, he is a regular fellow, and I bespeak for him as good a break as you all have given me."

Ban on Raw Stock Effective in France, But Trade Is Adjusting Difficulties

JULIAN M. THOMAS, of Paris, director of David P. Howells Company, has very thoughtfully written to Moving Picture World an explicit statement of the facts in the "raw stock" case which so directly effects an American film manufacturing company—the Eastman corporation, of Rochester—and other makes of raw stock, both in this country and abroad. Mr. Thomas writes thus in detail:

Law Created Sensation.

"A sensation was caused in Paris recently by the announcement in the Journal Officiel that the importation of film had been prohibited. Rumor ran riot and reports of all sorts were heard.

"It was even claimed that the importation of all films had been prohibited by the French Government in an effort to restrict the importation of luxuries, which was part of the program against the unfortunate exchange difficulty. This law was published in the Journal Officiel of April 28, 1920, and included among articles classed as luxuries, the importation of rolls or bands, sensitized for moving pictures.

Direct Blow to Eastman Importers.

"This is a hard blow to the importers of the Eastman stock, which is by far the most popular in Europe and means that French houses who insist upon having their prints made on the Eastman stock will have to have their prints made in America by some other country outside of France. Much of the printing in France is done on Eastman stock for the reason that it is claimed the Eastman stock is much more satisfactory than the stock manufactured in France.

"Small countries, such as Belgium, Switzerland, Holland and Tcheco-Slovaquie, which take two prints, desire that their films consist of stock which will stand the greatest possible wear, and heretofore have been insisting on prints made on the Eastman raw stock. This means that if these countries still insist on this stock France will have to send the negatives of French pictures to another country to have their prints made.

Satisfied to Pay High Price.

"Of course, the kodak stock is higher priced than the French stock, but most of the renting houses are willing to pay the advanced prices, which they claim is compensated for by the additional life of the film. Where the negatives are in America, this law means that the prints will be made in America.

"This, no doubt, will be welcomed by the American exporters, as printing done in France has often proved very unsatisfactory, owing to the fact that in most cases the negative is cut in small length, and often a part of the negative is lost, sometimes dupes being substituted therefor. Exporting houses often send a negative to France with the intention of sending it from France to England.

"In France the English titles are cut out and occasionally lost. There is not in France at this time what would be termed in America an up to date printing house where high priced and valuable negatives may be placed with absolute confidence in the results attained.

French Depend on Outside Film.

"From the standpoint of the French dealer this law at first appeared harsh, in fact almost destructive. It was claimed that the essential element, the raw stock, the base of the moving picture industry, was suddenly knocked in the head and French productions of films was suddenly stopped.

"French houses were dependent for their raw stock on the Eastman in America, Brifco from England and L'Agfa from Germany, Pathe in France, with another source to open shortly, that of Gevaert of Belgium. It was claimed that the output of the Pathe Company was entirely insufficient, and that practically 80 per cent. of the raw stock was imported.

Would Foster Anti-Americanism.

"There is no doubt that there has been a strong and well organized movement in France to boycott American films. This is admitted by certain well informed members of the French trade. An effort has been made to have the law of April 28 changed, so as to prohibit the importation of prints and admit raw stock and negatives.

"It has been admitted by some that the Government had been approached with a view to carrying out of this purpose prior to the enactment of the law of April 28, 1920, and that the actual law came as a great surprise to the very persons who had been 'lobbying' for the purpose of prohibiting the importation of prints. However, as time is passing, it appears that the French trade is taking a less fearful view of the law and it is thought now that it will not affect seriously the film industry of France, although it is still hoped the enforcement of this law will be somewhat relaxed.

"It was at first thought Pathe would not be able to supply the demands of the French industry, but it appears that as this concern furnishes 12.2 million feet of raw stock a month, it is possible to divert 75 per cent. of this production (which is now being exported to the Pathe branches in America) to the French market."

Censorship Defeated by Organization Says Senator

SENATOR JAMES WALKER, leader of the minority of New York Senate, talked for an hour on June 1 to a large gathering of exhibitors at the Hotel Astor. The meeting had been called by Sidney S. Cohen, president of the State League of Exhibitors, to explain the Deposit and Children's bills recently passed by the New York Legislature.

The suggestion was made that in the theatres of the state a section be set aside for children after school hours and that for their supervision a specially engaged matron be employed.

Senator Walker spoke of the faith that the legislators of both parties in New York State have in the organized exhibitors of New York. "It is only because of the strong organization of these men," he said, "that the censorship bill had failed to become a law in the Empire State."

Vote Thanks to Campaigners.

William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, moved that a vote of thanks be extended to Mr. Cohen as president and to Messrs. Berman and O'Reilly, his aids, for the successful campaign they had waged at Albany during the past session. Also it was voted that an expression of thanks and appreciation be extended to Senator Walker for his activities on behalf of the organized exhibitors of the state.

One of the strong points made by Senator Walker was that the New York State exhibitors represented the motion picture going public of the state of New York and that, in his opinion, any state similarly organized may accomplish results such as those achieved by New York.

Fate of Massachusetts Censorship Bill Is Now in Hands of Governor Coolidge

THE fate of the Massachusetts motion picture censorship bill is in the hands of Governor Calvin Coolidge. Without opposition, the measure went through the final legislative stage of enactment in the senate on Tuesday, June 1. There was no debate, and the official report of the senate's proceedings said that the bill was unanimously passed to be enacted. However, spectators heard one senatorial voice in protest, but its identity is not known.

The governor has five days in which to act. He can sign the bill, veto it or ignore it. If he vetoes it, a two-thirds vote of the legislature will be necessary to override the veto. If he fails to sign the bill, it automatically becomes a law.

Last ditch stands by opponents of the censorship bill were made in the State House in the closing hours of the long legislative battle over the measure.

The censorship bill rode all the legislative hurdles in both House and Senate. The final stage was "enactment," ordinarily merely a matter of routine. But when the bill was called up for enactment in the House an unexpected eleventh hour fight to stop it developed.

The Rev. Roland D. Sawyer of Ware, Congregational clergyman-legislator, rose and moved to strike out the enacting clause. Representative Sawyer contended that the measure was made needless by the action of President Wilson in signing the bill to prohibit interstate transportation of indecent films.

"In order to make a small correction," he argued, "you would throw aside the great American principle of liberty. You would start on the German principle of restriction. Our fathers insisted on liberty and we ought to adhere to that policy. The censorship bill ought to be rejected."

Wilson's Action Obviates Necessity.

Representative Abbott of Haverhill endorsed the views of Representative Sawyer that President Wilson's action has made state censorship unnecessary.

"This bill is a direct blow at the American principle of liberty," declared Representative George Pearl Webster, of Haverhill, old Progressive party leader. "The censors under the bill would be a political body, subject to all the whims and prejudices and pressure that could be exerted upon them."

Representative Keniston of Boston said that censorship will cost the moving picture industry only $60,000 and that if the producers cannot pay that amount they ought to fail. The upshot of the debate was that Representative Sawyer's motion to reject the bill was lost by 12 votes, the vote of the House being 103 to 91. Then the bill was sent to the Senate for enactment.

Governor Hears Both Sides.

Meanwhile Governor Calvin Coolidge was giving hearings in the executive chamber to delegates representing both sides. The delegation that presented arguments to the governor why he should not sign the bill was made up of Robert G. Larson, president of the Theatrical Managers' Association of Boston; Nathan Gordon, producer and exhibitor; George A. Giles of Cambridge, president of the Exhibitors' League of Greater Boston; Fred Murphy, president of the Film Dealers' Association; Miss Sybil H. Holmes, representing the Professional Women's Club; Miss Edith M. Haynes, representing the Massachusetts Association of Women Lawyers; Mrs. J. Wentworth Brackett, representing the Boston Film Club; Senator George F. Curran of Roxbury, and Judge Albert Brackett, counsel for the theatrical managers.

Points to Laws Now in Force.

Judge Brackett presented the arguments. He urged the governor to remember that when Pennsylvania and Ohio passed their censorship laws there was not in either state any law regulating films. In Massachusetts, he said, there is already law enough on the statute books to cover the situation.

He pointed out to the governor that no form of amusement can be given within the borders of the commonwealth except by license of local authorities. Provision, he said, is made for fines and imprisonment for any person concerned in exhibition of any immoral or indecent show or film.

The governor listened attentively and thanked the delegation for calling on him. A delegation organized by Miss Hilda A. Hedstrom and headed by Bishop William Lawrence of the Massachusetts Episcopal diocese visited the governor and asked him to sign the bill. A. Preston Clark, Miss Amy Woods and other members of the state committee on motion pictures were in the party.

Sydney Cohen's Letter to Gov. Coolidge Argues Impressively Against Censorship

LOGICAL and convincing reasons why Massachusetts should not have a censorship of motion pictures are set forth clearly in a letter mailed Governor Calvin Coolidge on June 1 by Sydney S. Cohen, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The letter urges the governor, who is now called upon to approve or veto the radical bill passed by the legislature and senate, to keep it off the state's statute books, and so sound are Mr. Cohen's arguments that his letter offers something more than a "forlorn hope" that the bill will be killed.

The letter follows:

Text of the Letter.

"The motion picture theatre owners of the country are about to meet in a big national gathering at Cleveland on June 8, 9 and 10.

"They have for many years been interested in the question of censoring motion pictures, and some of them—that is to say, the exhibitors in four states, Kansas, Maryland, Ohio and Pennsylvania—have gone through a painfully practical experience in censorship.

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who are in close daily touch with the millions of patrons and who thoroughly understand public sentiment, believe that the great American public is opposed to censorship of motion pictures, just as it is opposed to censorship of other media of expression which, under the federal constitution and each state constitution, are guaranteed constitutional liberties subject to proper liability for the abuses thereof.

"No Sound Popular Demand."

"We respectfully submit that there is no sound popular demand for censoring motion pictures. For the last fifteen years the motion picture has been the most popular and the most largely attended form of amusement ever known. The motion picture and the men who show the motion picture are under the constant daily supervision of their patrons on whom they depend for their livelihood. This patronage exercises the only kind of a control which our institutions recognize as lawful: the control of public opinion.

"If there were any sound, popular demand for censorship of motion pictures, such censorship would now be established in every state; whereas, as a matter of fact, only four states have adopted censorship, and in each case it was done to create political patronage. The agitation for censorship of motion pictures has been persistent, unscrupulous and well financed.

Only Four States Have Censors.

"If, in spite of these facts, there are only four states out of forty-eight which have adopted censorship, the conclusion is irresistible that there is no popular demand for an introduction of this system, which is so utterly alien to the genius of our institutions.

"Time and space are too limited for an extensive consideration of this very important subject in any of its essential aspects. Aside from the features which are so thoroughly repugnant to the genius of our political institutions, we would like to call your attention to the fact that the motion picture screen in a greater degree than any other medium of expression carries with it the power to convey ideas—in other words, to teach and enlighten.

Dr. Claxton Opposes It.

"The Commissioner of Federal Education, Dr. Claxton, has gone on record as being emphatically opposed to motion picture censorship. In the recent Federal censorship bill, which was defeated in Congress, it was proposed to have Dr. Claxton act as chief censor. Dr. Claxton not only utterly disclaimed any connection with the bill, but indicated in the strongest possible terms that he would not take such an office because it was not compatible with his beliefs.

"We respectfully urge you not to place this measure on the statute books of Massachusetts.

"Respectfully yours,
"MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA.
"By Sydney S. Cohen,
"Temporary Chairman."

Explaining a Noble Art.

Judge and Mrs. Lindsey, famous Denverites, working in the movies, put on "make-up" for the first time.

"How do you get it off?" queried the Judge, after it was on.

"Just let it wear off?" replied his wife.

And still his whiskers grew.

Tom Forman will direct "Rosanne Ozanne," the next Ethel Clayton picture for Paramount. The cast includes Jack Holt, Mabel Van Buren, Grace Morse, Clarence Geldart and Fred Malatesta.

Federated Film Exchanges of America Will Buy Best Productions in Market

All Stock Has Been Subscribed and Paid For by Members—Buying Committee Already Hard at Work

AFTER a full week of sessions lasting all of each day and well into the night the officers and members of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., separated for their homes satisfied they had performed a mass of constructive work. Joseph I. Friedman, of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago, the president of the new organization, in a talk at the end of the week declared the Federated had reached the stage where it was actively seeking a general manager, one of proved capacity for achievement and one whose standing in the trade would be a complete demonstration of the far-reaching purposes of the new body. The headquarters of the company will be New York.

All the meetings were marked by an absence of dissension in spite of the many widely divergent interests represented by the membership, by the varying tastes of the clienteles catered to by the franchise holders. In fact, President Friedman said the harmony and good feeling that prevailed were notable and an evidence of the belief of the members in the solidity of the new institution.

The annual meeting was set for San Francisco next February 8. It was decided that at the conclusion of the sessions the franchise holders would journey to Los Angeles, thereby giving many of the members their first opportunity to visit the studios.

Releases to Be Simultaneous.

One of the points decided during the week is that all releases will be simultaneous. This is a departure in state rights procedure, as heretofore productions have been issued in each territory at the convenience of the buyer. Also arrangements were initiated looking to national advertising of each subject to be exploited. One of the details connected with this part of the company's activities will be the assumption by the home office of the distribution of all accessories connected with the selling of the pictures.

"You say that as we are all exchangemen we had ought to get along," said President Friedman in response to a remark by a World man. "That is an exact fact. You have pointed out one of the big factors in this organization. All the members are experienced exchangemen, and as such we believe we will avoid many mistakes that beset the paths of new distributing companies.

"There's another element that may be mentioned here. You know it has been the practice to give the state rights men a chance at a production after the big fellows have looked it over and decided they didn't want it. And as a rule the state rights men paid several times in purchase price what the aforesaid big fellows declined to pay. It is our intention to go into the market and compete with the biggest buyers and to meet them on their own ground. We want the best and we are going to buy it—and we have got the money to pay for it."

Associated with Mr. Friedman on the board of officers are J. E. Pearce, New Orleans, vice-president; Sam Grand, Boston, treasurer; David J. Chatkin, San Francisco, secretary. These four, with H. L. Charnas, Cleveland; Arthur G. Whyte, New York and Ben Amsterdam, Philadelphia, constitute the board of directors.

The buying committee is composed of Mr. Charnas, chairman; Messrs. Grand, Whyte, Amsterdam, Chatkin, and R. D. Lewis, Oklahoma City, and Harry Lande, Pittsburgh. Associated with these, of course, will be the general manager. Other committees will be membership, zoning, grievance and finance.

"One of the principal reasons behind the organization of the Federated," said Mr. Friedman, "was the realization on the part of the independent exchangemen that they could not go into the open market and compete with the big distributing companies. They knew that if they were to continue in business it would be necessary for them to have a sure source of supply, that if they were to compete with the big distributors it would be necessary to secure their subjects practically in the same manner their competitors did.

"A difficulty with which we had to contend in the formation of the Federated was the elimination of competing franchise seekers. In some cases three or four men or groups of men sought the same franchise.

Bylaws Are Unique.

"When we organized temporarily recently in Chicago instructions were given to the president to make the necessary arrangements for drafting charter and bylaws. This was done, with the result that our attorneys and their confreres in Delaware advise us that these instruments in their opinion are the most novel and unique of any that ever had been issued in the United States. Their chief claim to attention is the manner in which the interests of the minority have been protected. On all important issues there must be a three-quarters vote on the territory represented, and in every instance there must be recorded a majority of stockholders irrespective of the territory represented.

"The event that stood out most prominently at the Chicago convention was that when it became time for the zoning committee to apportion territory each one of the franchise holders was requested by the chairman to set down what he honestly believed was the most in the way of percentage his territory could stand. When the count was taken it was found that the figures summed up 99¾ per cent. That demonstrates the spirit of fair play that marked all the negotiations.

"The New York convention, which has been in session this week, was called primarily to complete the organization. At the first meeting 25 per cent. of the capital stock was deposited in the treasury. The constitution and by-laws have been adopted, the capital stock has been subscribed in full and paid for, and the corporation is now ready to do business. As a matter of fact, the buying committee already is in action, having contracted with the Warner Brothers for a series of two-reel comedies."

The best evidence of the scope of the production which the new organization is seeking and of the standing of the general manager desired perhaps is best expressed by one of the Federated members, who declared: "The bigger they come the better we will like them." He added that as to the latter of the two salary would be no object.

Franchise Holders and Territory.

The following are the franchise holders and their respective territory: Arthur B. Whyte, Empire State Film Company, New York, New York City and Northern New Jersey; Sam Grand, Federal Feature Film Corporation, of Boston, the New England states; B. Amsterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; H. Lande, Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; H. Charnas, Standard Film Service Company, Cleveland, Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky; R. M. Savini, R. M. Savini Films, Inc., Atlanta, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee; Abe Dresner, Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, D. C., Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia.

J. E. Pearce, Pearce Films, New Orleans, Louisiana and Mississippi; R. D. Lewis Film Company, Oklahoma City, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; F. W. Thayer, Merit Film Corporation, Minneapolis, Minnesota, North and South Dakota; R. Wettstein, Midwest Distributing Company, of Milwaukee, the state of Wisconsin; S. KEEPING IN PERSONAL TOUCH

By SAM SPEDON

J. F. REILLY, Robertson-Cole director of publicity, and his assistant, J. F. Loughborough, are deserving of much credit for the manner in which they carried out the arrangements for the dinner and the opening showing of "The Wonder Man" at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Saturday evening, May 29. All earmarks of publicity were lacking and everybody was made welcome and happy by the informal way in which the affair was conducted. There were no speeches and no introductions, just an evening of good-fellowship and a gathering of kindred souls.

Among those who attended the dinner were Rube Goldberg and Burns Mantle, of the New York Evening Mail; Joe Vila, Evening Sun; Vincent Treanor, Evening World; B. B. Fox, New York Tribune; Robert Gilbert Welsh, Evening Telegram; Bob Berkley, Sunday American; Tom Thorpe, Evening Journal; Miss L. A. Pathe to Release H. B. Warner Features; Star Plans Six Hampton Films Each Year

H. B. WARNER, one of the foremost stars of the American stage and screen, both from ability and box office point of view, is to appear in a series of big productions for Pathe distribution. This fact, rumored throughout the industry for some time, has just been disclosed by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The announcement of the signing of Warner follows a visit to New York of Jesse D. Hampton, under whose management Wagner has been starring in picturs for more than a year. The final details of the Warner contract were concluded at a conference between Mr. Brunet and Mr. Hampton, following which the latter returned to Los Angeles to begin preparations for the filming of the new Wagner series.

Under the terms of the contract with Pathe, Warner will produce up to six pictures a year. The number will be limited to six, for it is the intention of Mr. Brunet and Mr. Hampton that the star shall have only the biggest productions, regardless of the time that shall be devoted to them.

Gives Pathe Three Hampton Stars.

The signing of Warner, which means that three Jesse D. Hampton stars will appear under the Pathe banner, is another step in the Pathe policy of enlarging the scope and quality of its feature department to meet the demands of the most fastidious exhibitors.

The plays in which Warner will be starred will be from the pens of some of the most brilliant authors of two continents. Mr. Hampton is now searching the American and European literary markets for material that will make the best pictures for the stars under his direction. Already he has purchased several exceptionally high class stories, and among the past and present authors on both sides of the Atlantic whose works will be filmed by Mr. Hampton are William J. Locke, John Galsworthy, Jerome K. Jerome, F. Hopkinson Smith, F. Anstey, Robert Hichens, John Hastings Turner, Kenneth B. Clarke, Bret Harte, Frank H. Spearman and Marah Ellis Ryan.

Producer Buys Literary Material.

Howard E. Morton, New York representative of Jesse D. Hampton, will go to Europe this summer to confer with authors under contract and to arrange for additional material for the Hampton stars and special productions.

Further details of the plans of Warner, under the new distribution arrangement with Pathe, will be announced later. The story of the first Warner-Pathe production has already been selected and placed in work. It is considered the most appealing story yet allotted Warner and, according to Mr. Hampton, should develop into one of the greatest pictures Warner has ever made.

While his conference with Mr. Brunet was the principal reason that brought Mr. Hampton east, the producer spent some of his time purchasing new literary material for his stars. He also had several conferences with Howard E. Morton, in charge of the Hampton offices in the Longacre Building. Mr. Hampton expressed satisfaction over the emphatic success of the recent productions from his studios and registered his belief that his forthcoming releases will eclipse their predecessors in popularity and box office results. Apropos of Mr. Hampton's eastern trip, a statement from his New York office says:

Studios in Full Swing.

"Our new studios in Hollywood are now in full swing and are completely equipped with every modern facility for the production this summer and fall of a notable series of high class pictures which we feel confident will win ever-growing favor with the public and increasing profit to the exhibitor.

"The rapidly increasing demand for Blanche Sweet pictures more than justifies our faith in the ability of this star to surpass all her previous screen achievements. Her latest Pathe release, 'Simple Souls,' a picturization of John Hastings Turner's novel, is undoubtedly the greatest success of her screen career to date. It is an intensely human story, wonderfully interpreted by the star, Director Robert Thornby and a strong cast, and is hailed by exhibitors and critics as a real winner.

Other Important Features.

"The drawing power of H. B. Warner is likewise a proof of the approval with which the public receives the screen efforts of this noted star of the stage and silversheet. Mr. Warner's first Pathe release will be announced later. It will be a picture of exceptional strength and intense appeal, filmed under the direction of Henry King.

"Another of our releases through Pathe will be William Desmond in 'A Broadway Cowboy,' from a story by Byron Morgan. This picture is full of rapid-fire action and provides a vehicle especially adapted to the attractive personality of this popular star. It was directed by Joe Franz.

King and Thornby Pictures.

"Another important feature of our plans is a series of Henry King and Robert Thornby productions. These big special productions will combine with recognized directorial ability the literary genius of celebrated authors and will be interpreted by all-star casts. The first of these, 'Half a Chance,' from the successful novel by Frederick Isham, is now being filmed in Los Angeles and San Francisco under the direction of Robert Thornby."

All Working Under Pathe's Banner.

Goldwyn-Bray to Release W. L. Finley's Pictures of Wild Bird and Animal Life

THE Bray Pictures Corporation announces that it has completed arrangements with William L. Finley, the nationally known naturalist, whereby it will acquire 16,000 feet of Mr. Finley's motion pictures of bird and animal life for distribution through the Goldwyn exchanges. These pictures are said to be of an exceedingly rare quality and represent the work of Mr. Finley and his wife for the past three years.

Due to Mr. Finley's intimate knowledge of wild animal life, he has been able to get intimate pictures of the life of his wary friends of a most unusual type. They are of great value, not only as an entertainment feature for the theatre-going public but for educational purposes in the preparatory schools and universities.

The arrangements entered into with Mr. Finley are of particular interest, inasmuch as the films to be shown were obtained with great difficulty and can never be duplicated. The negatives will be deposited in the archives of either the National Association of the Audubon Society or the Natural History Museum.

It is the custom of Mr. and Mrs. Finley to take to the field every summer with a motion picture camera and about 20,000 feet of film negative to stalk wild birds and animals in their native environment. The average result of a summer's work is about 5,000 feet of good film. On their trips Mr. and Mrs. Finley are accompanied by their two children, who enjoy an instructive and active vacation.

Mr. Finley is the author of two books on American birds and was associated with the Oregon Fish and Game Commission for about eight and a half years. He has written on this subject for all the magazines devoted to outdoor life, as well as for the Century, the Atlantic Monthly and other magazines of similar standing.

Mr. Finley also is well known as a lecturer.

Frisco Exchange Board Makes C. A. Nathan Vice-President

CAROL A. NATHAN, manager of Universal's San Francisco branch exchange, recently was elected as vice-president of the San Francisco Film Exchange Board, succeeding Charles Rosenthal, who resigned. His election was unanimous.

Mr. Nathan assumed the management of the Universal branch in that city less than two months ago. Previously he had been assistant manager, having accepted that position last fall. His advent into West Coast circles was as much a surprise to him as to San Francisco film men. He was a Jewel salesman in the New York Universal exchange a year ago. Then he was sent west to stimulate interest throughout that part of the country in the Stage Women's War Relief series of pictures.

Des Moines Unique, True to Its Name, Ends "Jitney" Career of Fifteen Years

WITH the passing of the Unique, Des Moines loses its last nickel show and the first movie of any size in the city and state. The house has been sold by Elbert & Getchell to A. H. Blank, who will remodel it at once and convert it into a big time, first run house. It has one of the finest locations in Des Moines, directly across the street from Blank's Garden.

The house has been playing at five-cent prices for twelve years, and for three years before that, the old Nickeldom held forth in the same building. In twelve years 12,000,000 tickets have been sold by the house and 4,000 miles of films have been used.

The Unique was really unique in more ways than one. For instance, it once had a cigar checking machine at the front door. So many patrons walked away insulted when told they must throw their cheroots away, that "Kip" Elbert decided he must do something to keep their good will. He devised a rack with little notches, each notch numbered, and when a man came to the door with a new stogie in his mouth the liveried ticket taker said to him:

The Original Check Hound.

"Check your cigar, sir? Just place it there and remember your number."

The Unique was the first theatre in the country that boasted two projecting machines. Therefore, it was the first to save the time and agony of its spectators when a film must be changed just as the desperate cowboy was about to save the queen of the hamlet from being captured by Indians.

It had the first electric sign on Locust street, now one of the city's busiest thorofares; the first pipe organ of any movie house in the city, and the first to relieve the pitch black darkness with an indirect lighting system.

The theatre has been closed exactly nineteen days in twelve years, eighteen days during the flu epidemic and one day during the coal strike. Work of remodeling the Unique will start forthwith and the house will be ready for use in the fall.

Burr Says Exhibitors Should Exploit the Short Productions

EXHIBITORS all over the country are passing up big opportunities by not properly exploiting their short subjects. Quality should govern the exploitation of the picture rather than its footage, according to C. C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc., producers of the "Torchy" Comedies, featuring Johnny Hines.

A short subject, if it is properly exploited, will outdraw the average feature. This is the belief of Mr. Burr, who has made a close study of short subject production and distribution.

"A few live exhibitors who have sensed the value of meritorious two-reelers and one-reelers have not been backward in exploiting them, with the result that they have more than made good at the box office," said Mr. Burr. "Hugo Riesenfeld has featured the Shackelton Bottom of the World pictures, first at his Rivoli and Rialto theatres for two weeks and now at the Criterion, with splendid results.

"Many of the New York dailies gave more space to these pictures in their reviews than to the features, backing up the judgment and showmanship of Mr. Riesenfeld, who featured the Shackelton pictures in his advertising from the start above the feature. The Burton Holmes Travel Pictures and Harold Lloyd comedies are other good examples."

Nelson and Poland Under Contract

Rewarding the results of diligent effort, Thomas H. Ince announces the permanent engagement of two young men who have achieved signal success in the directorial and scenario divisions of motion picturess.

Jack Nelson, who joined the Thomas H. Ince forces several months go as director of the Douglas MacLean company, has been placed under a long-term contract to continue the direction of MacLean in his new role of a star in his own right.

Joseph Franklin Poland, for the past six months a member of the Ince scenario department, also has affixed his signature to a contract which calls for his exclusive services for a long period of time.

Brown Sails for Bermuda

Louis Francis Brown, general manager for Burton Holmes, sailed May 29 for Bermuda on the S.S. Fort Hamilton where he will remain several weeks to complete at least two travel pictures which will appear on the future Paramount-Burton Holmes release schedule. The decision to film the scenic wonders of tourist-ridden Bermuda has resulted from the insistent demand made upon Mr. Holmes to produce travel pictures of the island.

Mr. Brown has an estate in Bermuda which has been occupied for several years by a wealthy merchant. Mr. Brown will be accompanied by his wife, Renee Brown, who lectures on travel subjects.

Ince Signs Two More Writers

Louis Stevens, formerly scenario editor and special writer for a large film corporation of England, has joined the Thomas H. Ince scenario department in Culver City. Stevens will write continuties for the Ince forces, and will also offer a series of original stories.

Goldwyn Founds New Department to Meet Demand for One and Two-Reel Subjects

IN accord with its policy of supplying exhibitors with motion pictures of the highest quality in short lengths as well as feature productions and super-specials, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has founded a short subject department whose province will be the promotion of the one and two reel films that now are being distributed under the Goldwyn trade-mark. The department is a direct outgrowth of the increased demand for Goldwyn's topical, educationad comedy films that have come to occupy a prominent place on the programs of many theatres.

During the past year Goldwyn has made great progress in building up this important branch of motion picture production, recognizing that up-to-date exhibitors have ceased to regard one and two reel subjects merely as fillers. The first noteworthy step in this direction was the contract with Bray Pictures Corporation for the distribution rights to the product of the Bray studios.

With the success of the Bray releases thoroughly established, Goldwyn planned a further development of the product and to that end secured a controlling interest in the company. The first outcome of the new arrangement was the launching of the Goldwyn-Bray Comic, which bids fair to become as popular as the Pictograph.

Booth Tarkington's two-reel "Edgar Comedies" marked an innovation in Goldwyn's production policy. These studies of boy life have been welcomed as one of the year's most important contributions to the screen. After the reception accorded the first of the releases many exhibitors concluded that the two-reel "Edgar" stories warranted the same advertising prominence as longer features.

The Capitol Comedies, produced by National Film Corporation and distributed by Goldwyn, have a strong popular appeal, whereas the Ford Weekly, presenting subjects that are instructive as well as entertaining, has built up a loyal following. It will be the function of the short subject department to co-operate with exhibitors in supplying the films most suitable to their needs and to see that they are backed by adequate exploitation.

Dillon to Direct Billie Burke

Edward Dillon, who has just returned from California, will direct Billie Burke in her new Paramount production, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson." Mr. Dillon's last picture for Famous Players-Lasky was "The Amateur Wife," in which Irene Castle was starred. Miss Burke's new picture is adapted from Clyde Fitch's play of the same name.

Associated First National to Release 60 Features During Season of 1920-21

A MINIMUM of sixty special feature attractions from fifteen independent producing organizations will be released to exhibitor owners of sub-franchises by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., during the 1920-1921 season, beginning August 30 of this year and terminating about May 15, 1921. This statement, together with an explanation of production sources and the nature of releases, is contained in an announcement made this week, preliminary to an official listing of the titles of the entire schedule, which, it is said, will be available for publication next week.

The new schedule carries an increase of approximately twenty-five per cent. in the total number of attractions to be distributed by Associated First National for the coming season over the aggregate schedule for the season just ended, and, according to exhibitor officials of the co-operative organization, constitutes the result of a year's intensive effort to establish production affiliations which, in reputation, box office value, ability and the degree of quality essential to the standards of the first run theatres of the country, will be more than sufficient to meet all requirements.

Nine Features on Summer List.

The summer schedule of releases, which begins on June 7, with an Allan Dwan production, "A Splendid Hazard," presented by Mayflower, was announced two weeks ago. This has since been supplemented with two additional attractions, giving a total of nine releases instead of seven. Following the initial Allan Dwan production through Associated First National will be "Married Life," first of the series of Mack Sennett specials, to be released on June 14. "Yes or No," starring Norma Talmadge, will be given its first run presentations the week of June 28, and will be succeeded on July 12 by the third Marshall Neilan production, which has not yet been officially announced under its releasing title. Constance Talmadge will star in "The Perfect Woman" as the production for first run houses the week of July 19, to be followed on August 2 by the fifth Katherine MacDonald attraction for the Circuit, entitled "The Notorious Miss Lisle."

King Vidor's special feature, "The Jack Knife Man," from the famous story of the same title by Ellis Parker Butler, will be the second release for the month, with August 16 as the date, and the final attraction, concluding the summer season, will be "The Scoffer," the second Allan Dwan production to be released through First National by Mayflower.

Ray Film Starts Fall Season.

The fall season for First National's exhibitor members will, it is announced, begin on August 30 with "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," the first of Charles Ray's personally produced attractions, and adapted from George Cohan's greatest stage success. The star is reported to have taken three months of constant work at the studios to complete this production, which is now being cut and edited, and is complete with the exception of about a thousand feet of important exteriors which, it is expected, will be photographed in New York City within the next thirty days.

Fifteen independent producing organizations now have contracts for the exhibition of their attractions by exhibitor members of First National. The total number of theatres that will be protected with these guaranteed production sources through franchises is announced this week to exceed 1,100, with sanguine predictions from the executive committee for Associated First National that the original maximum of 6,500 will be awarded memberships well in advance of the beginning of the fall releasing schedule.

Each Star to Average Three Pictures.

The summary of production sources which will provide the majority of the releases on the 1920-1921 schedule of more than sixty special feature attractions shows that each star, director or producer will confine his or her individual efforts to the making of not more than three pictures as an individual average during the eight months' period covered in the schedule. In instances where four and five attractions are contracted for from the various independent producing organizations, it is pointed out by First National officials that the number of productions now completed and ready for final editing, or available for screen examination by the advertising and publicity department, brings the average down to three attractions for each artists as the maximum output planned from any individual source between August of this year and May, 1921.

Charles Chaplin has a total of four productions to deliver to First National under the terms of his contract. It is understood that he has at least one of these almost completed now, and that it will be available for release early in the fall season.

Marshall Neilan will provide three special attractions after August 30, not including the third of his releases through the Circuit, which is scheduled on the summer season list for July 12.

Norma Talmadge will star in four productions, including one exceptionally big special, and Constance Talmadge will have an equal number of new attractions for release between the dates established as the start and finish of the new season.

Curwood to Supervise Two Subjects.

James Oliver Curwood has been given a contract for two personally supervised productions, adapted from his own stories. The first will be "Nomads of the North," on which he is now at work with a company in the north woods of Canada. This will be another distinct novelty, it is said, with more than a score of wild animal characters given even greater prominence in the action than has been the case in previous Curwood productions.

Charles Ray will provide five productions. Katherine MacDonald is the only other star in the total of fifteen who will have a maximum of five productions, one of which is scheduled for release before August.

On Rest of Schedule.

The remainder of the schedule will be made up of three pictures starring Anita Stewart, three in which Mildred Harris Chaplin will be starred, one production to be directed by Sydney Franklin and released under his name as the producer, four releases in which Lionel Barrymore will star under his contract with Whitman Bennett, three personally produced pictures from Allan Dwan, three from Allan Holubar, one special feature from Mack Sennett, and three R. A. Walsh productions, a special release with Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven in the stellar roles, and a minimum of twelve independently made specials of high calibre.

(1) "The Deep Purple" Made (2) "Jenny Be Good" and Keep Within (3) "The Law of the Yukon" at All Times.

Three excellent views of the latest Realart productions. Notice that the love interest is centered in each of the pictures. Climatic conditions prevent us from revealing the loving words. Miriam Cooper is seen in scene 1; Mary Miles Minter in scene 2, and June Elvidge is the player preparing to leave the cabin at the right.

"Love Me—Love My Shirt!"
So says Mary Pickford in her latest United Artists feature, called "Suds." The shirt just came out of them.

"Tomorrow" Is on the Way

One of the most important productions of recent years, which is certain to send a thrill through even the experienced critics is the prophetic superfeature "Tomorrow," which is about to be released at the Community Productions, Inc. Ashley Miller is director.

The story, by C. S. Clancy, is one of the most engrossing of all themes.

Marcus to Draw for Rivoli

Edwin Marcus, famous as Marcus, cartoonist of the New York Times, has joined Hugo Riesenfeld's staff at the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres and will draw a weekly cartoon which will be run at the three houses. It will not be of the type now popular in the picture houses of the country but will instead stick to timely topics of interest and importance, just as his work does now in the great metropolitan daily. The process of the drawing will be shown and then the finished product.

Mary and Doug Breeze Into New York and the Hotel Elevator Man Works Overtime

By SUMNER SMITH

MARY PICKFORD and Douglas Fairbanks—beg pardon, Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks—breezed into New York City all smiles last week for a three weeks' visit. It was "much" business that brought them, they explained, such things as a United Artists' meeting and the possible election of a president, but the cloud of routine work hanging over them and the number of photographs they were called upon to autograph the first day, didn't seem to affect their infectious enthusiasm a bit. They are a very happy couple.

After a short automobile trip about the city, during which they had to acknowledge many salutations, Mary and Doug held court in the rose and white suite of the Ritz-Carlton. But it was a most democratic court. While Mary leaned comfortably back in a chair and chatted about business and domesticity, Doug walked back and forth within his circle of newspapermen and talked baseball 'n movies 'n optimism 'n everything. And all the time the elevator man sweated and swore as each new load of newspapermen said "third floor." It's a hard life, this being an elevator man, when Mary and Doug drop in at a hotel.

Doug Wants Foreign Locales and Ideas.

The chief load on the minds of the two stars was the possibility of making an early start for an extensive combination honeymoon-business trip abroad. Doug put it this way: "I want the new locales and new ideas that the Continent can give me, even if my director makes me jump off the Alps. It would be a great thing for me to begin producing over there soon. I remember one time when I was in Berlin hearing the name of Al Woods mixed in with a flood of German. Al Woods had been over there and the Germans knew him. If I get over in Europe, all those people will know me and you know what that's worth. Then, above all else, I want to make pictures with foreign backgrounds for my own countrymen."

One of the ambitions of the athletic star's life is to make "The Three Musketeers" in Alexander Dumas' native France. Prominent Frenchmen have already invited him to make the picture on French soil. In France he is known as Douglas D'Artagnan. He estimates that the production work would take from six to eight months, and he is all eagerness—a typical Fairbanks sort of eagerness, which is the superlative kind—to be up and at it.

Might Attend Cleveland Conventions.

"There's all kind of action in the story," said Doug, "and although it would have to be a costume picture it would make a corker."

Then the newspapermen started talking about the Cleveland convention—or, to be more exact, conventions—and it developed that the star's knowledge of the industry is not limited to the producing end.

"I think that scraps are good for any industry; they keep it from getting stagnant," said Doug. "We've had them right along and we're still going ahead. I'd like to find the time to visit Cleveland and meet the exhibitors. I'd like to tell them to get together and pull together. Perhaps I can get out there, but it looks very doubtful now."

About this time Mary was talking about dancing. She explained that Doug didn't like it and that "I think it is rather silly myself. I like to dance with Doug and I like to dance with my brother Jack, but this dancing with every stranger who comes along seems rather silly. A lot of foolish flirtations are apt to start. I suppose Douglas is somewhat jealous; most brunettes are. As for me, I am a blonde."

"These celebrated New York successes aren't known to most people," she said. "Why pay a lot of money for a big name if there is no story value back of it? When authors no longer consider the screen a secondary consideration and stop writing for the magazines and stage first, then we will get some real material. Just now it is difficult to pick good material out of all the heavily advertised junk."

Both Doug and Mary had a lot to say about their home at Los Angeles. They are going to select furnishings for it in New York. Doug told about the variety of guests he entertained, and he laughingly complained that after he had his own room fitted out, Charlie Chaplin began "camping out" in it and he had to sleep in the guest room.

Associated Producers Announces Plans; Ratifies Price Election and Makes Neilan Vice President

COMPLETE preliminary announcement of plans and production release dates of the Associated Producers, Inc., was made in Los Angeles this week by F. B. Warren, general manager of the new organization comprising Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Allan Dwan, Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur, George Loane Tucker and J. Parker Read, Jr. All the producers named are members of the board of directors of the Associated Producers, Inc., and at their first meeting ratified the selection of Oscar A. Price as president and Fred B. Warren as general manager. Marshall Neilan was elected vice-president and Thomas H. Ince chairman of the board of directors; Mack Sennett was elected treasurer, and J. Parker Read, Jr., secretary.

Messrs. Price and Warren will attend the convention in Cleveland, where first announcement of the sales policy of the Associated Producers, Inc., will be made. Assurance is given by Mr. Warren that the Associated Producers, Inc., will produce a minimum of thirty big productions for the releasing year beginning in September. The first release will be made September 12, at which time eight to ten productions will have been delivered to the distributing organization.

Contracts already have been signed for the productions of the Associated Producers, Inc., with groups of the largest exhibitor factors on the Pacific coast. Exhibitors from as far east as Cleveland have made special trips to Los Angeles to sign contracts there.

Messrs. Price and Warren state that they are closing leases for the Associated Producers, Inc. New York offices on Broadway in the heart of the theatrical district. The organization will open its own twenty exchanges August 1 and its complete roster of branch managers will begin work July 1.

Mr. Warren announces the appointment of Hunter P. Lovelace as his chief aid and business manager at the home office, effective June 7, and also announces his first territorial appointment of Sidney J. Goldman in charge of the Chicago zone.

Kellerman Film Scores Success

Ham Beall, general press representative of the Sol Lesser Enterprises, wired Moving Picture World from Los Angeles on June 1 as follows:

"Annette Kellerman's first modern comedy drama was given its premier showing at Santa Anna, Cal., tonight to packed houses. E. D. Yost, owner of the Temple Theatre, says it is the greatest attraction that ever played his house. The underwater stuff took the audience by storm. A number of foreign buyers were present. The film colony made a pilgrimage to see the picture. The unanimous opinion is that it is the best thing Kellerman ever did."

Reveal Author of "Wonder Man"

Not until the picture was projected on the screen in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor Saturday evening, May 29, did it become known that the author of Georges Carpentier's first American starring vehicle, "The Wonder Man," was written by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, the novelist and scenario writer.

Believes Producers' Interests Must Be Severed from Those of Distributors

ON the eve of the great national exhibitors' convention to be held from June 8 to June 11 at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, the whole industry seems to have focused its attention on the big questions which will absorb the attention of the assembled exhibitors. There is a widespread discussion among exhibitors and various remedies for the many undoubted evils are going to be offered.

The convention has attracted the attention of men in every branch of the industry, and one of these men is W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Mr. Hodkinson has always been considered one of the master builders in the motion picture field. He is a man who has given deep thought to the fundamentals of the industry and whose success is unquestioned. He has always been known for a sympathetic understanding of the exhibitors' troubles.

Speaks for Organization.

"For some time past I have noticed considerable confusion in exhibiting ranks, amounting to an almost panicky feeling," said Mr. Hodkinson. "I confess that in spite of my intimate experience with all sorts of conditions in our industry, the exhibitor has always been a problem to me. His power to keep the producer out of the exhibiting field is clear. Indeed, the strength of his position is not doubted by anybody, but he seems more or less incapable of concerted action. The buying power of the industry is in his hands, and if he only knew how to exert it he could do the industry a lot of good and at the same time effectively and permanently protect his own investment.

"It seems to be a foregone conclusion that unless the exhibitor pools his interests with other exhibitors and makes intelligent use of his combined buying power he will in the very near future be crowded to the wall and forced to go out of business.

"In the last three years I have succeeded in building up an organization founded on a conception of justice both to the producer and to the exhibitor. As you know, the Hodkinson organization owns no theatres and has no intention of going into the exhibition field. We do not produce any pictures.

Producer Has "Preposterous Load."

"Many of the evils which the exhibitor is compelled to fight today at a cost both to his purse and to his peace of mind arise from the fact that so many producers are distributing their own product. This means all sorts of machine-made pictures, generally of an inferior quality, are forced upon the exhibitor and upon the public. I have always believed that the interest of the producer must be severed from the interest of the distributer.

"The relations between producer and exhibitor, which ought to be based on principles of equity and fair dealing, at present remind one of a dog-eat-dog policy. The producer has taken a preposterous load on his shoulders. The elements of this load consist of waste, incompetence, overcapitalization and poor judgment. He is unable even with the heaviest rentals to get enough money from the exhibitor to enable him to carry this load. This is the reason he is now reaching out for the profits of the exhibitor by trying to take his investment away from him.

How He Judges Standing of Producer.

"I invite exhibitors to look into the mechanism I have built up for them to use, if they see fit. Its object, among other things, is to secure a dependable supply of high quality pictures and absolutely to keep the exhibitor free from producer domination. Backed by the buying power of any considerable group of exhibitors, this mechanism means many benefits to the exhibitors. It secures their absolute independence. It will enable them to get the very best pictures in the market on favorable terms ahead of any competition.

"I may liken the system under which I am operating and which accounted for the initial success of Paramount pictures to a process of winnowing, separating the chaff from the wheat. My plan operates as impartially and as automatically as a machine. Under its workings the consensus of exhibitors' reports on the commercial value of pictures is taken as the basis of judging the standing of the producer.

Recalls General Film Fight.

"A producer whose pictures in point of quality do not show up favorably in the light of an exhibitors' consensus of opinion is eliminated. On the other hand, under this system every inducement is given to an ambitious and capable producer to put forth his best efforts and excel in point of quality. Such a producer will earn his proper reward under our system.

"Let us take a look at history, which repeats itself in the motion picture field as it does in life generally.

"You no doubt remember how I fought the General Film Company, because it was a distributing organization under the absolute control of the producer. As a result of this condition the interest of both distributor and exhibitor were subordinated to the condition of the producer. That is why the General Film Company has passed out of existence. I instituted a new basis for the sale of film from producer to exchange. I put a premium on quality by regulating the compensation of the producer in strict accordance with the merits of his picture. This established an incentive to make better pictures which was altogether lacking under the methods of the General Film Company.

"As I look about to survey conditions in this industry today, everything seems to be in a state of flux, not to say chaos. Our organization, I firmly believe, is built for tomorrow and for the day after."

Selznick Week at the Strand

It was a Selznick week at the New York Strand Theatre during the week of May 30. As the leading feature the Strand management exhibited William Faversham in his first Selznick production, "The Man Who Lost Himself." The topical part of the program was Selznick News, and the novel screen presentation of the latest Herbert Kaufman Weekly, "Society Bad Men."

"I'm Just Helen Now. I Can Only Talk When I'm Miss Dodd." She Adds to Her Name "Alias" and Begins Talking in Scene 2.
"Alias Miss Dodd" is a Universal release, with Edith Roberts as the leading player. Wonder if Miss Dodd did daring deeds daily while making this production? Her answer is that if we want to know we'll have to see the picture.

"Humoresque" Opens for Extended Stay as Second of the Criterion Specials

BACKED by an extraordinary publicity campaign in the Hearst newspapers, and well exploited in less sympathetic journals, the Cosmopolitan production of "Humoresque," perhaps the most widely read of the many Fannie Hurst stories, opened what promises to be a very successful run at the Criterion Theatre, Sunday, May 30. It stood up even under that most trying of all tests, a Tuesday after a Saturday-Monday holiday, when three days of pleasuring are supposed to have depleted both purse and energy. And this on about the first really hot day of the season.

An effort has been made to build a consistent program past the feature, the musical opening, naturally enough, being Dvorak's piano composition from which the story takes title and which is better in almost any other form than as the piano solo originally was.

A String Sextette.

Here it takes the form of a string sextette with Victor Wagner as first violin, the instrumentation being two violins, viola, 'cello, bass and harp.

Discarding the silhouette effect, which gained much comment when the house was opened, the players were seated on a dais at the rear of the stage, the velvet draped stage being lighted with red and blue floods, red in the front and blue in the curtained alcove in which the players sat. They formed an effective tableau, but the heavy hangings deaden the tone somewhat.

The second number was "Scenes in the Holy Land of Today," evidently selected in the belief that this story of Jewish life would draw most largely a Jewish clientele. In theory the selection was good, but the technical work on the picture is poor and it suffered from comparison with the "Just Beautiful Things" which was one of the real charms of the earlier offering.

Song Production Scores.

There followed Emanuel List and a chorus in "Through the Ages," a noble air sonorously sung and beautifully staged. List has so deep a bass that the tenors and female voices in the chorus come almost as a relief to the impressive majesty of the solo parts.

The curtain rises on a stage dark save for a single blue-white light thrown upon a rocky descent at the right, down which the costumed singers make their way. They form a group about the patriarchal soloist, the lights changing to green floods thrown from the left. It would aid the picture were the lights kept wholly green and the make-ups planned to meet this condition. With the straight green lights the facial make-ups do not show to advantage; a minor detail, yet none the less important.

As evidence of the intentness with which the air was followed, it might be mentioned that at a false climax, shortly before the ending, the gentiles in the audience broke out into applause, which was promptly hissed down by those who knew the hymn.

Then the Feature.

This was followed immediately by the title of the feature and the effect materially aided the photodrama in that the audience was keyed to the right pitch.

The play itself has already been treated in full in these columns. It is necessary only to record that its reception justifies the pleasant things already written. Criterion audiences do not applaud, but the intense quiet and the faces of those visible in the slight illumination from the screen tell the story.

In keeping with the spirit of the story, Mme. Lubowska gave a "Gavotte Grotesque" in a fanciful setting of yellow and black. To many in the audience its brevity was not the least of its charms, though it was an excellent example of interpretative dancing.

And Charlie Murray.

And then, coming almost as an anti-climax, Charlie Murray and a Mack Sennett cast romped a farcical comedy. It was good of its kind, but a light comedy would have been more in keeping with the rest of the program. A comedy of the old Drew type would give much greater satisfaction.

"Humoresque" should run until well into the hot weather. It is not a sensational type of story, but it is one of the best examples of true heart interest yet presented and it appeals to a wide clientele.

EPES W. SARGENT.

Press Book on All Comedies

A press book will be supplied to exhibitors on every comedy distributed by Educational Films Corporation, according to an announcement by that company. These will cover the Chester, Christie, Mermaid and Torchy series and any other two-reel comedies that are added to the release list. The first of the press books are now being sent to the exchanges.

These press books will contain the usual newspaper stories and reproduction of advertising aids, being prepared with the especial purpose of enabling exhibitors to exploit the comedies in connection with the feature pictures. Two kinds of lithographed one sheet and two three-sheets are being provided on each comedy.

Fidelity Company Heads Held on Serious Charges

F. W. PACKER, president of the Fidelity Photoplays Syndicate, Cleveland, and Miss Harriet E. Mills, secretary, were arraigned before the United States Commissioner on charges of defrauding Clevelanders out of $60,000 and each was held for the federal grand jury on $3,000 bail.

When arrested, the city authorities charged them with selling the stock in their concern after being ordered to stop by the state stock license commissioner. However, federal agents immediately probed the case and brought a charge against them of using the mails to defraud.

It is charged that several clergymen were victimized by the pair. They induced these men to indorse the project, which was to produce a religious film, and in this way sold the stock quietly and without advertising, it is said. Postoffice Inspector Cochrane said that of the $60,000 less than $2,000 remains and that no steps were taken to start the picture.

Carr & Schad, Inc., Reading, Elects H. J. Schad President

AT a meeting of directors called to elect a successor to the late Claude L. Schad, the position of president and general manager of that Reading, Pa., corporation was voted to H. J. Schad who, with his late partner, has been a picture showman in Reading for sixteen years. Carr & Schad, Inc., now operate the Scuylkill Avenue, Colonial, Princess, Arcadia, San Toy and Strand theatres in Reading.

John H. Cook, who has been with the firm twelve years, will continue as Philadelphia representative, booking pictures for all the houses and co-operating in their management. Paul E. Glease becomes permanently associated with the firm as publicity director and advertising manager.

Metro's Field Force in Convention Hears of Plans for Coming Year; Two New Stars and Seven Authors Signed

BOUNDLESS confidence was the keynote of the annual convention of Metro's field force, held last Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 26-28, at the Hotel Astor. Reports of the most glowing character and forecasts of unparalleled expansion by Metro in every direction in the year to come characterized all of the sessions, held twice daily by the district and branch managers of the Metro distributing organization under the leadership of Metro's executives.

Announcements of far reaching plans were voiced by Richard A. Rowland, president, and William E. Atkinson, general manager, of the corporation. They revealed to the visiting salesmen what Metro recently has done by way of preparation for enlarged activities.

Richard A. Rowland.
President of Metro Pictures Corporation.

News also was given out of the acquisition of two new stars, Robert Harron, the youthful Griffith protege, who will make four pictures a year at the head of his own organization for release through Metro, and Doraldina, the amazing young dancer, who has already done notable work for the films and who will be starred in a series of spectacular productions that will enable her to display to their fullest advantage her extrordinary terpsichorean skill and beauty.

Metro's production policy for 1920-21, beginning with the coming fall, will be almost double in extent of what it has been during the current year. In other words, the managers were informed that Metro will release between fifty and sixty special productions, including a few made by independent producing units for Metro distribution. This will mean that the "fewer and better" idea, inaugurated last fall, will be adhered to so far as the quality of the picture is concerned, notwithstanding that numerically there will be more releases the coming year than the past.

"Fewer and better" pictures, although more of them, will be possible, it was explained, by the greatly increased studio facilities now available to Metro. There will be no let down in the high production standards already established; but the greater number of productions will come from three studios instead of one, as was the case until very recently.

Metro now has its big West Coast studios in Hollywood working to capacity, with eight and nine productions simultaneously under way; its New York studios in West Sixty-first street, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general, are busy at present with three productions and can take care of more, while a new producing plant, situated on Long Island and to cost more than $2,000,000, will shortly be under construction. By not later than next spring it is expected that these new studios will be humming with production activity.

In connection with the forthcoming new releases, General Manager Atkinson informed the visiting managers that beginning with the early fall, Metro will be so far ahead in its production schedule that prints of each new release will be in the exchange offices as much as four to six weeks ahead in advance of the release date. In addition the exchanges will have all the various advertising and publicity accessories in their offices, so that exhibitors may give unhurried and careful consideration to the selection of Metro productions and arrange in ample time for proper exploitation, with the aid of the suggestions and accessories provided.

Stand Pat on Booking Question.

At the various sessions of the convention Metro's recent statement of policy concerning percentage booking was considered from every angle, and the company decided to stand pat on its earlier declaration. This was to the effect that percentage booking will not be forced upon the exhibitors. They can take it or leave it, as they desire. Metro, it was stated by President Rowland, will continue its system of flat rental prices unless the individual exhibitor feels that percentage would be more profitable to him. In that case he can have it.

General Manager Atkinson outlined to the visiting district and branch managers the particulars of a bonus system that will be in force for the coming year, and was also the case last year. It will be in the shape of a substantial money reward to the exchange turning in the best records for bookings for the period. The details are, of course, confidential among the members of the Metro field force.

Enthusiastic approval greeted President Rowland's announcement of the addition of Robert Harron to the roster of Metro stars. "Bobby," who almost from his very debut in motion pictures has been identified with the big productions of David Wark Griffith, will head his own company under the arrangement with Metro. The new Robert Harron Productions, of which there will be four a year, according to present plans, will be released through Metro's distributing organization.

Mr. Harron will be directed in his forthcoming new productions by Chester ("Chet") Withey, who as a disciple of Mr. Griffith, has done some work as a director that compares with that of his illustrious mentor. The new Harron pictures are to be made at Mamaroneck, it is understood. June Walker, now appearing in the current stage success, "My Lady Friends," with Clifton Crawford, has been chosen as Mr. Harron's leading woman in the first of his productions.

The first of the Robert Harron Productions, Mr. Rowland announced, will be a picture bearing the tenative title of "Coincidence." It is a picturized version of the short story by Morton Macy that appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine a few years ago. The story of the picture is a light and charming one, carrying a delightful love interest, and full of startling surprises. Preparations for production of "Coincidence" are already under way. The release date will be announced later.

General Manager of Metro Pictures Corporation.

Doraldina, whose dancing on the stage first won her fame and who followed these successes with a starring appearance on the screen in "The Naulahka," will go immediately to the Pacific Coast to start work at the Metro studios in Hollywood on the production of her first stellar vehicle under the Metro banner. It will be a story with a Hawaiian locale, entitled "The Passion Fruit," by Carey Wilson. It is planned to have Doraldina make the journey to Hawaii during the making of the picture to obtain exteriors faithful to the story.

Roster of the New Authors Signed.

The seven distinguished authors under contract with Metro that gives the company use of some of their most successful stories and plays as well as first call on their future work, are Irvin S. Cobb, George Kibbe Turner, Eugene Presbrey, Arthur Somers Roche, Hulbert Footner, Henry C. Rowland and Donn Byrne.

will, during the ensuing year, write from four to seven original stories each for Metro production. The plans for these writers include their presence in person at the Metro studios while pictures are being made from their literary efforts.

Eugene Presbrey is already at work at the Coast studios. Irvin S. Cobb, George Kibbe Turner, Hulbert Footner and Arthur Somers Roche will shortly leave for California. The authors will establish themselves in offices there and write, as it were, "on the ground," within sight and sound of the studios where pictures are actually being made.

Bayard Veillers at Work.

Bayard Veiller's initial agreement with Metro was to contribute four original stories a year. He announced that the first would be for Bert Lytell. Since his recent arrival in New York he has decided that another of the stories he will do for Metro will be sequel, or continuation of "Within the Law." Just at what point this will take up the narrative of the play which earned Mr. Veiller his first recognition is not known, as he has made no announcement further than to declare his intention.

Acquisition of the seven authors named expands Metro's writing staff to large proportions.

"Metro has always stressed the importance of a strong, well constructed story in the production of a successful picture," said the Metro president. "We are proud to point to the array of popular authors who have been responsible for the screen material used in our new series of special productions, starting with the pictures we began making early last fall. Authors represented in Metro pictures are famed the world over.

No Bricks Without Straw.

"Just as one cannot make bricks with straw, a producer cannot hope to turn out great pictures without great authors. We have been fortunate in the forehandedness that has marked this company's endeavor to obtain the very finest literary material, both of the stage and from the ranks of celebrated fiction writers.

"The addition of seven more writers to our literary personnel, we believe, will insure to this company a wealth of noteworthy screen material for more reasons than one. For instance, each of the authors for whose services we have just contracted is known for the strongly objective quality of his fiction work; that is to say, these authors seem instinctively to write material admirably adapted to the screen because of the vigor of its action and the clear cut definition of its characterization."

List of New Stories Purchased.

In addition to his announcement concerning the acquisition of authors, Mr. Rowland gave out a list of stories just purchased. They are "The Prisoner of Zenda," by Anthony Hope, as a starring vehicle for Bert Lytell; "The Double Cure," a play by Edgar Selwyn; "The Bondage of Merwin Stansbury," a story by Thomas Edgelow, as published in Breezy Stories; "Tommy Carteret," a novel by Justus Miles Form Foreman, who, it will be recalled, was among those lost in the sinking of the Titanic; "The Passion Fruit," by Carey Wilson, for Doraldina; "Body and Soul," a play by William Hurlburt; "The Five Dollar Baby," by Irvin S. Cobb; "The Offshore Pirate," a story by F. Scott Fitzgerald that appeared in the Saturday Evening Post; "The Turing of the Worm," a story by Hanna Hinsdale that was published in Munsey's, and "The Under Side," a novel by Lucia Chamberlain.

During the three days of the convention entertainment of divers character was prepared for the visiting Metro district and branch managers.

Loew Congratulates Metro Officials.

Marcus Loew delivered a brief address at the banquet in response to general demand. The president of Loew's, Inc., explained how he entered the producing end of motion pictures in "self defense," and expressed the great pleasure he derived from his recent trip to the Pacific Coast, where he inspected the Metro studios.

Mr. Loew congratulated the Metro officials on the progress the company has made from its beginning. He said he had carefully followed Metro's steady growth and decided upon the business affiliation of his organization and Metro for mutual strengthening after he had become convinced of the soundness of Metro policy and methods.

Mr. Loew was accompanied to the banquet by Aaron Jones, prominent Chicago exhibitor and a personal friend of long standing, and by Ed. Schiller, of Atlanta, another exhibitor-friend. The toastmaster for the occasion was Robert J. Rubin, Metro attorney. After Mr. Loew had spoken the toastmaster introduced W. E. Atkinson, who spoke a few words on the results achieved during the year by the exchanges; Maxwell Karger, Metro director general, who discussed the work of production; E. M. Saunders, general sales manager, whose topic was film salesmanship; Charles Werner, branch manager at St. Louis, and the oldest Metro manager in point of service; C. H. Townsend of Detroit, the youngest and newest branch manager, and E. A. Golden, owner of the Boston franchise.

Those Who Were There.

Those who attended the conventoin were S. A. Shirley, district manager, Chicago; W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager, Cincinnati; H. Hustig, district manager, Los Angeles; and branch managers C. E. Kessnich, Atlanta, Ga.; E. A. Golden and S. S. Curtis, Boston; Charles Stern, Bangor, Me.; H. W. Kahn, Buffalo, N. Y.; J. S. Grauman, Chicago; C. E. Almy, Cleveland; W. W. Rowland, Cincinnati; L. Bickel, Dallas; Fred P. Brown, Denver; C. H. Townsend, Detroit; S. L. Haldeman, Kansas City; B. F. Rosenberg, Los Angeles; A. Fischer, Minneapolis; William Scully, New Haven; W. J. Connors, New York; C. J. Briant, New Orleans; S. MacIntyre, Omaha; Robert Lynch, Philadelphia; J. E. Davis, Pittsburgh; G. L. Cloward, Salt Lake City; Fred W. Voight, San Francisco; C. Werner, St. Louis; C. Stearn, Seattle; P. J. O'Loghlin, Toronto, and G. W. Fuller, Washington.

Jesse L. Lasky Sails for England to Open Studio and Confer on Film Plays

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has sailed for London to put in operation the new studio which the corporation has erected in Islington for the production of Paramount Pictures by British actors in British settings.

Mr. Lasky declined to discuss rumors that the corporation is negotiating for the acquisition of legitimate playhouses in London, as it has in New York.

"I cannot talk about that now," he said. "My chief reason in going to London is to inspect our new studio, which is all ready for the production of several well-known stage plays and novels for the screen. These plays will be enacted by British players and will be exhibited in this country as well as in Great Britain and Europe. I expect also to confer with a number of well-known British authors and artists for the purpose of having them work for the screen.

"I signed a contract yesterday with Penrhyn Stanlaws, the noted artist, who will give up his art right at the height of his fame to study the motion picture in our studios for about a year, with the idea of becoming a motion picture director.

"As for writers, Sir James M. Barrie, all of whose plays, including 'Peter Pan,' 'What Every Woman Knows' and 'The Little Minister,' are to be made by us into motion pictures, is now writing a story especially for Paramoun Pictures. Henry Arthur Jones also is writing a play for us which first will be made into a picture and then produced on the stage. Other authors have expressed a desire to learn the technique of the motion picture.

Screen Gives Story New "Readers."

"For well-known authors and dramatists to write directly for the screen is only a logical step in the motion picture's tremendous development. Look at the facts. It is an unusual book that reaches a circulation of 50,000. The greatest play cannot attract more than 8,000 people a week to a theatre. Yet the same book and same play, written for the screen, will reach 2,000,000 people every week in all parts of the world. Therefore, it is apparent that our great authors must choose whether they want to write for the screen or write for a few."

First National Thirty Day Period Ends With About 3,000 Theatres Negotiating

WITH 1,122 sub-franchise applications granted, and over 2,000 recommendations for additional awards before the executive committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the first thirty-day period in the extension of exhibitor membership privileges ended last week with an approximate total of 3,000 theatres on record, or seeking to be recorded, as part of the circuit's co-operative market for independently produced attractions.

This result, it is said, exceeds the quota fixed by Associated First National officials at the Chicago convention of members and exchange managers, by more than 100 per cent. The executive committee, composed of N. H. Gordon of Boston, Moe Mark of New York and H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer of Associated First National Pictures, is expected to pass finally on all pending application for sub-franchise grants before the middle of June.

Delayed by Dallas Trip.

Delay in official action by this committee resulted from the determination of company officials to make a ten-days' trip to Dallas, in response to requests from a committee representing independent exhibitors in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, that some plan be formulated whereby the sub-franchise plan could be made immediately available in that territory as a proposition separate from the previous First National affiliation there. This trip delayed the work of the executive committee in deciding on applications from all territories.

Important first-run theatres in every territory have filed requests for sub-franchises and the great majority of these have been granted and issued. The total number of sub-franchises authorized to date includes a membership extension, on the new plan, to every theatre owned and operated by the original members of First National who signed the agreements for the Associated First National proposition in Atlantic City last January.

Awards to Theatres Not Yet Built.

An interesting feature of the awarding has been the group applications from several territories where First National exchange managers called conventions of independent exhibitors to discuss the plan in all its details, immediately after the Chicago meeting.

A resume of the records to date shows that sub-franchise awards have been made by the executive committee to forty-three theatres now under construction, and planned for openings in September, October and November. In every instance of this kind the exhibitor applicant has requested the franchise for the new theatres because of the increased seating capacity and greater facilities for presentation which they will have in comparison to the logical franchise houses now in operation.

In more than 100 localities, it is announced, the franchise already granted will not become operative until early in the fall because of theatres closed for repairs, general alterations and enlarged capacities.

The "One-Man-Town" Situation.

A peculiar and unexpected phase of the sub-franchise plan in relation to the so-called "one-man-town" situations, wherein one exhibitor owns the only theatre, is that First National branch managers, in many such instances, have received applications from independent exhibitors in nearby cities and towns for franchise grants in the "one-man-towns" should the exhibitors controlling the situation fail, for any reason, to seek a membership. In every such case investigation at the behest of the executive committee has shown that the applicants are independent exhibitors with an ambition to extend their present theatre holdings by acquiring new properties, through construction, in places which are classified as "only one theatre" localities.

The executive committee has authorized the publication of the following list of theatres from which applications have been received, and on which official action has been taken as the first group of requests:

Gloria Swanson Continues with Famous; De Mille to Further Develop Her Gifts

SPECULATION as to the future screen activities of Gloria Swanson was ended last week when Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, announced that Miss Swanson has renewed her contract with Famous Players for a period of five years.

Miss Swanson, whose work in the Cecil B. DeMille productions, "Male and Female," "Why Change Your Wife?" and "Something to Think About," stamped her as one of the foremost artists of the season, will be featured only in big productions of the same high standard as those in which she recently has been appearing. These pictures will be from stories written by leading authors and dramatists, and will be produced on an elaborate scale.

An indication of the nature of the pictures which will be Miss Swanson's vehicles is given in a statement by Mr. Lasky that Cecil B. DeMille, who discovered Miss Swanson and was the first to give her opportunity for the developments of her talents, will select her stories and will personally supervise all her productions. Mr. DeMille will see to it that the public's desire to see Miss Swanson in wonderful gowns and in lavish settings will be entirely satisfied in all future Gloria Swanson productions.

Just before sailing for London, where he will confer with Sir James M. Barrie and other noted British novelists and dramatists, Mr. Lasky stated that one of the most prominent British playwrights is now working on his first screen plays, which will serve as a vehicle for Miss Swanson. The play is being written especially for Miss Swanson, Mr. Lasky said, as the author was so impressed with her work in "Male and Female" that Miss Swanson is his favorite screen artist.

AFTER three months on the West Coast, where he had been directing the Vitagraph special production, "Trumpet Island," Tom Terriss is on his way East to make final scenes for this picture in New York City and along the Hudson River. Mr. Terriss was accompanied East by his staff and several supporting players, as there are still a goodly number of scenes to be filmed.

This production, which was adapted from a well-known story by Gouverneur Morris, was filmed chiefly amid the beautiful scenery of Catalina Island, Palm Beach and Palm Springs, all noted Southern California tourist centers.

Much of the action of the picture is accomplished in the air and several planes from the many fields around Los Angeles were used in the production. An airplane crash against a cliff at Catalina Island affords one of the biggest thrills in the production.

The picture has been cast true to the parts. Marguerite De La Motte takes the principal role in the all-star cast. The male lead is Wallace MacDonald. Joseph Swickard, Arthur Hoyt, Marcelle Daly, Hallam Cooley, Percy Challenger and numerous other widely known players make up the supporting cast.

Three Weeks' Run at Grauman's Record of "Below the Surface"

THE production Thomas H. Ince made for Paramount, under the title of "Below the Surface," with Hobart Bosworth the star, ran three weeks at Grauman's Rialto, Los Angeles, exceeding in business "Everywoman" and "Huckleberry Finn," according to Famous Players-Lasky sources of information. This was a prerelease, the regular schedule calling for distribution of "Below the Surface" June 6.

Luther Reed wrote the story and Irving Willat, under Ince supervision, directed. Lloyd Hughes, Grace Darmond, Gladys George and George Webb furnish support to Mr. Bosworth, the star.

Sessue Hayakawa Leaves for Coast with His New Contract

INSPIRED by a lively fortnight in New York City, Sessue Hayakawa, the star of many Robertson-Cole releases, has gone back to California with his new contract, which calls for the production of a series of bigger and better pictures than Hayakawa ever has made.

"While the pictures which are now being released are excellent attractions," said Mr. Hayakawa, "and represent a maximum of entertainment for the time and money invested, the ones just ahead will be better, for the natural reason that I will have both greater time and means to put into them. Already we have chosen our first picture, and I will start work on it immediately upon my arrival on the Coast.

"This picture, and the others of the new series, will have strong dramatic stories, and the most colorful artistic atmospheres obtainable. Beyond these elements we will stress another factor, which is the spiritual. By this I don't mean anything heavy, or psychological, but an all pervading spiritual tone, which goes home to the brain as well as the emotions."

New York Is Interested in Tarzan Despite Hot Weather

THE RETURN OF TARZAN," at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, New York, is evidently destined to duplicate the performance of "Tarzan of the Apes," which enjoyed a seven weeks' engagement at that theatre three years ago. "The Return of Tarzan" opened last Sunday and in face of sweltering heat and an unusually poor theatrical day played to almost capacity business throughout the entire two days of its opening.

When one considers that more than 2,000,000 people left the city for the three-day holiday, the manifestation at the Broadway Theatre was noteworthy and shows the potency of Tarzan subjects as a whole.

Goldwyn offered this unusual adventure picture every possible opportunity to attract. A big advertising campaign fostered by an unusual publicity stunt, and including suburban display and poster work, was accomplished preceding the opening. Hundreds of book and drug store windows were used in which the Tarzan boo'-s were exploited and attention called to the engagement at the Broadway Theatre. Lion cubs in pairs were displayed in windows on the most prominent corners and displays of books and posters shown at the same time.

Ten thousand snipe pieces and 10,000 tack cards were sniped all over the greater city. Five hundred block stands were posted and followed two days after the opening by a quarter showing on selected locations of highly sensational twenty-four sheet stands.

Single column advertisements fourteen inches deep and elaborating upon one of the sensational episodes in the film, were alternated in the New York dailies and desk cards were placed in every hotel and railroad station in town. The New York Evening World began the publication of the latest Burrough's story, "Tarzan the Untamed."

Title of MacLean Picture Changed.

Douglas MacLean's recently completed Thomas H. Ince production, announced previously under the working title of "Shakespeare Clancy," has been changed to "The Jailbird." It will be released through Paramount-Artcraft.

We Have With Us Today

Spyros Skouras, Whose Little Acorn Has Grown to Be "Some Oak"

By BEN SMITH

THE motion picture industry has brought out and developed many big, successful men. In St. Louis, where the fight for picture theatre supremacy is waging hotly, a cool, reserved and energetic young man, broad in vision, with dynamic personality and action, is creating an enviable record. His name is Spyros P. Skouras, the leading factor in the Skouras chain of theatres, which recently added the New Grand Central Theatre, one of the best equipped picture houses; the Central Theatre, together with the first National franchise for the St. Louis territory, which Mr. Skouras states were purchased to protect his holdings.

Mr. Skouras was born twenty-six years ago in the small village of Skourahorion, Greece, founded by his grandfather and situated near historic Athens. He was educated in the state schools and later entered an export office in one of the Mediterranean ports of Greece, where he served as an interpreter and learned the rudiments of the export business, meanwhile becoming acquainted with the wonderful possibilities in the United States.

His First Theatre the Lafayette.

At the age of 19 years he came to this country, determined to go into business. He met his elder brother, Charles, now 31 years old, who was at that time in St. Louis, and they decided to take advantage of the first opportunity, which presented itself in the form of purchasing the Lafayette Theatre at an advantageous price. This house was sold later and the purchase price paid down on the Olympic Theatre, situated in the downtown section of town, close to the City Hall.

This theatre proved to be a losing proposition until Spyros adopted energetic tactics and turned the house into a winner by playing the best pictures obtainable. George, the younger brother, now 24 years old, was sent for to assist Charles in the management of the Olympic, while the Pageant Theatre, seating 1,400 persons, in the West End, the finest section of the city, became the basis for the next transaction. After many discouraging months it became one of the best paying theatrical properties in the city.

In the early part of 1917, when it was apparent war with Germany was not far remote, Spyros dismissed business from his mind and joined the training school for aviators at Fort Sam Houston, near San Antonio, where he was graduated shortly before the armistice was signed. He has the distinction of being the only foreign-born citizen to pass the examination for the United States Air Service.

If you compliment him upon his other achievements you will note a lack of enthusiasm and interest, receiving in reply the suggestion that any one can do the same thing; but if you refer to his air service record an interesting conversation will follow, for he is very proud of this singular distinction.

Mr. Skouras was discharged from the flying service in February, 1919, returning to his business with plans for acquiring other theatres to protect his interests. Therefore the Lyric Theatre, in the busiest part of the downtown section and catering principally to the transient population, was acquired and an option taken and later exercised on the West End Lyric Theatre and Lyric Skydome, catering to the elite of the city and conceded to be the best theatre proposition in the city.

Competition was keen in the buying of pictures, so he decided to purchase the Shaw Theatre, in the southern section, which gave him buying power for all parts of the town.

Justly Proud of Service to Public.

Mr. Skouras has always insisted his theatres should run the best pictures and have the best music obtainable. No expense has been spared in any of these departments, including the subject of service to patrons, which is unexcelled and one of the foremost features in the Skouras theatres. Mr. Skouras has assembled about him a capable body of lieutenants, from ushers and footmen to house managers and managing director. All employes meet once a week, with Mr. Skouras presiding, and discuss improvements and make sharp criticism wherever occasion demands.

Spyros Skouras has a genial disposition, a likable and radiant personality and seemingly unlimited will power, which greatly accounts for his success. A sharp, inquisitive eye shows you that he sees deeper than the surface. He is a most convincing talker and a keen observer. Also he is a hard worker, being at his office every morning between 8 and 8:30 o'clock and continuing until long after the theatres are closed at night, training his men to give the ultimate in service and courtesy to the public, who always are conceded to be right regardless of what conditions may exist.

Mr. Skouras' holdings now comprise the best theatre properties in St. Louis and run on a high class basis, and he is seldom known to give up any time for pleasure, preferring to devote all accessible time to his business, enjoying his work to the utmost and therefore receiving sufficient pleasure from his duties to counteract any desire for outside recreation. His ideal is to give the public the best in motion picture entertainment, to make his theatres more comfortable and more beautiful from time to time.

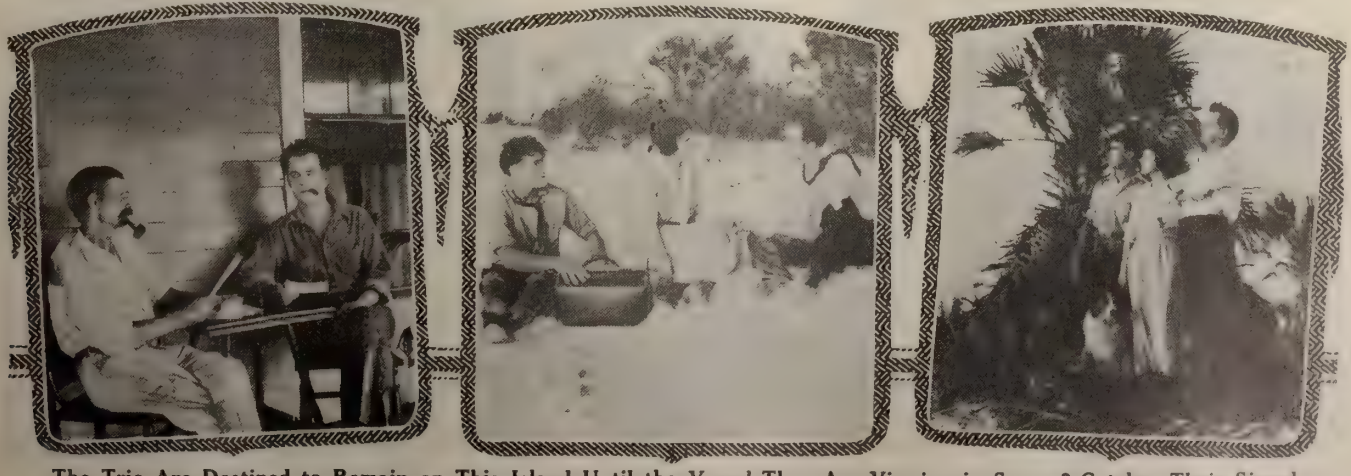
Latitude Must Be Allowed in Filming Novels, Says Author

GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON, author of many American best sellers, gave a new insight into the attitude of novelists whose works have been picturized for the screen, when viewing Edgar Lewis' version of his "Sherry," which Pathe is distributing.

"I am sure," said Mr. McCutcheon, "that many authors are shocked extremely when they have allowed their works to be screened and then see the finished product. They do not realize that a director knows what the public demands of a good picture.

"I think I have experienced as many surprises as any writer whose works have been adapted for the screen. When viewing 'Sherry' I tried to imagine myself an interested spectator who had not read the book, but who merely dropped in to enjoy the picture. I found it a very difficult thing to do. There were places where the plot had been changed and characters developed differently than I had intended, but after thinking it over I decided that it was the only thing to be done. While it is disappointing to a certain degree to see one's plot changed, I can see it is absolutely necessary to give coherence to the picture.

"It is a trifle hard on writers to see our work tampered with, but when it is done artistically we should not complain. Much latitude must be allowed in screening novels to bring out the different incidents in fast sequence to hold the interest of the spectator."



The Trio Are Destined to Remain on This Island Until the Vessel They Are Viewing in Scene 3 Catches Their Signal.
Scenes from "The Isle of Destiny," released by Character Pictures Corporation Players, starring Paul Gilmore, seem to have enough "sand," and the only way to determine if they win out is to see the picture.

Leon Gaumont Here with Tricolor Feature To Prove and Demonstrate Its Feasibility

LEON GAUMONT, of a famous Parisian firm of cinematographers, has come to New York for the purpose of exploiting a three-color process his corporation has been working on since pre-war days. In a letter to Moving Picture World, written from the Gaumont offices in West Forty-second street, Mr. Gaumont goes into interesting details concerning color process for screen use. His letter, in large part, is here given:

Before the war we presented in New York the first results of our trichrome process. Since then we have completed details so that it is possible now to assure from the distance and at any time the perfect superposition of the three pictures by means of a very simple apparatus. We are now fortunate enough to bring to our American friends, for their appreciation of the practical end of our process, a most important historical document, 'The Victory Parade."

"From the start we resolutely directed our efforts, in our researches, to the trichrome process, being convinced that it is materially impossible to reproduce with two colors all the shades and all the tints which please our eyes. The complete solution of the problem was to be studied, or nothing at all.

Advances Tri-Color Claims.

"This is how we abandoned the bi-color process, even though it presented the possibility of using the film in any of the usual cameras. We maintain that the trichrome process alone furnishes the complete solution of the problem.

"During our stay in New York we are ready to give, at our expense, any exhibition desired for comparison purposes. Here is a clear and fair proposition: Where are the competitors?

"The future of cinematography in natural colors is incommensurable. If we will think for a moment we will immediately realize how illogical it is to present on the screen the numerous manifestations of life uniformly in black and white!

"In some future time, nearer perhaps than we expect, color will master the screen and we will wonder how we could be satisfied with the present monochrome pictures. The need of colors is so much felt that the public is asking for colored scenics and for want of something better this public is satisfied with any other solution.

"Following is some information that will confirm our statement that we have completely and practically solved the problem of cinematography in colors. Films used for view taking and projecting purposes are the very films regularly supplied by Eastman and on which we have done all possible trials.

"We are using the same width and the same perforation. The formulas and processes of panchromatising pertain to the domain of the laboratory. There is no sorcery in it once you know the nature of the products and the proportion of the mixtures of panchromatising products. The various developing operations, toning, printing, are the same as those for ordinary films with the exception, however, of the development of the negative in an almost absolute darkness.

"Do not forget that the colors appear on the screen only thanks to and on account of the use of filters placed before the objectives of the camera and also before those of the projecting machine. The apparatus differs in a very small proportion from those used daily by all the operators, and the use of same is neither difficult nor complicated.

"The only criticism that could be made regarding our process, if this can be called a criticism, is the fact that by projecting and superimposing simultaneously three pictures a special projecting machine is an absolute necessity; also a metallized screen making the projection more luminous, avoiding thus the diffusion at the rear sides of the room of part of the projected light.

"We would advise the American producer who will undoubtedly engage himself in color pictures, to give up from the start the thought of producing big features, dramas or comedies. He should realize immediately that he must be satisfied with a collection of scenic films or documentary films which will also form the exploitation of the process. Big events alone can constitute sufficient exploitation elements."

Clara Beranger Explains How to Combine Duties of Wife, Mother and Scenario Expert

By EDWARD WEITZEL

THINGS may be different in Los Angeles and Chicago, but in New York the best grade scenario writers do not live in Greenwich Village, cook all meals in a chafing dish, bob their locks and scorn any and every phase of the domestic life. I am speaking, of course, of the Eves and the Janes of the profession, and I know whereof I speak, having crossed the threshold of more than one well-appointed home belonging to a leading light among screen dramatists, after standing for fifteen minutes on the doorstep or in the lobby trying to recall the lady's married name.

Going up in the elevator to Clara Beranger's apartment near Riverside Drive, a pretty little girl gave me a pleasant smile. She had heard me inquire for her mother of the elevator man, and she rang the bell for us both when we stood in front of the Beranger door. Mrs. Beranger's secretary admitted us, and the room into which I was shown told me that it represented what the novelist is pleased to term a well-ordered household. Before the interview was over a dozen little happenings confirmed the fact that the mistress of the Beranger establishment had solved the problem of how to combine the duties of wife, mother and scenario expert with perfect success.

Asked how she managed to find time for the duties of all three positions, the author of the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" scenario made answer, "By always trying to remember that I am a human being, and avoiding anything approaching a pose."

A moment's reflection and I realized that Clara Beranger's screen work bore out her answer.

Making a Screen Adaptation.

Referring to the changes that she had been forced to make in adapting the Stevenson story to the screen, the scenario writer said:

"There are a few facts about adaptations which I should like to call to the attention of certain clever and witty critics, and to those people who are interested in seeing the best literature translated to the screen.

"Adapting a form of literary representation meant to be either read or acted with spoken work, into a representation of action without words is not so easy a task as the unthinking picture observer or the mere thinking but less considerate critic may imagine. The very nature of the motion picture art as 'the silent drama' makes it necessary to reduce to a simple line of action whatever material you start with. If it be a novel, the chances are it will suffer from diffuseness of plot unless some heavy eliminating is done. In a novel, the author can write and write and fill pages with description and psychology to serve a background and a justification for his characters. He can predicate every action with paragraphs of motives and explanations. He knows that if his reader gets tired after the fifth or sixth chapter, he can lay down the book and pick it up again when his will dictates. In short, the author of a novel is bound by practically no considerations of time or space and by no technical details of presentation beyond the presupposed power to write."

"Scenario writers have no such freedom from rules, I take it?"

"By no means! Our task is to condense into action and short crisp titles all that the heroes and heroines of fiction think, feel and do, and to do this we have exactly one hour and fifteen minutes' play—the actual running time of 5,000 feet of film or a five-reel picture.

"If the adaptation be from a play, we have to transpose words into action, to rearrange facts so that there is a clear conception of the characters before they begin to act—a clear motivation that will make the plot itself seem real and logical. In a play the characters talk about what has gone before and explain the motives that have led up to their state of mind at the time the play starts. In a picture, in order to give a straight continuity and not retard the action with fade backs, it is often necessary to invent episodes of action which as definitely motivate the photoplay characters as the opening dialogue does the play characters."

The Beranger Method.

"How far can you follow the main idea of a play?" I asked.

"You mean, how much material will it be necessary to eliminate—how much to build up? These are questions which confront the scenario writer with every story he or she, as the case may be, is given to adapt.

Clara Beranger.
Paramount scenario writer now on a visit in the East.

"My own method of work has been to follow as closely as is compatible with screen technique the main idea from which the plot has developed and the general tone and spirit of the story. If, to avoid confusion of action that cannot be explained away by lengthy dialogue or description, I find it necessary to add episodes or even perhaps new characters, I do so without any apology to the author or any feeling of lese majeste! But always do I try to keep the spirit, the atmosphere and the setting of the original manuscript."

Aside from the screen successes for which Clara Beranger has written the scenarios, she is part author of a stage drama now running at a theatre in New York. "His Chinese Wife" is the name of the play and there is the same admirable drawing of types and clear-headed handling of the theme that is found in her moving picture work. Clara Beranger has the true dramatic instinct and is a screen playwright both in theory and in practice.

Jans Pictures Will Show "Madonnas and Men" June 13

ON Sunday evening, June 13, at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, will be held the first showing of Jans Pictures, Inc., special feature, "Madonnas and Men," which is claimed by the producers to be one of the greatest box office attractions produced in recent years. It is to be in the nature of an invitation affair, but the producers request that if anyone connected with the industry is overlooked that they notify them and seats will be furnished.

This picture is based on an original theme by Carey Wilson, to which was added suggestions by Edmund Goulding and by Violet Clark, who prepared the continuity in conjunction with the author. Work on the production was commenced four months ago under the direction of B. A. Rolfe. There were several weeks of preparation necessitated by the nature of the story; the actual production time was about ten weeks.

Strong Cast Tells Story.

The story is interpreted by a carefully selected cast, and the director was fortunate in securing the services of many of the players whom the author had in mind in preparing the story. The principals include Edmond Lowe, now appearing in the "Sun-Daughter" at the Belasco Theatre, New York; Miss Evan-Burrows Fontaine, a dancer and interpretive artist from the Zeigfeld Midnight Frolic, who appears in an unusual role; Anders Randolf, the heavy in D. W. Griffith's two latest productions; Gustave Von Seffertitz, a well known character actor of wide experience on both the stage and films; Ray Deane, formerly an ingenue in "Friendly Enemies" and new to the screen, and Faire Binney, the talented sister of Constance Binney, the Realart star.

The producers announce that the nature and size of the settings required will cause surprise, as they run from the coliseum at Rome in the days of the early Christians to the dance floor of a modern midnight revue, while the smaller sets include a lions' den, the lobby of the Ritz Carlton Hotel, down to a desolate cabin on the Western prairies.

Covers Period of 2,000 Years.

All varieties of vehicles are used from Roman chariots to modern high powered automobiles. As the story covers a period of 2,000 years weeks of research were necessary in order to insure historical accuracy. To secure space for the huge amphitheatre it was necessary to clear several acres of rough ground and spread over it several hundred dollars' worth of screened sand. In one scene 2,000 costumed extras are said to have been used.

Eighty-four thousand feet of film were "shot" and have been cut down to eight reels by Director Rolfe and Ernest Stern. Jans officials believe that this picture represents an entirely new type of picture. They describe it as a picture with a "heart and mind," and believe that it will provide both entertainment and food for thought for theatre goers of all classes.

The story will be published in book form for handling through regular channels while a cheaper edition will be prepared for publicity purposes.

Libraries and Theatres Can Co-operate in Making Children Screen Enthusiasts

By T. S. DA PONTE

IN the past year there were 1,363,649 babies born in the United States. These figures mean a great deal to the moving picture industry. For the new arrivals are all prospective "movie fans."

There is a maxim that "as the twig is bent, so is the tree inclined." This saying also is of more than ordinary interest to everybody engaged in promoting the motion picture industry; for it says to the promoters: "Get the children interested in photoplays and you make them life-time devotees."

Many ways of interesting the children have been tried, with varying degrees of success. But there is still a comparatively unused method of bringing them into the fold. It is through the use of books and reading.

Tie-ups with Libraries.

It is remarkable that this means has not been used more extensively to interest both children and their elders in the silversheet. Those producers who have put it in practice have found it profitable.

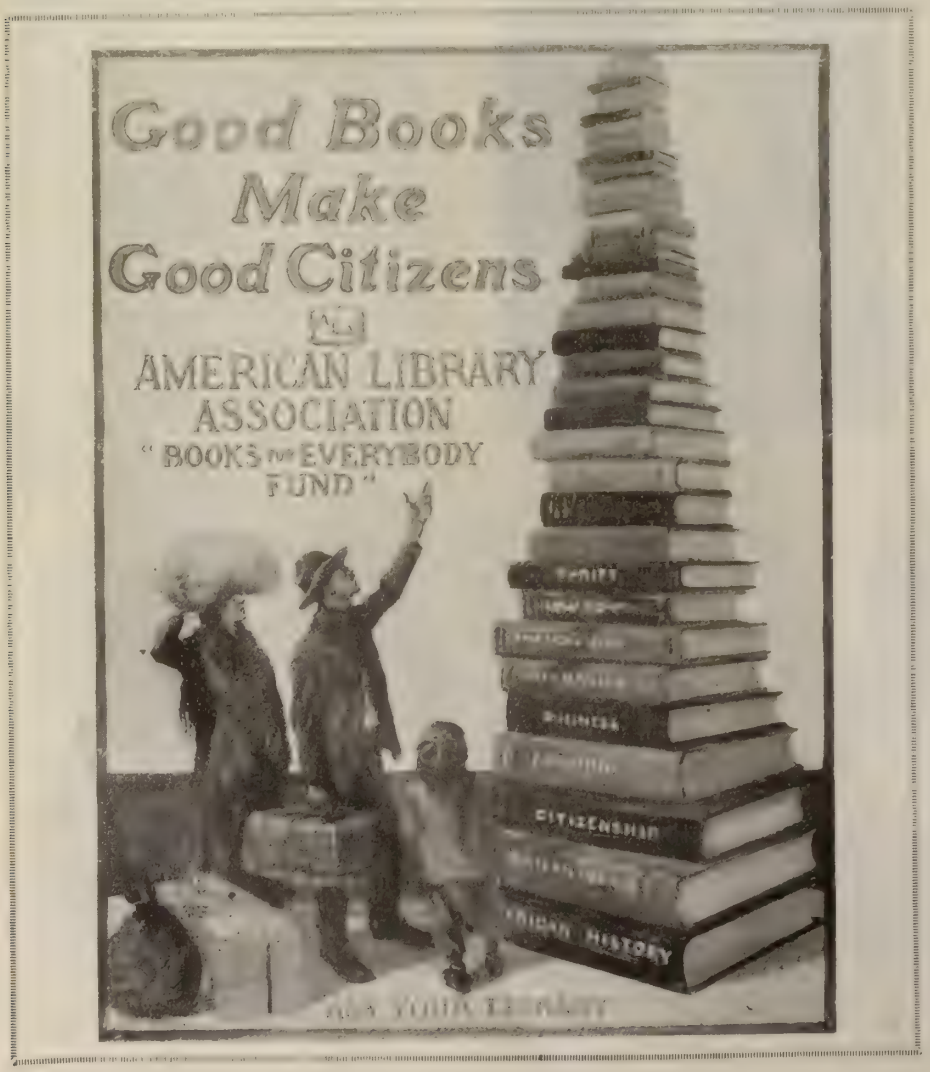
People always are desirious of seeing the films of the stories which they have read in books. And, on the other hand, they also want to read the books whose plots they have seen unfolded upon the screen. Therefore, libraries and moving picture houses can co-operate with mutual benefit.

Some producers already have adopted the plan. They have entered into arrangements with libraries in their districts whereby the librarians agree to bring to the notice of the public, as much as possible, the books which have been "picturized" and also books which contain data concerning the times and customs of any era in which the plots of the "movies" are laid. In return the motion picture theatres display signs telling their patrons to procure at the public libraries the books which tell about the pictures that are being shown.

Movies are doing much to promote reading and education, but there is still a vast deal to be accomplished in putting before the people of this country the advantages which are here for them, and the American Library Association, in laboring for a far wider use of books, is doing a great work along these lines.

Six Million "Newcomers" Are Illiterate.

The association has adopted an enlarged program, which includes among other laudable features encouragement of the county library system, which is designed to put books and reading matter easily accessible to those living in out of the way communities. Also it is bending its efforts to promote book reading in the thickly populated areas, and this work, of course, is of deep interest to picture producers.



There are approximately 15,000,000 newcomers in the United States, and of this number about 6,000,000 do not read or speak English. The association is urging that books which tell of American ideals, traditions and aims be translated into foreign languages and published for the use of these prospective citizens so they may become acquainted with the standards of freedom, opportunity and programs for which America stands.

The use of technical and special books also is being urged, as is the installation of libraries of such books in industrial, merchandising and manufacturing plants, so that the workers may read, and through the use of books become more efficient. Larger production is one of the great needs of America at present, and greater efficiency can increase it tremendously.

Securing Wide Distribution of Books.

The association embarked on the great work of its enlarged program as a follow-up of its war work. It distributed more than 7,000,000 volumes to the men in service at home and abroad and on board ships during the war and is continuing a book service to many of the discharged service men. It also is serving lighthouse stations, coast guards, patients in the Public Health Service hospitals and is doing much to increase the literature available for the blind in the standard Braille type. For these purposes and for the needs of the enlarged program it is now raising $2,000,000. However, no intensive campaign or "drive" is being resorted to in procuring this fund, but it is being obtained through the personal appeal of library trustees, librarians and friends of libraries.

What Roosevelt Said.

Theodore Roosevelt wrote: "After the church and the school the free public library is the most effective influence for good in America. The moral, mental and material benefits to be derived from a carefully selected collection of good books, for the use of all the people, cannot be overestimated. No community can afford to be without a library."

Need any more be said?

Urban Laboratories Are Now Open for Trade Work

THE facilities of one of the finest film laboratories and printing plants in the heart of New York have been opened to the trade by the decision of Charles Urban, whose Masonic Building laboratories at Sixth avenue and Twenty-third street are now accepting public work up to the capacity of one million feet a week.

The Kineto Company of America, Inc., of which Mr. Urban is president, possesses up-to-date equipment and skilled technicians in all departments of title making, negative developing, commercial printing, etc. This is the plant that turns out the Urban Movie Chats and Kineto Reviews, the high quality of which is noted. Many of the films, which represented America abroad during the world crisis, were made here, including the official War Review, Kinograms, etc. The tinting and toning processes are especially successful, and the well-known expert, S. H. Hollebone, supervises all details. Not only is film printing done here but directors and editors are provided with cutting rooms where they can get their material ready.

Among Mr. Urban's lieutenants in the Urban motion picture enterprises, of which the Kineto Company of America, Inc., forms a part, are Carl Horton Pierce, Norris Wilcox and Henry MacMahon. Any of these film men may be reached by phone, Gramercy 960, during the business week, and any of them will be glad to take orders or to furnish estimates on laboratory work.

Mason Hopper Tastefully Decorates Filmland With Skulls and Soup Bones

By GIEBLER

THE week that has just eased itself into the erstwhile has been marked by the busting of considerable news, two of Bill Hart's ribs and a shoulder belonging to Jimmy Aubrey.

Bill was out near Owensmouth, a San Fernando Valley town, making location stuff, and the horse he was riding skidded off the road into the brush. Bill was scraped off the horse by the limb of a tree like David's son Absalon, but not having long hair like Ab, he struck the ground with such force that two of his ribs were cracked by the fall. Bill was around the studio the next day, however, a little bit stiff in the midriff, but otherwise as good as new.

Jimmy Aubrey got his dislocated shoulder while making a Vitagraph comedy. Jimmy and Babe Hardy, the heavy of the piece, were sitting on the limb of a tree twelve feet from the ground when the limb broke. Jimmy got to the ground first and Babe came along and "lit" on top of him, and the busted shoulder was the resultant consequence thereof.

In Truth an All-Star Cast.

All Filmland and the denizens of our Fair City as well, are wrought up, on the qui vive, and otherwise agitated with pleasurable anticipations over the prospect of the "by word of mouth" presentation of "Arizona" with a cast of prominent picture people to be given at Clune's Auditorium as a benefit for the American Legion next week.

Talk about all-star casts—lend your eye to this one! Clara Kimball Young will play Estella; Lew Cody will be Captain Hodgman; Sylvia Ashton will be Mrs. Canby; Dustin Farnum, Lieut. Denton; Lewis S. Stone, Col. Benham; Theodore Roberts, Henry Canby; Bill Desmond, Tony Mascano; Bessie Barriscale, Bonita; Roscoe Arbuckle, the doctor; Sessue Hayakawa, Sam the Chinaman; Gloria Swanson, the Schoolma'am; Wanda Hawley, Lena; Bryant Washburn, a lieutenant, and Clarke Irvine is taking care of the exploitation and publicity.

Miss Minter Sues American.

If that isn't a noble and a notable bunch, I don't know where you would find it. Rehearsals are now going on, and every player in the cast is doing his and her "durndest" to outshine everyone else.

The performance will run for three nights, prices ranging from $1 to $5 will be charged, and from advance indications the house is not going to be big enough to hold the crowds on any night of the three.

Mary Miles Minter is suing the American Film Company for $5,000 for breach of contract in Judge Trippet's court, and the American is fighting the various allegations with various other allegations, among which it is alleged that Mary was not very "work brittle" at times and did not come down to the studio as early as she should. To which allegation Mary answered with the statement that artistic productions were not made by the time clock method, and besides, she had the toothache something fierce on two or three of the times when she was tardy.

Doug and Mary Honeymooning.

At one point in the trial, where it was claimed that Mary spoiled some raw stock by laughing at the wrong time, the judge said: "Bring in the film, we'll look at it." Which they did, and which I say is pretty soft for the judge to be able to relieve the monotony of a trial by treating himself and the jury to a free movie show that way.

Mary and Doug started away on their wedding tour on Wednesday, and a big bunch of players and two or three hundred of the hoi polloi went down to the Santa Fe depot to see them off. Mary and Doug are not going to have much quiet on the first horn of their honeymoon—they were accompanied by a party of twenty-one friends and relations.

Hopis See "Mollycoddle."

The party will go to Holbrook, Ariz., and from there one hundred miles to the Hopi Indian reservation. Doug's last picture, "The Mollycoddle," was made in the Hopi country, and he's going back to give the Indians a big potlatch in the shape of a three days' house party, and incidentally to try out "The Mollycoddle" on them. Doug says that if the Hopis like the film, everybody will like it.

In addition to Doug and Mary, the party consisted of Mary's Ma, Sister Lottie and Lottie's little girl, who is a bright kid and can speak a lot of French words; Doug's brother John and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Winchell Smith, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Spalding, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Morse, Frederick Bechtold, Roger Lewis, Charles Warrington, William McCann, Leeds Baxter, Lee Ettleson, Eleanor Barnes, H. W. Tucker, Carlyle Robinson and Kenneth McGaffey.

After the Hopi house party Doug and Mary will go on to New York by themselves, and the rest of the crowd will come back home.

A South Sea Location.

I took a trip to one of the South Sea Islands this week, or—that is, a most complete and comprehensive imitation of a South Sea island. The set was made for a comedy drama that E. Mason Hopper is directing for Goldwyn from Mary Roberts Rinehart's book, "The Empire Builders."

The location was on the beach about three miles beyond the canyon that turns off to Inceville. The spot was ideal. There was a long stretch of sandy beach and a little lagoon leading out toward a canyon. There was a flock of canoes on this water and one war boat long enough to hold a hundred savages. Nearby, in a grove of palm and banana trees, was the village, each of its huts tastefully decorated with skulls and shinbones of the enemies of the tribe that owned the village, and in the center of the huts was the big pot where the stews had been made.

Birds Refused to Be Gulled.

The whole was a work of art and the whole thing was artificial. Even the palm and the banana trees were made in the studio workshops and carted to the location and planted in the soil. Art Director Julian Garnsey, under whose supervision the village was made, told me that he and his crew spent four weeks on the work, and the only thing that was disappointing was that they could not get sea gulls in the picture. The property department placed five big cans of nice juicy garbage so that the gulls would have to fly over the location to get to it, but the birds could not be gulled into working in the picture.

The human atmosphere was also very colorful—it all came from Central avenue, the darktown of our Fair City. There were three hundred Afro-Americans of all ages, sizes and shades, and all were dressed up—or dressed down would be a better expression—as cannibals.

Settling Down with a Dozen Wives.

The story of the "Empire Builders" concerns a young college boy who wants to get married. His chum tells him that getting married and settling down is old stuff. "Follow me," he says, "and I'll lead you to where you can have a dozen wives. Follow me to the South Sea Islands. We'll each pick out a nice island and be its king."

Cullen Landis plays the young chap who wants to get married. Clara Horton is the girl. Ralph Bushman, son of Francis Xavier Bushman, is the chum. Otto Hoffman is a professor in the college attended by the boys.

After the plan is all hatched out, Cullen gets to thinking of the prospect. He has a vision—he sees himself surrounded by a lot of dusky brides, and longs for Clara. Knowing his chum's habit of hogging things, he visualizes himself as a vanquished king, and his chum the victor over his village, and himself a prisoner being led to the pot to furnish a feast. He sees Otto Hoffman, still the college professor, but wearing an enormous cook's cap, a pen as a nose ornament and ink bottles as ear-bobs, poring over the royal cook-book, doping out the best way to reduce him to a pot roast.

Most of the action described above was made while I was on the set. Mason Hopper is a fast worker, and his assistant, Billy Wellman, is a whizzer on wheels. They shouted and hollered at their dusky actors until they were as hoarse as frogs, and when I left they were putting a bunch of fifty dancing girls through the mazes and wriggles of a siva-siva dance.

Irvine Resigns from Goldwyn

Clarke Irvine, who for a year has been writing publicity and directing exploitation films at Goldwyn's West Coast studios, has resigned. His future plans are well under way but are not definitely arranged yet. In the meantime, Irvine is handling publicity on the American Legion production of "Arizona," to be given at Philharmonic Auditorium on June 3, 4 and 5. After this he intends taking a vacation, the first since navy days, the same being a five-day perspiring furlough in a Texas city.

Associated Exhibitors Plans Busiest Period During Convention at Cleveland

WITH the assurance of a full attendance at its convention in Cleveland next week, Associated Exhibitors, Inc., is making preparations for the busiest period in its history. Important matters have transpired in the organization with such smoothness and dispatch as to justify the belief that before Associated's meetings are ended the association will make announcements of vital interest and importance to independent exhibitors.

Chief of these announcements, it is believed, may be one concerning Associated's sub-franchise plan. This plan is said to have been in the process of development for almost a year, and it is claimed that, under its arrangements, every point has been covered to the extent where the holder, be he the biggest showman in a big city or the little fellow on a side street in a small town, is assured equitable dealing and profitable co-operation.

It is understood that final details of the sub-franchise plan will be gone over and polished at the meeting of Associated's board of directors, which also is to be held in Cleveland during the conventions, and that as a result of the meeting independent exhibitors who seek to ally themselves with other independents against producer-exhibitors will be given an opportunity to do so through Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

It is expected that F. C. Quimby, general manager of Associated, who has been on the West Coast for several weeks, will bring to Cleveland news of deep interest to independent showmen and to the industry at large.

Activity within the organization also is seen in the fact Geraldine Farrar's initial production for Associated, "The Riddle: Woman," already is well under production at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle. Director Edward Jose began "shooting" early last week, and from present indications it is safe to predict that "The Riddle: Woman" will be an excellent attraction.

Louis Stearns, one of the best known character actors in the cinema world, has been engaged to play the part of Meyer in support of Geraldine Farrar.

Jesse Lasky Appoints Walter Wagner to Position of F. P.-L. Production Head

ONE of the last things Jesse L. Lasky did before sailing for London, May 29, was to complete the reorganization of the production department of Famous Players-Lasky. He has appointed Walter Wagner production manager, and the new man is now fully installed in that position, having charge of all production activities during the absence of Mr. Lasky in Europe.

Mr. Wagner joined the Famous Players-Lasky organization two months ago as special representative of the production department. In his new position he will have complete direction of production affairs, under Mr. Lasky.

More Honors for MacAlarney.

Another interesting statement was made by Mr. Lasky. Robert E. MacAlarney, scenario editor, has been given enlarged powers and greater duties, which will necessitate the enlargement of the scenario department. Since his appointment as scenario editor, two years ago, Mr. MacAlarney has scientifically developed the scenario department.

By means of a system of reading manuscripts, the department has available the synopsis of practically every book, play and story that could possibly be made into a motion picture. With each synopsis is the opinion of a trained editor as to the story's availability for motion pictures.

Victor Smith, Studio Manager.

Maude Miller, who has been connected with the department for some time, has been appointed Mr. MacAlarney's assistant. Victor Smith has been appointed studio manager to succeed J. N. Naulty. Mr. Smith, who formerly occupied a similar position with Vitagraph, has already taken up his new work. He will have charge of the company's Eastern studios, and among his first big tasks will be the removal of studio activities and organization from the Fifty-sixth street studio, Manhattan, and other studios in New York and New Jersey, to the big new studio in Long Island City.

Roswell Dague Is Promoted.

Mr. MacAlarney also announces the appointment of Roswell Dague as production editor of the Eastern studios, succeeding Gardner Hunting. Mr. Dague, who has been assistant production editor, will have charge of the editing of all productions made in the East.

Before going to the Fifty-sixth street studio, Mr. Dague came to New York from the Oakland (Cal.) Tribune, and became assistant city editor of the New York Tribune, under Mr. MacAlarney. When MacAlarney gave up newspaper work to become scenario editor of Famous Players-Lasky, Mr. Dague went with him. During the war he was a lieutenant of artillery.

Educational Makes Change in Short Subject Release Plans

THE Educational Films Corporation announces that hereafter it will pursue a policy of issuing one and two reel "specials" in scenic, topical and scientific subjects without reference to series. This plan has been determined upon as the result of the great number of inquiries received for "Modern Centaurs" and "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" in advance of their release.

"We believe that the five years' success of Educational," says a statement, "has fully proved the place that the short subject deserves on the program. We feel that we have convinced the exhibitor that the question of length should not be the chief one considered, but quality, and we feel very sure that when they are furnished with exceptional product in short subjects they will give these the attention that they deserve.

"At the Criterion Theatre 'The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes' was featured in the electric signs and in the newspaper advertising, where it was called 'Alaska's eighth wonder of the world.' The slogan was fully justified by these remarkable pictures made by the expeditions sent to the Mount Katmai region by the National Geographic Society. 'Modern Centaurs' was strongly billed by the Strand during its showing and the applause with which it was greeted was a tribute to its entertainment value.

"We intend to make a real specialty of these specials. We will not attempt a regular schedule because we will offer one only when there is something really special to offer."

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Universal's Exchange Head Ends Chicago Visit; Held View of "The Devil's Pass Key"

H. M. BURMAN, general manager of exchanges for Universal, ended a week's visit in Chicago, Tuesday, May 25, When he returned to New York. While here he was engaged in looking after the injunction proceedings brought against J. L. Kessner, owner of the Consumers Building, to restrain him from interfering with Universal's business by attempting to oust the film department from that building while the lease of the premises has still over a year to run.

The case was tried before Judge Landis, in the federal court, Friday, May 21, and he recommended the counsel on both sides to have it tried in equity before United States Judge Carpenter. The case came up in the latter court Saturday, May 29.

Mr. Burman brought along with him to Chicago the first sample copy of "The Devil's Pass Key," and a private showing was given before a select few in Universal's private projecting room. In the judgment of those present, Mr. Burman says, this superfeature was pronounced a masterpiece in point of production and a notable picture in the matter of story, photography and detail.

"The Devil's Pass Key" was directed by Eric Von Stroheim and will be released early in the fall.

Burman Pleased with Beauties.

Mr. Burman expressed himself as being highly pleased with the six selected beauties of Chicago, who have been chosen, in the Elks "beauty" contest, to go to Universal City and compete for stardom in the studios there. He complimented the judges of the contest on their happy selections and stated that the winning beauties give fine promise of success before the camera.

It may be stated here that the young women were not selected for their beauty alone, as Director Stroheim, who came on from Los Angeles specially for the purpose, tested them in real acting scenes before the camera, in which their faces registered varied emotions. Mr. Stroheim was greatly pleased with the results and within a few weeks the Chicago beauties will be full-fledged citizens of Universal City.

"For the Soul of Rafael" Has Big Premiere at Auditorium

IF there is one fault that has been attributed to the elaborate opera-movie entertainment which Andreas Dippel has innovated at the Auditorium it is that the programs are too long. For that reason the seven-reel feature, "For the Soul of Rafael," which stars Clara Kimball Young, and which was originally scheduled for a four-weeks' run, beginning May 23, was shown for the opening week only.

Unfortunately this cancellation precludes from many picture fans the privilege of seeing motion pictures shown in truly classic style. "For the Soul of Rafael" as presented by Andreas Dippel, dignifies and glorifies the art of cinema. He has shown an understanding of the outside forces that make or mar a screen production.

A symphony orchestra of forty, conducted by Milan Roder, revealed anew what music means to pictures. The accompaniment was exquisite. The size of the orchestra, naturally, rendered possible a greater variety of effects than is usual, and consequently a greater sympathy with the moods of the picture. But there are times when no matter how great are the facilities for noise at the disposal of the conductor, the pianissimo notes of a single instrument will be by far the most effective for a certain scene, and this, Musical Director Roder realized.

Big Screen Used.

Owing to the size of the auditorium, which seats 3,600, an immense screen is used. It measures 28 by 28, and is the largest in Chicago. The screen was superbly lighted and the picture was correctly timed. Mr. Dippel acknowledges that the operator, whose services he has secured, is an artist.

Between the acts of the operetta, "Gypsy Love," a most befitting scenic arranged especially for Mr. Dippel by the Kineto Company, was shown. Views of Roumania and of the nomads and their customs, are revealed in this film.

Manager Dippel reports a degree of financial success compatible with the newness of the project. He believes that the establishment of this type of entertainment will take some little time, but that it will prove popular. It is his intention from now on to book shorter features, except when the opera is less than three acts long. In that case a full-length feature will be exhibited.

Aschers Buy Half Interest in New Auditorium, Dayton

THE Ascher Brothers added the New Auditorium, Dayton, Ohio, to their chain of theatres, May 22, when they bought one-half interest in the house from the Rauh Brothers, who built it a few years ago. It is a thoroughly modern structure and seats 1,500.

June 12 has been set for the opening, under the new management. S. L. Rothapfel, Goldwyn's national director of presentations, will arrange and have charge of the opening program. An orchestra of twenty-two pieces will be used henceforth in this theatre.

Bert Gottlieb, formerly manager of Ascher Brothers' Lane Court Theatre, Chicago, has been appointed manager of the New Auditorium, being specially chosen because of his success at the Chicago house.

The New Auditorium is the thirty-fifth house on the Ascher Brothers' circuit, twenty-five of these being in Chicago. Max and Harry Ascher will spend a week in Dayton before the opening and also the week following, to establish the house on the new basis.

"Marge O'Doone" Breaking Records.

Manager F. C. Aiken, of Vitagraph's Chicago office, announces that "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" will open a week's exclusive run at Barbee's Loop Theatre, June 13. The following week it will be shown at the Ziegfeld, exclusively, and afterward will be released throughout the city generally. Every theatre of importance in the city has applied for a booking.

Eckels Is General Manager of New Independent Body

THE Independent Films Association, an organization similar to the old Independent Sales Company of years ago, was recently formed and Eddy Eckels appointed general manager, with headquarters on the sixth floor of the Consumers Building.

The members of the Independent Films Association are all independent producers in Los Angeles, where the plan of organization was formed. At the present time six of these producers have contracted to clear their output through this organization. This number, most probably, will be increased to ten or more producing units, in order to meet the requirements of ten reels a week.

These ten reels will be constantly diversified, but will always include one five-reel production, two two-reel and one single reel subject. The diversification referred to means that a one-reel subject may be a comedy this week, a news reel next week and so on; also that the two-reel features may be a western one week, a comedy the next and so on.

Neal Hart and Roy Stewart in Pinnacle productions are on the list of stars who will appear in five-reel productions handled by the Independent Films Association.

"Lost City" Meets with Approval.

"The Lost City" is proving popular at the Karlov Theatre, 4048 Armitage avenue. This jungle serial produced by Warner Brothers and distributed in the Middle West by Celebrated Players, Inc., is shown every Monday at this theatre. The sight of the many animals, wild and tame, as well as the exciting adventures of the Princess Elyata, awaken the keen interest of the children and bring enthusiastic applause from them.

Lakeside Changes Ownership.

The Lakeside Theatre and the building in which it is located, at 4726 Sheridan Road, were sold recently for $200,000 by the owners, Nathan Ascher and James F. Green. The Ascher Brothers ran this house successfully before the Pantheon was erected nearby, and then leased it to Lubliner & Trinz, the Pantheon owners, for four years. This lease has about two more years to run.

Motographers of America Meet.

The members of the Motographers of America, in the Chicago division, held a special meeting at the Castle studios, 2332 North Carolina avenue, Thursday evening, May 27. A special program, including studio demonstrations, had been carefully arranged for the benefit of motographers and their guests. The meeting was well attended.

"Frozen Trails of the North" in Recent Paramount Magazine

ONE of the first released of an expedition sent to the frozen Arctic for the special purpose of taking motion pictures is featured in the Paramount Magazine of June 6, titled "A Yarn of the Yukon." The broad expanse of snow covered lands unravels a new vista of thought for lovers of the great outdoors. The scenes shown are typical of the Arctic regions.

A shade of burlesque tinges the second part of this release, which shows a baseball game between the staffs of the Jester and the Spectator, Columbia University's rival publications. America's popular pastime of baiting the umpire takes new semblance when the official for this contest marches on the field surrounded by a bodyguard of disinterested students.

Earl Hurd has drawn the cartoon for this number of the magazine, introducing his well known characters of Bobby Bumps and his dog.

Latest Ford-Goldwyn Weekly Shows Making of Playthings

ALTHOUGH it will be of interest to theatre-goers of all ages, "Playthings of Childhood," the Ford Educational Weekly No. 203 will carry a particular appeal for children and may be featured by exhibitors to the best advantage at matinee performances. As may be gathered from the title, the film deals with the toys dear to the hearts of children.

The manufacture of a miniature piano is shown from the cutting of the wood to the placing of the keys and the completion of the instrument. Equally interesting are the scenes depicting the making of a doll, starting with the fashioning of the various parts, the weaving of the wigs, the cutting of clothes and finally the assembling process. When the doll is completed, a house is built for her to live in.

For the benefit of the boys in an audience, this picture presents the manufacture of a Humpty-Dumpty circus, with elephants, clowns and all the other elements that go into the making of a modern ring show.

Pathe Review Has Making of Fine China and Mica Industry

A STRIKINGLY original feature of Pathe Review No. 55, released June 13 is "The Assyrian Sword Dance," of the Julian Ollendorff series, "The Spirit of the Dance" and interpreted by Evan-Burrows Fontaine. She has been featured in several Broadway musical revues and is appearing at the present time in "Ed. Wynn's Carnival," which is enjoying marked success. When the sword meant life or death, the significance of its relation to everyday existence was symbolized by the ancients in their dances and Miss Montaine has interpreted the spirit with a graceful mastery.

The pride of every housewife is Limoges china and the Pathe color offering, "The Land of Finest Chinas," shows these masterpieces, and the museums of Limoges, France, where the choicest creations are carefully preserved. A glimpse of North Carolina's mica industry is picturized in "The Rock That Talks," showing how many skilled workers transform rock to sheets of the necessary sizes for phonographic records.

"The Tearing Clutch" is an intimate introduction into the art of the strong man, presented by Novagraph in slow-motion. It has been supposed that there existed a certain amount of trickery in most stunts of this kind, but the Ultra-Rapid camera, slowing the action down to ten times less than normal speed, shows the husky performer tearing a solid pack of playing cards into three pieces with his bare hands. "The Zoo and Zoo," is an animal study presented by Dr. Ditmars of the New York Zoological Park, showing that the polar bear must have his Saturday night bath, no matter what the temperature.

Serious and Comedy Subjects Divide Interest in Pictograph

BREAKING up old foundations and preparing for new, is the subject of the first section of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph 7042 that carries for its opening title, "Making the Dirt Fly." A giant steam shovel is shown in action as it scoops up great masses of dirt and stone. Then, through the stop motion process of photography, some comedy scenes are realized with the excited workmen apparently running for their lives as the shovel threatens to include them in its load.

Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet, philosopher and dramatist, is the subject in the "People You'd Like to Know" series. M. Maeterlinck and his wife were visited by the Pictograph cameraman during their stay in California. A number of the interesting scenes in this film were photographed at the Goldwyn studio, which the poet frequently visited while studying the technique of motion picture production preparatory to writing original stories for Goldwyn.

For a comedy wind-up to this issue, Max Fleischer presents one of his inimitable "Out of the Inkwell" cartoons. The scene is laid in a haunted house, where the clown and the artist have varied experiences with spooks and spirits and a ouija board.

Films for Church and School Use Indorsed at Des Moines

THE General Conference of the Methodist Church closed its quadrennial session at Des Moines this week without changing the traditional attitude of the church on the theatre, dancing and card-playing.

Progressives in the church urged a modification of the famous law, but the final vote was 3 to 1 to retain paragraph 280.

The church indorsed moving pictures, however, and asked that arrangements be made to circulate films from general headquarters of the church and from special supply houses to be established in different parts of the country.

Edna Moody Howard, field director for the Society for Visual Education, is in Des Moines to outline methods of using "movie textbooks" in the local schools.

A special showing of two sample subjects was given members of the Des Moines School Board at A. H. Blank's Garden Tuesday morning. Films were shown dealing with geography and history.

"The advancement of the motion picture has made possible the extensive use of education through a hitherto comparatively unused sense—that of sight," Dr. Howard stated. "The possibility of this new medium of education for evil influence has been considerably dwelt upon. This is the first organized and practical attempt to make a constructive use of the same in outlined classroom courses."

Burton Holmes Photographs Belgium's "Beautiful Bruges"

ONE of the oldest and quaintest cities of the Belgian monarchy is picturized in the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel picture for June 6 release, entitled "In Beautiful Bruges." The tourist enters through the ancient gateway, once a part of a fortifying wall, hastens to take a glimpse of the unique belfry and market, landmarks of a former age, and reaches the guildhall just in time to join in the "Kormesse" or festival in the Grande Place—the ceremony having been initiated by the citizens to commemorate their regained freedom.

The streets are entwined by a network of beautiful canals. Evidences of the war are still visible on all sides, the damage performed by the German bombing "Taube," the bomb-proof garages and the ruined and shattered dwellings. Burton Holmes is a master at the art of picking out the interesting points of a city and he lives up to expectations in his tour of this quaint Belgian municipality, known as "The Venice of the North."

No. 1—View of the Bruges' City Hall, showing the attractive architectural design; No. 2—Quietude on the Bruges Canal, with the contrast of sunlight and shadows; No. 3—Picture of one of the more thickly inhabited centres.

Chicago lauds the magnificence of "For The Soul Of Rafael"

WHEN a motion picture can win the praise and plaudits of Chicago's press and public its success throughout the Nation is assured, for Showmen recognize in Chicago the most difficult of all territory for pictures. Judge then of the merits of Clara Kimball Young in "For The Soul Of Rafael" by the following criticism written by Caroline Sanborn of the Chicago Tribune.

"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL NEARS PERFECTION IN FILM PRODUCTION." Produced by Equity. Presented at the Auditorium. "You have asked for good pictures. Here is an opportunity to see one that in acting and direction and photography is superb." When a cast has been chosen and as well trained as the cast in "For The Soul Of Rafael" it is difficult to give each person his just due. "As a whole "For The Soul Of Rafael" is the most finished production you have been given in some time, and the settings, costumes and details down to the most minute are perfect of their kind."

(Lack of space prevents us from printing the entire review which we aknowledge with thanks to the Chicago Tribune for the elaborateness and sincerity of its criticism)

in Marah Ellis Ryan's Magnificent Story of Wondrous California

"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL"

If big motion pictures are judged by the standards set by critics, press and public throughout the country, then of necessity, must Clara Kimball Young in "For The Soul Of Rafael" be pronounced one of the most beautiful cinemasterpieces ever brought to the screen. In the regal beauty of its settings, atmosphere and elaborate investiture no production of recent years compares with it. It stands apart as something bigger, something finer than is usually accomplished for the supreme entertainment of the photo play loving public.

Every fine theatre will exhibit this beautiful picture and will reap the rewards the presentation ot such a production promises. For the exploitation and handling of this production, entirely unusual and exceptionally elaborate accessories have been prepared, procurable from any Equity Franchise Holder. "For The Soul Of Rafael" is now being booked for extended engagements. Communication with your nearest Equity Franchise Holder will bring you full details.

"Mountain Madness," the First Clermont Picture, Is Finished

"MOUNTAIN MADNESS," the first feature made by Lloyd Carleton Productions for Clermont Photoplays Corporation, was finished on time, despite the delays occasioned by the switchmen's strike, when a train robbery, one of the big punches in the picture, was about to be staged; the serious illness of an actress; a change of studios in the middle of the picture; several cases of Klieg eyes and other incidents and accidents to players and producer.

Hannibal N. Clermont, president of Clermont Photoplays Corporation, announces the purchase of Bradley King's story, "Beyond the Cross Roads," which will be the second of the six features Lloyd Carleton Productions have contracted to produce for Selznick release. A popular Saturday Evening Post story will be the third offering, and options have been secured upon well-known books for the remaining three.

The swift success of the Clermont organization has encouraged them to adopt a policy of expansion and other producing units are to be added at once. The company's present studio capacity will accommodate three units, which will be the limit of the expansion until a new studio can be built.

Chinese Merchants Organize Film Company in California

THE James B. Leong Productions, Inc., is one of the newest film organizations to enter the film production field on the West Coast. The company has been incorporated under the laws of California, with James B. Leong as president and general manager; D. Siu Yee Chong, secretary; Low Song Kai, treasurer; Chew Kim and T. A. Russell, directors. Most of the capital has been subscribed by prominent Chinese merchants of Los Angeles and San Francisco.

The object of the company is to produce clean pictures of the higher Chinese life. "The Porcelain Bell," an original story by James B. Leong, will be one of the first productions to be made by the Chinese company, and later a popular Orientar star will be featured in a series of two-reel comedies depicting the humorous side of Chinese life.

James B. Leong assisted in the technical directing of D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms, Metro's "The Red Lantern," Jesse D. Hampton's "The Pagan God," Lasky's "All in a Night," and other productions requiring Chinese atmosphere.

The new company is negotiating for space in one of the local community studios.

Fox Officials Coming West.

Comes the word from the Western Fox studio that William Fox, head of the Fox Film Corporation, and Winfield Sheehan, general manager of the same organization, are soon to head for the West Coast, arriving here about the middle of June, with plans of expansion and progression which will be put into effect at the Fox studio in Hollywood.

Program pictures will be discontinued, according to report, and only large and spectacular plays, with all-star casts, will be produced. J. Gordon Edwards, now director of the William Farnum features, is planning to make a super-production of "The Queen of Sheba" some time this summer.

Peacocke Working on New Sea Story.

Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke, author of the story of "Neptune's Daughter," made into a film a year ago, has begun the production of a companion story which is not named as yet, but has the working title of "Sea Story" at the Bernstein studio on Boyle Heights, where the feature is being filmed. Capt. Peacocke has secured several beautiful and perfectly formed girls to play the leading parts in the sea scenes, and for some of the other action in the story, as many as seven hundred players will be needed. Harry Jones is assembling the cast and M. Mohler is doing the camera work.

Lesser & Gore Form New Exchange.

Articles of incorporation have been filed for a new distributing organization to be known as the Educational Film Exchange of Southern California. Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser are interested in the enterprise, and Dave Bershon, general manager of the First National Exchange, will have supervision over the new exchange. The company will handle for Southern California and Arizona, the Christie comedies, the Chester Outing pictures, the Chester Screenics, the Educational Films, and a number of other short comedies, travelogues and scenics.

Special Buys Burrud Scenics.

The Special Pictures Corporation, producers of the Comedyart Films, the novelty subjects that contain a comedy, a scenic and a novelty sketch on each release, announce that they have secured the Burrud scenic pictures, which are being made in out-of-the-way places in this country and others, to be incorporated in the Comedyart releases. An expedition in charge of Cameraman Dick Burrud is to be sent to the frozen north, leaving Seattle about June 10. The party will be joined there by Steward Edward White and Wallace Irwin, two noted authors seeking new fields of adventure.

Preview of "Suds" at Pasadena.

Mary Pickford's newest picture, "Suds," which has just been finished, was given a pre-release showing at the Strand Theatre in Pasadena recently. The patrons of the house registered their hearty approval of the picture by vociferous applause and a demand that Miss Pickford, who was a spectator, make a speech to them—which she did. Little Mary is said to reach even greater heights in "Suds" than she reached as the little slavey in "Stella Maris."

Settled Out of Court.

The suit of Paul Pelich against Douglas Fairbanks for $25,000 damages has been settled out of court. Pelich was told to exercise a bronco, and in attempting to mount the animal was thrown and painfully injured. Fairbanks' claim was that the man had been instructed not to attempt to mount the bronco and that the injury resulted from disobeying orders.

New Theatre for Long Beach.

A $125,000 theatre and office building is soon to be erected on the east side of American avenue, between Ocean boulevard and First street, in Long Beach.

To Write for Intercollegiate.

Ida May Park, noted woman director, has been asked by the Intercollegiate Vocational Guidance Association to write an article on her profession as a vocation for women, to be distributed among the colleges of the country as an aid to women undergraduates who are planning to enter some occupation.

Contract Let for Film Laboratory.

H. J. Aldous, treasurer of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, arrived from the East on May 17 to attend to the letting of the contract for the construction of the new Rothacker laboratory that is soon to be built in Hollywood. Positive film prints for the Western theatres and for Oriental trade will be made in Los Angeles before a negative is shipped East. The First National Exhibitors' Circuit is among the Rothacker clients.

"Hope Diamond Mystery" Completed.

Stuart Paton has completed the final episode of "The Hope Diamond Mystery" serial for Kosmik Films, Inc., and the finishing touches are being given the production, which stars Grace Darmond, in the life story written by May Yohe, formerly Lady Francis Hope. L. C. Wheeler, treasurer of Kosmik, plans to leave for New York within the next ten days with a sample print of the serial.

New Sennett Comedy Completed.

"Married Life," Mack Sennett's newest comedy, with Ben Turpin, Phyllis Haver, Charlie Murray, Ford Sterling, Jimmy Finlayson, Kala Pasha, Eddie Gribbon and Louise Fazenda in the cast, has been completed and the negative rushed off to New York for the making of the ninety prints required by the First National Exhibitors' exchanges of the country.

Elsie Ferguson Goes to Japan

Elsie Ferguson, star in Paramount Pictures, has left New York for Japan. She will sail from San Francisco, June 3, on the Yokahoma and will be gone three months.

Upon her return to America, she will stop at Los Angeles and make a production at the Lasky studios before returning to New York where she expects to open in another dramatic play early in the season.

This, Alice, Is the Typical Exhibitor of Mars. Has a Large Family, Food Fit for a Congressional Junket, Clothes Unlike Any Fillum Man, and No Worries About Producer-Exhibitors.

Grab the Spare Tire, Alice—This Is "A Trip to Mars"

By WILLIAM J. REILLY

WELL, Alice, I suppose the Bounding Rock Gazette has kept you posted on all the rumpus which is congregating around the planet Mars these days. Of course, if I was as jealous as a lot of these other publicity men in the film business, I'd be suspicious of all the publicity this Mars is collecting.

I might even go as far as to insinuate that the president of the Mars Film Corp. had unleashed his pet typewriter masseur, slipped him down here with a load of foolscap and told him to go ahead on a big teaser campaign on his forthcoming masterpiece, "See Mars First." A hook-up with the real estate men right off the bat.

More Popular Than Weejee.

But I'm not like a lotta these publicity men that way, Alice, I don't even have to use any adjectives unless I want to. Which is something few press agents can say and also a great load off the letters "h-u-g-e" on my Corona-Corona. All I can say is this Mars is putting it all over the movies in grabbin free space in the papers.

I don't suppose anything has caused more excitement out there in Bounding Rock since Wack Meadows fell into the milk vat over at the creamery. Even this president of the Wireless Operator's Union, Marconi, has worked himself into a heat over the idea of holding communication over the back fence with Mars.

But he hasn't a thing on Bud Spatlin who runs the Bounding Rock Amusement Park. Bud's installed a "Trip to Mars" in place of the old merry-go-round and they say he's makin so much money he went out last week and bought himself a thoroughbred Guernsey heifer. And I reckon there isn't a summer resort in the country that isn't hirin some gastronomy professor to occupy the bridal suite at the main hotel and discourse to the rocking chair brigade on the front porch about orbits, ellipses, light years, and all that spiritualistic distance stuff.

Yep, Mars Has Small Boys, Too.

This happens to be a kid here on our Earth getting a free look at the Mars world series, and incidentally a pupil full of beauty.

Light Exercise, Alice.

Of course, Alice, by light years you don't want to understand that it means light years for spinach, rhubarb, buttermilk or any of those Missouri crops. "Light years" is a term dug up by these astronomers when they found that the ordinary twelve-cylinder adding machine couldn't take the load of computing the distance Mars or any of those sky resorts is from us. So they just figure how far light travels in a year (which is some few miles and kilometers, Alice) and multiply that add incompletum, as the classic students like to say.

So you see, Alice, when you put on the spare tire and fill the thermos bottle for a trip to Mars the mileage clock's liable to tucker out of figures.

But what disheartens a mileage clock doesn't throw any wrench in the sprockets of a projection machine, so when these film folks started to picturize an excursion to Mars they knew they could put it over.

I had faith in the long distance powers of the motion picture industry the minute I laid eyes on this picture, "A Trip to Mars," which W. H. Productions is releasing. Alice, as your mother used to say after we'd take her to see a picture at the Happy Hour, "There's a story to it and everything."

All Data-ed Up.

There's a story to this picture and a few kegs of statistics. Statistics at best ain't very cheerful, Alice, so I won't entertain you with all the statistics these observatory fellows have corraled about the number of camphor balls per square inch Mars raises and how many shoes per year the mules use that travel along the tow-paths by the well-known canals.

This picture, "A Trip to Mars," discards all talk about data per cubic inch and gets immediately to the idea that when it comes to real down-right civilization, Mars has it over our earth like the Bounding Rock courthouse has it over the one at Painter's Hollow.

It's funny, but this picture shows that Mars, which is named after the god of war (not Bill Hunzollern), is the most law-abiding place this side of the Sleep Island hoosegow. When our hero lands on Mars from his brave airship, "Excelsior," he discovers well dressed folks in flowing robes and a horror of war.

"We've been watching your planet," they say to him, speakin in the universal language of the soul, "and we're grevious about your wars and barbarisms." Of course, they didn't say a word about getting a free look at the world's series through their long distance looking apparatus. Neither did any of the old-timers admit they had bet on Jess Willard and seen the fight.

"See Mars and Die."

That's the slogan, Alice, of the Mars Realty Corp. And no wonder. See "A Trip to Mars" and be satisfied.

But they show this hero fellow how they had long since quit fighting, meat eating, commuting, reading Robert W. Chamberlain and such like barbarities.

But don't get the idea they don't eat up there, Alice. I used to be strong for your Ma's strawberry shortcake, but these Mars people have a food that's a combination of honey dew mellon, baked Virginia ham, home made bread, Boston cream pie, fruit salad and cafe noir. Alice, with food like that it's no wonder they hate war. Who wouldn't hate to kiss that culinary combination good bye?

Well, Alice, I wish you'd see this picture when it comes to Bounding Rock and see if you can figure out the recipe for that food I've told you about. It might come in handy some day.

BILL.

Plan Your Campaign Carefully to Sell "For the Soul of Rafael" to Advantage

By EPES W. SARGENT

CAMPAIGNING "For the Soul of Rafael" offers some departures from the sensational style of exploitation to be followed for other Clara Kimball Young pictures, and the exhibitor would do well to avoid the semi-lottery suggestions contained in the plan book. Where these are not in confliction with the local law they can be worked for sensational subjects to some advantage, but "For the Soul of Rafael" should be handled along lines in keeping with the beauty of the settings and the dignity of the story.

For this same reason the higher class houses will do well to avoid the striking picture of Miss Young which serves as the cover for the plan book and is reproduced in some of the advertising displays. It will give an erroneous impression of the play. It will attract many who are looking for physical exposure and who will resent the fact that they do not get it. On the other hand, it may repel many who will be made Young converts through the artistry of this picture.

Start With Presswork.

The most advantageous campaign should begin early with sound press stories. Try for a paragraph every few days rather than one big story. Tell that this story is something of a novelty for the star. Hook up with the book.

This is not a star vehicle. With intelligent unselfishness Miss Young has taken only her logical place in the story and gives opportunity to several others. Pick up this fact for mention.

Study the story. Pick up some shorts from the longer press stories in the plan book. Get them interested through a series of brief stories rather than through a single longer mention.

Try a Trade-Mark Campaign.

In the press book you will find a series of teasers and on another page a set of four cuts from a pen-and-ink sketch in one, two, three and four column widths. Hook these up.

Start off well in advance with the teasers. Use only one piece of copy a day, but try and use this in more than one position. One teaser will not work well. Try smaller spaces and more of them. Do not use more than one to the page and get them on as many pages as possible.

Hook them up with that "F. T. S. O. R." If you want to make it more mysterious, try the Masonic punctuation of a triangle by using three periods and reversing the center one, as .·. or use a colon and a period, :. if the printer will not take the trouble work the other. Either will give an oddity of effect which will greatly help.

The fourth or fifth day take extra space and cap each of the teasers with the single column pen-and-ink sketch. In a couple of days come to your first big splash. Drop the teaser copy and use a two to four column cut of the same design, with the initials in large type, filling in with small eight point letters, as Cutouts Will Sell.

Then go up to larger type for the title, but always keep the capitals large. Use one of these cuts in every space you take and, if you can, take the plan book over to your photographer and let him make an enlargement for the lobby.

One of the three sheets shows Miss Young in the costume of the play. Get several of these. Mount them on corrugated pasteboard, stiffening with lath nailed to the back; cut out and stand them in show windows, on the street and wherever you can get them.

You can get a splendid effect making one of these the center of a display of the most up-to-date gowns your local stores can show. Letter a card with something like:

Yes, this is
Clara Kimball Young.
You know what gorgeous gowns she has worn in most of her plays. See her in the style of dress of 1850, when California was young and the styles were different. See her in
"For the Soul of Rafael," and you'll see a new and equally charming
Clara Kimball Young.

Build Up the Paper.

Build up with other paper, being particularly careful to plan for the use of several of the vivid six sheets. Paper will sell, and it will pay to vary your display by using as many different sorts as possible. There is a certain moral value in the number of different bills you can show. Don't overlook this aid.

If you cannot afford much paper, use the cutout three and the sixes, but try to use at least one 24-sheet in the most prominent position you can obtain. A show with a 24-sheet will seem to be a bigger attraction than one boasting only threes and sixes.

Lithographs are not easy to key. You can't tell just how much they sell, but, unless your town differs from all others in the United States, the paper will have an undeniable pull. Gamble once and you'll probably prove it yourself, but don't expect a lonesome three or a six to pull several hundred dollars. If you make only 100 per cent. on your investment in paper you are showing a profit.

For a Contest.

If your patrons like contests and you want to jazz them up, try a contest for errors. Write a press story of not more than 250 words. Set this in a panel in your display and announce prizes for the discovery of the greatest number of errors.

Make some obvious errors, such as misspelled words and transpositions, but have a dozen elimination errors to make it easier to judge the results. Your local paper can help you to prepare a tricky and yet absolutely honest test through the use of wrong font letters and dropped essential punctuation, such as the use of a comma for a colon or the omission of a period from the end of a sentence. Do not judge on commas, since the use of the comma is open to question. Your printer can suggest a number of tricky errors which a majority will pass unnoticed.

Tell It's a Test.

Head this box: "We want to see how observant our readers are. We will pay (name prize) for the greatest number of errors found in this article. Mark all errors and not merely misspelled words. See how many you can find."

You will never have a piece of copy read as carefully by so many persons. Use it for an advance story and announce that the corrections will be shown and the winners announced in the middle of the week. This will get every advertisement read.

If you want to make a hook-up page, let the merchants offer prizes, but provide for

"Why Change Your Wife?" May Be a Reasonable Question

But if your wife acted like this just because you dropped into her room for a little chat, how long do you suppose it would be before you saw your name in the papers? At that we can't blame Marta Raquel Estevan-Artega. Rafael only lacked a muzzle and chain.

duplicate prizes in the event of a tie, to comply with the postoffice regulations. Make the prizes such that this can be done.

Dressing the Lobby.

If you dress your lobby, you have a choice of a Spanish or a Mission setting. The latter will be the better if you can work it. The top of the lobby can be masked in with a frame cut for a bell tower similar to that in the scene in Los Angeles in the front of the plan book. Hang a real or dummy bell in the opening and work a chime or a single piece of brass tubing from the bell. This should be struck with a wooden mallet. If you can get a peal, so much the better, but a single bell will suffice. If you have a clever artist you can add a couple of imitation stained glass windows (done in transparent colors on tracing paper, with strong lights behind), using the same pen-and-ink sketch suggested for your newspaper work.

For a Spanish Effect.

For the Spanish effect use palms and flowers, with a stone bench or two. You can hire the palms from some city decorator if you cannot get them locally. For an interior effect, any old-fashioned furniture spread with bright colored drapes and backed with pictures, particularly the Kraus oil paintings, will work well and be comparatively inexpensive.

You can get Spanish selections on the phonograph, or perhaps you can dig up a mandolin orchestra for lobby work, also using them for a prologue attraction. But don't use ukuleles. They don't belong. Get mandolins and guitars or turn to the phonograph.

If you use the phonograph, make the local dealer hook up his window with other Spanish selections and list the records you are using, either in the program or on a slide.

If the dealer is a live wire you can probably persuade him to take newspaper space on his own account to tell that he has the records you are using, listing them with number and price.

If by any happy chance you have two mandolin orchestras, stage a contest. Let the audience decide and give a suitable prize. The extra tickets will more than pay the cost.

The Book Hook-Up.

Of course, the book hook-up will be used. Try and make it extra heavy. Pick from the stills the most typical scenes and get these into the window. Because of technical difficulties of lighting, the cuts do not offer many of the best scenes, but you'll be able to tell about them. Tell that this play brings to spectator the atmosphere of the Mission days as strongly as does Ramona. Don't say that it is "as good as" or "better than" the other story. Just tell them that it is the same sort of a story.

The One Best Bet.

If you have never tried the benefit performance suggested in the press book, try it now. You'll give it a permanent place in your bag of exploitation tricks. It works best in towns under 20,000, but it can be worked even in the large houses of the cities—even the key cities. Nothing will bring better results and you can make the film work at times when otherwise the house would be dead.

There are numerous other good stunts in the plan book, many of which will probably appeal to you, but if you overlook this idea you are losing the best possible means of personal promotion.

Charles Ray Signs with Rothacker for Prints on Initial First National Film

CHARLES RAY has just completed arrangements in Los Angeles for the services of Rothacker prints in his forthcoming First National series. Mr. Ray in signing with the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, issued a statement to the film concern asserting his satisfaction that his First National productions were to be Rothacker printed, and declared that the importance of this detail could not be under-estimated.

The first of Mr. Ray's productions to be printed in the Rothacker laboratories will be his picturization of "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," the well known George M. Cohan comedy-drama. As the initial First National attraction to be presented by Arthur S. Kane, in which Mr. Ray makes his bow as an independent star, every detail of production is being carefully considered and the selection of the Rothacker concern for printing reflects the faith which the star and his sponsors have in the firm's standard of work.

In a statement to the Rothacker company Mr. Ray makes plain his estimate of the important place which film printing should occupy in the process of photoplay production. According to the First National star, it has frequently been the misfortune of stars and directors to see particularly effective work into which they had put time and money eradicated in the final showing by mediocre print work.

These Figures Total Six! What? Oh, Yes! Seven! Forgot to Count Middle One.
An attractive array of Mack Sennett's bathing beauties makes a refreshing picture. These comedies are released by Paramount.

Selznick Has Campaign Book on Meaty Kaufman Weeklies

THE first ten miniature dramas from the pen of Herbert Kaufman, one of the best known editorial writers in the country, released by the Selznick Pictures Corporation, have been absorbingly written in an exhibitors' campaign book that is a tribute to the compact, wholesome and meaty editorials.

These little messages in one-reel form, known as Herbert Kaufman Weekly and released one each week, embody the most beautiful and forceful editorials that Mr. Kaufman has written, and their popularity already established is due not only to the the fame of the author, but also because they are a novelty in photoplay production.

Throughout the campaign book, exhibitor aids and newsy shorts of the ten editorials are written in a terse, lucid and interesting manner, that in addition to the striking front cover, are good to look upon. Other aids such as one-sheet lithographs and musical synopsis of the editorials are also placed at the disposal of the exhibitor.

Goldwyn Product Sold for New Zealand and Australia

ARTHUR ZIEHM, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn, has closed another big deal for Goldwyn's third year product. This time the sale is for Australia and New Zealand and includes Booth Tarkington's two-reel "Edgar Comedies." The contract is said to be at the highest figure ever received for these countries.

Reports received from New Zealand indicate a substantial increase in the number of theatres. New houses are either in process of construction or planned, and film men, in preparing for the coming season, are counting on a great expansion of the business.

Rivalry among the controlling factors in the Australian theatre world is said to be keener than ever, and the natural tendency is an advance in prices for the product of American studios with a reputation for issuing high class pictures. Those familiar with the foreign situation figure that Australia will continue to be dependent upon America for the greater part of its film supply for a long time to come. Will Rogers will be a new figure on the screens of Australia, but it is expected that his humor will have a strong appeal.

Percival Wilde's "The Hunch" Will Be Picturized by Metro

METRO announces the purchase of a new photoplay story, "The Hunch," by Percival Wilde. Although it is Mr. Wilde's initial effort for the silent drama after having written copiously for the stage, Metro officials state that the freshness of his style and deft construction stamp him as an author with a "motion picture sense," and they predict a great future for him in this new field for his talents.

Although he is still less than 35 years old, Mr. Wilde is the author of fifty-six plays, fifty-two of which have had production. His long plays include "The Woman in Room 13," "First is Last" and "To-Morrow's Price," writen in collaboration, and "The Penalty."

His story, "The Hunch," tells the rapid-fire adventures of Preston Humphrey, a nice young fellow with a habit of making up his mind "just like that." A murder mystery is in the background of the plot. It has not yet been decided what star will appear in the story.

Montgomery's New Theatre.

THE new motion picture theatre that has been erected at Montgomery for George Daily, one of the proprietors of a large hardware store there, has been opened to the public. The theatre is one of the best equipped in the state for a town the size of Montgomery.

Suit on the "Color Line."

Alleging that they were refused admission to the Jefferson Theatre, Fort Wayne, because of the fact that they are of African descent, Mary Boone, Eliza Samuels and Richard Tilford, all negroes, have instituted three separate suits against W. C. Quimby, owner of the theatre. They demand damages to the extent of $100, which is designated as the statutory penalty, and the costs of the action.

Women Managers Sell House.

Bert Cooley, of West Lebanon, Ind., has bought the Riley Theatre, a motion picture house at Greenfield, from Mrs. Maude Gates and will take possession next week. Mrs. Gates and her daughter, Agnes, have been operating the Riley since last October, and it is understood they are contemplating buying a theatre in another city. Cooley, the new proprietor, is an experienced motion picture man.

Lengthen Show and Charge More.

The Brazil Theatres Company, Brazil, has announced a change of policy at the Arc Theatre in that city. For some time the Saturday shows have consisted of two reels of pictures, for which an admission of six cents was charged, but beginning next week the program will consist of four reels and the admission will be raised to ten cents.

Film Burns in Mystery Fire.

Nine reels of moving picture film were destroyed last Saturday afternoon in a fire in the operating booth at the North Star Theatre, in the residence district of Indianapolis, causing a loss of several hundred dollars. A. C. Zaring, proprietor of the theatre, said he was unable to determine how the fire started. Firemen arrived on the scene a few minutes after the blaze was discovered and succeeded in confining the flames to the booth. The operator escaped uninjured. The fire occurred about 6 o'clock in the evening—a time when only about thirty persons were in the theatre.

Looting Picture Theatres.

Burglars broke into the Royal Theatre, Indianapolis, a few nights ago and carried away six electric fans and the heads from two projection machines. Charles R. Terry, one of the proprietors of the theatre, told the police the stolen articles were valued at approximately $500. The same burglars are believed by the authorities to have been the ones who broke into the Best Theatre on the same night and stole two lenses, a motor and two cases of moving picture film. C. H. Cook is the proprietor of the Best. Several theatres in the north side residence districts of Indianapolis were looted in a similar manner a few weeks ago. Detectives have been working on the robberies, but to date apparently have not made much headway with their investigation.

Theatre Chain Lengthens.

The United Exhibitors' Productions Company, a corporation which has been acquiring several Indiana theatres and making plans for the erection of others, has added another (the Sipe Theatre, Kokomo) to its list. The purchase price, according to current rumors, was more than $60,000.

The new owners are planning to remodel the building to conform with their standards for an up-to-date moving picture theatre. An entirely new interior will be constructed, new seats and a different lighting system will be installed as a part of the scheme to transform it from a legitimate and vaudeville house to that of a moving picture theatre.

Merrill Moore, until about a year ago the proprietor of the Paramount Theatre at Kokomo, will have charge of the transformation and establishment of the corporation's productions. He has been connected with the Universal business staff in Los Angeles for several months and recently was transferred to the Indiana territory, with headquarters in Indianapolis.

Pershing.—"Dangerous to Men."
Mozart.—"Dangerous to Men."

Glen Eastman a Bachelor Pro Tem.

ST. LOUIS almost lost a very good exhibitor last week, when Glen Eastmann, manager of the Pershing Theatre, was forced to think twice before remaining here. Glen's wife, a leading lyric soprano, accepted a concert engagement in Denver and "left him flat." Glen started to follow, but decided he could stand the separation for a few weeks.

Film Personalities.

John C. Flinn, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned to the city after a flying trip to New York.

John Loveridge has been named director of the Kings Theatre. Mr. Loveridge formerly was district manager for the Famous Players-Missouri Corporation. He promises to show a lot of class with his new house.

Bill Goldman, director of three large theatres here, has been ordered to play golf at least once a day. From the present outlook the only things that are going to be reduced are the doctor's orders. Bill passes the buck!

Harry Hoplar, of the Famous Players organization, returned from Chicago, where he was starting some freight cars on their way to St. Louis. It is rumored Harry started a lot of other things, too.

And Such Is Film Life.

Charley Werner, Metro manager, plans on a great summer, starting off with the convention in New York and finishing things here with a new Dodge.

It's a 10-to-1 shot that Charley Raymond, exploitation manager for Famous Players, has a girl in Jefferson City. He "makes" the town every week.

A new film exchange has been opened to handle Comedyart subjects.

Some Snappy Stuff Segregated.

John Weaver, manager of the Grand-Florissant Theatre, had a great time with his "ankle contest," held in connection with the engagement of "Mary's Ankle." There may have been method in his madness.

Fred McClellan, new general director of the Paramount houses, covers more territory than any man in St. Louis. He runs fifteen theatres that are located in a radius of fifteen miles. Fred "makes" them all and is rapidly losing weight.

"Stuffy" McManus, Famous Players booker, has ordered a Ford Sedan. He should get it by the time Baby Marie Osborne is playing character parts.

Airdome Season Opens.

The Mozart Airdome was the first open-air theatre to open here. It was a trifle cool the first week, but the weather is ideal now. The Mozart plays first runs day and date with the Pershing.

Film Plays Seven Houses Simultaneously.

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," with John Barrymore, was shown in seven theatres simultaneously last week. The same bookings also were arranged for William S. Hart's "The Toll Gate."

Golden Gate Gleanings

Portola Theatre to Be Rebuilt.

PLANS have been completed by Herman Wobber and Herbert L. Rothchild, of the California, Portola and Imperial theatres, for the wrecking of the Portola and the construction of a much larger house on the same site. The new theatre will have a seating capacity of about 2,000 and will be typically Californian in style. This theatre is of special interest locally, since its success resulted in the building of the California, almost next door. Since its opening it has been conducted under the direction of Eugene H. Roth, and many men who are now in charge of large houses received their theatrical schooling here.

Granada Theatre Under Way.

Wreckers are at work on the Brager Building, on Market street, the site of the Granada Theatre, and the erection of steel will soon be under way. Contracts to the value of $400,000 have already been awarded and others amounting to $800,000 are pending.

Site for Junior Orpheum.

The Orpheum Theatre has purchased a site at Taylor street and Golden Gate avenue, covering an area 137 by 192 feet, for the erection of the Junior Orpheum, a combination moving picture and vaudeville house. The site is directly across the street from that chosen for Loew's Metropolitan Theatre and within a stone's throw of the entrance to the new Granada Theatre, permanently fixing the center of the new amusement district on upper Market street. A race will soon be under way to see which of these three houses can be completed first.

Cameraman Meets Untimely Death.

While engaged in photographing big waves four miles north of Moss Beach, San Mateo County, Charles A. Gilchrist, a moving picture cameraman of Oakland, Cal., lost his footing and plunged into the surf, drowning in spite of heroic efforts made to save him. The accident occurred on May 20.

To Visit Yosemite.

The California Camera Club, with which several San Francisco cameramen are affiliated, will hold its annual outing in the Yosemite Valley, leaving this city by special train on June 12. Its headquarters in the Valley will be at Yosemite Lodge.

Protest Auditorium Rental.

Exhibitors and theatre men in general met recently at Oakland, Cal., to protest against the rental of the Municipal Auditorium to theatrical companies. Among those who attended the meeting were H. L. Beach, president of the Alameda County Exhibitors' Association; Oliver Kehrlein, of the Kinema and Franklin theatres; Harry E. Cornell, of the Orpheum; E. L. Perry, of the T. & D.; Rex Midgley, of the American, and T. J. Myers, of Pantages.

Returns to the Franklin Theatre.

August B. Krueger, who left the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, in 1917 to enlist in the army, has returned to his former position as manager of this house, which is now conducted under the Kehrlein banner. Since his discharge from the army he has been assistant house manager at the Berkeley T. & D.

Lodges to Erect Theatres.

The I. O. O. F. of Stockton, Cal., is having plans prepared by Architect Ralph P. Morrell, of that city, for a three-story moving picture theatre and lodge building.

The Chico (Cal.) Lodge, Woodmen of the World, has purchased a site in that city for a combined moving picture theatre and lodge building. Chester Cole, Chico, is the architect.

Studio Concern Formed.

The Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $1,000,000, the directors being M. Sherman, P. Gerson, L. C. Crichton, A. E. Herring, L. W. Christie, T. A. Allan and A. H. Ricketts. A. W. Scott, Jr., is heading the movement for the establishment of a large studio.

Schanberger on Commission.

FREDERICK C. SCHANBERGER, manager of the Maryland Theatre, has been appointed the Democratic member of the Maryland State Athletic Commission by Governor Ritchie. He will serve four years. Two other members were appointed and all will serve without pay. The commission took office on June 1, and was created under the Burns bill passed at the last session of the Legislature. Licensing and regulating boxing and wrestling contests throughout the state will be the duty of the commission.

Benefit at Garden Theatre.

To raise funds for the support of the hospital which has just been opened by the Volunteers of America on West Lexington street, a benefit performance was given at the Garden Theatre night of May 30. Moving pictures were shown and music was furnished by St. Mary's Industrial School Band.

Ballinger in Court.

W. F. Ballinger, Baltimore representative of Select Pictures Corporation, was arraigned before Justice Rohleder in the Northeastern Police Court May 25 on a charge against him by Marie W. Presstman, a member of the Maryland State Board of Motion Picture Censors. Mr. Ballinger was charged with releasing a film to a theatre from which parts condemned by the censors had not been eliminated. Mr. Ballinger did not plead guilty, and exp'ained why he should not, but he was fined $25 and costs.

Depkin Showing Specials.

Bernard Depkin, Jr., who manages the New Wizard, Strand and four other moving picture theatres in Baltimore, is handling the presentation of feature films at Ford's Opera House, where films are to be shown during the next few weeks. Ford's has just closed its regular season for road shows and on May 31 the first of the feature plays to be offered the public was Priscilla Dean, in "The Virgin of Stamboul." The prices are: Matinees, 25 cents; evenings, 25, 50 and 75 cents.

Patterson Theatre Sold.

The Patterson Theatre, which has been operated by Julius Goodman for some time, has been sold to M. Rodman. The price of the property was $11,600 and the price of the equipment was $1,400. The seating capacity of the Patterson is 320. Mr. Rodman is also interested in the Commodore Film Company.

Cleveland

First National Blazes Trail.

The First National Exchange, Cleveland, blazed the way "uptown" June 1, when it moved to its new quarters at 3648 Euclid avenue. This is near the new film building which is going up at Payne avenue and East Twenty-second street.

The First National's new location is in an old mansion where a Cleveland millionaire used to live. It is only temporary, however, until the new film building is completed.

Erdmann With Selznick Group.

George Erdmann, who resigned recently as manager of the Cleveland branch of Famous Players-Lasky, entered upon his new duties June 1 as manager of the combined Selznick-Select, National-Republic exchange in the Belmont Building. At the same time H. E. Elder succeeded him at the Famous Players headquarters. Mr. Erdmann was manager of the Famous Players for several years and his change was quite a surprise to the exhibitors. Mr. Elder formerly was local Pathe manager, but more recently he was located in Pittsburgh.

Bar the Leaping Dominoes.

The Universal salesmen have organized a ball team in Cleveland and have issued a challenge to any other exchange in the city. M. J. Glick is the manager. The challenge also invites side bets from sprocket holes to canceled contracts, and states that the jumping ivories should be left at home when there is a game.

A Millionaire and a Half at 26.

A. J. Kleist, Jr., will have two more houses in Pontiac, Mich., each seating over 1,200 people. One has already started and another is to start before fall. It will give Mr. Kleist seven houses in Pontiac—in fact, absolute control of the Pontiac theatrical situation.

Mr. Kleist is still a young man—around twenty-six years old—and his total investment in theatres when the new houses are built will be around $1,500,000. George H. Wilbur is managing director of the Kleist theatres and looks after the bookings and house managements.

For Rialto's Sister, Rivoli.

J. C. Ritter, of the Rialto Theatre, Detroit, is having plans prepared for another theatre, to be known as the Rivola, at the corner of Cadillac and Warren. It will seat 1,200 and be exclusively for motion pictures.

Going Where Films Come From.

George Harrison, owner of the Jefferson Theatre, Detroit, who has sold it, will leave early in June for Los Angeles, where he plans to embark in another line of business.

Florida Flora

For Bathing Girl Two-Reelers.

W. D. M'ADOO and associates, wealthy operators of St. Petersburg, have formed a company for the manufacture of one and two-reel comedies, largely of the bathing girl variety, and are building a new bathing pavilion and studio. They plan to enlarge the proposition rapidly.

Key West to Have Key Theatre.

Key West is soon to have a modern moving picture theatre which will cost $35,000. It is being erected by Karl Thompson, a leading citizen, who will operate it. The plans agreed upon call for a beautiful structure. Since the storm, something over a year ago, there have been no large movie theatres in Key West, as they were destroyed. Work is already under way and it is hoped to complete it within eighty days.

Florida Film Exploits Piracy.

The next picture to be produced by the Character Pictures Company will be typically Floridian in nature, and the script has been especially prepared by a Florida author, Mrs. Roy Johnston, of the staff of the Tampa Daily Times. The plot is founded on the daring exploits of Jose Gasparilla, a bloodthirsty pirate who roamed the Florida coasts about 100 years ago and who was a friend of Jean Lafitte, the famous New Orleans pirate.

The splendid scenery at Anna Maria Key, where the picture will be taken, will make a fine background for this picture, in which Paul Gilmore will be starred. A number of actors are arriving from New York to take part in the production, and advertisements have been inserted for a large number of "extra" men and women.

"Isle of Destiny" All Ready.

"The Isle of Destiny," the first picture to be made by the Character Pictures Company, has been completed and sent to New York. The film was finished in three weeks, as against the usual six or seven weeks required in other localities. The reason for the quickness in completion was the splendid weather, which permitted work until 7 p. m. nearly every day. Director Tamar Lane is high in his praise of Florida.

Radin Sells "Through Eyes of Men."

The Specialty Film Company of Dallas, Texas, has purchased the rights on the five-part dramatic feature, "Through Eyes of Men," in which Frank Mayo is starred, for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; also the series of "Real Star Dramas" for the same territory.

Ira H. Simmons, manager of the local Victor Kremer exchange, New York Independent Masterfilms, Inc., announces that a special department has been opened to take care of exhibitors' publicity, and that, in addition to the regular exhibitor service provided on all productions, during the hours of 10 and 12 each morning the entire publicity and exploitation department will belong to the exhibitor exclusively.

This company reports that several additional short subjects, as well as a sensational six-reel feature, have been recently purchased and are now being cut and titled. Further details will be announced later.

Seventh Picture in "Tex" Series Completed Arrow Reports Nearly All Territory Sold

WITH the statement from Arrow Film Corporation that William Steiner is completing the seventh of the series of "Tex" productions, it is announced that the rights have been disposed of in practically every part of the world. Territorial buyers and exhibitors who have witnessed a screening of the first of the "Tex" series have commended the splendid work of the casts and the director, says Arrow, and the mystery element in each is played up dramatically in each production and each one has its singular attractiveness.

The first three, "Circumstantial Evidence," "The Wall Street Mystery" and "The Unseen Witness," have been released in several territories and, according to the statement from Arrow, have proven exceptional box office values. The interest in the series has been aroused to a great extent because of the mystery element in each production. This element gives each of the productions a distinctive drawing power. Exhibitors have declared that the patrons have in a large number of cases made special inquiry into the schedule of the release of the productions and have expressed a desire to see the entire series. Especial emphasis has been made on the fact that so many of the older patrons of the theatres find in the "Tex" productions entertainment similar to a series of mystery novels.

Glen White has the role of "Tex." Others in the cast whose names are familiar to followers of the screen are Joseph M. L. Striker, who has the juvenile roles; Leo Delaney, the heavy; Alexander F. Frank, well-known stage character, and David Wall, for many years a familiar figure in silent drama.

"The demand for just this type of productions in series was evidenced in the rapid sale of the American territorial rights. A remarkable part of the sales record of this series is the foreign demand. Within a period covering less than three months the sales rights to practically the entire world have been disposed of, says an Arrow official.

W. H. Warner Writing Stories for Reelcraft

William Henry Warner has been engaged to write the stories in which Matty Roubert, the twelve-year-old "Leading Man," is to be starred on the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation exclusive short subject program.

Mr. Warner is the author of "Mothers of Men," "The Bridge of Time" and several short stories, plays and articles on travel. His latest book, "The Bridge of Time," is now being published in both New York and London.

Two of the stories for Matty Roubert have already been completed. One is titled "She's a Vamp," and deals with the love affair of a newsboy. The second story deals with the greatest joy in the lives of all youngsters. "Circus Days."

Reelcraft considers the addition of Mr. Warner to the Matty Roubert producing staff as a valuable acquisition, assuring stories of boyhood adventures which will be particularly suited to the talents of the young star.

Wing Is Author of New Franklyn Farnum Film

Canyon Pictures Corporation announces that the first of the series of Franklyn Farnum features which will be made under its supervision at the Selig studios in Hollywood will be based on an original story by William F. Wing, who is responsible for a number of Farnum's previous successes. Mr. Wing is also preparing the story for the second of the series, while other authors are getting the later subjects ready.

Mr. Farnum will not stop between pictures, but will continue until the entire series is completed. Mr. Farnum's previous pictures, which are also released by Canyon, include a series of two-reel Westerns, on which the territory has been entirely sold, together with "Vanishing Trails" serial, on which territory is selling rapidly.

A complete line of accessories, including an attractive press book, for the new series is now being prepared.

Fine Arts Company Names Territory Disposed of for "Up in Mary's Attic"

POSITIVE assurance is given by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., that the six-reel comedy "Up in Mary's Attic" will be released on state right basis, a current rumor to the contrary notwithstanding. In substantiation, reference is made to the fact that two territories have already been sold on this production.

Rights to the northern part of New York have been purchased by Nat Robbins, of Robbins Film Corporation, Utica, while Willis Kent, of Quality Pictures, Denver, has bought rights to Colorado, Idaho, Utah and Wyoming.

Charles F. Schwerin and L. L. Hiller, in charge of territorial sales, announce they have never considered releasing this picture in any other manner, and they consider the independent market the best channel for its distribution. The reason why this picture has not been shown to buyers generally is because it was being cut and titled. Attractive art titles have not been added. The two exchanges that have secured territory report a strong demand for bookings and indications that it will prove a big box-office attraction.

This picture is said to possess many unusual angles for exploitation which can be taken advantage of by exhibitors at small cost. Working along this line, plans are being consummated with certain manufacturers who distribute nationally for tie-ups and window displays with local dealers. This will cover talcum powder, cigars, bathing suits, lingerie, etc.

An "Up in Mary's Attic" ballad and one-step is being prepared, and this will also be reproduced on phonographs and player-pianos. In addition, a twenty-eight page press book is nearing completion. A feature will be the pictorial pages, which will be made in such a way that they can be used for special lobby display. There will also be other novelties and illustrations and descriptions of stunts which have actually been tried out.

Release Date Set for for First Moranti Comedy

The Reelcraft Pictures Corporation announces June 20 as first release date for the series of two-reel farce comedies in which Milburn Moranti is featured.

Moranti is surrounded by an excellent cast of screen players and has Glover Jones and Lem Moranti directing. In this series Moranti has found expression for his style of comedy in clever farces composed of laughable situations, without a scene that might be objectionable to any one.

Reelcraft has held back the releasing of this series until there were sufficient releases on hand to assure an uninterrupted program to be released every other week. The advertising accessories have also been prepared several releases in advance.

Price Official Starts on Western Sales Trip

C. A. Meade, sales manager of the C. B. Price Company, Inc., has left for a trip through the Middle West, stopping at Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Milwaukee and Pittsburgh. In these various centers he will screen the five-reel comedy drama which this company is marketing, Billie Rhodes in "His Pajama Girl." Mr. Meade expects to be away from New York for several weeks and upon his return may plan a second trip through another section of the country.

Millions Involved As Incorporations Register for Many Picture Projects

IF the number and financial size of incorporations may be accepted as a criterion, conditions in the building line hold no terrors for those who would build theatres and studios, and the picture market must look good to capital in general. Here follows a list of incorporations, assembled from several states, that run into many millions, face value.

Delaware incorporations head the list in number of entries and size of purses; but in the race to "get into the game" several other states roll up big figures. Here is a list,. selected because of the size of the capital stock—those carrying minor sums are not included:

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Famous Players Corporation, which was recently organized with $2,000,000 capital, has taken over ownership and operation of fifteen theatres in this city. Planned to expend about $400,000 in making improvements to the various houses and introducing new features.

Esther Ralston in "Mutiny of the Elsinore."

Esther Ralston has been added to the cast of "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," a C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., production for release by Metro, to play the part of Blanche, a young woman of the dance halls who causes the hero of the story to neglect his fiancee. Miss Ralston recently appeared with Conway Tearle in "Michael and His Lost Angel" and in "Huckleberry Finn." Mitchell Lewis is featured in the all-star cast.

"Jenny" Is Well Under Way.

Latest reports emanating from the Selznick West Coast studios state that the production of Olive Thomas' forthcoming picture, "Jenny," is well under way and that thus far the star has had ample opportunity to display all the charm and versatility that has endowed her to a host of admirers.

Three views of Metro's new feature called "The Cheater." The star can be seen pastiming at the right in the good old-fashioned way. Must be the good old-fashioned brew also to be available at such a late date.

Famous Players' Production Policy to Provide Striking Special Attractions

NOT content to begin the new season on September 1 with twenty-five pictures already completed and in the exchanges, the production department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under the direction of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president, has laid plans for production next season which will carry on even further the high standard of motion picture art which was evidenced in such highly successful pictures as Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man," George Fitzmaurice's "On with the Dance" and other big pictures which this season set new high-water marks as box-office successes.

The plans for production laid out by Mr. Lasky for next season call for the making of specials in a ratio of two to every four Paramount pictures released. As an earnest example of this policy Mr. Lasky points to the specials already set for release—George Fitzmaurice's "The Right to Love," Roscoe Arbuckle in George Melford's production of "The Round-Up," William S. Hart in "The Cradle of Courage" and Cecil B. DeMille's new picture, "Something to Think About," all of which have already been completed.

Striking Production Opportunities.

It is Mr. Lasky's intention to devote a large part of the energies of his world-wide organization to the production of specials, as in the year now closing these were found to be most profitable for exhibitors and immensely popular with the public.

With increased studio facilities in Hollywood, Long Island City, London and in India, the production department finds itself in a unique position for the production of any type of picture. The new $2,000,000 studio in Long Island City is rapidly nearing completion. Accommodating eight companies on its huge stages, this studio, during the coming year, will house all of the eastern production activities of the corporation. It is Mr. Lasky's plan to exchange stars and directors between Long Island City and Hollywood.

In London and Bombay.

The London studio, now ready to begin on the first special production, under the direction of Hugh Ford, the veteran director, will introduce a new phase into American screen products, as all the pictures to be made in London—and they are all to be special productions—will be enacted by British casts in British settings. The new studio in Bombay, India, to establish which Frank Meyer and Tarkington Baker are now on their way to India, is expected to turn out its first production by Christmas.

In the making of special pictures Cecil B. DeMille, William DeMille, George Fitzmaurice and George H. Melford are expected to take a leading part. Cecil B. DeMille will probably make four big pictures, as will George Fitzmaurice. William DeMille is scheduled for five specials and George Melford for six.

Adolph Zukor.
President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Four DeMille Pictures.

Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the corporation, who recently signed a five-year contract to remain with Famous Players, will probably make four big pictures during the coming season. Mr. DeMille, whose "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife?" set high-water attendance marks all over the country this season, already has completed "Something to Think About," the first of his special productions for next year.

Upon the signing of his new contract Mr. DeMille returned to Los Angeles and went immediately to work on his next big production, to follow "Something to Think About." One of the DeMille specials scheduled for next season is from an original story by Hector Turnbull.

George Fitzmaurice, who has completed "The Right to Love" and is now working on "Idols of Clay" as his third Paramount special, will produce as his fourth a big special from an original story by Ouida Bergere, who wrote the scripts for "On with the Dance," "The Right to Love" and "Idols of Clay."

George Melford Productions.

George Melford, who has just finished "Behold My Wife," from Sir Gilbert Parker's famous novel, "The Translation of a Savage," will next do "The Jucklins," a picturization of the well-known book by Opie Read. Later he will do "The Faith Healer," the widely known play by William Vaughan Moody, and "The Old Homestead," Denman Thompson's classic of the American stage.

William DeMille, who is completing "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," with Thomas Meighan, from Leonard Merrick's famous novel, will probably next do "His Friend and His Wife," from a recently published novel by Cosmo Hamilton. William S. Hart will make four pictures this year for Paramount release. He is now nearing the completion of "The Cradle of Courage," his third special production for Paramount under his new contract.

Six Arbuckle Pictures.

Roscoe Arbuckle, who recently signed a long-term contract to star in feature pictures for Paramount, will be seen next season in six big productions of this type. Mr. Arbuckle, who recently completed "The Round-Up" under the direction of George H. Melford, is now at work on "The Life of the Party," from the well-known Saturday Evening Post story by Irvin S. Cobb. His next picture, it is expected, will be "The Traveling Salesman," James Forbes' great play, in which Maclyn Arbuckle starred on the spoken stage for a number of years.

John Barrymore, whose remarkable picture, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," is proving a photoplay sensation of the year, will be starred in two pictures next year. "Amos Judd," a well-known novel written by John Ames Mitchell, the late editor of "Life," has been purchased as a vehicle for Mr. Barrymore, and upon completion of that he will be starred in another famous play which will be announced later.

Upon her return from Japan, whither she has gone on a three-month vacation, Elsie Ferguson will begin work in Hollywood on the first of four pictures in which she will be starred next year. Several plays and stories have been purchased as vehicles for Miss Ferguson. One of her pictures next year will be "Sacred and Profane Love," Arnold Bennett's play in which she starred this spring on the speaking stage.

Adolph Zukor Makes His Announcement of Early Season Paramount Schedule

IT has always been my custom at this time of the year to make a statement regarding the plans and policy of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the season to some. I have endeavored to place before exhibitors facts upon which they could base a fair estimate as to what our organization had to offer them, and I have striven to make clear to them the reasons why they could depend upon Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a dependable source of supply of quality pictures in quantity.

My statement for this year is as follows:

Paramount pictures for September: Geo. Fitzmaurice production, "The Right to Love," with Mae Murray and David Powell; as fine as "On with the Dance;" Elsie Ferguson in Mrs. Humphrey Ward's "Lady Rose's Daughter"; Charles Ray in "The Village Sleuth," supervised by Thomas H. Ince; Thomas Meighan in the famous story, "Civilian Clothes"; Dorothy Dalton in Sir James M. Barrie's story, "Half an Hour"; "Humoresque," Cosmopolitan's production of Fannie Hurst's story; Dorothy Gish in "Little Miss Rebellion"; Wallace Reid in "What's Your Hurry."

Paramount pictures for October: "The Restless Sex," an elaborate Cosmopolitan production of Robert W. Chamber's story; Fatty Arbuckle in "The Round-Up," his first big feature picture; Douglas McLean in "The Jailbird," a Thomas H. Ince production; William S. Hart in "The Cradle of Courage," third of his own productions; Cecil B. DeMille's "Something to Think About"; "Full House," the famous farce, with Bryant Washburn; "Deep Waters," Maurice Tourneur's production of F. Hopkinson Smith's story; "Caleb West, Master Diver"; Charles Ray in "An Old Fashioned Young Man," a Thomas H. Ince production; Ethel Clayton in "The City Sparrow"; "Held by the Enemy," from William Gillette's famous stage play.

Paramount pictures for November: Geo. Melford's finest work, "Behold My Wife," Sir Gilbert Parker's story; George Fitzmaurice's production, "Idols of Clay," with Mae Murray and David Powell; Ethel Clayton in "Rozanne Ozanne"; Wallace Reid in "The Charm School," from a Saturday Evening Post story by Alice Duer Miller; Dorothy Dalton in "The Winter City Favorite," a story of city gaiety; Enid Bennett in "Her Husband's Friend," a Thomas H. Ince production; "Burglar Proof," a comedy featuring Bryant Washburn; Billie Burke in Clyde Fitch's play, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson."

newed for five years with Mr. Lasky, Gloria Swanson will be starred in a number of productions. These pictures will be of the same high grade in which Miss Swanson has appeared in the past. Last year she made a great hit by her work in "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife?" both Cecil B. DeMille productions, and under the new arrangement she will work under the personal supervision of Mr. DeMille, who will select her stories and supervise all details of production. Another feature of the new season will be George Loane Tucker's picture, "Ladies Must Live," a Mayflower production.

Well-known Vehicle for Billie Burke.

Billie Burke will be starred in four pictures next year, according to the terms of her new long-term contract. The first of these, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play, is already in production and will be released late in November. It is announced by Mr. Lasky that the new plays for Miss Burke will be of a somewhat more serious nature than those in which she has appeared in the past. All will be from well-known books of plays, and will afford this charming comedienne great opportunity for the display of her versatility.

Thomas Meighan, whose work in Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female" and in George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" won him stardom, will be starred in six pictures next season. Mr. Meighan, who will be seen in the leading role in "Civilian Clothes" and in "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," is on his way east to begin work in New York on "The Frontier of the Stars," Albert Payson Terhune's book, under the direction of Charles Maigne, who staged "The Copperhead."

Five pictures starring Dorothy Dalton are scheduled for release. Miss Dalton, who is now completing "A Winter City Favorite," from a story by Charles Belmont Davis, brother of the late Richard Harding Davis, will next do "Jeanne of the Marshes," from the novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Miss Dalton to Star in Five.

Wallace Reid, who is making "The Charm School," a lively comedy from the novel by Alice Duer Miller, will be seen in seven pictures during the coming season. Ethel Clayton, who is completing "A City Sparrow," by Kate Jordan, also will be starred in seven pictures. Douglas MacLean, Thomas H. Ince star, is expected further to increase his popularity through the six pictures which will be released under the Paramount brand next season. MacLean already has completed "Lucid Intervals" and "The Jailbird" and is now at work on "Yancona Yillies," from the Saturday Evening Post story by Herschel S. Hall.

Six from Enid Bennett.

Six pictures starring Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince star, will be released, according to present schedule. These include "The Incubus," "I Wonder If" and "Her Husband's Friends," which already have been completed or are in work. Dorothy Gish will be seen in four new productions, the first of which, "Little Miss Rebellion," will be released in September.

"The Princess of New York," one of Cosmo Hamilton's most popular stories, probably will be the first picture to be made next season by Violet Heming, who sprang into screen stardom by her work in the title role of "Everywoman." Maurice Tourneur will make two productions for release next season by Famous Players-Lasky. The first of these, "Caleb West," from the widely read story by F. Hopkinson Smith, will be released in November.

Twelve Cosmopolitan Features.

With "Humoresque," featuring Alma Rubens, and "The Restless Sex," with Marion Davies, already completed and fixed for release, Cosmopolitan Productions has shown what may be expected from the twelve pictures which will be released by Paramount next season.

Four pictures featuring Bryant Washburn will be released next season. "Burglar Proof" and "A Full House" already have been completed, and "Wanted, A Blemish" is now nearing completion.

Two pictures starring Charles Ray as a Thomas H. Ince star will be released during the coming year. "The Village Sleuth" and "An Old-Fashioned Boy" are considered among the best that Ray ever did under the direction of Mr. Ince, and are of that type of wholesome, good-humored comedy-drama that made Ray one of the foremost stars of the screen.

Here They Are—The Big Quartette of Paramount Directors—Look Them Over.

Popular Supporting Players.

Sydney Chaplin has completed the first of the big five-reel comedies under his contract with Famous Players-Lasky. This is "One Hundred Million." He is about to begin on his second production, which also will be released next season.

Two special Lois Weber productions also will be released as Paramount pictures. Miss Weber has practically completed the first, details of which will be announced in the near future.

Not only will Paramount pictures carry the work and personality of these famous stars and directors, but they also will continue to be enriched by the artistry of a number of well-known supporting players, whose names have come to stand for the best in motion picture art. In the supporting casts of Paramount pictures next year will be seen such sterling artists as Elliott Dexter, Theodore Roberts, who probably will play the leading role in "The Old Homestead"; Jack Holt, Conrad Nagel, Lila Lee, Margaret Loomis, Viola Daniels, Conrad Nagel, Monte Blue, Walter Hiers, Jack Mulhall, Clyde Fillmore, Jack Holt, Mabel Julienne Scott, Lois Wilson, Harrison Ford, David Powell and Theodore Kosloff.

All of Barrie's Works.

Not only, however, has the production department already produced a number of plays scheduled for next fall, but it also has a great reservoir of photoplay material which includes some of the world's best best known books and plays.

Included in this material are all of the works of Sir James M. Barrie, including such favorites as "Peter Pan," "What Every Woman Knows" and "The Little Minister." "Peter Pan," Maude Adams' greatest success, originally was played in London by Pauline Chase and is revived in England every Christmas. Last year Georgette Cohan, the talented daughter of George M. Cohan, appeared as "the boy who never grew up." Miss Adams also made popular on the American stage that other great Barrie play, "The Little Minister." "What Every Woman Knows" also is stamped with the Adams reputation and artistry.

Among the other properties owned and scheduled for production by Famous Players are:

"The Secret Orchard," Channing Pollock's dramatization of the novel by Agnes and Edgerton Castle, a production of which was made several years ago under the direction of William DeMille, with Blanche Sweet in the leading role.

"Brewster's Millions," George Barr McCutcheon's novel, which was a pronounced stage success with Edward Abeles in the leading role and which will be filmed with Roscoe Arbuckle as the harried millionaire.

"The Witching Hour," Augustus Thomas' play, a story of the occult, which as a play with John Mason in the leading role enjoyed one of the most successful runs of any drama from the pen of that playwright.

"The Conquest of Canaan," one of Booth Tarkington's earliest and most successful novels.

"Free Air," a Saturday Evening Post story by Sinclair Lewis.

"The Husbands of Edith," a story by George Barr McCutcheon.

Du Maurier's "Peter Ibbetson."

"Peter Ibbetson," Du Maurier's novel, which in its dramatic form was one of the most successful pieces in which John and Lionel Barrymore have appeared, and which has been one of the successes of the London season with Constance Collier in the same part she played in the New York production.

"The Great Day," a Drury Lane melodrama by George R. Sims and Louis Napoleon Parker, the latter the author of "Pomander Walk," "Disraeli" and "Joseph and His Brethren."

"Toujours de L'Audace," a Saturday Evening Post story by Ben Ames Williams.

"The Quarry," a novel by John A. Moroso.

"Easy Street," a short story by Blair Hall, originally published in Snappy Stories.

"The Night Hawk," the dramatization of Edgar Jepson's novel by Norrall and Mérivale, produced in 1912 at the Globe Theatre, London.

"Camille," Dumas' perennial favorite, which has served as a starring vehicle for the world's greatest actresses more often than any other play.

"Old Chester" Story.

"Good for the Soul," a story by Margaret Deland appearing in "Old Chester Tales."

"Her Own Money," a comedy by Mark Swan, which was produced by Withrop Ames, owner of the Little Theatre.

"Is Matrimony a Failure," the adaptation of a German comedy by Leo Ditrichstein, which had a long run when produced in New York by David Belasco.

"The Mythical Millionaire," by Max Marcin, author of "The House of Glass" and "Cheating Cheaters."

"The New York Idea," Longdon Mitchell's satire, which was one of the greatest successes of Minnie Maddern Fiske and her Manhattan company.

"The Sixty-first Second," Owen Johnson's novel.

"The Curse of Wealth," a story by Cosmo Hamilton, and an original story by Hector Turnbull to be produced by Cecil B. DeMille.

In addition to these works of famous novelists and dramatists, Mr. Lasky also has assembled a staff of writers and artists who will work directly for the screen.

Penrhyn Stanlaws Engaged.

Notable among these is Penrhyn Stanlaws, one of the best known illustrators and painters in America, who, it was announced this week, will give up his brush forever to study the motion picture under Mr. Lasky's direction.

Among the novelists and dramatists who are writing for Paramount Pictures are Hector Turnbull, author of "The Cheat," critic and magazine writer; Rita Weiman, author of "The Acquittal," a successful Broadway play of this season; Julien Josephson, who wrote many of the successful Charles Ray pictures; Cosmo Hamilton, author of "Scandal," "The Blindness of Virtue" and numerous other novels and plays; Nina Wilcox Putnam, whose stories in the Saturday Evening Post and other publications have made her one of the most widely read short story writers in America; Roi Cooper Megrue, author of "It Pays to Advertise" and numerous other successful plays; Max Marcin, the well known playwright; Mann Page and Izola Forrester, well known writers for the screen; Byron Morgan, Frank Condon, Will Ritchie, Ouida Bergere, Clara Beranger, Jeanne MacPherson, Beulah Marie Dix, Olga Printzlau, and others who have proved themselves to be the leaders in writing directly for the screen.

Charles Ray's October Release

Charles Ray in "An Old Fashioned Young Man"—story and scenario by Agnes Christine Johnston—will be one of the October releases. In this Thomas H. Ince production Ray plays the role of a youth who has the old-fashioned ideas of love, marriage and home. This picture is replete with the wholesome, genuine small-town atmosphere for which Ray pictures have come to be so distinctive and popular. Jerome Storm directed and the production has the unique distinction of having been filmed without an iris, or "fade-out."

Two Excellent Views of Mae Murray's Special Paramount Production to Be Released in September.

Three New Branches Make Total Thirty Distributing Centers for Paramounts

WITHIN the past year the Famous Players-Lasky department of distribution, under the direction of Al Lichtman, its general manager, has opened three new branch exchanges, the better to handle the rapidly increasing volume of business and give even better and quicker service to Paramount exhibitors than in the past. These new exchanges are located at Charlotte, N. C., Oklahoma City, Okla., and Albany, N. Y. Another is in immediate contemplation at Indianapolis, Ind., and it will be opened for business just as soon as a suitable location in that city can be obtained.

This will make a total of thirty branch offices in the United States, splendidly manned and thoroughly equipped for the rapid and efficient distribution of Paramount pictures and the accessories which are the usual stock in trade of the film exchange.

In addition to these new offices in this country there was organized during the year in Canada a new Canadian distribution organization known as Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd., with George W. Weeks as general manager, and W. A. Bach as assistant general manager. The headquarters of this organization, which is directly connected with the Famous Players-Lasky distribution and is under the jurisdiction of Mr. Lichtman, are in Toronto, with branch offices in Montreal, St. John, N. B., Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

The territory served by the new Oklahoma City exchange embraces all of the State of Oklahoma except ten counties in the southeastern part; the northwestern portion of the state of Arkansas and the Panhandle of Texas. A large number of thriving cities are included in this territory, which has a total white population of nearly two millions.

Seidleman Heads Albany Branch.

The Charlotte territory contains a white population of 1,750,000 and embraces all the state of North Carolina, a big share of South Carolina and the northeastern section of Tennessee. Both of these exchanges are in the southern district, the executive offices of which are in Atlanta. Leslie Wilkes is manager of the Oklahoma City branch, and David Prince is in charge at Charlotte.

The Albany office, just recently opened, is located at 33 Orange street in the Capitol City and serves a large section of eastern, central and northern New York which was formerly taken care of by the New York and Buffalo exchanges. The manager is Joseph Seidleman, who was connected for a long time with the New York exchange.

Details as to the new Indianapolis exchange will be forthcoming as the plans change will be forthcoming as soon as the plans are completed.

Creates General Service Branch.

The big organization over which General Manager Lichtman presides is as near perfect in its operation as human ingenuity can make it. Under Sales Manager Sidney R. Kent, the sales force has increased the volume of business tremendously. The idea that the duty of the personnel is not to produce revenue for the organization but also to render real service to exhibitors has been kept constantly in the foreground.

To this end the office of general service manager has been created and Frank V. Chamberlin has been appointed to the position. Mr. Chamberlin has been connected with the department for several years in various positions of responsibility and with him in charge Paramount exhibitors have already learned that Paramount service now has a larger meaning than ever before.

William S. Hart Will Make Nine Great Western Photodramas for Paramount

THE first of William S. Hart's personal productions for Paramount special release, "The Toll Gate," has already established in the minds of the public and the exhibitors the high quality of the pictures the western star and producer has planned for his output. "Sand," the second of the nine great photodramas of western life, which Mr. Hart will make for Famous Players-Lasky, is a worthy successor to "The Toll Gate," and the third of the list, "The Cradle of Courage," though differing in theme considerably, is declared to be one of the most powerful screen plays ever enacted.

A fourth picture is completed but not yet titled, and the fifth is now in production. This leaves four more to be made, according to present plans.

Around his production activities William S. Hart has built up an organization of exceptional strength. The roster is as follows: E. H. Allen, manager; Lambert Hillyer, director, who also collaborates with Mr. Hart in many of the stories filmed; Joe August, A. S. C., head cameraman; Dwight Warren, second cameraman; Cal Hoffner, technical director; LeRoy Stone, film editor; Bennett Musson, screen editor; Paul Conlon, press representative, and William Curran, assistant director.

Mr. Hart chooses his casts from among the pick of screen players, and has been singularly successful in selecting types that were perfectly fitted to the roles. A new leading woman, Eva Novak, sister of Jane Novak, appears in the fourth and fifth productions made under the new schedule.

It is interesting to note that several of the coming pictures are from original stories by William S. Hart and Lambert Hillyer, who collaborated on "The Toll Gate" so successfully.

"There is little to add to what I have frequently said in regard to my associations with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and my own work in the production of photodramas," said Mr. Hart. "The best evidence of my feelings toward the organization is that when I signed the contract to make nine special pictures for Paramount I was besieged with offers and had money alone been the object of my endeavors I might have made even more profitable connections. But, happily, there is more in life to me than dollars and cents. The feeling that I might, figuratively speaking, wash my hands of the details of the business end of the matter and devote my entire time to acting, writing and producing, was one which decided me largely in my choice.

"As for my forthcoming productions, all I can say is that I shall strive to the utmost to make each one better than the last. I may not always succeed, but if not, it will not be for lack of effort. I may say, confidently, however, that my next two pictures, which have not yet been named, to my mind are among the finest I have ever done."

To Show All Paramount Films Long in Advance of Their Release Dates

By AL LICHTMAN
General Manager of the Distribution Department of Famous Players-Lasky

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release in the season of 1920-1921 at least 104 feature productions, at the rate of two each week, beginning on September 5.

Forty per cent. of these negatives are now completed. Before July 1 more than twenty-five per cent. of these productions will be on their way to the exchanges so that exhibitors can review them.

The plan for booking these productions will be so elastic that they will be available to every exhibitor who wants a steady supply of big pictures for his patrons.

A large amount of capital is tied up in these Paramount pictures, but the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is ready to forego immediate returns and in order that it may establish a policy of giving every exhibitor an opportunity to see a picture before he books it and to allow him sufficient time to prepare an exploitation campaign and a supporting program based upon personal knowledge of features he is going to give his public.

Will Show Pictures Long Before Release.

All productions throughout the year will be shown to exhibitors several months before release date.

Success can come to exhibitor, distributor and producer only through a consistent supply of good pictures, intelligently presented and properly exploited, and one of the greatest necessities is plenty of time for the preparation of everything that goes into the making of a successful showing. Our producing department is taking all the time needed for making perfect pictures and now, under the new plan, we are giving the exhibitor, in turn, the advance information necessary for him to present these pictures with the careful attention that is due them.

The producing organization that has in the past given the exhibitor of Paramount pictures the dominating position in his community is the same organization that has already completed pictures that are as fine, perhaps even finer, than the best that have ever been delivered to exhibitors from our studios.

We shall ask exhibitors to judge completed productions, not promised productions, and shall rise or fall by their judgment and by that of the great public that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through the exhibitor, has so well served in the past.

New Orleans and New York Night Life Blend in Films

ACTUAL events in which practically the whole world is interested and atmospheric locale that never fails to charm are two important factors in the Paramount production of "A Winter City Favorite," written by Charles Belmont Davis, brother of the late Richard Harding Davis, which will be released in November, with Dorothy Dalton as the fascinating heroine.

This is the third production the star has made since she signed her new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It is also the third production in which Harley Knoles has been her director. Rosina Henley was the scenarist of "A Winter City Favorite."

Miss Dalton plays a girl from her teens to her early twenties and gets over the psychological and physical changes with thorough understanding.

Miss Dalton is given a fine chance to put all her exuberant spirits into the characterization of the young girl. In the scenes with the dancing pupils of her father she is especially attractive, both in her classical costume and in her effervescence. The opportunities for intense dramatic action, in which Miss Dalton has proven herself to be superior, are manifold in the latter part of the production. Not only does the star display her ability as a dancer, but also she does some fine swimming.

The cast of the production is par excellence. Miss Dalton's leading man is Charles Meredith, both well known on the stage and screen. Augusta Anderson, Ivo Dawson, Howard Lang, Robert Schable, John Ardizoni and Lewis Broughton have important roles.

Entirely New Theme and Strong Cast Feature De Mille's Next Super-Special

A VIVID, virile story with a theme standing out in striking contrast to "Why Change Your Wife?," "Male and Female," "Don't Change Your Husband" and any of his previous successes marks "Something to Think About," the first Cecil B. DeMille super special for Paramount during the coming season, is to be released in October.

For the first time in recent years Mr. DeMille has left out the society background for a plot and turned his attention to a human, gripping story of the country. The delicate touches of married life which formed the groundwork of the DeMille domestic dramas and the lavish sumptuousness which made "Male and Female" the most talked of picture of the past few years have both been supplanted by a new facet of the DeMille genius.

Exhibitors who have found the advance notices of previous DeMille pictures more than upheld by record-breaking attendances have another opportunity, it is said, to realize upon the unusual treatment of "Something to Think About." The idea of right thinking furnishes the basic idea for the story.

Supporting Mr. DeMille's direction and an unusually fascinating story is a cast of extraordinary merit, marked especially by the return of Elliott Dexter in the leading male role. Gloria Swanson, who had the leading feminine role opposite Elliott Dexter in "For Better, for Worse," has a similar capacity in "Something to Think About." Theodore Roberts has one of the most difficult parts of his long career in the part of Luke Anderson.

Others in the cast are Monte Blue, Claire McDowell, Mickey Moore, Julia Faye, James Mason, Theodore Kosloff and Togo Yammamato. "Something to Think About" is an original story by Jeanie Macpherson.

Showmen Praise National Advertising Policy of Famous Players Corporation

THE name of Paramount pictures is universally known. For six years it has been constantly before the public, spread across the length and breadth of the United States in a most ingenious, a most carefully planned, a most widespread and a most successful campaign.

When the policy of nationally advertising Paramount pictures was first inaugurated many pronounced it a foolish waste of money. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were expended the first two years. Rival producers and distributors declared that the plan never would succeed because it carried no direct appeal to the exhibitors. But Famous Players-Lasky has kept on, each year increasing its appropriation and increasing its space in the national magazines, building up from week to week, month to month and year to year, an ever-multiplying clientele for the motion picture and selling, coincidentally, Paramount pictures to that clientele.

A Most Successful Plan.

That this policy has been most successful needs no further proof, Famous Players-Lasky officials hold, than that furnished by the fact that American exhibitors are now taking in an annual gross revenue, according to Government statistics, of approximately eight hundred million dollars and that something like eleven thousand theatres in the United States are now numbered among Famous Players-Lasky customers.

Aside from the straight human appeal of the copy, which is prepared by some of the most expert copy writers in the country, there are two big elements which have made the Famous Players-Lasky national advertising a decisive factor in bringing about the results cited in the paragraph above. One is the fact that the campaign has been continuous from the time of its inauguration. The other is the slogan, always implied if not directly stated: "Look for the Paramount or Artcraft trademark.'

"Keeping everlastingly at it brings success" is the motto which has guided the Famous Players-Lasky policy. Intermittent advertising never sold a constant product.

On every sheet of poster advertising, on every lobby display, on every newspaper mat or cut advertising Paramount pictures the identifying word "Paramount" is conspicuous, thus linking every theatre playing Paramount pictures with the national advertising campaign.

The recognition of the value of the Paramount name and its enhancement through the Paramount national advertising is rapidly becoming universal among exhibitors. Concrete evidence of this recognition is constantly being brought by letter to the attention of Famous Players-Lasky executives. Within the past thirty days attesting letters have come, unsolicited, to the home office.

Unsolicited Praise.

For example, Elwyn M. Simons, of the New Family Theatre, Adrian, Michigan, wrote as follows:

"I liked your advertisement, 'The Luxury of Being Certain,' so well that I could not help writing that these advertisements you people are printing in your national advertising are bringing me lots of money. When your first ads began to appear I saw the advantage I would hold over any future competitors if my theatre were known in Adrian as 'The Paramount-Artcraft Picture House.' Consequently I started in five years ago to use that trademark in all my ads. To tell you the story of the results obtained by using 'A Paramount Artcraft Picture' would be relating my success in the motion picture business here. . . . So continue the splendid work. I think so much of your advertising and tying up my advertising with yours that from now on to the end of the year I am planning to book only your pictures as fast as they are released. . . . I don't worry any more about the rent because I own my own home and a summer bungalow and an automobile and am financially interested in many undertakings. I am the same business man today that I was when I didn't have a nickel, only wiser and better off. That tie-up with your national advertising made for me all the money I have today."

Ed C. Paull, head of the Gus Sun Amusement Company's string of theatres in Ohio, wrote:

"The Paramount-Artcraft pictures trademark is absolutely necessary in promoting good pictures. In fact, it is the trademark that stands Paramount."

J. L. Johnston, of the Lyric Theatre, Minneapolis, writes that in booking up his theatre's advertising for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" with the Saturday Evening Post advertising of the same production he added a big asset to his theatre's publicity. All the Lyric advertising carried a small box statement as follows:

"This is the photoplay you have seen advertised in the Saturday Evening Post and other national magazines."

Showmen Get Big Benefits.

C. F. McElravy, general manager of Memphis Enterprises, Inc., who has general supervision over the affairs of seven of the leading theatres in Memphis, Tenn., wrote:

"As the advertising end of our particular business is in all possibility one of the most essential today, I wish to take this opportunity of saying a word in reference to the extensive national advertising done by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. There is little doubt in my mind that it is one great thing by which every live wire exhibitor may receive great benefits if he takes advantage of the opportunities afforded by this national advertising. For instance, we know that the large number of magazines in which the Famous Players-Lasky are running advertisements are read by millions of people. The writer feels that a certain percentage of these millions are in Memphis, and that by using the name 'Famous Players-Lasky' or 'Paramount Pictures' in local advertisements there are more or less benefits derived from it, for the simple reason that practically every man, woman and child has heard or read of the name 'Paramount.' I do not hesitate to say that every exhibitor doing as we have done and are doing will find it of material benefit to his business."

And Phil Gleichman, manager of the Broadway Strand, Detroit, wrote in part to President Adolph Zukor as follows:

"At the beginning of the season I made a contract with your sales department for fifty-two weeks of Paramount-Artcraft pictures at higher rentals than we have ever before paid for pictures, and although the great majority of these pictures have been away above par I firmly believe that the consistent use of your trademark and the statement that 'This is a Paramount-Artcraft picture' has done more to put the pic tures over than anything else, and with th result that the poorest week this season has been several hundred dollars better than the best week heretofore.

"I firmly believe from the success we have had this season that we could advertise 'now showing a Paramount-Artcraft picture' without mentioning star or title and do a very satisfactory business."

Estimate 50,000,000 Readers.

An approximate circulation of 12,000,000, with readers conservatively estimated at 50,000,000, has been reached at regular intervals through the past year by the Famous Players-Lasky national advertising. Including the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal, Country Gentleman, Pictorial Review, Woman's Home Companion, Collier's, Christian Herald, American Magazine, Red Book, Motion Picture Classic, Photoplay, Picture-Play, Motion Picture Magazine, Film Fun, Photoplay World, Photo Play Journal, Theatre, Vanity Fair, Shadowland, Boys' Magazine, St. Nicholas, Boys' Life, American Boy and Lone Scout, the list of publications is a truly imposing one. All advertising in these magazines is of full-page dimensions.

Supplementing this space special full-page advertisements of individual pictures have been run in those magazines in which the stories originally appeared, as for instance, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," by Hall Caine, in Hearst's; "The Miracle Man," by Frank L. Packard, in Munsey's; "The Dark Star," by Robert W. Chambers, in Cosmopolitan and "The Dark Mirror," in McCalls. Moreover, at various times, specialized circulation has been gained for individual productions through the utilization of so-called class publications. For instance, every educational magazine of importance was used in the special advertising of "The Copperhead."

Future Productions of Famous Players to Prove Value of Sound Organization

By JESSE L. LASKY
First Vice-President in Charge of Production

THE motion picture has reached a state that demands organization—the big, intricate, highly specialized organization, which alone is capable of producing the type of photoplays that please the public and are successful at the box office.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has this organization. Famous Players-Lasky has it because the men at the head of this corporation long ago had the vision to see that the day was coming when the public would demand that producers produce photoplays and not merely manufacture movies. The production department of the corporation did not spring into being over night; it is the fruition of years of patient toil, eternal vigilance, alertness to the constant growth of the motion picture art, and the combined efforts of a corps of men and women who have blended the best talent and genius of the new art with a fine loyalty to an ideal.

Only such an organization, backed by resources which place every possible facility and aid in the hands of directors and stars, is capable of producing the newer and finer type of pictures which the season now closing has so conclusively shown to be what the public wants.

Twenty-five Four Months in Advance.

Only such an organization could have ready—in exchanges waiting to be shown to exhibitors—the really notable list of photoplays we now have on hand for the coming season. It is by means of this organization that we have been able to produce twenty-five pictures four months in advance of the opening of the season, September 1.

The best promise which the production department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation can make for the next year is the twenty-five pictures which have already been made. These pictures include such sterling photoplays as George Fitzmaurice's special production, "The Right to Love"; the Elsie Ferguson picture, "Lady Rose's Daughter"; Thomas Meighan in "Civilian Clothes"; Roscoe Arbuckle in "The Round-Up"; a wonderful new William S. Hart picture, "The Cradle of Courage," and "Something to Think About," which, I am assured, is one of the best pictures Cecil B. DeMille ever made.

Just as the public has now come to discriminate between good and mediocre photoplays—and discriminate by reading motion picture advertising—so the motion picture has grown to a point that demands infinitely more than a director, a camera and a star. And the new season beginning on September 1 marks the crossroads where exhibitors and producers must elect whether they want to climb the road to better pictures or make the easy descent along the other road to mediocrity, oblivion and bankruptcy.

Public Wants Big Specials.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's production department will continue on the high road. It is our plan to make 104 pictures during the coming year—and every one of these productions will be given all the care and skill and thought that long experience and the best of production genius can supply.

That the public wants the big, special production was established this year, not only to our satisfaction, but also to the satisfaction and profit of the thousands of exhibitors who were foresighted enough to book such splendid Paramount productions as George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man"; Cecil B. DeMille's wonderful productions, "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife"; George Melford's "Everywoman," "The Sea Wolf," George Fitzmaurice's "On with the Dance," "The Copperhead" and that remarkable photoplay, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

In the season 1920-21 is is our intention to develop this policy of big special productions. Specials will be produced in the ratio of two to every four Paramount pictures made. And the making of these specials will be in the hands of such masters as Cecil B. DeMille, George Fitzmaurice, George H. Melford, William D. Taylor, who made "Huckleberry Finn," William DeMille and other prominent directors, whose names will be announced later.

"A Vast Invisible Force."

Back of every one of our directors, back of every one of our stars, is a vast invisible force of writers, artists, technicians. Experience has shown that even the best directors cannot do their best work while burdened with the cares and innumerable duties of business. Their task is to make pictures, and they cannot produce the best pictures unless the multiplicity of details are removed and placed in the hands of an organization. Thus the organization we have built up assures the exhibitors the very best work of the artists assembled for the production of Paramount pictures.

Moreover, the photoplay material which we place in the hands of our directors and stars is not the output of hack writers. We have a big reservoir of novels, short stories and stage plays, the work of recognized writers, which enables us to choose only the very best material for our artists.

Great Producing Activities.

Our studio facilities have been enlarged to such an extent in the last year to surpass even the imagination of the men who started this art. The new season will see us producing pictures in Hollywood, in the new $2,000,000 studio in Long Island City, in our new studio in London and in our new studio about to be built in Bombay, India. Every one of these studios is of such magnitude and is so well equipped as to afford the greatest possible resources for directors and artists.

The new eastern studio in Long Island City, for instance, will allow eight companies to work on its stages at the same time. In the London studio only big special productions will be made, with English casts, in English settings. This will bring a new and utterly distinctive note to the screens of America. But the most far reaching studio development of the coming season will be the production of pictures in our new studio in Bombay, affording as it does the production of photoplays in a picturesque land that is virgin territory to the motion picture director.

This is what I mean by production organization. This is what I mean when I say that successful photoplays cannot be made on promises and publicity. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's production organization, like its distributing system, is world-wide. It has the resources and the facilities to bring to the screens of American exhibitors the very best photoplays that can be produced anywhere in the world, and in the season of 1920-21 it is our intention to use this vast production organization to the utmost of its powers, to the end that exhibitors will be able to promise their patrons the very best in motion picture art.

Washburn's "Burglar Proof" Is Full of Excellent Comedy

EVERYBODY in town was at the station waiting for the train that would take them all on their annual excursion to Crystal Springs. That is, everybody was there but Johnny. Johnny's best girl was there, of course, all dressed up. But the train came in and no Johnny. Then, a minute before the train pulled out, Johnny came sprinting up to the station and explained that he couldn't take Jenny after all: he was broke.

And that's how Bryant Washburn loses his girl at the very star of his November Paramount picture, "Burglar Proof." Jenny (Grace Morse) is a good looking girl and another swain comes along to whom five dollars is no object. So Jenny goes and Johnny gets left.

Special interest attaches to this production because it is the first motion picture directed by Major Maurice Campbell, well known stage director. Major Campbell spent six months at the Lasky studios studying the technique of the films under such directors as William DeMille before he undertook "Burglar Proof." The result is one of the best Washburn comedies yet made.

Lois Wilson, one of the most charming of leading women, plays opposite Washburn. Tom Geraghty did the scenario from William Slavens McNutt's story.

New Studios Increase to Marked Degree Famous Players Production Facilities

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, a leader in production since the earliest days of motion pictures, today stands at the beginning of a new era in film production. With the opening of its new $2,000,000 studio in Long Island City, the completion of its elaborate studio in London, the development of large studios and laboratories in Bombay, India, and the constant improvement of its West Coast plant in Hollywood, the corporation finds itself in possession of facilities for producing photoplays of a high quality and a wide diversity of appeal.

Unique among structures of its kind, the new Famous Players plant in Long Island City, which will be in operation next season, represents the best efforts of specialists and experts in motion picture production working in combination with leading engineers in the fields of construction, lighting, heating and ventilation. In it, the eastern production activities of the organization, now scattered through four studios, will be housed under one roof, thereby bringing all departments into close touch, and consequently making for a readier maintenance of the high production standard which the corporation has set for itself.

Architecturally Interesting.

Architectually the new studio is one of the most interesting buildings in the metropolitan area, its exterior suggesting a railway terminal rather than the home of a business concern. An imposing entrance, flanked by four great columns, carries out the impression. Turning away from the familiar type of studio with its glass roof and sides, the huge building is well lighted by many windows and a row of glazed openings in the story close to the roof. Its principal lighting, especially for production work, will be by an elaborate electric plant, so complete and involving the use of so great a current that the installation of a sub-station, which will allow 7,600 volts of alternating current to be received from the central station, has been necessary.

Seventy-six hundred-volt synchronous motor-generator sets will apply the direct current for the studio lighting. The general lighting and power will be obtained from a step-down transformer connected to the 7,600 volt primaries.

New Lighting Control System.

Another departure from convention is to be found in the direct current feeder system for lighting the studio stage, designed to supply 10,000 amperes to the main studio at present, which later will be increased to 15,000 amperes. In this feeder system alone 20,000 pounds of copper are used.

This system will feed ten overhead remote switchboards, each of which can be controlled by the cameraman or director from any point on the studio floor by means of a special portable control station which may be hung on a man's belt. Remote control, of this sort, will eliminate the confusion which accompanies the signals for "lights" and delays the work of a director and his players.

The main studio floor in the new building measures 120 by 228 feet. Above it rises a dome roof which does away with the necessity of supports, leaving the entire space clear for the construction of sets. Grouped about this floor are the departments actually concerned in the making of the picture.

Art and Decoration Department.

Here is located the art and decoration department, whose work in the designing and construction of exterior sets and the adaptation of innumerable styles of architecture and decoration has done much to establish the standard of Paramount Pictures. In connection with this department there is maintained a large reference library which is being constantly increased.

Adjacent to this department is the carpenter shop and the assembling room, separated from the stage by huge sliding doors of such size as to permit the moving in and out of completed sets. These doors are designed to prevent the noise attendant on the construction of sets from reaching the stage and interrupting the work of the stars and the directors.

Across from the carpenter shop is the scene dock for the painting of scenery and backgrounds and here, too, are the cameramen's lockers. Other offices and dressing rooms surround the four sides of the main stage.

Below the main stage is another stage of the same size, about which are grouped the lighting, heating and ventilation plants, the restaurant and the property and paint rooms. On this stage, which is broken by the supports of the main stage set forty feet apart, will be constructed the smaller sets.

Miniature Theatre on Main Studio Floor.

On the main studio floor there is a magnificent miniature theatre, designed for the use of executives of the corporation and for special showings of featured pictures; the seating capacity is about fifty on the orchestra floor and a balcony has been provided for any overflow or for an orchestra.

Offices on Mezzanine Floor.

On the mezzanine floor of the building are the offices of Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky, a board room, private offices for directors, cutting, assembling and projection rooms. The still department, which is equipped with the most up-to-date apparatus for turning out 10,000 still photographs a day, occupies the entire rear floor.

On the second floor is the scenario department and library, and elaborate suites for stars, including reception room, secretary's room, dressing room, bath room and several large closets. Smaller dressing rooms for extras and separate rooms with baths for those playing prominent roles are also on this floor. The wardrobe department, too, will occupy a large space on the second floor as will the purchasing department.

F. E. Meyer Built Laboratory.

The rear of the studio, which opens on a lot upon which exterior sets will be built, is equipped with ramps, leading from each side street to a loading platform accessible to both the main and lower stages.

In another large building occupying the street front across from the city block which the studio proper fills, is the new laboratory, designed by and equipped under the personal supervision of Frank E. Meyer, assistant secretary of the corporation. In this building will be housed the work of four laboratories, two in New York and two in New Jersey, in which the developing and printing of all Paramount pictures made in the East is now being done.

In addition to office space and a complete research laboratory, the building will contain two separate and distinct laboratories. On the first floor six developing machines of the latest type, with a capacity of 30,000 feet of finished film an hour, have been installed under the supervision of the Spoor-Thompson Company. The printed film is inserted at one end of the machine and comes out at the opposite end thoroughly developed, washed, dried, polished, tinted and ready for shipment.

London Plant Most Efficient.

A remarkable air-conditioning plant has been installed in the building which will make it possible to keep the temperature at any point desired. By this method it is expected to keep the output of prints constantly up to 100 per cent. efficiency so that 3,000,000 feet of film a week can be turned out regularly. A complete renovating plant will also be installed so that all films may b constantly kept in perfect shape.

The London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., in which Paramount Pictures with British casts will be made, has been hailed by experts as one of the most complete and best equipped studios in the world. It compares favorably with the largest American studios, sufficient room having been provided on two stages for the filming of five large productions at one time.

Every modern convenience for the comfort of the large staff of workers has been installed. The office of the casting director is near the main entrance and the office of General Manager Milton E. Hoffman and his staff are also located here.

"What's Your Hurry—"Little Miss Rebellion?" We Ask.

Scene 1 shows Wally Reid in the title first quoted, while pouting Dorothy Gish is seen in "Little Miss Rebillion." Both to appear under the Paramount banner.

Beyond these offices are the quarters of the costume department, the paint shop and the stage, 110 feet by sixty-five feet.

The Bombay Studio.

Twenty-two dressing rooms, each with a private bath, a model projection room, and other features have been provided. The studio will use more electric power than the entire tram service of Islington, the district in which it is located.

The recent announcement that the corporation, in conjunction with a syndicate of British and Indian bankers, would soon begin the production of motion pictures in Bombay, India, for distribution throughout the Indian Empire and other countries of the Far East, marks one of the most important and far-reaching developments in the history of the motion picture. The name of this newest subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., and it begins its operations with a paid-in capital of $3,000,000.

Arrangements are being made for the erection of a mammoth studio and laboratory in Bombay, the principal city of the Indian Empire, where the most approved American methods of picture production will be introduced by American experts. Not only will Paramount pictures be produced in a Paramount studio in India, but they will also be distributed through a system of Paramount exchanges modeled after the efficient exchange system in this country.

Frank Meyer, who has been in charge of the construction and real estate division of the corporation, and Tarkington Baker have already sailed to begin work on the Indian project. Mr. Meyer will erect the studio and Mr. Baker will remain in India as the general Indian representative.

Five years ago the Lasky studio at Hollywood occupied the building which, recently, was too small for the properties of the present studio. Today the Lasky studio has four stages covering a floor space of 47,000 square feet. The studio lots cover ten acres and the plant also includes a ranch of 1,200 acres where exteriors are taken, great laboratories, mills and manufacturies of all kinds.

With all of its studios and their equipment as near perfection as modern ingenuity and research has been able to make them, and with a force of directors and players, each of whom has made a name in his or her individual field, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is looking confidently forward to setting still higher standards for Paramount pictures than it has attained in the past.

Famous Players-Lasky Cites Several Noteworthy Achievements of Past Year

THE year 1919-20 has been the biggest in Famous Players-Lasky history in many ways, but probably the outstanding feature has been the number of big productions released and the sensational box-office successes scored by them wherever they have been shown. In fact, so successful has this policy of "big pictures" proved that it has been decided to concentrate more and more on the production and distribution of features of this character.

The month of September furnished an indication of what exhibitors might expect as the result of the adoption of the big pictures policy. The first two releases were "The Witness for the Defense" and "The Valley of the Giants." Then came George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man."

October offered among other big attractions Maurice Tourneur's "The Life Line" and the Houdini feature, "The Grim Game." Then, in November, came Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female." In passing mention should be made of "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave," which introduced Thomas H. Ince's co-stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May.

December brought the Ince Special, "Behind the Door," starring Hobart Bosworth. Then came George Melford's "Everywoman," with its wonderful all-star cast headed by Violet Homing, Theodore Roberts and Wanda Hawley.

The outstanding feature of January was "The Copperhead," starring Lionel Barrymore in the elaborate screen version of Augustus Thomas' great play. In February came George Fitzmaurice's "On with the Dance," and William D. Taylor's production of Mark Twain's immortal "Huckleberry Finn."

"Treasure Island" Arrives.

Following Elsie Ferguson in "His House in Order," released among others in March, April brought the Robert Louis Stevenson masterpieces, "Treasure Island" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the former a Maurice Tourneur production and the latter furnishing John Barrymore the vehicle for his greatest dramatic triumph on either stage or screen. The same month saw the release of "The Toll Gate," a William S. Hart's first independent production as a Famous Players-Lasky star.

Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?" and George Melford's "The Sea Wolf," released in May, have just started on their careers and if present indications are borne out box office records are going to take a lot of beating before these films have run their courses in the theatres.

The above productions are cited as already proved box office successes which have justified the "big pictures" policy. For the remaining three months of the current year Paramount exhibitors are promised "more of the same," among others being the Thomas H. Ince special, "Below the Surface," featuring Hobart Bosworth, and William S. Hart in his second independent production, "Sand," scheduled for June; the big Cosmopolitan production, "The World and His Wife," in July, and "The Fighting Chance," William DeMille's "The Prince Chap," with Thomas Meighan, and Maurice Tourneur's "The Devil to Pay," in August.

Coming Season Will Be Greatest in Film Exports, Says Foreign Department Head

THE gradual improvements in exchange rates and indications that the nations of the world are succeeding in bringing about a satisfactory readjustment of business conditions on a peace basis give promise of a record-breaking increase in the film export business during the coming year, in the opinion of E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foregoing department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

World Trade Increasing.

"Despite the unsettled business conditions existing in the world the foreign business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has shown a big increase in the last year, and we expect a continuation of this record-breaking growth in the coming year," said Mr. Shauer, in discussing export conditions. "The international appeal of Paramount-Artcraft is indicated by the fact that it is becoming necessary to increase and improve our distributing facilities in all sections of the world to meet this demand. Much time and attention will be given to the improving of the distributing organization. The coming year undoubtedly will witness an important addition to the chain of foreign offices and allied organizations now supplying the world-wide demand for Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

Offices and distributing arrangements for Paramount-Artcraft are maintained in thirty foreign countries. This does not include the numerous agencies which are distributing these productions in other portions of the world. The coming year, it is expected, will witness an important growth in the chain of distributing offices now encircling the globe.

The foreign offices allied organizations for the distribution of Paramount-Artcraft pictures are as follows:

Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., distributing for Great Britain and Ireland, with offices in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Cardiff, Leeds, Newcastle and Dublin.

Studios in London and India Make Paramount Films International in Both Production and Distribution

AN event of international importance and one which will add greatly to the prestige of Paramount Pictures abroad is the completion of the large studios of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., in London. Production work already has been begun under the direction of Milton E. Hoffman, general manager of the Islington studio, and the coming year will witness the completion of a number of notable Paramount pictures in this new Paramount studio.

This is the first American studio to be built abroad and is the forerunner of other similar developments of vast significance to the world film industry. Announcement has already been made of the plan to build a large studio in Bombay, India, for the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., and other announcements of a similar nature may be expected during the coming year. During his recent visit to Europe President Adolph Zukor completed arrangements for the formation of producing companies in France, Belgium, Spain, Scandinavia, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland. These various corporations, with an aggregate capital of approximately $15,000,000, will begin the erection of studios and the work of production as soon as conditions are found to be ripe. This time, it is believed, will soon come, as Europe is giving its serious attention to the work of readjusting itself to peace conditions.

To Use American Methods.

Modern American methods of filming productions will be utilized in these foreign producing units, which will some day completely encircle the earth, according to present expectations. British artists and technical experts will be employed largely in the London studio, the director, artists, cameramen and others being given a period of training under American experts. The works of the foremost British writers will be produced in the locations actually selected by the author or described in his story, the studio being the hub of producing activities which will include all of Great Britain and possible frequent excusions to France and other nearby countries for exterior scenes.

The first production to be filmed in Londone will be "The Great Day," the Drury Lane success which attracted international attention in stage circles some years ago. A cast of famous British players will be used in filming this production, which will be staged on a lavish scale. The release of this picture in America some time during the coming year will do much to bring about a better relationship between the film industries of Great Britain and America, in the opinion of officials of the corporation.

Lasky Plans London Program.

The fact that Hugh Ford is to direct this first American-British production is evidence of the care and attention which will be given to the making of this ambitious Paramount picture. Mr. Ford had much experience as a director and producer on the English stage before coming to America some years ago.

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president, has sailed to London to inspect the new studio and to assist in launching production work. It is expected that Mr. Lasky will map out the year's program for the new studio, which is to be under his charge.

During the last few months arrangements have been completed for the filming of the works of a number of notable British writers, and additions are expected to this list on Mr. Lasky's return to the United States. All of Sir James M. Barrie's successes, including "Peter Pan," "What Every Woman Knows" and "The Little Minister," have been obtained for filming as Paramount Artcraft pictures. Henry Arthur Jones' new play also is to be filmed by Paramount.

Three Great Producing Plants.

The British studio in which some of these stories will be filmed is one of the most modern and complete producing plants in the entire world and compares most favorably with the Lasky studio at Hollywood and the mammoth new Famous Players studio now nearing completion in Long Island City.

While it is too early to announce definite plans for the immense new studio to be erected at India, it is known that it is to be a producing plant which will compare most favorably with the London and American studios of the corporation.

Frank Meyer, assistant secretary of the company, who has had charge of the arrangements for the building of the New York City studio, has sailed for Bombay to begin the work of organizing this new producing unit, which will be under the general supervision of Mr. Lasky. The studio and laboratory will be in charge of American experts. Tarkington Baker, well known in film circles, will act as general Indian representative and will be in direct charge of the producing and distributing organizations which will be provided in India. These pictures will be released throughout the entire world and will be of the character having an international appeal. It is expected that the first will be released by Christmas.

"Crade of Courage" Shows William Hart in Varied Role

THE CRADLE OF COURAGE," William S. Hart's third picture under his new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, offers him one of the most varied roles of his career as well as one of the most unusual parts he has ever played. At different times in the action he appears as a soldier, a policeman, and, later, as the peaceful citizen of a seaport town.

Throughout the picture there are many incidents filled with stirring action. The scenes in the trenches, on board the army transport, the fight in the backroom of the water-front saloon, and the safe robbery, all lend themselves to the sort of acting in which Hart does his best work.

Ann Little is the leading woman in the new picture, playing a part which is as varied as the star's and which, at one point, requires her to appear disguised as a boy.

Here They Are—Every One Seems to Have a Mate But the Poor Fellow in the Scene at the Right.

Extensive Exploitation Is a Big Factor in the Success of Paramount Exhibitors

IF one were to pick out the most distinctive features of the year 1919-20 in motion pictures it undoubtedly would be the development of exploitation, or, to speak definitively, the application of expert showmanship to the exhibition of pictures. In this development Famous Players-Lasky has done a great deal.

The Famous Players-Lasky field exploitation force was organized last summer by Claud Saunders, exploitation manager, who as theatrical manager and expert showman with many years of experience is known practically in every city or town of 5,000 or more in the United States. At the outset Mr. Saunders placed twelve men in the field and so pronounced was the success of these that the number was increased after the beginning of the present calendar year, so that now there is an exploitation man working out of every Famous Players-Lasky branch exchange.

What the Force Does.

Stated in a few words, the duty of the exploitation field force is to enable exhibitors, through the employment of every conceivable, legitimate means, to increase their receipts from the showing of Paramount pictures. These men, trained in showmanship, bend their energies especially to the utilization of natural resources in publicity and exploitation, which exhibitors, for the most part, have neglected in the past. Their line of duty embraces the task of increasing the interest of local newspapers in motion pictures in general and especially in Paramount pictures; interesting other lines of business in seasonable and mutually advantageous tie-ups; and not only giving the exhibitors the benefit of his ideas and experience, but assisting him in carrying out and applying his own, all with the purpose of enabling him to make more money and to dominate his theatre's territory.

In choosing the men for these important posts the greatest care has been exercised. Practically every man has been conspicuously successful in some branch or other of the so-called show business. For instance, John P. Goring has been a theatrical producer, has managed road and stock companies and for the past six years has been engaged solely in the picture business as manager and as special exploiter of big feature productions.

Whelan Publicized Noted Singer.

Leslie F. Whelan for six years was engaged in special publicity work for high-class Lyceum attractions and for several noted operatic and concert singers, including John McCormack.

H. Wayne Pierson was for a long time advance agent for Cohan & Harris and other prominent theatrical firms and then exploited D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance."

Charles L. Winston, experienced at every desk in the editorial room of a big Boston daily, had also managed Keith theatres in Boston and other New York cities and had done a large amount of special picture exploitation.

Al G. Birch, with an early experience in the management of carnival and road shows, came to Famous Players-Lasky from the editorship of a Denver paper.

Entire Exploitation Personnel.

These are but few, cited to illustrate the calibre of the men who constitute the field force. The entire personnel, with the present assignments, follows: A. G. Birch, Denver; E. O. Child, Portland, Ore.; Frank A. Cassidy, Chicago; Norwan M. Dixon, Des Moines; Oscar A. Doob, Cincinnati; John P. Goring, Kansas City; John D. Howard, San Francisco; Benjamin Laskin, Charlotte; Walter Lindlar, Minneapolis; Elmer E. Rutter, Pittsburg; John C. McConville, Buffalo; Albert A. Nathan, New York; Paul L. Morgan, New Haven; Hal Oliver, Omaha; Eli M. Orowitz, Detroit; N. K. Parkhurst, Salt Lake City; Norman Peel, Oklahoma City; Herman Phillips, Washington; H. Wayne Pierson, Atlanta; Monte Rice, Los Angeles; Charles Raymond, St. Louis; Daniel Roche, Chicago; Wayland H. Taylor, Seattle; Fred Walters, Cleveland; Leslie F. Whelan, Dallas; Spencer G. Sladdin, Boston; Charles L. Winston, Philadelphia.

Exploitation has come to stay and, as in the present year, it will continue to be one of the biggest factors in keeping Paramount exhibitors in the van in the year 1920-21.

Dorothy Gish Plays Herself in F. P.-L's "Miss Rebellion"

DOROTHY GISH has, in "Little Miss Rebellion," released in September as her first Paramount picture of the coming season, a role exactly suited to her qualifications. "Little Miss Rebellion" will present Miss Gish in an entirely unconventional role, affording her an opportunity to appear in a wide variety of comedy situations.

Not the least of these comedy complications is a session with a stubborn mule, a fight in a den of Bolsheviks, a charge of Royal Cavalry, a baseball game with United States dough boys, a jazz ball, a restaurant scene and a raid on a pawn shop. The climax is a thoroughly amusing and typically Gish finish.

The story of "Little Miss Rebellion" was written by Harry Carr, war correspondent, magazine writer, city editor of the Los Angeles Times and at present editor of the scenario department of the D. W. Griffith studios. The scenario is by Well Hastings, who furnished Dorothy Gish with the story, "Turning the Tables." Mr. Hastings also wrote the scenario for "Romance" in which Doris Keane is appearing.

George Fawcett, for thirty years one of the finest character actors on the American stage, directed Miss Gish in this latest Paramount comedy. In her supporting company appear Ralph Graves, last seen in "Scarlet Days;" George Siegmann, remembered as Von Strohm, the villain in "Hearts of the World;" William Riley Hatch, Marie Burke, who has been with Miss Gish in several of her best films, and other players.

Pretty Grouping of a Trio of New Paramount Plays—A Variety of Action in Plays of Varied Themes.

Cecil B. DeMille's Plans Call for Bigger Productions Than His Past Successes

WITH the signing of his latest five-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Cecil B. DeMille and his productions become an assured part of the Paramount pictures for the forthcoming half-decade.

During the past two years Mr. DeMille has given to the screen some of the most powerful photodramas ever presented to the public. Such successes as "Old Wives for New," "For Better, for Worse," "Male and Female," and "Why Change Your Wife?" have been universally recognized as among the greatest screen achievemnts of that period.

Successful as his past efforts have been, Mr. DeMille's plans for the future promise even greater achievements. At the head of the list of these is his forthcoming production, "Something to Think About," heralded by those who have seen it in the making as the greatest of his long list of great photodramas.

Although it is impossible to name the future productions of the producer, Mr. DeMille has secured a number of stories for scenarization. The stories in question are from the pens of some of the best known American writers, including Salisbury Field, author of "Twin Beds" and "Wedding Bells"; Hector Turnbull, Jeanie MacPherson and others. He is also negotiating for the work of a famous British author whose name cannot be divulged, but whose works are known and appreciated by millions of English speaking readers.

Wide variety of theme is promised in all of these productions. Mr. DeMille has definitely abandoned the "series" plan of which "Old Wives for New," "Don't Change Your Husband," and "Why Change Your Wife?" form an illustration. In the future he plans to alternate, using stories of striking contrast in succession.

Approximately four special productions a year will be made, following the established Cecil B. DeMille schedule in this respect. This number is variable, it is understood, but the director-general does not expect to exceed that number.

Ethel Clayton as an Apache Dancer

Ethel Clayton appears in the novel role of an Apache dancer in her Paramount picture, "A City Sparrow," released in October. This marks a distinct departure for Miss Clayton, who has been appearing recently in stories of married life, notably, "The Thirteenth Commandment" and "Young Mrs. Winthrop."

Although Miss Clayton is unmarried in this picture, the theme of marriage plays a vital part in the production.

Sam Wood's direction is at its best in this story by Kate Jordon. Clara G. Kennedy did the scenario. Walter Hiers and Lillian Leighton bring a vein of comedy which is in effective contrast to the serous theme.

Billie Burke Has Strong Role

In "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," her next Paramount picture, adapted for the screen from the play by Clyde Fitch, Billie Burke finds a role with a far greater emotional appeal than any part she has yet played on the screen. The superficially frivolous Nell Johnson is at heart a very real woman, willing to make the great sacrifice—the loss of her good name—to save from disgrace the sister whom she love devotedly.

Taking place in Paris during the carnival season, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson" offers splendid opportunity for the reproduction of the atmospheric detail for which Clyde Fitch was famous.

Reid in Rapid-Fire Drama

Real romance in the form of a bulky motor truck lumbering along the highway at a 20 per crawl disproves the "nothing new beneath the sun" theory and provides a genuine thrill in "What's Your Hurry?" the picture starring Wallace Reid, which will be released in September.

In the role of Dusty Rhoades, daredevil speeder, to whom a motor truck means nothing, Wallace Reid finds a part which for thrills and exciting drama is worthy of his work in "Excuse My Dust," "Double Speed" and "The Roarin' Road" all Paramount pictures which are still fresh in exhibitors' memories for their box-office success. The new picture, however, is in no way a sequel to any of these.

The story was written by Byron Morgan and originally appeared in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "The Hippopotamus Parade." In addition to Wallace Reid the cast includes Lois Wilson, Charles Ogle, Clarence Burton and Ernest Butterworth. "What's Your Hurry" was directed by Sam Wood.

Ray in "The Village Sleuth"

"A typical Ray picture," aptly describes Charles Ray's new picture, "The Village Sleuth," from the Ince studios. This September release is from the pen of Agnes Christine Johnston and was directed by Jerome Storm. There is said to be more than the usual amount of comedy in this picture, the story hinging upon the consuming desire to be a detective which burns in the breast of William Wells, a farmer's son. Winifred Westover has the leading feminine role.

MacLean in "The Jailbird"

Douglas MacLean, Thomas H. Ince's popular young star, will be seen for the first time in a Julien Josephson story when "The Jailbird" is released in October. Under the direction of Loyd Ingraham, who handled the production of "What's Your Husband Doing?" Mr. MacLean in this picture is certain to find a still more secure place in the hearts of motion picture fans.

"Deep Waters" a November Release

Notable among the November Paramount releases will be "Deep Waters," Maurice Tourneur's production of F. Hopkinson Smith's best seller, "Caleb West, Master Driver." Jack Gilbert has written the scenario and a typical all-star Tourneur cast will be seen. The locale of the story is the New England Coast and the story deals with the building of a lighthouse.

Here They Are—Telling Glimpses of Three New Paramount Releases—The Locales Are Varied As May Be Seen Here.

Now Is the Time to Prepare!—These Are Just a Few Pre-Release Stills of Coming Paramount Pictures.

"Held by the Enemy" Becomes Screen Attraction This Fall

"HELD BY THE ENEMY," the Paramount production of William Gillette's war drama, will be released in October. For stirring scenes and excitment this stage play was famous and its screen version should be equally gripping.

In the memory of the men and women of North and South alike the story of the great struggle will never grow dim. "Held by the Enemy" brings to the screen the memories of those years in a strongly dramatic plot.

Coming from the pen of William Gillette, who has written and appeared in numerous stage successes, "Held by the Enemy" has every favorable auspice to augur success. "Secret Service" and "Too Much Johnson" have given an indication of what the Gillette authorship can accomplish under Paramount production. In the present instance, also, Mr. Gillette's play blossoms into production with the aid of a competent cast and under the guidance of Donald Crisp, who has to his credit such productions as "Why Smith Left Home," "Too Much Johnson" and "The Six Best Cellars."

Agnes Ayres, the original "O. Henry" girl of the screen, depicts a Southern beauty in the leading feminine role. Supporting her is Wanda Hawley, whose elevation to stardom has recently been announced. Jack Holt, versatile leading man, who won favorable comment in "The Life Line" and "Victory," has the chief male role.

Robert Cain plays the heavy, while Walter Hiers as a newspaper reporter of the Civil War period will provide the comedy touch. Others in the cast are Josephine Crowell, Lillian Leighton, Lewis Stone, Robert Brower and C. H. Geldart.

Big Laughs in "Charm School"

The perplexing complications of a debonair young man of town who suddenly finds that he has fallen heir to a young women's seminary furnish the laughs for "The Charm School" Wallace Reid's Paramount starring vehicle released in November. A breezy comedy plot with acting to match bring Wallace Reid to the screen again in the kind of picture he has made his own, the kind that audiences all over the country clamor for.

"The Charm School" is a story that has gained universal recognition within a short period. Published first as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post by Alice Duer Miller, it was shortly afterward turned into a play and is now on tour preparatory to its appearance on Broadway. It also has been published as a book. Within six months of the first appearance of the story the motion picture rights had also been bought and production work started.

Dorothy Dalton Will Open on Long Contract in September

DOROTHY DALTON, who has signed a long-term contract with Famous Players-Lasky, will make her debut as a Paramount star in Sir J. M. Barrie's "Half an Hour," which will be released in September. This play was first produced on the American stage in 1913 at the Lyceum Theatre with Grace George in the role of Lady Lillian, which is enacted on the screen by Miss Dalton. For a long time afterward Blanche Bates played the role in a vaudeville presentation.

Harley Knoles, who directed "The Cost" with Violet Heming and "Little Women," staged "Half an Hour." Adaptation was made by Clara Beranger, whose play "His Chinese Wife," on which she collaborated with Forest Halsey, is now running on the stage.

"Half an Hour" also serves to return to the screen Charles Richman, who plays the role of Richard Garson. Albert Barrett played lead with Robert Mantell. Frank Losee plays Dr. Brodie.

H. Cooper Cliffe, the original "Nobody" in "Everywoman," was recently seen on the stage in "One Night in Rome." Hazel Turney playing the only other woman's part in the picture.

Gay Havana Carnival Forms Background for Meighan Film

HAVANA and the gay throngs which visit it during the racing and carnival season form the background for many of the scenes in "Civilian Clothes," the Paramount screen version of Thompson Buchman's play, which was one of the season's successes at the Morosco Theatre, New York, and which enjoyed runs in the larger cities of the country as well as a successful road tour. With Thomas Meighan as the star, Hugh Ford as the director, and Clara Beranger as the scenarist, the photoplay offers a combination of talent that is not often found in one picture.

The story of a returned soldier who has married an attractive Salvation Army girl in France, "Civilian Clothes" is in no sense a war picture. Comedy of the lively kind is to be found in its theme: the surprise and shock of the cultured girl on the discovery that her husband, the gallant captain of the Argonne, becomes her father's butler on his discharge from the army.

Gripping Battle Scenes.

In addition to the delightful scenes made in Havana, gripping battle scenes were staged at Camp Meade, Maryland, with the co-operation of the Department of the East. All the real paraphernalia of battle, together with several regiments of seasoned soldiers, make the episode complete in its realism.

"Civilian Clothes" was the last production directed by Hugh Ford before he sailed for England to become director general of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., and it is another triumph in the long list of successes produced under his direction.

Supporting Mr. Meighan is an excellent cast which includes Martha Mansfield, Marie Shotwell, Frank Losee, Maude Turner Gordon, Alfred Hickman, Warren Cooke, Albert Gran, Isabelle Garrison, Halbert Brown and Kathryn Hildreth.

"Humoresque" Released in September as Paramount Film

"HUMORESQUE," the Cosmopolitan Production directed by Frank Borzage, and featuring Alma Rubens in an all star cast, will be released in September as a Paramount picture.

Acknowledged by critics as the logical successor to George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man," it is a story of sublime mother love, perhaps the most appealing motion picture seen on the screen in a long time. It is a story of rare emotions, of superb characterizations, of a great love and a great sacrifice.

"Humoresque" is the creation of Fannie Hurst. Frances Marion made the screen adaptation. Alma Rubens is featured. The others in the all-star cast are Vera Gordon, who plays the difficult role of the mother; Dore Davidson, who plays the role of the father; Gaston Glass, who plays the role of the son; Miriam Battista, Bobby Connolly, Louis Stearns, Sidney Carlyle and others.

Fitzmaurice's Second Special to Be "The Right to Love"

SETTINGS and effects of far greater beauty than he has ever achieved in any of his former productions mark the work of George Fitzmaurice in "The Right to Love," the second special production which he has directed for Paramount, which will be released in September, adapted by Ouida Bergere from Claude Farrere's famous French novel, "L'Homme Qui Assassina," its scenes are laid in Turkey and along the moonlit Bosphorus, giving Mr. Fitzmaurice every opportunity to indulge his talent for bringing to the screen the exotic amosphere of the East.

The story is one of intense dramatic quality—a strong, virile conflict of human emotions. As a play, dramatized from the novel by Pierre Frondaie, who also adapted Pierre Louy's "Aphrodite" for the stage, it was a dramatic success in Paris. Later, translated into English by Gilbert Cannan and Francis Keyser as "The Right to Kill," it was produced in London, at His Majesty's Theatre, with great successs. The scenario for the Paramount version of the story was written by Ouida Bergere.

Mae Murray and David Powell, who scored so heavily in Mr. Fitzmaurice's first Paramount special, "On with the Dance," again play leading roles under his direction. Others in the cast are Holmes E. Herbert, Alma Tell, Frank Losee and Lawrence Johnson.

Picturesque Settings in George Fitzmaurice Special

ALL the languorous charm of the South Seas, the beauty and calm of Grecian skies, and the glitter and intrigue of London's fast set go toward making "Idols of Clay," the new George Fitzmaurice special, a picture of unusual pictorial and romantic interest. Coming as it does on the heels of such notable triumphs as "On with the Dance" and "The Right to Love," Mr. Fitzmaurice's latest contribution to the silversheet, which will be released in November, is sure to elicit comment as a worthy successor, both dramatically and artistically.

Ouida Bergere mapped out the continuity from an original story of her own—the first original story she has done for Famous Players-Lasky on her new contract. It affords excellent opportunities for Mr. Fitzmaurice to display the genius for designing the exquisite pictorial effects which have won for him a place in the front rank of present day directors.

Mr. Fitzmaurice has surrounded Mae Murray and David Powell, who play the roles of Faith and Dion, with an exceptionally fine cast. Dorothy Cummings, George Fawcett, Leslie King and Richard Wangerman have important parts.

Elsie Ferguson Depicts Roles in Fashions of Three Periods

THREE different periods—1860, 1890 and the present decade—are shown in "Lady Rose's Daughter," a picturization of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's novel which, released in September, will be the first Paramount of the new season starring Elsie Ferguson. Miss Ferguson, in gowns of the reigning fashion of each period, promises another treat for film patrons who go in for fashions.

Supporting Miss Ferguson is a cast, including David Powell, Holmes E. Herbert, Ida Waterman, Warren Cook and Frank Losee. In her task of interpreting the characters of three different periods Miss Ferguson has one of the most difficult parts of her screen career.

The picture was directed by Hugh Ford. Unusual interest attaches to "Lady Rose's Daughter" as it is one of the first of the novels of Mrs. Humphrey Ward to reach the screen.

Edmund Day Play Revived in Roscoe Arbuckle's "Round-up"

ROSCOE ("FATTY") ARBUCKLE makes his bow as star in long features in George Melford's production of "The Round-Up" for Paramount. In this he has a role which offers him every opportunity for the expression of his individual type of humor.

"The Round-Up," written by Edmund Day, was first produced by Klaw & Erlanger in August 1907. After a long season in New York it was sent on the road where it continued in popularity for a number of years.

A dramatic story of Indians and rough and ready plainsmen, the big scene of the stage play was a battle in a narrow Arizona canyon. In the screen version, this scene, staged in natural surroundings gains in melodramatic appeal.

George Melford, whose recent production of Jack London's "The Sea Wolf" showed his ability for directing large scale pictures, particularly those with their scenes laid in the open, has concentrated his efforts in directing "The Round-Up." Supporting Mr. Arbuckle is a cast which includes Tom Forman, who also wrote the scenario for "The Round-Up," Mabel Julienne Scott, Irving Cummings, Wallace Beery, Jean Acker, Edward Sutherland, Guy Oliver, Lucien Littlefield, and Jane Wolf.

"Restless Sex" Is Listed as a Paramount October Release

THE RESTLESS SEX," Marion Davies' newest starring feature for Cosmopolitan Productions, which will be released in October as a Paramount Picture, is announced as a spectacular drama of modern society life, a massive productive with magnificent settings and scenic investitures, and a cast of more than six hundred players.

"The Restless Sex" is Robert W. Chambers' greatest novel. First appearing in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, it has had a wide circulation.

In transferring "The Restless Sex" to the screen, Director Robert Z. Leonard has retained all of its fine flavor and its rare qualities.

In support of the star are Ralph Kellard, Carlyle Blackwell, Charles Lane, Robert Vivian, Etna Ross, Stephen Carr, Vivian Osborne, and Corrine Barker.

Unusual Plot, Strong Cast Are Features of New Medford Film

PUT them all together—a startling story adapted from Sir Gilbert Parker's most famous novel, a meritorious cast headed by Elliott Dexter and Mabel Juliene Scott, surpassing outdoor scenery in the heart of the great West and the direction of George Melford—and the answer is the Paramount special production, "Behold My Wife!," to be released early in November.

The idea of taking a delicate, unsophisticated Indian girl and thrusting her upon the staid conventions of an English home and family, which gives the motive to "Behold My Wife!," offers something unique in motion picture plots.

The story has been adapted to the screen from Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Translation of a Savage," easily the most fascinating story from the pen of this English novelist.

In the film version Mr. Melford has maintained realism in outdoor settings, and some of the early scenes are gorgeous camera shots of the giant forests and mammoth mountains of the great West. The company spent several weeks on location in the Sierras in order to obtain new and realistic photography for this production.

Milton Sills as Frank Armour, the husband, gives a difficult portrayal of a man's disintegration and regeneration in a masterly manner. Others in the cast are Winter Hall, Helen Dunbar, Ann Forrest, Maude Wayne, Fred Huntley, F. R. Butler, F. Templer-Powell and Mark Felton.

Frank Condon, recognized as a leading scenario writer, who has been selected to prepare the script for Paramount's new version of "The Old Homestead," wrote the scenario for "Behold My Wife!," from Sir Gilbert Parker's work.

"Full House" Translated to Screen from Stage Forms

TRIED in two stage forms, first as farce and then as musical comedy, Fred Jackson's play, "A Full House," will be released in October as a Paramount with Bryant Washburn in the leading role. This player will have opportunities for the type of fun making which he has already contributed in "Why Smith Left Home" and "Too Much Johnson."

Originally produced as "A Full House" in 1914, for a Broadway engagement, and later used by stock companies, it was adapted to music by Victor Herbert and Henry Blossom, in collaboration with Fred Jackson and was produced at the New Amsterdam Theatre in 1918 under the title, "The Velvet Lady."

Fred Jackson is also the author of "The Naughty Wife," the play in which Violet Heming, Paramount screen star, carried the leading role. This play was later filmed as a Paramount picture under the name "Let's Elope," with Marguerite Clark as the star.

Supporting Mr. Washburn will be Lois Wilson, Guy Milhan, a recent recruit to the screen; Hazel Howell, Vera Lewis, and Catherine Wallace. Lottie Williams will be seen as Susie, the maid, a role played by May Vokes in the farce version and Georgia O'Ramey in the musical comedy edition of the story.

The scenario was written by Alice Eyton and James Cruze is the director.

Ethel Clayton as "Rozanne Ozanne"

In November Famous Players-Lasky will offer Ethel Clayton as star in a screen version of "Rozanne Ozanne," a Kaffir legand that deals in mystery and romance with South African locale. "Rozanne Ozanne" was written by Cynthia Stockley and first appeared in print as a two-part Cosmopolitan Magazine feature.

Pathe Inaugurates Literary Department to Supply Demand for Syndicate Stuff

EVEN while some managers complain that their local newspapers will not conduct a motion picture department, the Pathe Exchange has found it expedient to establish a Literary Bureau to supply a growing demand for material about the pictures, and the first fruits are orders for 180,000 words of material for syndicate use.

Perhaps there is a moral here for the complaining managers. They cannot obtain publication of their paragraphs. Newspaper syndicates find that editors—possibly the same editors—will pay the syndicate rates for stuff about motion pictures.

Two Star Writers.

The answer is that Pathe is employing two trained newspaper writers instead of press agents. Mary Edith Butler has a wide experience as a special writer. She has done promotion work for some big things, including the first aviation show, but primarily she is a writer and not a press agent and she writes real newspaper stuff instead of press bunk.

Curtis Dunham is known to newspaper men all over the country as a special writer who signs much of his newspaper stuff. He is also an author and playwright, having half a dozen to his credit.

Both of these writers will shape their work to please the public. The Pathe exchange will profit through frequent mention, but the first effort will be to get out readable material. As the newspaper column runs around a thousand words, the initial order means almost 180 columns of newspaper work in a large number of newspapers. It will be offered as news and read and accepted as news.

It will get into the papers where much press work is barred simply because it is readable and acceptable to the general public and not merely to the hardened fans. Every story will help the Pathe handled pictures, but nothing will look like press work.

Most of the theatre press work is too frankly such to find acceptance at the hands of the editors. Some editors who might be willing to grant space will not wade through sheets of superlatives and repetitions of the house and play title, yet the houses continue to turn in stuff which fairly screams for the three stars or the "Adv't."

Get a Writer.

Even the hard-boiled editors will fall for well-written stuff, and taking this they will feel themselves under some obligation to the house and use a minimum of the frank press work. They will do this where they will not take press junk alone.

And the solution of the problem seems to be to hire a good writer and offer the proper sort of stuff. It can be made to pay.

Old Time Prospectors Told How to Paint Alaskan Set

DIGGING up an old prospector to pass on the accuracy of the setting for a prologue to "The River's End" worked as a real press stunt for Frank Costello, of the Tivoli, San Francisco.

He is strong for prologues, and wanted one for this First National production. Someone suggested that there was a lot of old-time gold diggers hanging around waiting for the first boat to Nome, and that perhaps they could offer some suggestions. He was told to go out and dig for a couple. He brought in a hundred or so.

Their criticisms were frank, but valuable, and the artist changed his sketch to conform to their suggestions, with the result that the scene was decidedly realistic. One critic contributed a real sledge.

Then the old-timers were all invited to the press pre-review of the picture, and they attended to the last man. They even brought some friends with them. Their attendance was told in the stories of the first showing and their commendation of the atmosphere of the picture helped not a little with the newspaper criticisms.

Makes His Electric Sign Tell 'Em Going and Coming

TALK about the man who made two blades of grass grow where one grew before! W. F. Mason, of the Grand, Pittsburgh, makes his electric sign do double duty and lures them in and lures them back again.

Mr. Mason put up a huge electric sign across the front. Then he hid the back. This spring he did the lobby over and, pulling down the mask, he noted that the sign was visible for its full depth. Instead of hiding it again, he put in a translucent surface which could be lettered, and now when you come out of the Grand you can look up and be reminded of the coming attraction.

It does more than that. For "The Idol Dancer" Mr. Mason lettered the big electric sign:

All Next Week
D. W. Griffith presents
"THE IDOL DANCER"
A Love Story of the South Sea Isles
A First National Attraction

After he had looked at it a couple of days he liked it so well that he copied it off, marked in cuts of Miss Seymour and Mr. Barthelmess and sent it to the newspapers. It seemed to him to tell all of the story, so he did not try to improve upon it.

How a Sandusky Exhibitor Put Elsie Janis in the Schade.
Last week we told how George Schade hooked up with the American Legion and sold so many tickets for Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl" that he was forced to open his overflow house and use that, too. He hooked in the Red Cross, which explains the huge banner, and about the only possible hook-up he overlooked was with the I. W. W., and he didn't want that or he would have had it, too. Turn back to page 1331 of the last issue and go on with the story. The cuts came in too late to illustrate the preceding story.

One National Advertiser Likes Window Shows

Made Mechanical Piano a Real Star in an Ingenious Musical Interlude

STANLEY CHAMBERS, of the Papace, Wichita, who is best known to our readers through his expert handling of open spaced advertising, sends in a stunt which will be found available by most exhibitors who can get the loan of a mechanical piano. As Mr. Chambers worked the stunt, the idea was a production.

The curtain rose upon a black stage, from which sounded the opening bars of Rachmaninoff's "Prelude in G. Minor." Presently a tinted piano lamp came up, disclosing the piano apparently playing itself. Soon the organ, played by P. Hans Flath, took up the strain, accompanying the piano, and carried the air while the piano stopped. This was done several times at appropriate points in the score, the two instruments uniting in the final strains.

Took an Encore.

There was a brief wait and the piano started again, this time on "Where the River Shannon Flows." The piano accompanied a vocalist off stage until the chorus, when the organ again came in. In the meantime the piano was the center of a green spot, which disclosed a basket of flowers on the top of the piano, hitherto unseen. It was a mere detail, yet it proved an effective surprise.

The third number was "Dardanella," with piano and organ alternating or in combination.

It was this alternation which made the act important. Most persons are familiar with self-playing pianos and could not be mystified at the mere spectacle of a piano playing alone. The value of the stunt lay in the alterations, which led to speculation as to how it was done.

The favorite solutions were that the piano was played electrically from the organ console or that it was worked by some one concealed on the stage.

Simple, but Intricate.

The explanation is simple, yet it calls for a very careful planning. The piano was played from the rolls, but these had been fixed up by Mr. Flath. Where the piano was to be silent during a passage, these perforations were cut away and replaced by blank paper the same width and length. Longer lengths of paper between the selections determined the intervals.

The trick lay in the nicety of timing the length of the blanks, for the roll had to be synchronized so that the piano came in at precisely the right note. This calls for a nicety of adjustment which only musical skill can give.

Where there is a really clever leader, organist the idea can be worked into a genuine novelty, and Mr. Chambers will be glad to supply the details to any house manager or leader who will inclose a return cover, though the above gives the essentials. The exact timing may be arrived at only through experiment.

You can't pay a thousand dollars a week for press agents, but if you paid that much you could not get as much help as these pages offer. Make them your publicity staff and get the value of thousands of dollars worth of thought.

Japanese Ladies Do Not Shave Their Armpits

But Tsuri Aoki was willing to certify that she had used and would use no other razor than the one on the display, so they let her sit in the show window in the San Francisco store and tell the world about Universal's "Locked Lips."

Put Blonde Jennies on the Free List for Press Work

MARK GATES, of Loew's Dayton Theatre, twisted an old idea for Mary Miles Minter in "Jenny Be Good" and twisted it so successfully that he wrung out several columns of pure reading.

All he did was to advertise that every blonde girl whose given name was Jenny could walk right past the doorkeeper for the opening matinee and make a face at him instead of handing out a ticket.

Then he lined the Jennys up for a strip photograph, and the newspapers ran that, too.

They were turning down one or two pages of paid advertising every issue, but this was good local news, and it went through to the extent of eleven stories. That is, it went through after Mr. Gates invaded the editorial offices and sold them the idea, but it took some selling in these days when the white paper situation makes everyone around the shop sour on the world.

Of course the advertising manager has to be kept sweet with a generous use of space, but Mr. Gates knows that it is the good idea which sells in the editorial room, and he pays for most of his space in idea. The idea does not have to be new, but it must sound new to the local man.

Pictures Materially Aid Georges Carpentier Film

NEARLY a hundred oil paintings were used to put over the showing of the Robertson-Cole production, "The Wonder Man" with Georges Carpentier. These paintings were nicely framed and found their way into many windows where the ordinary window card would not be tolerated. The paintings were regarded as having a news interest and as such drew the attention of the crowds to the window and all of its contents, and not merely to the painting.

The subjects ranged from straight portraits of the French fistic star to large showings of the ringside scene.

The smaller towns took as kindly to them, some twenty being placed in Newark, where the film opened the day following the New York premier, and Buffalo, Cleveland and other points report that all of the available frames were advantageously placed. Mens' furnishings and hat stores ran close seconds to the sporting goods stores in their bids for the pictures, and more could have been placed at practically all points.

These Razor Window Shows Are All Good for Cleanups

LIKE a tiger which has tasted blood, the San Francisco agency of a certain safety razor is out after the advertising to be gained from a hook-up with the pictures on local view. Only a couple of weeks ago we showed the window hooked up with a Paramount and now the Universal has contributed a cutout and the store bought wistaria and Japanese cushions to help put over Tsuri Aoki in "Locked Lips."

If your local merchants do not see the light, tell them about San Francisco. What is good enough for one of the largest national advertisers should be good enough for the local department store.

"Mary's Attic" Should Break Hook-up Record

"Soup" Specialists Fail to Impress Carpentier; He Puts Them in His Ad.

SUPPOSE you came down to the theatre some bright spring morning and found all the shiny paint scratched off the front of your safe. Suppose your watchman told you he had been bound and gagged by a tall and a short burglar and locked in a steel locker. What would you do?

Send for the police?

Wrong! The foot of the class for yours!

You will never make a press agent following any such obvious course as this. Pattern after George E. Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City.

The Reporters First.

He sent all the reporters for the reporters. Then he sent for the police, and while the Hawkshaws were looking all around for finger prints and talking learnedly about its being an amateur job because the explosive had failed to work, Carpenter was busy with an advertisement for the afternoon papers.

He knew that the reporters would look out for the story, and they did. They gave him front page, first column, section two, and a second burglary, in which the thieves stole $450 from an auto house, ran a bad second column and a shorter story.

The auto company had never treated the reporters to any free rides, but they knew where they could get theatre tickets when they had a night off—and a girl. They gave Carpenter the best of it both as to location and space.

And the Ad.

And in the same section there ran a double fours with the two top lines in nice black type, but not as large nor as black as the star and title. The text ran:

MESSRS. TALL-SHORT YEGGMEN:
COME ON AND GET THE SAFE

You spoiled a perfectly good safe yesterday morning, treated the night watchman shamefully and mussed up the manager's office in a most scandalous fashion—and got nothing! You are not gentlemen! Quite different to who is now playing in the biggest picture of his career—

"BIG BILL" HART

"THE TOLL GATE"

He is also a bold, bad bandit, but always a perfect gentleman!

And it gave business a boom. The burglary had nothing whatever to do with the play, but the crowd was augmented just the same, as Carpenter knew it would be.

Took a Straw Vote.

Another recent stunt was a straw vote for presidential nominees. This was a small slip given each patron on entering. It listed the leading eight prospects of each party, with a blank line for an added starter, and another blank line for a suggested candidate for governor.

Of course the result was announced daily in the papers as a matter of local interest.

So far the efforts of the Congressional Committee have failed to show that any portion of the millions of dollars so lavishly spent on behalf of a certain candidate was diverted to the purchase of tickets—and ballots—for the Paramount-Empress, but the houses were extra large.

This is the first theatre straw ballot we have recorded, yet the idea has immense possibilities. You can at least adapt the scheme after the nominations are made. Try it.

As Mr. Carpenter worked it he had seven cigar stores, two cafes, the Stock Exchange and the newspapers all in with him, increasing the interest and broadening the idea considerably.

"Up in Mary's Attic" Windows Offer a Variety of Tie-Ups

WORKING the window hook-up idea to the full of its possibilities is going to be one of the real aids in putting over "Up in Mary's Attic," the Fine Arts six-reel comedy. Already much work along this line has been done in New York as an example to exhibitors. The cut shows a display of lingerie in the window of the Cosmopolitan Ladies' Shop, on Broadway at Forty-first street.

On either side of the window are wall cases, usually given over to the display of wares, which carry the stills, while the window itself is filled with "reproductions" of the lingerie worn by the many pretty girls who help Mary jazz her attic up.

The Girls Help.

The girls help jazz the windows as well as the attic, for live merchants know that nothing will attract more attention than pictures of pretty girls—and we'll say these girls are pretty.

But lingeries is only one of the angles. The story makes an equally germane hook-up, with baby clothes, talcum powder, bathing suits—especially—cigars and soap, to say nothing of the plugger song.

This means that drug and department stores as well as special shops can be brought into line with displays of cards and stills, and the window campaign should prove one of the strongest exploitation angles, provided that a liberal use of stills is made. There is not much use in getting a window unless your own display is large enough to stand up, and the stills, preferably mounted upon lettered cards, should bring in the crowd.

Now It's Street Car Teasers

PICKING up the "She danced" idea from "The Idol Dancer," the Allen Theatre, Winnipeg, put just those two words on the front of all the street cars, red letters on a white ground.

And after everyone in the Peg had been worked into a frenzy, the newspapers came out with the lowdown, and told that both Clarine Seymour and the star of a Hawaiian troupe would do the dancing at the Allen. Street car teasers are something a little away from the ordinary.

This Time the Show Cleaned in Spite of Good Weather

APPARENTLY most of the big stunts in the past six months were put over in the face of blizzards, for the press-work almost invariably concluded with "In spite of inclement weather," etc.

Now comes Earl Hudson with something new. "In Old Kentucky" got over at the Colonial, Atlantic City, in spite of the first good weather of the season. It took a hundred three sheets and two thousand tack cards to lure them from the board walk, but it worked, though dressing the house front to suggest the paddock helped some. They were saving the First National attraction for the regular season at the shore, and they played to 47,747 on the week, which is 147 more than the house could hold on 28 shows with a capacity of 1,700.

All of which is a good argument in favor of the theory that a picture is new until it is shown.

Sell yourself on a story before you try to sell others. Read up and know what you have to offer. Then you can talk knowingly and convincingly.

Fill in the Blanks to Suit Yourself.

If you lack imagination turn to the stills on either side of the display for assistance. One of several New York windows planted by Fine Arts for "Up in Mary's Attic."

If Your Patrons Kiss, Turn Off the Lights

Look at the Old Homestead of the Cannibal Kings!

This is the way the Des Moines Theatre dressed the house front. Inside they had a production prologue on two side stages, and even the Methodist ministers, then in conference, admitted that she could dance.

Simple House Front for "Idol Dancer" Attractive

WHILE this simple painted front for "The Idol Dancer" is less expensive than the elaborate lobby employed in Minneapolis for the same play, it served almost as well in getting the attention. It was planned by A. G. Stolte, of the Des Moines Theatre.

This is merely a four-page painting, and where an artist is not available it can be done with a rough straw thatch over a stretcher. This would be more simple and probably even more effective, the straw being sewn on with a sailmaker's needle on to any rough fabric.

Most of Mr. Stolte's work was done inside. The house is curiously built, with the stage running down either side of the house, beyond the orchestra pit and the first six rows of seats. Both sides were framed in with special scenery, a backing, and profile stuff in front. On one side the Hawaiian troupe sang native songs and then slipped over to the other where a woman did the idol dance. The effect was heightened by the clever handling of the lights.

For the rest heavy newspaper advertising was trusted to get in the crowds, the First National plan sheet being followed, and the business not only held up the full week, but Saturday; the closing date was better than the opening Sunday.

Chicken Netting Did Not Suggest Chicken Chasing

ALTHOUGH the putting of Jack Pickford behind chicken-proof netting might be regarded by the facetious, no such inference was intended by Ralph Hanson, of the Willard Theatre, Creston, Iowa, one of the chain of the Adams Theatre Co. The netting is used no matter who is the star, and merely serves to keep the poster flat without pasting.

It seems that Creston has no street car lines, and Mr. Hanson, mindful of the value of street car advertising, set his wits to work for a substitute. He found it in frames to hold one sheet attached to commercial trucks.

He persuaded the owners that the posters would call attention to the trucks and make their own announcements more conspicuous, and when the drivers bring their trucks around for a change of posters they are given a couple of passes for their trouble. With the wire scheme it takes but a moment to change the posters.

The frames are neat and solidly built and do not disfigure the trucks. The example shown is on the side of a recently established bus line, but delivery and other trucks are also employed and Mr. Hanson has the use of a number of perambulators and a careful tabulation shows that it increased business about one-fifth on Pickford, the first to be so advertised. The second week, with Anita Stewart, showed better results, but this is figured as being due to Miss Stewart's great popularity.

Kisses as Lagniappe to Showing of "Love Expert"

ADVERTISING something new in the way of a sensation got a big audience for N. A. Benson, of the Stadium Theatre, Pittsburgh, when he played Constance Talmadge in "The Love Expert." He told that he was going to have something really new, but he gave no hint as to what it would be.

The curious flocked to the opening performance, and there was no sign of a prologue or any of the usual stunts, but when the feature ran out, a slide flashed reading:

All sweethearts are entitled to ONE kiss directly after this slide and while the house is dark.

Are there any love experts in the audience?

Apparently there were, for as soon as all the house lights went out the orchestra could not be heard for the smacks. It was a regular film-censored kiss, for the lights stayed down only five seconds, and then flashed on full.

Some of the love experts were not quite quick enough and some tried to steal two kisses, with the result that the quick return of the lights presented many interesting tableaux.

It was a cleanup for the four days the picture ran, and according to reports some of the boys brought a different girl every night. Not all houses can work this to advantage, but where the patronage is not too select it is a knockout.

Is This to Keep Jack from the Chickens, or the Chickens from Jack?

You lose no matter how you guess. The safety screen is chicken netting to keep the one sheets smooth. Creston, Ia., has no car lines, so the Willard Theatre uses bus lines and commercial trucks to put over First National features.

Here's a New Branch of the Booking Game

Booking Special Feature Productions May Next Engage Exchange Managers

BECAUSE Newton got himself beaned by an apple, the law of gravitation was discovered. Other people merely rubbed the bump, cussed a little and wondered why fruits—especially cocoanuts—were not provided with parachutes.

Perhaps in the same way the Whangdoodle bands used to boom "In Old Kentucky" will eventually force exchange managers to become booking agents for productions as well as film.

During the run of this Anita Stewart feature many of the First National exchanges organized and booked negro bands of varying sizes to help put over the film. Remembering this, Harry Scott, manager of the First National Exchange, Detroit, started in to find out just what managers thought of a Hawaiian troupe to go with Griffith's "The Idol Dancer."

Planned It Intelligently.

He queried them as to prices, style and time, and the replies led him to offer solid bookings for three months to the Royal Hawaiian Trio, with the Princess Kawaa. By virtue of the extended engagement the price could be shaved to reasonable proportions.

But that was just a starter. Mr. Scott sent to all who booked the act and film suggestions as to house decoration and the presentation of a prologue. He had a good basis for this in the press book, but he built up on this to reach all purses.

Perhaps the most popular stunt was beaver board sections painted in imitation of thatch, which could be used to build up the lobby and house front.

Working It Up.

It would probably be found feasible to rent such sections along with the rest of the production, but Mr. Scott's experiment has not yet progressed this far as yet, and he contents himself with offering the suggestion anl leaving each house to make its own sections.

At the Majestic Gardens, Kalamazoo, for instance, the front of the house and a long narrow lobby were masked in with boards, and with profile palm trees protruding, much as was done in Minneapolis, though on a less elaborate and artistic a scale.

The Prologue.

For the prologue W. Griffith Mitchell, the manager, used an ordinary wood set, adding a few palms and a thatched hut for local color. The screen was not flied, but remained set, being surrounded by thatch.

Building up on the original idea, Mr. Mitchell took advantage of the fact that a mandolin factory was located in the town to add a mandolin orchestra with first and second mandolins, mandola, mandola-cello, mando-bass, harp, guitar and piano.

With the trio on the stage, the orchestra was silent until after the dancer, then they came in with the final instrumental selection as the lights faded and carried the air after the performers left the stage and the picture was under way. The same effect can be worked with a regular orchestra, but the stringed instruments are more effective where these are available.

The picture went over so well that other managers heard of the cleanup and now Mr. Scott has more demands for his Hawaiians than he can fill. Perhaps when the next picture comes along which suggests special featuring, he will engage two or three troupes.

Not every picture can be put over in this fashion, and if the picture itself lent itself to the purpose the chances are that the novelty would soon be lost, but it is not unlikely that in time film agencies will have to add an attraction booker to their staffs to provide these special entertainers to accompany isolated films.

How About This?

And getting back to the lobby decoration, why should it not be possible to offer simple decorative material, such as thatch and similar material, printed on sheets of coarse paper to be cut and pasted to suit, similar to the sheets they used to sell to amateurs for prosceniums and scenery? It could be worked, it would seem; for example, an underwater effect for plays such as Houdini and Bosworth have been seen in lately, ice and snow sheets for Alaskan pictures, and the like.

Worked the Graveyard Gag with Ingenious Variation

EVIDENTLY "The Greatest Question" is still off the shelves, for Ben C. Brown, of Viroqua, Wis., worked a variation on it recently. His advertisement for some one to sleep in a graveyard was regarded as a mild pleasantry, and no one wanted $10 badly enough to come up and take a chance on getting stung.

Thereupon Mr. Brown decided to provide a victim, persuading Dr. W. C. Butt to take a chance.

Butt rolled into his home about half-past four in the morning with a story of a ghostly hand clutching at his throat, a white shape which seemed to pervade the place, and tree rustlings.

He told it all to the local paper—or at least enough to arouse curiosity, adding that he would tell the rest at the theatre.

As a result the Star was crowded with people who wanted to hear all about it, and Dr. Butt related his experiences with much dramatic skill, but he stilled the shudders when he went on to explain that the ghostly hand was the forked limb of a tree, that a white calf was doing the haunting and the birds did the leaf rustling.

Some nearby towns sought his help in putting the same stunt over, but he has his practice to look after and points out that there are a lot of the old Four Minute Men who could be coached in the act at a pinch when graveyard sleepers are scary or scarce.

Made Most of "Other Men's Shoes" to Win His Patrons

MAKING the title his cut, Stan Brown, of the Met Theatre, Grand Forks, N. D., worked several angles on shoes from a display of odd and curious shoes in his lobby to hookups with shoe stores. For the latter he used cards reading:

If you admire other men's shoes
You'll know they were bought at Firm name here
But if you admire a real
Heart-interest story
See "Other Men's Shoes" at the Met.

One store arranged a display from the smallest baby's shoes to a pair of overshoes size 14—about the size of the Chaplin footwear.

The lobby display included Japanese, Hindu, Russian and snow shoes. They were shown in a case and attracted much attention.

Desert Lobby Sold Tickets for "Flame of the Desert"

TAKING awful chances in the oil district, Jean Darnell, of the Goldwyn Dallas office, planned a desert lobby for the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Texas, which is in the oil belt. There was danger that some one would rig a derrick as soon as they saw the sand, but no one did, and the only gusher struck was the gush of coin into the box office. A few strips of awning cloth, some cutouts and a load of sand were all that were required to get the effect, but the result was all out of proportion to the outlay. Several desert lobbies have been sent Goldwyn on this picture, but this is one of the simplest and at the same time most effective.

This Is Taking an Awful Chance in Texas.

They built a tent around the box office and put sand on the lobby tiles, then they had to hire an armed guard to keep some one from building a derrick and starting to drill for oil, for this is the Tivoli, Beaumont, dressed up for Farrar in "The Flame of the Desert."

hand bank tells that "As wild as an Arab steed, as beautiful as a desert sunset, as mysterious as the portals of the mosque, as fascinating as the secrets behind the shuttered harem windows is Sari, the beggar girl, the unveiled virgin of Stamboul." That ought to get thirty-five cents of any man's money. To help along he put on an Oriental prelude, with twenty-five people. It gave him just the chance he likes.

Sivitz Sends a Better Ad and Discusses Type Mortise

SAMUEL SIVITZ, of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, sends in a late display and remarks that he is sorry the last showing went in. He did not send that in himself, and for the reason that it was not as good as usual; which is precisely the reason why we picked it out of the Pittsburgh paper and ran it. We had run a number of his good displays and wanted to show the difference.

Another point in favor of this new reproduction is that it is made from the engraver's proof and not lifted from the paper as was the horrible example. Pittsburgh papers do not get good presswork as a rule, and the ink seems greasy, which is one of the reasons why we have sought to encourage Mr. Sivitz in the use of mortise and type inserts. Mr. Sivitz writes that he does not believe that the ad. would balance as well. He instructs his artist to come as close to type as the pen will permit and thinks he gets better results that way.

Some day we are going to shoot Mr. Sivitz a bunch of samples, but in the meantime, if he will turn to the issue dated May 22, he will find an advertisement for Mr. Smith's theatre, in Indianapolis, which gives a clever combination of type and line, and in a smaller space than Mr. Sivitz uses. If he wants a fancy letter for titles, there is no reason why he should not, for example, keep the title and the Griffith name in the space below, letting the rest run in type. We think that Mr. Savitz would be pleased with the result, if he tried it.

The western houses, which as a group are more enterprising than those of the east, have almost wholly done away with hand lettered banks. They have found that a clear type letter is the better. Some day we hope that Mr. Savitz will have to switch one section of the display after the drawing is made, and notch and set in type. If he ever does we do not believe that he will return to hand lettering. Meantime this is a very good example of Mr. Savitz's present style; much better than the last we reproduced.

Advertising "The Sea Wolf"

Grauman's, Los Angeles, was the first to get "The Sea Wolf" in its newest production, and it meets the matter squarely by starting off its announcement with "First time shown in the entire universe. This is the third time that the beloved Jack London's masterpiece has been made into a cinema drama. This production has never been shown before, and so far surpasses any previous film version of 'The Sea Wolf' as to make comparisons futile."

Getting at it in this fashion makes it clear that this is something new and not a revival of the previous productions. When you play the picture be flatly definite, then there will be no confusion with previous productions and those who might stay away because they had seen it before will come to see the new version if only for purposes of comparison.

Plays the Musical Setting Even Above the Production

PLAYING up the music is always desirable, but playing the musical setting above the star is something new. Joseph Goldberg, of the Strand, Louisville, sends in a number of good displays for various attractions, but included in the lot is a three seven and a halfs for "The Eyes of Youth" in which the more generous half of the space is given to the cue sheet, with a three-line comment on the excellence of the music.

This is a Thursday display, and possibly Mr. Goldberg felt that a fresh angle was to be preferred to a repeat, but we do not believe that the cue sheet is ever worth six column inches. He did much better with "Arms of Young in the Arms of Tearle" as a paraphrase for "Eyes of Young."

Used Press Book Material Trimmed Up to Fit Needs

NELSON B. BELL, of the Crandall theatres, Washington, D. C., sends in a couple of interesting examples of recent work, in which he uses press book material made over according to his own requirements. Instead of declaring the plan books to be bunk and slamming the press agents, Mr. Bell takes what he can get and does what he can with it. If he can do nothing, he pays for his own art work and gets what he wants, but he doesn't believe in running up bills for art work merely to prove to the boss that his ideas are better than the other fellows' stunts.

One display for "The Sporting Duchess" he ran as it stood, with his own material top and bottom, but he had the cut for "The Woman in Room 13" mortised to let in his own copy and the house slug. The other was given a rather more elaborate treatment. The basis of the cut is that sent out by the producers, but a new scene cut has been set into the fan, made from a still, and a straight portrait of the star was set into the oval. This was all done with negative and not with art work, and the result is precisely the same as though Mr. Bell had run up a tall bill in the art department getting the thing redrawn.

We are glad to note that Mr. Bell seems to be coming to our idea as to the comparative value of hand lettering and straight type. Turn back to some of his earlier work and you can see for yourself that this is a very decided improvement. Mr. Bell has never sent in better work, and yet there are only four lines of hand lettering in the Farrar display and none in the other—which is not saying that Mr. Bell is not going to use hand lettering any time he can get his title in to better advantage that way.

Mr. Bell knows what he wants and how to get it, and if the man who writes the press book catches the spirit of the picture he does not feel called upon to have another drawing made just to show he can do it, too.

Some Say It Cannot Be Done, Yet Grauman Does It Weekly

SOME people say that type cannot replace hand lettering and that the placement of type in a drawn design will throw it out of balance, yet Graumans, Los Angeles, does it every week, and twice in the same place—once for the Rialto and once for the house which bears the name. This five-eighths differs from the majority in that the title is sunk into the drawing, but there is a reason, for it will be noted that the display advertises an underwater picture, and it is but natural that the title should be submarined for this one occasion.

Kinema Used Teasers with Its Regular Advertising

HOOKING its teaser to its house space, gave the Kinema, Los Angeles, an edge on "Alias Jimmy Valentine" at a cost of two one and a halfs. No effort was made to link with the theatre, but the house display and the teaser ran together in order to connect when the underline broke. The idea is a good one. There is no connection between the two spaces, but the man who sees the Kinema advertisement is certain to see the Valentine space, and is the more apt to be sold when the title is taken over to the house space than if it had the run of the paper and was not so well hooked up. Teasers are supposed to be good for the run of the paper, and they are good when so used if they are sufficiently plentiful to dominate all of the pages, but where a single space is used, it is better to keep it close to home.

Paper Shortage Brings Reform

While the paper shortage has put the moth on a lot of things, it has helped in one direction. The Fenray Theatre, Martin's Ferry, Ohio, had to cut down its size and in doing this has gone back to the column rules instead of the badly cut dot leader it has been using for so many months. And the new size is more convenient than the old and they get a better displayed page. It just goes to show that there is a silver lining to very cloud, though some clouds are mighty poorly plated.

Wanted—Front Page Heralds

Why is it that practically 99 per cent. of the heralds have a place for the house imprint on the back? Since the house pays for the material, it would seem only fair that it should get the proper display, and the best display is, of course, the front page, yet of a dozen heralds on our desk as we write, not one gives space to the house on its front and most of them are far from generous with the back page box. A concerted kick would probably result in a better management of this matter. It is a small thing, perhaps, yet the exhibitor is surely entitled to the best of it on his house matter; particularly since the producer does not profit materially through his hogging of the best space.

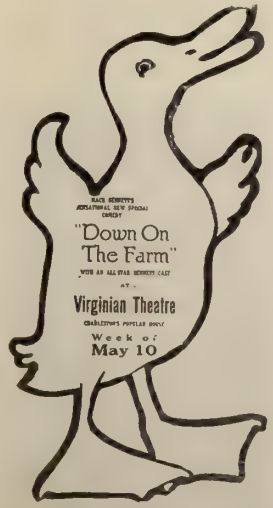
Why They All Want Jobs

Perhaps one reason for the desire to get into pictures is found in an advertisement for the Strand Theatre, Seattle, which advertises "Treasure Island" as produced with "Real ships, real pirates and real rum." No wonder the Los Angeles casting directors are besieged for jobs.

Duck Doorknobs Interested in Doings "Down on the Farm"

REVIVING the doorknob idea which seems to have been forgotten lately, though it is as good as ever, George Hyrros, of the Virginian, Charleston, W. Va., used a duck cutout for a door hanger, printed on both sides with a change of copy. The string hole was punched just above the eye and these pink poultry products were found on every front door in



The Goose Honks High in Virginia Booming "Down on the Farm."

Charleston to tell the people of the merits of "Down on the Farm." We do not know where Mr. Hyrros picked up the duck cutout, but often your printer can tell you where he can locate some special form, if you want one, and a novelty is always better than a straight square or diamond. In addition to the front doors, the autos, carriages and most projections in the downtown section were similarly hung.

Olive Thomas Essays Role of Irish Lass.

Olive Thomas, for the first time in her screen career, will play the role of an Irish lass in her forthcoming Selznick production, "Jenny," written by Roy Horniman, the noted British author, according to an announcement this week.

In addition to the prominent cast which embraces the names of Betty Schade, Colin Kenny, Barney Sherry, Mrs. George Hernandez, Margaret McQuade, Walt Whitman and Andrew Arbuckle, the author of the story, Roy Horniman, is a well known figure in British literary circles and his writings have had world-wide distribution. Lawrence Trimble is directing.

Eileen Percy Picks Her Next Play.

Word has reached the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation in New York that Eileen Percy, the leading woman who has been made a full-fledged star by William Fox, is about to start work upon her second picture under that banner.

Several short stories and novels have already been purchased by the producer for Miss Percy, and the selection of the first to go into work was put up to the star herself. She chose F. Scott Fitzgerald's "Myra Meets His Family." This story was published in the Saturday Evening Post.

Officials of American Film Company Pay Special Attention to Casting of Players

AMONG the forthcoming specials which will appear on the screen with the "Flying A" guarantee of quality are "The House of Toys," picturized from the novel by Henry Russell Miller; "The Blue Moon," by David Anderson, and "Whispering Smith," by Frank H. Spearman. For super-specials of the "Flying A" type each of these dramas required all-star casts and they have been selected with the American's usual discrimination and good judgment.

For super-specials such as the American has been putting out President S. S. Hutchinson believes that not only a beautiful heroine and good acting are imperative but that the personality of all the players must be as nearly as possible in accord with the author's own concept of his characters. Pursuing this course, R. R. Nehls, the general manager, has been at the Coast studios with the directors making an exhaustive study of the personal equation in each case.

Marguerita Sylva a Good Example.

For instance, the choice of Mme. Marguerita Sylva for the heroine of Samuel Merwin's novel, "The Honey Bee," is a good illustration of this point. A woman of matured thinking and strong personality put the idea across in a forceful way, whereas the prettiest little flapper would have made this powerful heart drama simply the ordinary type of love story.

So in "The House of Toys" Seena Owen seems born for the role she carries—a romantic, selfish girl in love with love and with no sense of the obligation she was incurring in marriage with a poor young architect; while Helen Jerome Eddy, as "the other woman," carries her role with the winsome simplicity of the true woman, which is her chief personal charm, and which, in the drama, gives ample reason for the wife's anxiety regarding the power of the stenographer or female assistant her husband meets in business.

Trenton Has Strong Part.

In "The Blue Moon," directed by George L. Cox, another all-star cast includes Pell Trenton and Elinor Field in the leading roles. As the Pearl Hunter, the man of few words who mixed with the roughest characters of the river scum on the Indiana flats, was one of them, yet apart, a man who did not know his own name, yet through whom the characteristics of a fine family strain shone—this is Pell Trenton's part. And little Elinor Field is the Wild Rose whom he loves.

Charles Clary and Irene Rich, who carry the leading roles in "Whispering Smith," are with the American by special arrangement during the production of this one drama. Kathleen O'Connor and Billy Elmer are also in this all-star cast.

Wide Exploitation Campaign Planned for Big Ince Play

A PRIVATE showing of Thomas H. Ince's latest special production, "Homespun Folks," delighted several prominent exhibitors who were the guests of Mr. Ince recently. Among those present were Sid Grauman, Otto Lyttle and Roscoe DelRose, all of whom ventured the opinion that in "Homespun Folks," Thomas H. Ince has struck another sure-fire winner for the exhibitors and their playgoers. Sid Grauman stepped out and Graumanesquely announced that the picture should "go over" as "one of the big hits of the season."

Simultaneously with the private exhibition of the special, the Thomas H. Ince publicity and exploitation forces revealed plans for a coming national exploitation campaign which will embody many new and original tie-ups between exhibitors, the daily newspapers and local retail merchants. In the July number of "The Silversheet," Thomas H. Ince's new direct-to-the-trade magazine, there will appear a "double-truck" broadside heralding the salient selling angles behind the attraction and the many business-getting opportunities for effective lobby displays, newspaper advertising, "stunt" exploitation and general publicity.

"Homespun Folks" is an original story by Julien Josephson, directed by John Griffith Wray under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Jacques Jaccard Commissioned to Direct a Five-Reel Picture

JACQUES JACCARD, who is directing a series of two-reel Royal North Western Mounted Police pictures for Universal, has proved himself so adept at handling the atmosphere and drama of the great Northwest woods, that Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has authorized him to produce a five-reel feature, using the same characters and following the same lines as the shorter stories.

Jaccard is an honorary member of the Canadian Constabulary and is thoroughly familiar with their work and exploits. He already has completed two of the shorter stories, "The Scarlet Rider" and "The Son of the North." Leonard Clapham and Virginia Faire play the featured roles.

It has been decided to call the projected five reeler "Under Northern Skys." Jaccard has written the story. It is being put into continuity form by Kay Harrison, and soon will be in production. The following players have been selected for the cast: Leonard Clapham, Virginia Faire, Wilmer Paquette, William Buckley, Herbert Bethew, Charles Brinley, Ben Corbet, Frank Staples and Oleta Otis.

Mrs. Drew Completes Fourth Release.

Mrs. Sidney Drew has completed the fourth of her series of two-reelers for Pathe distribution in the Essanay studio at Chicago. "The Unconventional Maida Greenwood" is the title of the successor to "The Emotional Miss Vaughn," which is to be released by Pathe on May 30.

John Cumberland, who is starred in the series, will close his theatrical season in Chicago within a short time and will then return to New York to begin the production of the fifth of the Julian Street stories.

"Young Buffalo" Series Booking Heavily.

The "Young Buffalo" two-reel series of adventure, western pictures featuring Philip Yale Drew, is being eagerly booked in the best houses in the country, according to reports from all Pathe branches.

The stories were written by William Addison Lathrop and the direction is by George Ridgewell. "Tex of the Timberlands" will be released July 11; "His Pal's Gal," July 18; "The Law of the Border," July 25; "The Hobo of Pizen City," August 1, and "The Hold-Up Man," August 8.

Big Cast in Norma Talmadge Picture.

"The Branded Woman," adapted from Oliver D. Bailey's well-known play "Branded," the story on which Norma Talmadge is now at work and which Albert Parker is directing, will have a strong cast. The three principal supporting characters will be played by Vincent Serrano, Percy Marmont and George Fawcett. Grace Studdiford, Sydney Herbert and Edward Durant are other members of the cast.

"Simple Souls" Booking Fast.

Philadelphia, Chicago and New York are leading in Pathe's booking race on Blanche Sweet's newest Jesse D. Hampton release, "Simple Souls," which was adapted from the novel by John Hastings Turner.

The principal circuits in the metropolian area have booked "Simple Souls." The most important theatres in the Loew, Moss and Fox chains of theatres have been granted exhibition dates on the production.

"The Deadlier Sex," Miss Sweet's previous release, met with such great success in Chicago that it was a foregone conclusion her next attraction would go over big. This expectancy has been more than fulfilled.

Penrhyn Stanlaws Gives Up Painting to Become Future Famous Players Director

ALTHOUGH at the height of his fame as a painter and illustrator, Penrhyn Stanlaws, creator of the famous Penrhyn Stanlaws girls for magazine covers and author of several successful plays, has given up painting and in the future will devote himself entirely to motion pictures, it is announced by Jesse L. Lasky.

Mr. Stanlaws, who has signed a long-term contract to devote all his time to Paramount Pictures, will spend the next twelve months in the Famous Players-Lasky Eastern studio studying the motion picture art to become a writer and director of Paramount pictures. In directing pictures it is Mr. Stanlaws' purpose to apply his knowledge of drama and artistic effects to the taking of photoplays that will combine dramatic story with artistic charm.

Engages British Authors.

The engagement of Mr. Stanlaws, Mr. Lasky said, was in line with his policy of obtaining the services of noted writers and artists to work directly for Paramount Pictures. Mr. Lasky sailed Saturday for London, where he will confer with Sir James M. Barrie, Henry Arthur Jones and other British authors.

Mr. Stanlaws' decision to abandon painting in favor of motion pictures is said to be due to his belief that the production of beautiful motion pictures is more worth while than the painting of pretty girls' heads.

Affords Greater Opportunities.

"The motion picture, because it is a picture of moving things," said Mr. Stanlaws, "gives an artist a vastly greater opportunity than oil or water color or pen and ink drawings. With the immense world-wide audience which the motion picture affords, I do not think an artist or a writer can afford to ignore this great artistic force. I have always been a student of the drama and therefore am intensely interested in this new great dramatic medium."

Although Mr. Stanlaws is best known for his portraits of beautiful girls, which have adorned magazine covers for years, he also has considerable of a reputation as a dramatist.

Cassard and McGuire Return

S. S. Cassard, sales manager, and P. A. McGuire, advertising manager, of the Nicholas Power Company, have just returned from the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. Convention of Cleveland. A. Birkholm, traveling representative of the Nicholas Power Company, was also in Cleveland during the convention week and these three members of the Power's staff were busy explaining the merits of the type "E" lamphouse to visiting delegates. The operator of today takes a deep interest in his machine and is glad to see all improvements that come on the market. The Nicholas Power Company realizes that every effort should be made to supply the operator with a machine which meets his requirements. Mr. Cassard, therefore, has made it a particular point to secure direct information from the operators regarding projectors.

New York and Brooklyn Strands Book the Carpentier Special

THE Strand Theatre, New York City, and the Strand Theatre, in the Borough of Brooklyn, have booked "The Wonder Man," the Georges Carpentier picture. It will be shown, according to an announcement by Robertson-Cole, which is distributing the production, for a week in the New York house, immediately following the close of the Astor Hotel engagement, and in the Brooklyn house for the week following this.

Twenty-Two Days in New York.

These bookings will not be started until the end of the Hotel Astor engagement. Together with the Astor Hotel showing of eight days, which began Saturday evening, May 29, the Strand showing will give "The Wonder Man" fifteen days on Broadway. Considering that Brooklyn is part of New York City, and easily accessible, this gives the Carpentier picture a total run in leading houses of the Greater City of twenty-two days.

The bookings at the two Strand Theatres are pointed to by Robertson-Cole to support its contention that the production is one of the year's great attractions and that Carpentier's popularity makes him a great drawing card.

Europe Holds Great Opportunities for Active Producers, Says Marshall Neilan

THAT the American motion picture public is ready for productions with European backgrounds and that the next year will witness heavy importations of foreign-made subjects are two interesting opinions of Marshall Neilan.

As recently announced Mr. Neilan will make an extended trip abroad within the next few months. He will be accompanied by an entire producing organization including several internationally known screen celebrities. In France, England, Spain, Ireland and Belgium arrangements are now being made by Mr. Neilan's foreign representative, Harry Ham, for the picturization of some of the most noted historical landmarks of the globe. These will be embodied in the different stories which the director-producer will stage during his six months abroad.

Foreign Pictures Generally Good.

In discussing the matter of foreign-made pictures, Mr. Neilan said: "During the past four months I have been conducting an exhaustive study of the foreign situation as affecting the American motion picture public. I feel free to predict that within the next year there will be a heavy influx of foreign-made productions in this country.

"I have seen some of the forerunners of this European product and I am frank to admit that they compare most favorably with the best we have to offer. The only criticism that can be offered is the fact that these pictures are too 'foreigny,' to coin a word, chiefly in the portrayals by the actors. Stages from an American angle, these films will immediately become popular ever here.

Patrons Want New Backgrounds.

"The American public is more than ready for pictures that do not smack of California. For five years, more or less, patrons in this country have been denied the scenery and artistic backgrounds of the European type. Pictures staged abroad will thus offer to our people something different. In fact, the new appliances now in vogue facilitating the production of pictures in places where heretofore such work was impossible, will result in bringing to the American public backgrounds and effects that will be absolutely new.

"Contrary to the general supposition, I expect to produce my pictures at a cost that at a maximum will not exceed the cost of production in this country, this including all traveling expenses, etc. This matter has been given much study and planning by my associates and myself and we have evolved a plan which will make a trip such as we are arranging for, a financial possibility.

Profiting by Mistakes of Others.

"In talking with foreigners regarding unsatisfactory results obtained by some representatives of various American producers who have returned from abroad, I understand that, as a rule, the very manner of approach of these Americans have spelled their failure. Foreigners are different and do business differently than we do. There are big possibilities abroad for the American producer if he can only get the proper entree.

Morris Kohn and J. S. Woody of Realart Receive Tokens of Esteem From Managers

THE managers' dinner, at the Hotel Astor, which ended the recent New York convention of Realart field man, was marked by a heartwarming incident. Morris Kohn, "Skipper of the good ship Realart," was presented with a massive gold desk set, and General Manager John S. Woody with a valuable platinum and diamond watch and pearl-linked, platinum chain.

These gifts were presented as a manifest and visible evidence of what the home office and field man think of them as friends and of their abilities as organizers.

Ben F. Simpson, Realart's San Francisco manager and dean of the field men, spoke briefly in presenting the gifts on behalf of the managers and home office associates. Addressing Mr. Kohn, Mr. Simpson referred to the qualities of leadership which had endeared him not only to his home associates, but to the men in the field with whom he was more remotely in touch, but who had nevertheless felt the influence of his personality.

Kohn Expresses His Appreciation.

Mr. Kohn in a voice which betrayed his strong emotion expressed his appreciation not only for the gift, but for the spirit of fraternity that had prompted it. He said in part:

"I want to thank you, gentlemen, for this beautiful gift and for the sentiments from you all that Mr. Simpson has expressed. I spend, as I think you all know, a good portion of my time each day at my desk. This gift will be a constant reminder of each one of you, individually, after you have scattered to your posts all over the United States.

"It has been a great pleasure and satisfaction to meet you here and to become personally acquainted with you. I am sure we will profit immeasurably by this opportunity and I am glad that I have had this chance to get an insight into your problems and of those of our clients whom you represent. It is most inspiring to feel that I have the whole-hearted support and co-operation of the men in the field. You may be certain that this feeling is reciprocated. It is this sort of team-work that will carry Realart to the preeminent position it is destined to occupy."

"Brothers and Pals" Says Woody.

Mr. Simpson then turned to General Manager Woody. He spoke of the intimate and pleasant relations the men in the field had had during the year with him.

"I have tried to make you all feel that we are not only men engaged in a common enterprise, but brothers and pals," Mr. Woody said. "But the way you boys have come back at me and raised my ante has fairly taken my breath away. You have made a wonderful record this year and I am proud of every one of you. Working under all sorts of handicaps because of a late start in the season, you've held your own against the best in the field and taken no one's dust. And I'm confident that you are going out to set a new pace next year. We've got the spirit here that convinces me the fight is already half won."

Kaufman Weeklies Going Strong

Herbert Kaufman Weeklies are blazing a trail as miniature dramas of the screen, according to Sam E. Morris, general manager of Republic and vice-president of Select Pictures.

Mr. Morris declared that the editorials of Herbert Kaufman, within a short space of time, have created a demand from exhibitors that has shattered all precedents for bookings.

"And that they live is evidenced in the fact that the Strand Theatres of both New York and Brooklyn have contracted for the showing of the entire series of Herbert Kaufman releases. Hundreds of other theatres have signed for these screen stories. To mention but a few of the theatres who have signed for the one reel editorials: California Theatre, Los Angeles; Piccadilly, Regent and Gordon theatres, Rochester; Temple Theatre, Toledo; Stillman and Euclid theatres, Cleveland, and Palace Theatre, Springfield.

Pathe's Feature Business Reaches Peak in May; 33⅓ Per Cent. Over "Brunet Month"

THE peak of Pathe's feature business, which has been growing steadily for the last year, was attained during May, according to an announcement just issued by the distributing organization. Bookings for May showed an increase of 33 1-3 per cent. over March, "Brunet Month," which upset all previous business in the annals of Pathe Exchange, Inc. During March the thirty-two Pathe branch offices averaged a gross increase in all business over November, December and January, of 45 per cent.

Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges, in making his report for May to Vice-President and General Manager, Paul Brunet, attributed the great growth of the feature business to two things:

First, the upbuilding of a feature sales organization, which in numbers and ability, is outranked by none at this time.

Second, to the ever increasing merit of the Pathe feature product, which, during May, was augmented by two big productions—Edgar Lewis' "Sherry" and "Simple Souls," starring Blanche Sweet.

The big showing being made by "Rio Grande," the Edwin Carewe production, which, during the first month following its issue, was booked by 2,000 exhibitors, and, also, was a factor in the increased bookings for May. "The Blood Barrier," "Dollar for Dollar," and "The Miracle of Money" likewise were heavily booked during the month, while there was no diminishing in the booking records being established by "Other Men's Shoes" and "The Deadlier Sex."

"Rio Grande" is well on its way to making a new record for Pathe feature business. During its first week, in New York alone, "Rio Grande" was booked in 150 theatres, while, in every other territory where the picture has been released, it has made records in similar proportions. In the West, the picture is a sensation, while in the East it is meeting with as great success as "Other Men's Shoes" the conspicuous Pathe winner to date.

Community Holds Unique Show

The first exhibition of its kind ever held was put on recently by the employes of the Community Motion Picture Bureau. It was of the arts and crafts of the employes of that organization. There are on exhibition 122 pieces of work. Each one was done by an employe of the New York office of the company. The range was from Italian landscapes to—er—nightgowns. One of the noteworthy exhibitions was paintings by William H. Day, one of the operators.

Warren Dunham Foster, president of the bureau, was represented by a book entitled "Heroines of Modern Progress" that he had written in his younger and more confident days. Edith Dunham Foster, chief editor, had on display two paintings and seven examples of china painting.

The exhibition was a serious attempt to show the artistic aspirations of motion picture workers.

Scott Says Denver Outlook Is Bright

With several new theatres planned in the Denver territory, the outlook for the coming year is bright, according to Ward E. Scott, Pathe Manager of the Denver office, who is now in New York. Preparations are under way for accommodating thousands of tourists who are expected in the country this summer, he said.

"Harold Lloyd is the sensation of the year in my territory," Manager Scott said. "Other Pathe releases are also going over good. The feature business has been increasing by leaps and bounds.

"Many new theatres have been planned and Broughton & Melton, owners of the Colonial, have had plans drawn for a new theatre on Curtis street."

Walsh in New Offices

In line with the extention of his producing activities, R. A. Walsh has leased a suite of offices in the Capitol Theatre Building on Broadway. The newly acquired quarters will house the producer's executive staff consisting of Harold Horne, production manager; J. Y. O'Donohoe, head of the play-reading and research departments; and Ralph Mahan, office manager and private secretary to Mr. Walsh.

Educational Outlines Exact Nature of Its Releases Starting Week of June 20

ONE two-reel comedy every week is provided for in the initial release schedule of Educational Films Corporation through its own exchanges, starting with the week of June 20. There will also be a Chester-Outing every week, with a Bruce Scenic Beautiful and a Screenic alternating. There will also be other special releases weekly, including two single reels among the first block.

Prints and supplies of material are now being shipped to the various exchanges in preparation for the opening. It is possible that some of the offices will not be ready for business at the time set, but the mechanical arrangements are being pushed and wires received, at the New York offices indicate that those jointly interested in the various exchanges are seeking to overcome every difficulty.

Four Shows Pre-Released.

Four of the releases for the first week have already been given pre-release showings in New York theatres and Educational points out that the opinions of the critics makes them a known quantity for the theatre. The comedy offering is a Chester, "Four Times Foiled," which was given its original showing at the Rivoli and then placed on the bill at the Rialto for another week, and afterwards billed for a record run over the entire Loew metropolitan circuit. It received eighty-four days, or twelve solid weeks' showing, on Broadway or in its immediate vicinity.

First Comedies About June 27.

"The Hope of Adventure," a Robert C. Bruce Scenic made on his recent trip to Alaska, had an important position on the Rialto bill this month. The Strand last week played two of the pictures that are numbered among the initial releases. One of these was "Pigs and Kava," a Chester-Outing taken on the Samoan Islands, and the other, "Modern Centaurs," was given a share of the billing at the Strand. This picture portrays some remarkable riding by a troop of Portuguese cavalrymen and it is said to have commanded the highest price ever paid for a similar reel in New York.

The first of the Mermaid Comedies will be seen the week of June 27. This is "A Fresh Start," directed by Jack White of Sennett comedy and Sunshine fame, and featuring Marvel Rea. "Kiss Me, Caroline," the first of the Christie Comedies to be released by Educational under the new contract, will be shown in leading theatres for the first time during the week of July 4. Bobby Vernon is the featured player in this, the cast including Teddy Sampson, Neal Burns, Vera Stedman and the Follies Girls. The initial "Torchy" produced by Master Films, with Johnny Hines as the red-headed office boy, will get its first general showing during the week of July 11.

According to Educational's announcement this is only a temporary schedule and the number of both comedy and scenic releases will be increased shortly. Several contracts which have not yet been announced have been signed and the schedule will shortly be enlarged to care for the additional product.

Every Inch of Vitagraph's "Sea Rider" Was Made In and Around New York City

VITAGRAPH is putting out a picture this month—Harry Morey in "The Sea Rider"—every inch of which was made within ten miles of Manhattan Island's Battery. And yet it is likely that many spectators steeped in all the craft of the trade will hardly realize that out-of-town location trips were not necessary for the filming of this sea-going snow picture." The story opens at Scallop Haven, a little New England fishing village, and closes in New York.

New York Harbor supplied most of the background for "The Sea Rider" and the other exteriors were taken at selected spots along the Long Island shore. The story is pervaded with the salt spray of the bay, with short ice, tar, rope, sails, nets, the tackle of sailing vessels and the looming masts and spars of shipping. It reveals modern New York as a gold mine of unconventional pictorial beauty. While it is agreed that New York has been done to death as a locale, it is the bright-light New York, the super-hotel New York, and the New York requiring the palatial interiors, but not the New York of "The Sea Rider."

Dittmar and Schaefer Responsible.

The pioneering in this strike in an overlooked field was by Harry L. Dittmar, author of "The Sea Rider," and Fred Schaefer, adapter and scenario writer. Both happen to know their New York, and they discarded the usual scene plot calling for warm climate fishing villages and harbors and looked for "the locations" in the dead of winter around New York.

The star in "The Sea Rider" had sea and wind and ice to buffet instead of indoor tanks, Carribean zephyrs and sunbeams. The director of "The Sea Rider," Edwin L. Hollywood, the assistant director, Frank Heath, the technical men and the cameramen made the wave-beaten wharves of New York their playground, when other productions calling mostly for exteriors were being made in the South.

"The Sea Rider" deals altogether of seafaring folk. The story, with its first scenes in a fishing village, shows native types and surroundings, the latter part showing maritime scenes rich in composition and color, and, to which the average New Yorker is a stranger. The lead is played by Harry Morey. Alice Calhoun and Louizita Valentine share honors.

Martindel Has Big Role

Edward Martindel, one of the best known comic opera stars in the country, has been engaged for an important role in the screen version of "Athalie," which Sidney A. Franklin is making for the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation to be distributed by First National. "Athalie" is based on Robert W. Chambers' widely read novel of the same name.

Mr. Martindel has sung the principal male role in a number of famous Broadway light operas including "Naughty Marietta," "The Fire Fly" and "Sho Gun."

The Barrier! The Barrier! I Wonder Why It Is So Silent.

Florence Dixon, at the right, is seen in a quiet moment in "The Silent Barrier," which is being released under the Hodkinson banner. Next time we'll try to get a picture of the barrier, providing it has the fourth dimension.

Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises to Make All Its Productions in Eastern Studios

AN announcement of unusual interest and of great significance has been made by Myron Selznick to the effect that beginning July 1 all motion picture productions of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises will be made at the organization's eastern studios in the Bronx and Fort Lee, N. J. This decision is declared to be the result of carefully worked out plans by Selznick executives whereby a still further degree of efficiency and coordination can be incorporated in the routine of motion picture production.

Heretofore it has been customary to make productions for Selznick, Select, National Pictures, Inc., and Republic Distributing Corporation in both the eastern and western studios, necessitating the transfer of whole companies from one coast to the other at frequent intervals.

Solax Added Necessary Space.

Although Mr. Selznick had studios both in the Bronx and Fort Lee, they were not of sufficient size to accommodate the various producing units. However, with the securing of the Solax studio, taken over last week, and with the rearrangement of the producing schedule, it is predicted that not alone will the space be sufficient to care for all of the producing companies, but that through the closer alliance of these units much better work will be executed. The great advantage of having all companies together is also pointed out.

At the present time there are two companies at work on Selznick pictures at the western studios, where Harry Rapf is studio manager. These are the Owen Moore company and the Olive Thomas company, the latter filming "Jenny." Production work on these pictures is expected to be completed by July 1, when Mr. Selznick will move all his people and belongings from the West to the East. The fourth production, following "The Invisible Divorce," for National Picture Theatres, Inc., "The Palace of Darkened Windows," is also being produced at the West Coast.

As recently announced, the stock company to appear in support of Selznick stars is now being assembled by Myron Selznick at Fort Lee. The latest to be engaged under a long term contract is Warren Cook. Mr. Cook has appeared in support of practically every screen star of note and before he began his photoplay career was on the stage under the management of Charles Frohman, Henry W. Savage, William A. Brady and others.

Equity Announces Completion of Fourth Clara Kimball Young Film, "Mid-Channel"

COINCIDENT with the metropolitan premiere at the Astor Hotel, May 26, of Equity's third Clara Kimball Young production, "For the Soul of Rafael," which was accorded an enthusiastic reception by the public and press, Equity Pictures announces the completion at the Garson Studios, Los Angeles, of their fourth Clara Kimball Young output, "Mid-Channel." Under the direction of Harry Garson, cutting and titling of pictures is now under way, and prints will be forwarded East within two weeks.

"Mid-Channel," a screen adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's drama of the same name which created a furore with Ethel Barrymore in the leading role several seasons ago, has been given a typical Garson production and in addition to the elements and passions of the story, there is added a scenic investiture that outrivals the usual magnificence of Miss Young's productions.

"Mid-Channel" is a story of matrimonial difficulties, and Pinero likens the British Channel—midway between Folkstone and Boulogne, where there is an unexpected and ominous ridge—Mid-Channel, to the stormy sea of matrimony. He tells how the Channel is pretty rough all the way over, the roughest part coming in the middle, and how boats that pass this rough water in safety are sure of making port. So in marriage, after the first bright years, comes a stormy and treacherous period, which, if not staunchly weathered, leads to darkness and disaster.

Vitagraph to Spend $200,000 Enlarging Hollywood Studios

AN extensive building campaign approximating $200,000 in cost has been inaugurated at Vitagraph's western studios by W. S. Smith, general manager, in keeping with plans outlined during the recent visit to Hollywood of President Albert E. Smith. Work will begin shortly on a construction schedule to occupy the summer months and which is designed to give Vitagraph one of the most modern plants in the industry by early autumn.

The additional structures have been necessitated by increased production by Vitagraph in Los Angeles and the further increases anticipated for the future. Vitagraph will continue to maintain its Brooklyn studios, but more elaborate production by companies now maintained in the West has demanded extra facilities. Further, the improvements indicate a business precaution against the developments of the future.

Vitagraph's administration offices will be entirely renewed. A separate modern building will be erected for stars' dressing rooms exclusively. This will contain every convenience, including individual shower baths. More stages will be put up, including one large glass enclosed structure designed for the large sets of the feature companies. The studio will then have a full dozen separate and distinct stages. It should be ready in September.

Ohio Pastor Describes Ray's Popularity Among Soldiers

WHAT the motion picture meant as a means of recreation and inspiration to the soldiers during the war is described in a letter written by a former Y. M. C. A. worker to Charles Ray, thanking the First National star for his clean, wholesome plays that were a source of real service during the troubled times. The writer, J. Franklin Candy, pastor of the Congregational Church of Geneva, Ohio, says the apeal of Charlie Ray was such that he could always count on a full house when a Ray film was showing.

Mr. Candy served as a worker in the Y. M. C. A. service during the war, and a long experience in arranging entertainment and welfare for American soldiers gave the pastor an insight into their likes and dislikes. That his observations in "Y" hut picture performances should point to the personality of Charles Ray as a foremost film attraction, reflects the wide appeal of the star under a variety of conditions and confirms the assertion of his sponsors that Ray has built up for himself a great following during recent years which will manifest itself most strongly when his First National pictures, the first of which is "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," presented by Arthur S. Kane, are ready for release.

Change Date for Private View

The special private showing of Marion Davies' latest starring feature, "The Restless Sex," a Cosmopolitan Production, which was announced for Wednesday evening, June 2, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, has been changed to the following Wednesday, or June 9, at the same time and at the same place.

"The Restless Sex" is a feminist novel by Robert W. Chambers. It was published in Cosmopolitan Magazine. Marion Davies is the star. She is supported by Ralph Kellard, Carlyle Blackwell, Corrine Barker, Charles Lane, Robert Vivian, Etna Ross, Stephen Carr and Vivian Osborne.

Pathe Cameraman Defies Death in Mexico and Brings Out Pictures of Revolution

DEFYING death for violating orders that no motion pictures of the overthrow of the Carranza government were to be made in Mexico City, O. A. Aultman, Pathe News cameraman brought to the United States what is reputed to be the first and only motion pictures of the now historic event. Hunted by agents of the Obregon forces, who followed him out of Mexico City, Aultman escaped pursuit and reached El Paso, Texas, in time to forward the films to New York to be made a feature of Pathe News No. 42, released on Wednesday, May 26.

Threw Away Equipment.

Because of the closeness of his race with the Obregon agents, Aultman was compelled to throw away his entire equipment with the exception of the tiny can which held the precious negative of the revolutionary scenes in Mexico City and its suburbs. Most of his trip from Mexico City was made in his own machine, but nearing the border, the car broke down and Aultman had to continue his journey to El Paso on a horse lent him by an American prospector.

All of the principal events of the orderly downfall of Carranza are recorded in the Pathe News. The entrance of the Obregon troops into Mexico is shown following pictures of the hasty exit of the Carranzista forces. General Obregon is pictured with his staff, who probably will see to it that he is named the next president of the Republic of Mexico.

Photographed Carranza.

Carranza himself was photographed just before he was assassinated at Tlaxcalantongo, State of Pueblo.

While "shooting" the scenes attending the entrance of the revolutionary forces into Mexico City, the Pathe News cameraman was hunted from place to place by the police authorities, until finally he was warned that he would be shot if he persisted.

Still defying the authorities, Aultman succeeded in getting some remarkable pictures of the Obregon army. Finally his situation became so perilous he was compelled to leave the city.

Next Priscilla Dean Film Will Be "Outside the Law"

ELABORATE preparations are being made at Universal City for the next Priscilla Dean feature, "Outside the Law," which will be started within the next two weeks. Tod Browning, who directed Miss Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul," will not only direct this picture, but is also the author of the story.

The continuity is now being prepared by Lucien Hubbard.

"Outside the Law" is a crook drama without crooked police or dishonest city officials. The "Punch Role" is a Chinese philosopher who preaches the doctrine of Confucius. The filming of the story will include a three weeks' stay in San Francisco and a week's tour in an ocean liner. "The Cat That Walked Alone" will follow "Outside the Law," as a Priscilla Dean special.

Get "Hall Room Boys" for Foreign Distribution

A CONTRACT has been signed by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation and Jack and Harry Cohn, producers, conveying to the former organization the world-distributing rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada, to the "Hall Room Boys" Comedies. This is the gist of an announcement made this week by Gus Schlesinger, manager of the department of foreign film sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and serves to definitely set at rest rumors regarding the foreign distribution of these mirth-provoking two-reel features.

Plans formulated by Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the "Hall Room Boys' Comedies, will provide for the production of twenty-six releases a year, retroactive to January 1, 1920. Under the terms of the contract, Inter-Ocean acquires the foreign distributing rights to these comedies for a period of three years.

It is announced by Inter-Ocean that an extensive and far-reaching advertising campaign will be inaugurated in foreign territories in behalf of the comedies. The campaign will be under the direction of A. L. Feinman.

IN "The Price of Redemption," his forthcoming Metro production, Bert Lytell will make a distinct departure from his customary roles, widely varied as they have always been. At the opening of the picture he will portray a British soldier; then he appears, in turn, a London gentleman, a dope fiend and, finally a regenerated man.

The picture calls for many scenes in native East Indian towns. In order to obtain unassailable atmosphere for the settings, A. W. Alley, the technical director, called to his assistance Dr. H. R. M. Maddock, a retired officer of the Indian British army. The realistic sets finally conceived and constructed are excellent reproductions of the original places in Akbar, India.

A throne room, used in the last episode of the picture, is said to be in exact similitude to the Diwan-i-Am, or Hall of Public Audience, in the palace of Udaipur, Rajputana. In this room are important scenes between Mr. Lytell and Edward Cecil, who enacts the Rajah and villain of the photoplay. Mr. Cecil's court costume is a copy of that worn by the Rajah of Bhawalpur at the coronation durbar at Delphi in 1912.

Cleo Madison plays the part of the Rajah's English mistress, a girl who through an embittered heart loses for a time her perspective of life's true values. The gorgeous jeweled costume she wears was cleverly worked out from suggestions furnished by Mrs. Maddock, who with her husband was a frequent guest at the various native courts, where she had acess to the privacy of the Zenanas, a privilege extended to very few European women.

The East Indian dance of legend, the "nautch," is rarely seen in its best light by the average European. East Indians explain this on the grounds that for public display the nautch is danced by women who are no longer young, and in order to hide such vanishing charms as they once possessed they find it necessary to swathe themselves in voluminous skirts and bodices.

Callaghan Representative Rushes First Bessie Love Picture to New York City

IMMEDIATELY following the assembling of the completed production of "The Midlanders," Bessie Love's first photoplay for Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Al Rogell, a special representative of the Los Angeles company, left the western producing center for the East with the first print. Mr. Rogell is expected to arrive in New York City within a few days, thus giving Andrew J. Callaghan, head of the Callaghan producing company, an opportunity to see the completed version of his initial Bessie Love film prior to sailing for Europe in the interests of his concern.

Mr. Callaghan left his Los Angeles studios several weeks ago, when work on "The Midlanders" was well under way. After viewing the rushes of the complete production, the film executive was satisfied to trust the assembling and titling of the film in the hands of Miss Love's two directors, Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse, while he came on to New York City with the principal intention of buying rights to additional famous plays and novels for his star.

This week Mr. Callaghan announced to his associates that he had practically completed all arrangements for sailing for England, where he will personally supervise the preliminaries to the production there of Charles Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop," to produce which Miss Love will shortly cross the seas.

It is not yet decided when Miss Love will leave for England to commence work on the Dickens classic. Mr. Callaghan will precede his star to make all necessary arrangements, and following his return to this country he expects to send a company abroad to make this quaint, picturesque photoplay in the colorful locale in which the original novel transpires.

Realart Claims "Something Different" in First Photoplay Starring Bebe Daniels

BEBE DANIELS' first production as a Realart star will be "You Never Can Tell," an adaption of two short stories, by Grace Lovell Bryan, that were published recently in the Saturday Evening Post. According to J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, the selection of this material will give exhibitors an accurate line on the manner in which the company intends to satisfy the public's taste for "something different."

The story will deal with the adventures of a cigar counter girl in a New York City hotel. Miss Daniels will have the role of Rowena Jones, daughter in a family of six, who decides that her living conditions are unbearable and that it is up to her to become a martyr by marrying a rich man. All she needs to do is to find him.

Mr. Woody, in commenting on the story says: "There are in real life thousands of just such girls all over the country—girls whose ambition leads them to take positions in hotels and other public places where there is a possibility of attracting a wealthy husband.

Declares Miss Daniels "the Type."

"Some win out—others lose, but such situations oftentimes hold the very strongest dramatic possibilities. For several years this sort of story has been growing in popularity in the magazines, in novels and on the stage.

"The exact type of actress to portray such roles accurately and adequately is not easy to find. Miss Daniels is considered adequately fitted to portray such roles and we all feel confident that she will enjoy a record of success with Realart."

Selznick Cautions Against "Swat the Camel Companies"

IN his endeavors to wage a successful battle for exhibitors against interests aligned for the purpose of usurping choice locations for motion picture theatres, Lewis J. Selznick, in another interesting insert in the trade journals, cautions exhibitors with the advice "don't let them nose into your field."

Mr. Selznick calls the objects of his attack "Swat the camel companies." "Remember what happened to the tailor who didn't hit soon enough," says Mr. Selznick to exhibitors. "Get a club and the best club in this case is a clubbing of exhibitor interests. Combine to keep the producer in his place or you'll find him in yours.

"If I thought that you'd continue showing my pictures while I slowly bought up competitive locations I might try to get away with it, too. But because my dollar sense is common sense—and because common sense history and the bankruptcy courts swear that nobody ever successfully played both ends against the middle—I'll take the advice of 'Fair and Square' and defend your opportunities to better extend mine."

Mr. Selznick then reveals the fact that czars, kaisers, and sultans never took much stock in the live and let live doctrine, and through them he feels assured that the "grab-all game isn't what it's cracked up to be."

"Flying A" Sales Force Expanded for Summer

TO maintain the high points made by the "Flying A" sales force during the S. S. Hutchinson "Tribute Month," and to insure against any possible summer slump in business, the American sales organization has been increased very materially. President Hutchinson is laying plans on the basis of not only normal, but progressive activity, and backing it up by a strong appeal to the public taste through carefully chosen new productions.

The summer campaign includes several specials of high grade, among them "The House of Toys," by Henry Russell Miller, starring Seena Owen and directed by George L. Cox; "Peggy Rebels," adapted from "The Mate of the Sally Ann," with Mary Miles Minter under the direction of Henry King; "The Week End," a screen adaptation of the novel by Cosmo Hamilton.

There has been a steady growth in the organization since the advent of the "Flying A" specials, beginning with "Six Feet Four," "Eve in Exile," "The Valley of Tomorrow," "The Dangerous Talent," etc. E. P. Pickler and Ed Mordue have joined the Chicago force; W. P. Bernfield and C. W. DeLong have started in the St. Louis territory and T. Hayden in Denver, and George W. Hinton and G. W. Gavin are keeping things moving in Kansas City, as are A. B. Carpenter in Dallas, J. E. Armgardt in Buffalo and J. R. Keitz in Salt Lake.

Miss Young Heads Cast in "Arizona" at Clune's Theatre

FOR the first time in the history of motion pictures a theatrical drama of the speaking stage will be presented with an all-star cast of motion picture stars at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, on the nights of June 3, 4 and 5, at which time a super-production of Augustus Thomas' drama "Arizona" will be given.

The dramatic production of "Arizona" will be given for the benefit of the American Legion. Clara Kimball Young will head the cast playing the leading feminine role. It will be Miss Young's first appearance in a drama on the speaking stage since entering motion pictures nine years ago.

Playing opposite her in the leading male role will be Hobart Bosworth. The cast will include Dustin Farnum, Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts, William Desmond, Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale and Milton Sills.

Mayflower Launches Publicity Featuring Director R. A. Walsh and Miriam Cooper

ALMOST extensive publicity drive has been launched by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation in conjunction with the Newspaper Enterprise Association. As a result of this, R. A. Walsh, whose productions are presented by Mayflower, and Miriam Cooper, who is appearing in the director's subjects, are being featured on the front page of 300 of the country's leading newspapers.

The medium through which Walsh and Miss Cooper are becoming one of the country's most widely exploited personalities is a beauty contest which offers an opportunity for screen fame to the nation's most beautiful salesgirl. The contest is open to all salesgirls between the ages of seventeen and twenty-five. The reward is an engagement in R. A. Walsh's new production for four weeks at a salary of $100 a week. It is further stipulated that the winner will become the protege of Miriam Cooper, who will initiate her into the art of motion picture acting and develop to the fullest extent the girl's latent histrionic possibilities."

In the event that two girls are adjudged winners, both will be given the full award. The contest opened May 20 and closes on July 30.

According to a statement from Mayflower, a concrete manifestation of the contest's success is the impetus which has been given to bookings on "The Deep Purple," R. A. Walsh's first independent production, presented by Mayflower, and in which Miriam Cooper plays the leading feminine role. Appreciating the value of the publicity accruing to Walsh and Miss Cooper as a result of the contest, exhibitors throughout the country have entered into spirited competition to secure the R. A. Walsh production.

The contest is now in full swing and has aroused widespread interest. The 300 newspapers representing every state in the Union are backing the contest with an unprecedented volume of publicity, featuring it on the front pages. Thousands of salesgirls have entered the competition, and, according to the present rate with which applications are reaching the newspapers, it is estimated that over 200,000 entries will have been received before the close of the contest.

Signed articles by Director Walsh and Miss Cooper pertaining to screen acting are daily features of the newspapers conducting the contest. Large displays are also being devoted to photographs and human interest stories of the contestants.

Madieu of Pathe's Paris Office Here; Is Pleased with Business

LEON MADIEU, chairman of the board of directors of Pathe Cinema, Paris, and treasurer of Pathe Exchange, Inc., of the United States, arrived in this country on Friday, May 28, on the American liner St. Paul. He was met by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and during his stay here he will confer with Mr. Brunet on the affairs of Pathe Exchange and the plans for the coming year.

Mr. Madieu was impressed with the growth in the Pathe feature business in the past year and enthusiastically received the reports received from Pathe branches in all parts of the country predicting greater success than ever in the coming months. He was particularly pleased with the position of Pathe in the serial field in the United States and with the great strides in the distribution of short subjects and comedies.

During his stay in the United States Mr. Madieu is expected to visit several of the most important centers of Pathe production and distribution.

Work on "Four Horsemen" Script

June Mathis, head of Metro's scenario staff, who recently arrived in New York from Hollywood, already is deep in the task of casting into motion picture form Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." At Metro's Sixty-first street studios it was intimated that production of this story would start about July 1. No mention was made of the probable members of the cast.

Bert Lytell Reads Many Manuscripts on Arrival in New York; One Play Selected

WADING through a mass of manuscripts was the first task that came to the hand of Bert Lytell when the young Metro star arrived in New York last Saturday from the Pacific Coast, where he had spent nearly two years at the Metro studios in Hollywood. Mr. Lytell has returned to the metropolis to make a series of special productions at Metro's Sixty-first street studios under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

At least four pictures will be done in the East by Mr. Lytell, according to present arrangements, and as only one play as yet has been definitely decided upon for the star, he is reading a great number of vehicles with a view to picking out the other three. Metro officials have found Mr. Lytell's judgment in the selection of plays to be excellent, and upon his arrival in the East they turned over to him an accumulation of literary material designed for a made star of his qualifications.

"A Message from Mars," Charles Hawtrey's successful play, written by Richard Ganthoney, is the one already decided upon for Mr. Lytell's early use. This whimsical comedy-drama is well known to many of the present generation of theatre-goers. Charles Hawtrey starred in it almost continuously for six years in England and the United States. The play has had well over 1,000 performances, including several late revivals, and ranks among the first of the great successes in theatrical history.

Before leaving the West Coast Mr. Lytell completed his work in "The Price of Redemption," one of the most spectacular productions, it is said, that has ever been made by Metro. The picture is based on the powerful novel of East India, "The Temple of Dawn," by I. A. R. Wylie. It was adapted to the screen by June Mathis and directed by Dallas M. Fitzgerald. The special settings and effects were by A. W. Alley and G. M. Carpenter and the photographer was Sol Polito.

Realart Managers Exchange Posts

Harry E. Lotz, Realart manager at Pittsburg, and Henry E. Wilkinson, Buffalo, have exchanged posts, according to an announcement by J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart. The change became effective on May 31.

Mr. Wilkinson has been in charge of the Buffalo office since it was organized last fall. He joined Realart immediately after being released from the Naval Reserve, in which he served for the duration of the war as an aviator.

Mr. Lotz has also been with Realart since the Pittsburg office was established last fall. He has had a long experience in the motion picture business, and is well known throughout the country and in the Buffalo territory, to which he has now been assigned.

Goldwyn Buys Maximilian Foster's Novel "The Trap;" Plan Tie-up with Publishers

THE latest important purchase announced by Goldwyn Pictures is Maximilian Foster's successful story, "The Trap," which ran in McClure's Magazine from December to May and was read, it is conservatively estimated, by not less than five million people. In novel form, this tale of love, mystery and intrigue will be published by D. Appleton & Co. some time in July, and the book will be exploited in connection with the picture.

To Change Title.

Executives of Goldwyn Pictures and Appleton & Co. have decided to change the title from "The Trap" to "To the Highest Bidder" and the author has approved the alteration. When the book appears it will carry the new title.

The co-operative exploitation campaign, to be shared in by Goldwyn and the publishers, is being prepared far in advance to include every possible angle for advertising tie-ups.

To Have Campaign.

The campaign to accompany the publishing of "To the Highest Bidder" will incorporate the fact that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is issuing a screen version, so that readers of the novel will be prepared to look for the picture when it is shown at a local theatre. Window cards, suitable for display space, will be distributed through Goldwyn exchanges to book dealers in all parts of the country. The cards will be used at the time the first big splurge is made on the book, which the publishers expect to boost for a best seller in the early fall season.

Next Metro-Jack London Picture

"The God of His Fathers" is the next Jack London story to be picturized by C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., for release by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Published as a short story in McClure's Magazine during the days when London was classified as "a comer," "The God of His Fathers" stamped the author as a genius and vies with his later and longer works in popular favor.

Mitchell Lewis, featured in the two novels by the great author already put into picture form, "Burning Daylight" and "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," has again been retained and will play the leading role of Baptiste the Red, half French, half Indian. Production will begin immediately after the completion of "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" now being filmed at the Metro Studios in Hollywood. It is being scenarioized by Albert Shelby Le Vino and will be directed by Edward Sloman.

"Married Life" Released June 15

Following private screenings at Pasadena, advices from Sol Lesser and E. M. Asher, who claim that "Married Life," Mack Sennett's initial special feature attraction to be distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit is one of the greatest comedy knockouts ever produced, First National this week authorizes the statement that June 15 has been set as a national release day.

Louis Glaum in "Sex" Is Booked for Two Weeks' Run in Cleveland by Marcus Loew

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK, general manager of the Marcus Loew Enterprises and the Hodkinson organization have just approved a contract, whereby J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, Louise Glaum production, "Sex," will be given two weeks' presentation at Loew's Euclid Theatre, Cleveland, beginning June 20. Arrangements for the booking were concluded by Jack Kuhn, Loew Cleveland manager, and H. J. Ochs, the local Hodkinson representative. An exploitation campaign greater than any previously devised for a Loew attraction in Cleveland is promised by Mr. Kuhn.

Among other big first run bookings reported are the Empire, Mobile, Ala.; the Regent, Kansas City, Mo.; the Strand, Montgomery, Ala.; the Brandeis, Omaha, Neb.; the Circle, Ottumwa, Ia.; the Electric, St. Joseph, Mo.; the Rialto, Brockton, Mass.; the Fox, Aurora, Ill.; the Electric, Joplin, Mo.; the Strand, Haverhill, Mass.; the Landus, Springfield, Mo.; the Opera House, Burlington, Pa.

Last week at the Tudor Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., "Sex," aided by Manager James Jackson's campaign, set a new attendance record for amusements in the Georgia metropolis, and this despite a two-day rain and lukewarm support in the local dailies. Detailing his success with the production in a letter to the Hodkinson home office, Mr. Jackson concluded with "Sex" can be put over without newspaper co-operation."

Another exhibitor for whom "Sex" furnished a box office festival is Harris Lumberg, owner of the Lumberg Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y. So great was his opening day crowds that Mr. Lumberg shifted from his three-a-day policy to continuous performances for the balance of the week's engagement.

Warren Cook Engaged for Selznick Stock Company

ANOTHER addition to the stock company of screen players that Myron Selznick is assembling for the support of Selznick stars, was effected when Warren Cook was engaged under a long term contract.

The decision to hereafter make all productions for the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises in the East, bringing to New York the stars and directors now working for the company on the Western Coast, has made it necessary to complete the company before July first, when the change will be inaugurated.

Mr. Cook has appeared in support of many screen stars and before he began his photoplay career appeared on the stage for Charles Frohman, Henry W. Savage, Edward E. Rice, William A. Brady and David Belasco.

Mr. Cook's first appearance in a Selznick production was in support of Zena Keefe in "The Woman God Sent." Following this he appeared in Miss Olive Thomas' company in "The Flapper," and in support of William Faversham in "The Man Who Lost Himself." Under the terms of his new contract he is working in the company supporting Miss Elaine Hammerstein in "The Point of View," after which he will appear in "Wilderness Fear," a Selznick special production directed by Burton George.

Rotogravure Posters on "Passers By"

Believing the new J. Stuart Blackton production, "Passers By," to be one of the biggest pictures of the year, the Pathe publicity and advertising departments have combined forces to give it the most effective send-off possible. In addition to the usual advertising material a special press sheet has been issued, a rotogravure one-sheet poster and two special three sheets.

Chase Temporarily in Buffalo

M. A. Chase, who has been the acting district manager for the northwest district of the Universal sales department, is temporarily in charge of Universal's Buffalo branch exchange.

F. S. Hopkins, the former manager of the Buffalo exchange, had to give up his work because of ill health. At present he is in the Adirondack Mountains.

Announces Title of Next Rolin Comedy.

"Start the Show" is the title selected for the second of the new series of Rolin comedies starring Beatrice La Planet, released by Pathe June 13. It should stamp her as a real screen comedienne of original methods since her departure from feature productions. "Start the Show" is a hilarious satire on melodrama.

Sidney Franklin.
Who will produce four big productions yearly.

Long Term Contract Calls for Franklin to Make Four Films Yearly for Kaufman

ALBERT A. KAUFMAN has just closed a deal with Sidney Franklin which involves a long term arrangement between the producer and the director, calling for four super-special productions to be staged yearly. These pictures are to be known as Sidney Franklin Productions and will be produced on an elaborate plan.

Mr. Franklin will start on his initial production for Mr. Kaufman on June 2. Although the title of this film is not made public, it is stated that the story is one of particular interest to the motion picture public not only of this country but of Europe as well.

The distribution plans for Sidney Franklin Productions, as well as the title and details concerning the initial release, are promised within the next few weeks. The first production will be staged at the large studio occupied by Mr. Kaufman in conjunction with Marshall Neilan, as per the recent producing alliance formed between Messrs. Kaufman and Neilan. Here Mr. Franklin will have a complete unit for his own organization, which will be an individual producing body in itself.

The affiliation between Mr. Franklin and Mr. Kaufman is considered an ideal partnership by the friends of both gentlemen among the Hollywood motion picture colony. As a production expert, Mr. Kaufman is one of the foremost men in this field, his early experience dating back to the first years of the industry when he managed the eastern producing activities of the Famous Players company, handling most of the present-day stars, including Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark and Pauline Frederick.

Sidney Franklin is one of the newest directors to reach the front ranks of this branch of the industry. His career has been eventful and he has been compelled to overcome many obstacles, but his originality and his distinctive creative powers have won him a place in his field, which, although prominent already, is generally thought to be only the beginning of greater things.

Canada Fights High Loss of Sweltering with Cut Prices, Long Runs and Serials

THERE is little, if any, talk among Canadian exhibitors of prospective price advances to become effective with the so-called season reopenings late in August. At the same time, a number of theatres in various centers have been closed for the summer. These include at least two large houses, the St. Denis of Montreal and the Dominion Theatre of Winnipeg, Manitoba, the latter closing its doors on Monday, May 24, until August.

On the other hand, there is a tendency to place special film attractions in large dramatic or vaudeville theatres for indefinite summer engagements. It has been announced that "The Confession" will be shown at Shea's Theatre, Toronto, under such an arrangement, while it has also been stated that "The Great Air Robbery" will have a special summer run at the Grand, Toronto.

"Hot Weather Prices."

Still another interesting feature of the current situation in Canadian film circles is that Louis Rosenfeld, of Toronto, general manager of the Famous Players Film Sevice, Ltd., which is distinct from the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation, has announced "hot weather prices" for a number of special releases because of the apparent difficulty that many exhibitors have in maintaining patronage during the hot weeks of the year.

These specials include "Eyes of Youth," "Hearts of the World," "The Unpardonable Sin," "Stolen Orders," "Sahara," "The Westerners," "The Sagebrushers," "The Valley of the Giants," "Mr. Wu," "The Superman," "Beware," "Virtuous Men" and "Comradeship."

No Early Price Increase.

When announcement was made that the Ontario government had raised the annual theatre license fees and had doubled the annual exchange license fees as well as the charge for censoring pictures, the opinion was expressed by several leading picture theatre managers of Toronto that these increases would not make any material difference in the admission prices of the local theatres. This was taken as an indication that Toronto exhibitors, generally, would not increase admission prices for some time yet—if at all.

In a number of Canadian theatres the patronage started to dwindle during the third week in May when the first hot wave spread over the country—and the exhibitors knew that summer was at hand. This led one theatre manager, at least, to make a brave effort to hold the interest of the "fans" by announcing a special summer opening for the week of May 31.

This manager was Harry Pomeroy, of the Strand Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario. Mr. Pomeroy booked "Pollyanna" for the whole of the week of May 31, opened the roof of the theatre so that patrons would sit practically under the open sky, shoved in a special orchestral organization, decorated the theatre interior with breezy chintzes and added a special thrill in the shape of "The Strand Cascades," consisting of two scenic waterfalls in close proximity to the screen. Still another new piece of equipment consisted of cloth drapings to hide the screen when not in use.

Mr. Pomeroy also booked a serial, "One Million Dollars Reward," and the official series of pictures of the Prince of Wales' tour across Canada, the latter coming in ten instalments. A comparatively large number of Canadian exhibitors have booked serial photoplays to run through the summer months to fight the high loss of sweltering.

"Doc" Hall Awaits Ford Plant

Nat Bregstein, subscription seeker and exhibitor handshaker for Moving Picture World, gave "Doc" Hall, owner of the Beekman, Park Grand, Trojan and Keith theatres in Troy, N. Y., a chance to get a word in edgewise the other day, and here is what the exhibitor said:

"Troy did not gain in population during the past year. While business has been good, we have been rather up against it because of our small matinee crowds. The majority of the residents are working people who cannot attend the matinees. Of course, we turn them away at night, but show me the exhibitor who is satisfied with night business only.

"Like all other exhibitors, I have a bee in my bonnet regarding a new theatre, but it hinges on one thing. Henry Ford may come to town with a plant that would increase our population about 35,000. If he does, yours truly will be on the job with a 3,500-seat theatre."

Kahn to Write for Universal

Universal has engaged the services of another popular writer in its campaign to assure Universal patrons of good stories for Universal pictures. The latest acquisition is Don Kahn, a recognized writer of humorous literature.

Kahn formerly was on the staff of Puck and Judge. He also has contributed many humorous stories to various other magazines. From now on he will write comedies for Universal.

His first story for Universal, "Twin Lizzies," is now in production, under the direction of Joseph McDonough and Horace Davis.

Variety Films Organized

The Variety Films Company of Salt Lake City has been organized to make a series of one-reel scenic comedies. Clyde Tracy is the director general. He will be assisted by Burton West. Ira M. Croff is president. The company expects to be ready for distribution early in July, at which time it will make a formal announcement to the trade.

Many Goldwyn Pictures Booked by Broadway's Picture Palaces

THE spring season is marking a record for Goldwyn Pictures at the Capitol, Strand and Broadway theatres, New York. After occupying the Capitol for a week, Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde" was moved to the Broadway for a two weeks' run that was terminated by the engagement of Edgar Rice Burroughs' jungle story, "The Return of Tarzan," a Numa production handled by Goldwyn, which started May 30 for an indefinite run.

Will Rogers, in "Jes' Cal Me Jim," was received as one of the season's strongest attractions at Strand during the week of May 23.

Other Goldwyn Pictures.

Other Goldwyn pictures scheduled for an early showing on Broadway are Gertrude Atherton's "The Tower of Ivory," renamed "Out of the Storm," and Rupert Hughes' comedy, "Scratch My Back." Both of these productions are in the Eminent Authors series. One of the big features of the film is a shipwreck scene surpassing in realistic detail anything ever shown on the screen.

"Scratch My Back" is the first comedy released by Eminent Authors. It is a highly humorous version of one of the best comedy stories Mr. Hughes ever wrote.

FROLLICKING, romantic drama of the sea, full of pirates and the atmosphere of the South Seas, with two big fights staged on the deck of a ship under steam—"Cynthia-of-the-Minute," Gibraltar's new W. W. Hodkinson release, starring Leah Baird, offers something new in picture drama.

A play in which four of the six reels consist in action actually filmed aboard ship and at sea is something of a novelty at any time, but "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," from Louis Joseph Vance's story, is one of the first feature pictures to be made on shipboard since war was declared against Germany and the use of ships for picture purposes was put out of the question by the governmental demand for tonnage.

When the war ended and the principal ships of Germany's merchant fleet were tied up in the Hudson River as war prizes, assent was given by the United States Shipping Board to the use of the Kronprinz Wilhelm, the Imperator and the Leviathan for picture purposes, and the big fight in which Burr McIntosh, as "The Big Red Man," overcomes single-handed a horde of mutinous sailors in a terrific melee on the grand staircase of the Kronprinz Wilhelm, is one of the results.

But once production had been started on these lines the sea stuff had to be carried out to its logical conclusion, and there was no permission to un-anchor the German fleet and go to sea with it, so Miss Baird and her company repaired to Florida, where a big tramp steamer was just going into commission. The other fight scene, in which Hugh Thompson, Alexander Gaden, Burr McIntosh and other well-known actors were featured, took place on the rolling deck of the tramp, and it is about as spectacular a bit of camera work as has been seen in many a day.

Ten Screen Celebrities on Pathe's Serial Star Program

THE immense proportions to which the Pathe serial program has been built since the days of "The Perils of Pauline" finds a striking illustration in the serial star roster for this year. Ten celebrities appear—Ruth Roland, Juanita Hansen, Marguerite Courtot, Eileen Percy, Frankie Mann, George B. Seitz, Warner Oland, Charles Hutchison, Jack Dempsey, Stuart Holmes, four of them appearing in two releases each.

Ruth Roland, whose "Adventures of Ruth" was running when 1920 was ushered in, will be seen again in "Ruth of the Rockies."

George B. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot are listed for "Pirate Gold" and "Velvet Fingers."

Warner Oland, starred with Eileen Percy in "The Third Eye," is now playing in "The Phantom Foe," in which Juanita Hansen is to make her bow as a Pathe star.

Republic Serial Fulfilling Briton Busch Expectations

STILL sweeping onward toward an unusual booking record created by the initial release of the fifteen-episode Republic serial, "The Whirlwind," starring Charles Hutchison, Briton N. Busch, president of the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director, has announced that the serial is more than fulfilling his highest expectations.

"I do not hesitate to state," said Mr. Busch, "that 'The Whirlwind' has established an unprecedented booking record and has exceeded my fondest expectations. Exhibitors have been keen for this serial after viewing our 300-foot trailer.

"For the benefit of those exhibitors who have not booked 'The Whirlwind' I want to again impress upon them the fact that we have a 300-foot trailer crammed with all the exciting and stirring incidents contained in the entire fifteen episodes."

Metro's "Shore Acres" Scores in California and Missouri

FROM the West and the Mississippi Valley reports are reaching Metro telling of the pulling power of "Shore Acres," the picturization of James A. Herne's drama, featuring Alice Lake. As two instances in point, Metro officials are stressing advices just received from St. Louis, Mo., and San Bernardina, Cal.

"Shore Acres" played seven days at the Kings Theatre, St. Louis, and C. Werner, branch manager, states "hundreds were turned away, unable to obtain admittance." The picture later was booked for three-day runs at the Lindeel, Grand-Florissant, Shenandoah and Juanita theatres in St. Louis.

In San Bernardino, at the Temple Theatre, J. G. Knapp wired to B. F. Rosenberg, Metro manager in Los Angeles:

"'Shore Acres' great; went over with a bang. Everybody delighted and nothing but words of praise from a jam-up house, both matinee and night.

Her Dreams Were Dashed and Her Elbow Punctured

ANOTHER way in which the movies may be responsible for leading young women astray (Mr. Oberholtzer please note) was discovered in Philadelphia on May 25 when a man calling himself Craig W. Brunson of New York was arrested on complaint of Anna McIlroy of Ambler, a suburb of Secretary Daniels' favorite city.

The young woman answered a newspaper advertisement for women for roles in the movies and called upon Brunson. He claimed to represent a New York film company. When Miss Ilroy declined to go to New York with him, he stabbed her in the elbow with a sharp instrument, she said.

The police believe Brunson advertised merely to make the acquaintance of young women and are holding him in $1,500 bail on a charge of assault and battery while they investigate him.

Illness of Madge Kennedy Causes Delay to Her Picture

WITH only a day's production work left, Goldwyn has been forced to suspend work on its eastern production of "The Girl with the Jazz Heart," from the story by Robert Shannon. The delay was necessitated by the illness of Madge Kennedy, and it is expected that several days will elapse before the star will be able to resume work.

Miss Kennedy has two roles in the production. She has worked continuously every day for the past month, the story being such that the presence of one of the two characters was always necessary. The result has been that she has broken down.

Her illness is not serious and after taking the prescribed rest she will resume her labors. Some exteriors remain to be taken.

Exhibitors Praise Blackton Film

First reports from Pathe exchange managers and from exhibitors in several territories throughout the country where "Passers By," the latest J. Stuart Blackton production, has been given private advance showings indicate that the picture will meet with all the success predicted for it when it was first accepted for Pathe.

The combination of a popular novel made into a stage success and now adapted for motion pictures, with Herbert Rawlinson leading a strong cast, is the subject of many commendatory messages of congratulation received by Commodore Blackton. The picture will be released on June 20. The story is by C. Haddon Chambers.

Release Linder Film on June 6

As a delightful caricature of Parisian life which will appeal strongly to the 3,000,000 Americans who have been in France during the last few years, and likewise to their relatives and friends who have not, "The Little Cafe," with Max Linder in the stellar role, is expected by exhibitors to be one of the strongest box office attractions of the coming month. It will be released by Pathe June 6. The story, as a play, was one of the greatest stage successes and companies playing it toured the country from coast to coast.

All Wellesley Buys Stock in New Community Theatre

COMMUNITY moving pictures are going to be tried out by Wellesley, Mass., home of Wellesley College. The project is being financed by citizens and collegiate faculty. Pictures are to be shown at pre-war prices.

"Community movies like ours have never been launched before," says William E. Stanwood of the organizing committee. "Other towns hereabouts are watching our experiment. While our object is to give the best pictures on the market at the cheapest price, we are holding out financial inducements to our stockholders. Operating on a careful basis we hope to declare dividends. Every one in town is interested. Shares are selling fast at $10 apiece. We are not after travelogues nor educational series; we want the best thrillers on the market."

Faversham Film Press Book Is Available for Exhibitors

IN keeping with the reputation of William Faversham, Selznick Pictures, in issuing the exhibitors' campaign book on "The Man Who Lost Himself," his first Selznick picture, have made it replete with live wire aids that are sure to compel attention.

Throughout the book there is said to run a vein of dignity for those exhibitors who cater to the so-called elite, and a dash of color for those showmen whose forte is making big splashes of productions. Coupled with the fact that William Faversham is one of America's greatest actors, and that the picture, "The Man Who Lost Himself," is from the book by H. DeVere Stackpole, a well-known British author, telling a fascinating, romantic comedy with an engrossing mystery and a touch of drama, exhibitors will do well to consider this Selznick production, it is declared.

From the campaign book, it is stated, exhibitors can glean bright bits of the personal history of Mr. Faversham, the complete cast and program material of the story as advance notices, unbiased reviews, dignified and effective scenes and layouts that will brighten exhibitors' newspaper announcements, model letters for a mail campaign, advertising displays that are calculated to do the work of a dozen salesmen and the aid of a wide-awake exploitation expert who will help to push the production over the top.

Pathe Pleased With Work of Millhauser.

Although the first production has not been entirely completed, Bertram Millhauser, for many years connected with Pathe and the author of several plays produced by that company, has firmly established himself as a director of serials by his work in the completed episodes of "The Phantom Foe," the picture in which Juanita Hansen is to star and which is now in production at the Seitz studios in New York.

The finished episodes have been projected at the Pathe home office, and Millhauser's direction has found such high favor with Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager, and the departmental heads of Pathe, that there seems little doubt he will be put in charge of the direction of another serial when "The Phantom Foe" is completed.

"Virgin" Film Goes Big on the Coast.

"The Virgin of Stamboul" took San Francisco by storm, recent reports from the West Coast metropolis to the Universal home office indicate. Opening in the Strand Theatre, it packed the house for the entire week of its run, and was immediately booked by the Frolic Theatre, directly across the street from the Strand, for a second run three weeks later.

Selznick's First Faversham Feature Booked Heavily by First-run Houses

WILLIAM FAVERSHAM, in the Selznick picture, "The Man Who Lost Himself," is creating a wave of popularity, according to Sam E. Morris, vice-president of Select Pictures.

"Practically every first run house has broken a long standing precedent to play 'The Man Who Lost Himself,'" declared Mr. Morris. "Grauman's Rialto Theatre, in Los Angeles, has booked the picture for an indefinite run. Roth's Theatre, San Francisco, has also booked the picture for an indefinite run. Several circuits have contracted for the picture, including Loew's and Poli's, also the Stillman Theatre, of Cleveland, and scores of others.

"If the biggest showmen in the country throw to the discard productions previously booked, it is conclusive evidence that 'The Man Who Lost Himself' is an attraction that cannot be ignored."

William Faversham in this production portrays dual characterization; as Victor Jones, an American commercial agent stranded in London, and as the Earl of Rochester, known as a spendthrift and bounder. These two roles, it is declared, afford Mr. Faversham wide scope for his histrionic ability.

"The Man Who Lost Himself" is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by H. DeVere Stackpole, a prominent British author. George Baker directed the production.

The Strand Theatre, of New York, is now showing "The Man Who Lost Himself," together with a Herbert Kaufman Weekly.

Louise Huff First Selznick Star Working at Solax Studio

WITH the acquisition of the Solax studio by the Selznick Pictures Corporation and the announcement of its opening, Louise Huff, the latest star added to the Selznick constellation, is the first screen artist to work at the studio. Miss Huff is now working on her initial Selznick production, "The Dangerous Paradise," written by Edmund Goulding and being directed by William P. S. Earle.

In the cast supporting Miss Huff are Ida Darling, Jack Raymond, Templar Saxe and Harry Benham.

Edmund Gouldings, well known as a writer of both fiction and screen plays, has been responsible for not only "The Dangerous Paradise," but also many other screen successes. Lewis Browne, author of "Marooned Hearts," featuring Zena Keefe and Conway Tearle, the popular Selznick 1920 star, playing the leading feminine role, wrote the continuity for the initial Huff picture.

Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber in Serial for Selznick Release

SAM E. MORRIS, vice-president and general manager of Select Pictures, announced that "The Branded Four," a serial picture co-starring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, is in the course of production and will be released soon. This will be the second serial distributed by Selznick Enterprises.

"'The Branded Four,'" said Mr. Morris, "will contain several novelties. This serial will prove a bonanza for exhibitors. It will be entirely different and in a sphere by itself.

"Backed by Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, whose names are known throughout the country, it is my firm belief that they will gain fresh honors in 'The Branded Four.'"

Publishers Arrange Tie-Up for Latest Zane Grey Film

TRADE showings held in Hodkinson exchanges are announced as indicating that first run exhibitors feel toward "Riders of the Dawn" as did Moe Mark, of the New York Strand, and Tom Moore, of Washington, both of whom gave the Zane Grey production immediate presentation.

Ray A. Grombacher, of the Liberty Theatre, Spokane, where another current Hodkinson success, Louise Glaum in "Sex," just closed a week of good business, booked "Riders of the Dawn" for early June, and Tabor's Grand, Denver, has also booked it for a week in mid-June.

Harper & Brothers, publishers of the Zane Grey novel, have inaugurated a bookshop link-up campaign with booksellers throughout the country. This not only covers window displays but a link-up with the exhibitor in newspaper advertising as well.

Through arrangement with the New York Strand the Hodkinson organization obtained for use by exhibitors the music score arranged by Carl Edouarde.

Selznick News Rapidly Going Ahead, Says C. R. Rogers

DESPITE the youth of the Selznick News reel, many exhibitors who pride themselves on maintaining a balanced program have been strong for the issues of Selznick News, and not a week goes by but that scores of other exhibitors throughout the country fall in line for the live wire news items, according to Charles R. Rogers, director of sales for both Select and Republic.

"Our bookings show," declared Mr. Rogers, "that exhibitors are keen judges of the value of news items. They want their programs to be so balanced, so unified in entertainment value, that audiences will leave with a feeling of satisfaction.

"From every section of this country week in and week out commendations on the value of Selznick News are becoming common. We heartily welcome these frank testimonials of exhibitor approval. Today more than ever in the history of the news reel exhibitors demand the best and last minute live wire news items for their patrons."

"Slam Bang Jim" Booking for the Fourth.

"Slam Bang Jim" is booking for the Fourth of July feature in some of the largest theatres. "It is just the type of picture for a celebration," said one exhibitor, "and is sure to play to crowded houses. Bill Russell has just the right amount of pep for a Fourth of July show."

Among the extended bookings on the production received during the past few days are the Gaiety Theatre of Cleveland, Folly Theatre of Oklahoma City, the Lubin of Cincinnati, the Royal of Sioux City, the Franklin of Oakland, Cal.; the Idle Hour of Kansas City, Fox's Theatre of Springfield, the Wilson of Baltimore, Md., and the Casino of Davenport, Ia.

A Beautiful Reflection
Of Wanda Hawley, who is starring in "Miss Hobbs" for Realart.

Big Cabaret Set Constructed for Viola Dana Production

WILLIAM C. DOWLAN, director of "The Chorus Girl's Romance," Viola Dana's forthcoming Metro production, decided to build the interior of the cabaret, as called for the 'script, up one of the stages at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood. He is said to have obtained an exact reproduction of one of New York's famed cafes.

"The Chorus Girl's Romance" is from the Saturday Evening Post short story "Head and Shoulders," by F. Scott Fitzgerald. It tells of the winning of a studious college boy's heart by a visiting chorus girl and "shimmy" expert, their subsequent marriage, trials and tribulations, and final complete happiness and congeniality.

Percy Heath scenarioized Mr. Fitzgerald's story. The special art settings were designed by E. A. Freuderman, and John Arnold is the cameraman

Thomas Jefferson in "Hearts Are Trumps."

Thomas Jefferson, who played the part of the old bookkeeper in support of Bert Lytell in "Lombardi, Ltd.," has been cast for the important role of Dyson, the lawyer, in "Hearts Are Trumps," the third Drury Lane melodrama to be filmed by Metro with an all-star cast.

Cosmopolitan Has Five Big Productions Finished; Several Others To Be Put Into Works

AN idea of Cosmopolitan Productions' picture plans can be gleaned from the fact that this company now has five new productions completed, or nearly completed, two more to be started this week and several others to be put into work within the next few months—every one of them taken from a world famous story or play.

"Humoresque," which is turning crowds away nightly at New York's Criterion Theatre, where it is now playing a pre-release engagement, is the latest Cosmopolitan Productions' release.

"The Restless Sex," Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle, is another Cosmopolitan production that has been completed and scheduled for early release. This is the screen version of Robert W. Chambers' novel of the same name, which ran serially in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and was later published in book form.

Vignola Completes Big Picture.

Robert Vignola has just completed the direction of the Cosmopolitan production "The World and His Wife," a picturization of the popular play by Charles Frederick Nirdlinger, taken from the dramatic verse of Jose Eckegaray. Alma Rubens is the featured player in this picture, while the other leading members of the cast include Montagu Love, Pedro de Cordova, Charles Gerard, Gaston Glass and Margaret Dale.

"A Whiff of Heliotrope," from the dramatic story of the same name by Richard Washburn Childs, which appeared a short while ago in Hearst's Magazine, has recently been completed by Director George D. Baker and will be released by Cosmopolitan Productions in the near future.

A screen version of Winston Churchill's novel "The Inside of the Cup" is now nearing completion under the direction of Albert Capellani for Cosmopolitan Productions. This is the story which created so much discussion a few years ago when it appeared in book form.

Marion Davies Starts on "Buried Treasure."

Marion Davies has started work on a new picture, entitled "Buried Treasure," from the story by F. Britten Austen, which appeared recently in Hearst's Magazine. George D. Baker is directing.

Director Robert Vignola has started work on "The Passionate Pilgrim," from the novel of the same name by Samuel Merwin, which ran serially in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, while Director Frank Borzage begins "Just Around the Corner," by Fannie Hurst, also a Cosmopolitan Magazine story.

Among other big features scheduled for early production are "The Young Diana," by Marie Corelli; "The Ninth Commandment," by Fannie Hurst; "The Wild Goose," by Gouverneur Morris; "Uneasy Street," by Arthur Somers Roche; "Zal," by Rupert Hughes; "Yellow Magic," by F. Britten Austen, and "Superman," by Fannie Hurst.

Ouija! Ouija! Tell Me True! Does He Love Me as I Love You?
And the temperamental ouija replies, "How da ya git that way?" to Marjorie Daw and Agnes Ayres, who play in Marshall Neilan productions.

Big Bookings Reported on Joseph Levering Feature

FOLLOWING a week's engagement at Tom Moore's Strand, Washington, D. C., "His Temporary Wife," Joseph Levering's production, has been booked by many prominent exhibitors. Jacob Lourie has contracted for a week at his Modern and Beacon theatres, Boston, and C. E. Stilwell, of Spokane, for the Casino.

The Poli chain in New England has booked this picture for Bridgeport, Waterbury and New Haven theatres, and the management is seeking to arrange a personal appearance of Rubye De Remer, one of the stars. The new Hodkinson release was adapted by Joseph Levering from Robert Ames Bennet's magazine story as his first venture as a producer, and the cast includes Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Eugene Strong and W. T. Carleton. A powerful story, and mountings to equal those of the biggest pictures is promised for this production, which is said to be as timely as it is entertaining—simply "a startling leap year romance," as one exhibitor termed it. "His Temporary Wife" is described as a society drama with elements of melodramatic action, novel in theme.

Borzage Talks to Associated Motion Picture Advertisers

ON Thursday, May 27, at the weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, the guest of honor was Frank Borzage, director of "Humoresque." Arthur Brilant introduced Mr. Borzage, who stated that it was his intention to give a few personal and intimate revelations in regard to picture making.

Mr. Borzage said he firmly believed in making every picture character like a human being, and in his opinion every part on the screen should be played in a perfectly natural manner.

"It is not easy for a director to grasp the commercial end of the motion picture business," he said, "and for that reason he must necessarily be guided by those in charge of the exploitation and sales department. For instance, I wanted to give 'Humoresque' what would be termed an unhappy ending, but had to bow to the decision of Mr. Zukor and Mr. Hearst, who were very emphatic in their opinion that the public demands a happy ending. To my mind this is artificial and non-artistic. But after all we of the screen are the servants of the public and must give the public what it wants."

"I think that every picture should run its length. If the story calls for seven, eight or nine reels, that be the length of the picture."

Vitagraph's "Hidden Dangers" to Be Released During July

ON his return from the West Coast late last week, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announced that "Hidden Dangers," the Vitagraph serial in which Joe Ryan and Jean Paige are co-starred, will be released in July. More than half of the fifteen episodes have already been completed by Director William Bertram.

The story of "Hidden Dangers," which was written by Mr. Smith and Cleveland Moffett, has received much praise from exhibitors who have seen the first episodes screened and who have booked it on the strength of this early action. Director Bertram, however, in a wire to Mr. Smith last week, claimed that the big "walloping" thrills, as he styled them, are yet to come.

"If they like those first two episodes," he said, "just wait until they see episodes eight and nine and the thrills that you worked out here with Mr. Moffett. The Jekyll-Hyde idea of the serial gets stronger and stronger as the story unfolds."

Five Features, Sunshine Comedies, Mutt and Jeff Cartoons Are Listed by Fox for June

DRAMATIC offerings predominate in the schedule of releases listed by Fox Film Corporation for the month of roses. Along with the regular quota of Sunshine Comedy films and Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, William Fox, president of the company, has arranged to present five of his popular stars in as many promising features during June.

Notable among these features is a new William Farnum picture, "The Joyous Troublemakers," the original story of which comes from the pen of Jackson Gregory. The story was adapted to films by Charles Kenyon, who has contributed in this respect tward several Farnum successes, and John Boyle, the Farnum photographer, again has developed some new angles. J. Gordon Edwards directed.

Mix in "3 Gold Coins."

The Tom Mix number on the Fox schedule is the first of the original stories written for this cowboy star by H. H. Van Loan. "3 Gold Coins" is the title.

A tale of love, romance and stunts, "3 Gold Coins" is a novel Western story and shows this cow-puncher star in a still wilder and more thrilling series of hair-raising stunts than ever before. The film was directed by Cliff Smith, and photographed by Frank Good.

The cast supporting Tom Mix ranks with those found in all Mix pictures and includes Margaret Loomis as leading woman, Frank Whitson, Bert Hadley, Dick Rush, Margaret Cullington, Sylvia Jocelyn, Bonnie Hill, Sid Jordan, Walt Robins and Frank Weed. The adaptation is the work of Alvi J. Neitz.

In "White Lies," the Gladys Brockwell vehicle which comes to the first run houses in June, this star has a role in which she is called upon to demonstrate her histrionic ability as she has in no other Fox production for some time. The play is based on the novel by Charles Reade, and in it are many intensely heavy scenes between Miss Brockwell and her leading man, William Scott. These scenes are graphic pages from the life of a man and woman whose happiness is threatened by cruel and jealous intrigue.

The picture was directed by Edward J. LeSaint from the scenario by Charles Wilson. In addition to the leading man, William Scott, Mr. Fox has given his emotional star able support consisting of Josephine Crowell, Evans Kirk, Violet Schram, Charles K. French, Howard Scott and Lule Warrenton.

The June release starring William Russell is a screen version of Ridgwell Cullum's story, "Twins of Suffering Creek," one of the most successful of this author's works. In the picture with Russell are Louise Lovely, leading woman; E. A. Warren, Bill Ryno, Henry J. Hebert and Joe Ray. The direction was by Scott Dunlap and the photography by Clyde DeVinna. There are many touching scenes in the story centering around the tiny child actors, Helen Stone and Malcolm Cripe, who are cast as the twins. Florence Deshon, a character actress of sterling ability, is entrusted with the role of their mother, and the work of the entire cast, including the juvenile players, has made "Twins of Suffering Creek," what is declared to be another Russell success.

The second production of Vivian Rich as a Fox star is titled "A World of Folly," both story and scenario are by Jane Grogan. An unusual feature about this picture is the fact that the cast includes but four persons in addition to Vivian Rich, the star. These four are Aaron Edwards as lead; Augusta Phillips, long known to theatregoers and followers of stock in various parts of the country; P. M. McCullough and Daisy Robinson. Frank Beal is responsible for the direction.

Short Subjects Scheduled.

Among the short subjects scheduled Fox offers four rapid-fire Sunshine Comedies—"Monkey Business," "Oh, What a Knight!", Mary's Little Lobster," and "His Musical Sneeze." These are exploited as fully up to the high standard of two-reel funmakers released under the Sunshine mark, and each discloses a wealth of novel tricks and clean, clever humor.

The Bud Fisher contributions for the month, in Animated Cartoons co-starring the funny fellows, Mutt and Jeff, include four breezy black-and-whites. They are "The Toy Makers," "The Tango Dancers," "One Round Jeff" and "A Trip to Mars."

"The Restless Sex" Deals with Question of Feminism

THE Restless Sex," Marion Davies' newest starring feature for Cosmopolitan Productions, which will be pre-released in New York shortly, is announced as a spectacular drama of modern society life, a massive production with magnificent settings and scenic investitures, and a cast of more than six hundred. Unquestionably the best thing that Marion Davies has ever done, "The Restless Sex," reveals a new histrionic trait in the star.

Done in Robert W. Chambers' best style, "The Restless Sex," which appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine, deals with the theme of feminism, the restlessness of the awakened woman who has tasted of independence and craves for the topmost rung on the ladder. Under the guise of romance and love is a thought that hits every moman in the civilized world and should interest every man also. Perhaps no question is of greater interest to-day than the question of feminism. Distinct from the question of suffrage, which is purely political, the question of feminism as it occurs in "The Restless Sex," concerns woman's desire to be something more than a man's wife. It treats of her striving to rise above the status of mere chattel goods and become a factor in civilization.

In transferring the production to the screen, Director Robert Z. Leonard has retained all of its fine flavor and its rare qualities. Sumptuously and lavishly invested, no expense was spared in making this production as spectacular and as gorgeous as anything yet seen on the screen.

Alice Terry Gets Big Role in Metro's "Hearts Are Trumps"

ALICE TERRY, a high school girl eighteen years old, hailing from central Illinois, enjoys the rare distinction of blossoming from obscurity into the ranks of featured players almost over night.

With considerably less than a year's experience before the camera, most of which was consumed in the playing of small parts, the youthful blonde actress was discovered by Rex Ingram when he began the selection of the cast for "Hearts Are Trumps," the forthcoming Metro production of the big Drury Lane melodrama.

"The part of Dora Woodberry fits Miss Terry like a beautifully tailored suit," said the Metro director after watching the young woman before the camera in a series of tests from which she emerged triumphantly.

As a result the important role was given to her. She is working at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood in the all-star cast with Francelia Billington, Frank Brownlee, Winter Hall, Norman Kennedy, Edward Connelly, Brinsley Shaw, Thomas Jefferson, Joseph Kilgour and Howard Crampton.

"Hearts Are Trumps" is the fourth of six Drury Lane melodramas to be filmed by Metro. Cecil Raleigh is the author and June Mathis adapted it for the screen. This will be Rex Ingram's second Metro production.

Some One Said: "The Worm Turns."

Joe Rock, Vitagraph comedian, doing a supporting "turn" with his leading woman, Patsy De Forrest.

Zena Keefe in Leading Feminine Role.

First scenes for the widely read story, "Red Foam," written by William H. Hamby, popular writer of fiction stories, have been shot by Ralph Ince, according to an announcement this week. This production follows the Ince-Selznick picture, "Out of the Snows," recently completed with Zena Keefe, the Selznick 1920 star, playing the leading feminine role.

Edward Montagne, member of the Selznick scenario staff, has adapted "Red Foam" to the screen.

Sid Grauman Lauds Wanda Hawley Film; Has 3,500 Bookings Before Its Release

WITH a list that showed 3,500 bookings in the most representative houses in the United States, "Miss Hobbs," the initial production in which Realart's recently launched star, Wanda Hawley, appears, was given an enthusiastic send-off at Sid Grauman's million-dollar theatre in Los Angeles.

Sid Grauman wired J. S. Woody, Realart's general manager, that "Miss Hobbs" is a "perfect production and superior to anything of a similar theme" and that "its national premier today was gratifying in the extreme." More than one hundred prints of the picture will be worked solidly for a month after the date of release to establish a playing record.

The production is a mid-June release. Its run in the exchange centers will be played, without exception, before the last week of the month—in fact, it will play the majority of the key centers of the country within the first week of release. It will play practically every city of 10,000 population in the United States within thirty days after its release.

Another unusual feature is that more than 3,500 bookings for this picture were obtained one month in advance of the release date solely on the strength of Realart's promise of a notable production.

Sid Grauman's telegram was as follows: "In my opinion, Wanda Hawley in 'Miss Hobbs' is a perfect production and superior to anything of a similar theme. The response from the public at its national premier today was gratifying in the extreme. The genuine appreciation manifested by the audiences more than verifies my faith in this and other Realart productions and I look to see business increase daily during the engagement."

A few days before his booking date Mr. Grauman saw the "Miss Hobbs" picture at a private showing. In a personal letter to J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, Mr. Grauman said he could state, in all sincerity, that he has seldom been so favorably impressed with a picture.

"The dominant note of this screen play," wrote Mr. Grauman, "is its humanness, its idyllic scenes of drifting loveliness, its tender love theme and its quiet, repressed type of humor all conducting toward that result. I predict a splendid future for Wanda Hawley and can never remember any screen star being given so strong a vehicle at the outset of his or her starring career. I think destiny holds great things in store for the beautiful Miss Hawley and for Realart products."

"Point of View" Progressing Rapidly at Selznick Studios

UNDER the direction of Alan Crosland, Elaine Hammerstein's forthcoming starring vehicle, "The Point of View," is progressing rapidly, according to Myron Selznick, and indications point to a production that will be as distinct as the star's current Selznick picture, "Whispers," but containing an original vein for the complete revelation of a characterization that has heretofore never been played by Miss Hammerstein. The story is an adaptation of the Broadway stage success written by Edith Ellis.

Director Crosland is said to have injected some very effective and novel touches. In the supporting cast are found the names of Arthur Houseman, the well-known heavy, whose last appearance in a Selznick picture was in "A Fool and His Money," starring Eugene O'Brien, Warren Cook, Hugh Huntley, Helen Lindroth, Cornish Beck and others equally known to screen fans.

Edward Montague adapted the picture for the screen.

Universal Schedules "Tokio Siren."

Universal announces as a special attraction the release of "The Tokio Siren," with Tsuru Aoki (Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa), June 14. Norman Dawn directed this production, which is a comedy-drama of modern times with a touch of picturesque antiquity, including old Japanese ruins and the religious ceremonies of the Buddhist worshippers.

The picture is based on Gwendolyn Logan's story "Sayonara," which concerns a young Japanese maiden unwillingly betrothed by her uncle to a man in whom she takes no interest.

Supporting Miss Aoki are Jack Livingston, Arthur Jasmine, Peggy Pearce and many other capable players.

Four Episodes of Roland Serial Completed.

The first four episodes of "Ruth of the Rockies," the serial in which Ruth Roland will make her next appearance as a Pathe star, were shipped in complete form to New York from the Astra studios recently for the purpose of an initial screening for the Pathe officials in the home office. Miss Roland and her company are now doing outdoor scenes at Balboa Beach for the ninth episode of the story, scenarioized by Frances Guihan from the romance by Johnstone McCulley, which was published under the title of "Broadway Bab." The serial is being produced under the supervision of Gilson Willets.

When Director Meets Comedian.
Ruth Roland, Pathe star, introducing Max Linder, who plays in "The Little Cafe," to George Marshall, her director.

Eddie Polo in "The Vanishing Dagger," "New Policy" Universal Serial, Ready

UNIVERSAL'S announced policy of making serials that are high class adventure and travel pictures, in place of torture chambers and crashing trains, will have its try-out soon with Eddie Polo's international, "The Vanishing Dagger."

Polo and his party crossed the Atlantic last summer in order to film scenes in Europe. Three months were passed abroad.

In line with this policy in the realm of books. Universal heads believe that when a screen hero dashes from country to country or from hemisphere to hemisphere, he is actually shown doing so.

Educational Value in Policy.

The educational value of this policy is considered of importance and it also is expected to eliminate much criticism on the part of foreign patrons who usually are amused at screen attempts to scenes with which they are familiar.

Supporting Polo are Thelma Percy and Peggy O'Dare. Others in the cast are Ray Ripley, Ruth Royce, Thomas Lingham, C. Norman Hammond, Laura Oakley, Arthur Jervis and Karl DeSylva.

Polo and Edward Kull, directed the chaptered screen story. It was written by Jacques Jaccard, Milton Moore and Hope Loring. Miss Loring put it into scenario form.

The first episode opens at a house-party on the estate of an English nobleman, and quickly shifts to other parts of the British Isles. The action later takes the characters half way around the world to Western America, then jumps to other parts of the American continent and finally back to Europe.

Replete with Stunts.

It is said to be full of thrills and daredevil stunts by Polo. Included among these are a dive of 125 feet from a cliff into a heavy surf, a leap from the deck of an ocean-liner in mid-ocean, a bare handed struggle with a wild leopard and similar stunts.

Many beautiful scenes were obtained in the British Isles. In these scenes is set action, which is expected to be more appreciated by screen patrons when they realize they are looking at the actual settings.

Big Theatres Booking "Sherry."

Edgar Lewis' second Pathe production, "Sherry," is being received with favor by exhibitors throughout the country. The screen version of George Barr McCutcheon's "best seller" was not scheduled for release by Pathe until May 30, but advance screenings of it were held in each of the thirty-two branch offices of Pathe.

Like "Other Men's Shoes," which, until the release of "Rio Grande," held the Pathe record for number of bookings and average price per day, "Sherry" has more than the average amount of human interest. It is typical of the work of Edgar Lewis, who found greater opportunities for spectacular outdoor production in "Sherry" than in "Other Men's Shoes."

Fallon Story for George Walsh.

Decision has been reached by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, regarding the next story for George Walsh, following completion of the screen version of Louis Tracy's novel "Number 17," upon which Mr. Walsh is now engaged under the direction of George A. Beranger.

Since the success scored by "The Shark," a story of land and sea, in which Walsh gives a striking performance of a conscientious, clean-living young roustabout, Mr. Fox has given much consideration to the possibility of equipping his young star with a role created by the same writer, Thomas F. Fallon. This resulted in the development of an idea which Mr. Fallon had cherished for some time in regard to a Walsh play and Mr. Fox has accepted it as his next vehicle.

"The Plunger" is the name of the story. It is an original by Mr. Fallon, and the author also executed the scenario from which Dell Henderson will direct the production.

"Duck Inn" Second of Mermaid Comedies.

"Duck Inn" is announced as the title of the second of the Mermaid Comedies which will be released by Educational Films Corporation through its own system of exchanges. "A Fresh Start" is the initial release of the series.

Lloyd Hamilton is the star in "Duck Inn" and opposite him is seen Marvel Rea, of Mack Sennett comedy fame. There is a large cast, the greater portion of the picture being exteriors. Some new fun effects are promised in this picture.

Revised Cast for Enid Bennett Drama.

Joan Standing, Geoffrey Webb, Donald MacDonald, Vern Winters, Harold Holland, Bonnie Hill and Willie M. Carson will support Enid Bennett in her latest Thomas H. Ince production, "I Wonder If——," now under production at the Ince West Coast Studios. The new drama is one of the liveliest of the Bennett series and is replete with original and colorful situations. Fred Niblo is directing, with George Burns at the camera.

Consensus of Trade Press Reviews

Here are extracts from available news printed in the five motion picture trade papers, It is the aim to present one sentence that will reflect the spirit of the writer's opinion. The papers are indicated as follows: Moving Picture World (M. P. W.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitor's Trade Review (T. R.); Wid's (W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E. H.).

Sherry
(Pat O'Malley—Pathe)

M. P. W.—Maintains a comedy pace most of the time, with occasional dramatic moments thrown in. Carries the interest along in an entertaining way, though without any great degree of suspense.

N.—Has interesting moments, but rather long drawn out.

T. R.—Conventional drama made from a George Barr McCutcheon story.

W.—Worn theme and story faults handicap this one.

Love's Harvest
(Shirley Mason—Fox)

M. P. W.—The production as a whole is one of cheerful, happy sentiment, mingling smiles with tears, and never lapses into the insipid.

N.—Dainty star in comedy-drama of high order.

T. R.—There is nothing unusual about story or production; it is just an ordinary program feature.

W.—Personality of star puts this over.

Jes Call Me Jim
(Will Rogers—Goldwyn)

M. P. W.—One of the finest high comedies shown on the screen.

N.—Rogers has rich character study in story of homespun quality.

T. R.—This picture should prove a big winning card from the box office standpoint.

W.—If you want a good one here it is.

The Gift Supreme
(Bernard Durning, Seena Owen—Republic)

M. P. W.—The production promises well for the box office.

N.—For downright amusement, the kind that will interest, stimulate and thrill, this film should be a "gift supreme" to the exhibitor.

T. R.—Strong acting and fine characterization. The reformation of the crooks through the great faith of the hero and heroine makes a powerfully touching climax.

The Flapper
(Olive Thomas—Selznick)

M. P. W.—It is a genuine screen comedy, able to stand on its own merits.

N.—The director, author and star are the trinity that have made this interesting little photoplay, which provides good entertainment even if it does not attempt to be a world-beater.

T. R.—This picture provides amusing entertainment and should prove a good box office asset.

E. H.—Should find favor in a majority of playhouses.

For the Soul of Rafael
(Clara Kimball Young—Equity)

M. P. W.—The film is destined to enjoy a long and profitable popularity.

T. R.—Artistic production efforts offer compromise for feeble story.

E. H.—Is an exceptionally well knit and interesting romance of the Mexican border country of seventy years ago.

Pegeen
(Bessie Love—Vitagraph)

M. P. W.—Bessie Love is happy-hearted waif in well-handled Vitagraph picture.

N.—Saccharine story on a "Pollyanna" theme.

T. R.—"Pegeen" is one of the most charming pictures that ever graced the screen.

Passion's Playground
(Katherine MacDonald—First National)

M. P. W.—The picture is very dramatic and unusually interesting.

T. R.—It is thought by the reviewer to be the best picture Katherine MacDonald has appeared in to date.

E. H.—The story is highly dramatic and absorbing.

Mothers of Men
(Claire Whitney—Selznick)

M. P. W.—A high-tension story of exceptional merit, "Mothers of Men" powerfully contrasts brutal passions with the innate purity of true womanhood.

N.—Has many interesting moments which should satisfy.

W.—It's more or less of a war picture, but its merits should override prejudices.

The Midnight Bride
(Gladys Leslie—Vitagraph)

M. P. W.—A picture that is clean, unconventional in type and morally well balanced.

T. R.—Offers a mild entertainment due more to one novel situation than anything else.

W.—Ordinary production given to very convenient melodrama.

Haunting Shadows
(H. B. Warner—Robertson-Cole)

M. P. W.—H. B. Warner scores big in Hampton adaptation of Meredith Nicholson story.

N.—H. B. Warner has a winner here.

T. R.—Proves a fine starring vehicle for H. B. Warner.

The Honey Bee
(Marguerita Sylva—American)

M. P. W.—A good entertainment.

N.—Good entertainment from picturized novel.

T. R.—Drama of speedy action.

Comments on Short Subjects

THE FIGHTIN' TERROR (Western-Universal)—Ed. (Hoot) Gibson is both producer and principal actor in this clever two-reel yarn. Hoot has proved himself a comer in several of these two-reel Westerns, and this subject goes a step further than anything he has appeared in previously. The humor is very good indeed; the hero's efforts to capture butterflies are highly laughable. Mark Fenton plays the old professor, who has embezzled a thousand dollars, and Yvette Mitchell, the daughter. The dramatic values are not as strong as the humor, but this alone insures the success of this number.

A HERO 'N EVERYTHING (Star Comedy-Universal).—A one-reel rural comedy, produced by Allan Curtis, with Mavis Montell and Monte Banks in the leads. The hero is a country boob, in love with a pretty country girl. The girl meets a city man and goes away with him. The country lad follows and rounds up the pair after some amusing adventures, only to find that they have been married. This is conventional in treatment, but gives a funny turn to an old situation. It strikes a good average.

MOONSHINES AND JAILBIRDS (Rainbow-Universal).—A rollicking two-reel comic, with Billy Engel, George Dickerson and others in the cast. The settings are new and some of the business very clever. The events take place along the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, but have nothing to do with war. Prohibition is the source of most of the fun, and live turtles are employed to smuggle bottles of booze across the line. This is diverting and different.

PATHE REVIEW, No. 43.—Opens with close-ups of General Grant and General Sherman—two big trees so named in Sequoia Park. Cleaning silverware makes a brief subject of interest. The slow-camera study of javelin-throwing, putting the shot and other athletics is unusually good. Other features are included.

THE EMOTIONAL MISS VAUGHN (Pathe).—Another of Mrs. Sidney Drew's high class two-reel comedies, based on the stories of Julian Street. John Cumberland gives another portrayal of Jimmie Wickett, the middle-aged husband who is constantly falling in love with some one beside his wife and then falling out again when things begin getting serious. Mrs. Drew herself depicts the particular object of his affections this time, an actress named Miss Vaughn. Jimmie remembers her as a flame of his youth and tries to bring back the old romance. Miss Vaughn, a friend of Jimmie's wife, falls in with the idea and proposes an elopement to some distant isle. Jimmie beats a humorous retreat. The number is full of fine feeling and delicate humor.

Two Views Taken from "Madonnas and Men," Made by Jans Pictures, Inc.
Evan-Burrows Fontaine sure can put over the vamp stuff in this new production. She's posing for an artist in scene 2, but there wasn't room enough to get him in the picture.

Sidelights and Reflections

IT is part of the history of many lands that certain members of the female sex in each of these countries, having been seized by officers of the law while engaged in a lively battle with one of their own kind, have loudly proclaimed their right and title to the consideration due a lady.

It is also part of the history of many lands that real ladies are never forced to set up a hue and cry in order to call attention to the self-evident fact that they are ladies.

Trade paper reviewers of moving pictures are equally independent of self indorsement or the necessity of a certificate of good character from the editor of the publication in which they appear. There is no question about the honesty of the intent at the foundation of all reviews. They are like religion, dress patterns, woolen fabrics for men's wear and the make of your neighbor's automobile—the honest expression of one individual's taste, guided by a greater or lesser amount of practical experience, keen insight and—in the case of the reviews—knowledge of showmanship.

Several months ago the editor of the moving picture review department of an amusement publication that lays considerable stress upon its claim that as none of the screen producers advertise their pictures in its pages the paper contains the only unbiased reviews being printed, called attention to two reviews that appeared in the same issue of a trade paper that has been devoting considerable space of late to indorsing its own honesty. Each review was the work of a different reviewer, and they failed utterly to agree on any one point of criticism. This difference of opinion was rebuked by being characterized by the "independent" editor as a good example of tergiversation.

A few weeks back one of those little ironies of fate descended upon the head of our friend, the non-revenue receiving editor, and he walked into the tergiversation trap himself. His department, having printed a most flattering review of a certain picture, said review having been written by the associate editor of the department, the chief of the department caught the picture on Times Square a week or so later and the next issue of the publication contained his review of the release. It pleased him not at all and, snapping his fingers in the face of tergiversation, he expressed his dislike of the picture with the fearless honesty of which he so often boasts.

This interesting bit of journalistic backfire has its amusing side, but the important feature of the matter is that all four reviews set down their honest opinion of the picture.

Now for an honest opinion from the public. Pausing to look at the display of stills in front of a Broadway theatre, which was showing this same picture, I overheard the following:

First Girl—"I've been told this picture is perfectly lovely!"

Second Girl—"I know it is! I saw it last night!"

No tergiversation about those remarks.

"The Man Who Lost Himself"

Selznick Presents William Faversham in a High Comedy of Mistaken Identity.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HOW two men of strong physical resemblance, but widely different character would meet a complicated situation is set forth with skill in "The Man Who Lost Himself." While the dominant element contributing to the composite of successful production is that of Mr. Faversham's personality and fine interpretation, there are others of importance. The structure of the play deserves high commendation. It enlists interest from the outset and holds it through some very risque situations to a satisfactory and artistic conclusion. Then the mood is most carefully preserved and the characterization is delightfully consistent. High praise to the scenario department. The handling is another piece of artistry bound to please. There is beauty, dignity and "atmosphere" of a satisfying kind throughout. The settings are designed to be all that could be desired without appearing over conventional. They have achieved unobtrusiveness of good taste.

On such a background of excellent workmanship, Mr. Faversham is bound to appear to advantage. He plays the role of a man suddenly cast into new and unaccustomed environment with clear understanding of what is required. He becomes immediately busy in breaking down the prejudices of century old social conditions through a live and progressive spirit, this without losing sight of the character's limitations. His performance is better than it would seem to the uncritical eye. It is that of a man striving in a difficult situation for fuller experience and more complete self expression. He is ably supported by a well chosen cast, notably by seductive Hedda Hooper. Her interpretation adds very materially to the delightful spirit of a product, which, as presented at the Strand, has the qualities of a sure winner in popularity.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

"The Man Who Lost Himself" is not Victor Jones, an American who finds himself dead broke in London. His double, the dissipated Earl of Rochester, has estranged his wife through dissolute conduct and entangled his financial affairs to the point of committing suicide when he chances to see Jones. He gets the American drunk and leaves him at his London house without other identification than the remarkable resemblance. Jones is taken in by the servants and treated as the Earl. Next morning Jones learns at breakfast that a man identified as himself has committed suicide. The real Earl is dead. Jones also receives a letter written by the Earl before committing suicide, begging him to play the game. This he does so well that he is accepted as Rochester, even by the estranged wife. On her return to the house the situation becomes critical. She is inclined to make up and becomes intimately affectionate. She gradually falls in love with the supposedly reformed Rochester. He straightens out complications with a coolness and determination that restores confidence on all sides.

A new complication rises when Rochester, the pretended, attempts to tell the truth. He is regarded as insane. He is taken to a sanatorium. He escapes and becomes active in eliminating some of the high crooks who have preyed on the family. The wife finally realizes that the ideal she tried to find in Rochester, she has discovered in the impecunious American. He cannot shame her with desertion. He cannot stay, loving her and despised by her. She solves the problem in a sweet and womanly way, by according him the love he has learned to highly prize.

"Dollars and the Woman"

Vitagraph Presents Alice Joyce in Albert Payson Terhune's Timely Story of Domestic Economy.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

THE cost of financing a husband, which a woman pays in money, health and happiness, is the theme of "Dollars and the Woman." It will make its biggest appeal to feminine fans, as the story was conceived out of close sympathy for the trials and sacrifices of devoted wives. This point of view could have been exploited more effectively, however, if there were more cheerful scenes by way of contrast. The atmosphere is gray, almost without relief, and to preserve the spirit of dolefulness, a number of incongruous situations have been arranged. More alert directing could have remedied this fault as well as a tendency toward effusiveness in the more sentimental scenes.

Alice Joyce's role is that of a young wife whose practice of stringent economy has enabled her to save up a small sum, which covers the expenses of an important business triy of her husband's. While he is gone, her child is born and she is left in a state of helpless poverty. A friend comes to her aid, unknown to her, and this brings complications which result in a marital misunderstanding.

Miss Joyce assumes the responsibility of her unhappy role with becoming gravity. Her scenes of endurance and disappointment are very real. The ambitious, somewhat thoughtless husband is played with pep by Robert Gordon. Crauford Kent is quietly successful in a heavier role. The matter of settings has evidently been given careful consideration and the results are good. Photographically, too, the picture is pleasing.

The Cast.

Madge Hillyer.....Alice Joyce
Dan Hillyer.....Robert Gordon
Arthur Crew.....Crauford Kent
Mrs. Sherman.....Jessie Stevens

Story by Albert Payson Terhune.
Scenario by Lucien Hubbard.
Direction by George Terwilliger.
Length, Six Reels.

The Story.

The Hillyers, a young married couple moving in society, are suddenly reduced to a low state of finances, due to their reckless extravagance. Dan, the husband, an ambitious inventor, imparts the news to his wife and she cheerfully assures him that if he will let her manage things, she will do her best to economize and assist him in saving. They move into a small inexpensive flat and do their shopping at cut-rate stores. His wife's assistance as well as the fact that he is soon to become a father, spurs Dan on to perfect his invention and get it on the market.

To accomplish this he is obliged to make a business trip to California. Madge, by depriving herself, has saved a small sum which is just sufficient for this emergency. She withdraws this amount from the bank, but is watched in so doing, and is robbed. Desperate for a way out of this dilemma, she goes to Arthur Crew, a wealthy bachelor, and asks his assistance. His manner at first is insulting, but he finally gives her the desired amount, $300 in cash. She does not tell Dan of her accident in being robbed and her visit to Crew.

Shortly after Dan leaves, Madge's child is born. Her hospital expenses are paid by Crew, unknown to Madge, who is informed by the hospital authorities that there will be no charges. Out west Dan has made good and sends home $1,000. Madge pays off her debt to Crew and looks forward to happier times. But when her husband returns he spends his money extravagantly and she fears another crash. Misunderstandings and unhappiness result and culminate in Dan's discovery of Madge's record of having paid $300 to Crew. He learns also about her hospital expenses and believing her to be untrue leaves her. Crew then appears and offers his name and protection to Madge. But Dan has decided to reconsider and the existence of their small son serves to reunite husband and wife.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines: "Dollars and the Woman"—A Story That Strikes Home, Showing How a Woman Wrestled with Dollars and Cents That Her Husband Might Succeed—How Her Sacrifices Brought About a Misunderstanding—And How the Proof of Her Love and Loyalty Finally Convinced Her Husband.

Destitute, the Young Wife and Mother Accepted a Friend's Financial Aid—Her Husband Misunderstood—He had Profited by Her Act and Now He Censured Her—See the Outcome of This Very Human Story.

Exploitation Angles: The theme in its application to the problems of housewives of today should be widely exploited. Work in collaboration with cut-rate stores in your neighborhood. Get them to display pictures of Alice Joyce as she is shown in certain scenes doing her daily shopping. Appeal to the economical instinct in women. Use the title hard in a way such as this: "Dollars and the Woman," Who Saves the Dollars in Your Home? Who Spends Them? See What Became of Them in One Home, etc.

"The Iron Heart"

Five-Reel Fox Subject Features Madlaine Traverse in Story of Strong Appeal.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT is something unusual to name educational appeal as a factor in a photoplay of special interest, yet a great deal of the engrossing character of "The Iron Heart" is due to this element. It is a dramatic, or melodramatic, story, set in the heart of a big iron works, and almost every scene in the picture reveals some phase of industrial life that is instructive and deeply interesting. The whole production has been given an intense realism.

Madlaine Traverse plays the role of an iron master's daughter, a sturdy, "Tom Grogan" sort of a woman, who falls heir to her father's property. Rival steel mills have often tried to take over the plant, but owing to special conditions favorable to the workingmen and their families, the owner and founder of the plant had always refused to sell out. Before his death he charges the girl to continue with the work he had begun. The story pictures the way in which she carries out this wish; how she copes with treachery and double-dealing, and finally emerges victor over her enemies. George McDaniel plays the role of the hero, who comes to her aid at a crucial moment and helps defeat the men who are conspiring against her.

The cast of characters is a strong one. Melbourne McDowell makes a good type for the part of Cyrus K. Moulton, leader of the financial conspirators. Ben Deely plays the villain acceptably.

The subject will undoubtedly prove one of wide general interest.

The Story.

Esther Regan, in "The Iron Heart," is the daughter of John Regan, owner of the Regan Iron Works. Her father has built up an immense industry, of which he is very proud. He has looked carefully after the welfare of his employes, and is greatly beloved by them. Financial enemies have tried to gain control of the property, but Regan has for years refused to sell out. Shortly before his death he requests his daughter to continue with the iron works.

The girl accepts this great charge. Shortly after her father's death she receives a visit from Darwin McAllister, representing a big Eastern corporation which desires to take over the Regan plant. She refuses to sell, as her father had done, and takes McAllister on an inspection trip. The latter is so impressed with the cordial feeling between Esther and the employes that he advises her to continue with the plant. This means great generosity on his part, as his future advancement depended on gaining possession of the Regan plant.

McAllister resigns from the Eastern association, after a stormy interview with its president, Cyrus K. Moulton. The latter swears he will yet get the Regan plant and McAllister determines to assist Esther in fighting the trust. He does this, at great personal risk, and after helping save the plant he wins her love as well.

"The Wonder Man"

Robertson-Cole Score a Decided Success in Presenting Georges Carpentier as a Screen Star.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Wonder Man" is not an abnormal one, but MAN as he should be, an all-around athlete, strong in battling for what he deems right or just, gentle and considerate in his social relations, intelligent without permitting avarice to rule his mental attitude. Such is the future man of America and, for that matter, of all countries. In our own, where ideals are high, "The Wonder Man" concretely represents not only self aspiration, but a national hope for the generations to come. He is a fixed type for those of us endowed with vision, to be produced in the infinite variety accorded by nature. Such is the conscious, or unconscious, theme of the Robertson-Cole super-feature. The motive will stir immediate response in the hearts of our people, a solid foundation to build on.

Of necessity the story partakes of the character of a vehicle, but it rises above that class by virtue of skill in scenario construction and incisive brilliancy of subtitle by Joseph W. Farnham. Furthermore there are sketchy little character studies, particularly of children, which are bound to delight the spectator. There seems to have been a harmonious cooperation of scenario department and director John G. Adolphi to create a delightful comedy melodrama. That is the achievement of skilled workmanship manifest also in grateful settings and exceptionally fine photography.

While the cast is good, and generously so in the superb ensembles, it is, as a matter of course, dominated by the personality of Georges Carpentier. It was a happy thought to place him in contact with three interesting children, his friends of the gymnasium, in order to bring out the sweeter side of what seems clearly to be his natural character. He attracts all hearts by his winning smile, that of a man of strong affections and kind disposition. At moments he is sternly pugnacious, with the "pug" left out. There is nothing of the brute in his facial expression, but it occasionally reveals that he has sensed the tragedy of beautiful France, that the suffering of his country people has left a scar on his soul. In movement he has the unconscious grace of the trained athlete. Highly developed muscles and nerves are so completely at command of his mind that he possesses an effortless poetry of motion. He is, in fact, an accomplished actor from native inclination and from clear conception of the demands of his role, a star performer by virtue of inherent merit.

The sum of values in this Robertson-Cole super-product is so high that it will prove a sure winner irrespective of the star's drawing powers, a thoroughly pleasing and clean entertainment of itself. "The Wonder Man" is a wonder play booked by general excellence for a long run at home and abroad.

The Story.

"The Wonder Man" is one of mystery. Henri D'Alour, strong social favorite, though of unconcealed preference for Dorothy, pretty daughter of wealthy Mr. Stoner. Dorothy is, however, a pouting and exacting little spoiled child of good fortune. The mystery surrounding his mission in America piques her curiosity, as well as that of other girls, with an added sense of injury that he will not confide in her. She becomes unhappy and distrustful when friends of her father, especially Robbins and Gardner, members of the Potomac Athletic Club, arouse suspicion that D'Alour is the man who broke into her father's safe to get international contracts of great importance. D'Alour's conduct is calculated to arouse distrust when he is seen in secret conference with her father's butler.

He seems to be cowardly in not resenting Gardner's obnoxious attentions to Dorothy, and she decides that the man she loves is a quitter. At a club tournament, there is no one to oppose the club champion in the ring. D'Alour, stung by insult and mocking suspicion, enters against the champion and puts up a losing fight for three rounds. At the beginning of the fourth, he receives a note from Dorothy begging him to win for her sake. He does so with a determination and ferocity that carries all before it. He has proved his physical courage. That of his mind is still to be tested. Under shrewd accusation of the real crooks in high life, he maintains his poise until the man higher up, trusted friend, is caught, when D'Alour's name is cleared, and happy Dorothy finds in the brave Frenchman the ideal she has secretly nourished, a gentle man, as honorable as he is courageous.

The Story.

The story of "The Bromley Case" involves a rich man with his two sons, as well as a collection of villains, and a sweetheart who believes in the innocence of her accused lover.

One of John Bromley's sons, inclined to gamble, finally gets into debt so heavily that he is forced by an old timer in the business to break into his father's safe, to get money to wipe out his gambling debts. Entering the house at midnight, accompanied by Knowles, the gambler to whom he owes the money, he is about to make his escape when his father enters the room. It is noticed that Knowles holds a revolver in his hand, while he stands waiting in the hall, and it is also noticed that John Bromley, Jr., is very much flustered when he emerges from the room where the safe is. A fight in the dark is evident before young Bromley appears, which naturally places him in the line of suspects, when on the next morning, his father is found lying on the floor dead.

A woman who has tried to entangle Bromley, Sr., has also been noticed hanging about the door of the Bromley home on the evening of the crime, complicating the case still further. When the final reckoning comes, Tex the famous criminologist, helps to disclose the fact that the housekeeper shot John Bromley, Sr., while the butler, who was also seeking funds to help out his finances, grappled in a death struggle with his employer.

The story closes on a happy reunion of the lovers, Bruce Bromley and Hope Chester, after Bruce, suspected of the murder because a few days previous his father has turned him from his home, has been released from prison.

"The House of Toys"

American Film Company, Pathe Exchange, Presents Seena Owen in a Drama of Moral Courage.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A STORY of the effect on moral courage of kind friendly influence, "The House of Toys," has a clean theme of live human interest. The idea is carefully guarded throughout, with no lapses of mood, and gains power through direct simplicity of treatment. It is a life story of real human beings. No single personality is spread over every scene and incident, to the blotting out of plausibility and naturalness. While it is not made intense enough by the use of pathos, there are touches of it and the undeniable charm of reality.

"The House of Toys" is not a vehicle for Seena Owen. She is an important member of a cast. Her role of a selfish young woman is enacted with delicacy and skill, but she is a contribution to an entirely successful performance of an intelligent company. Some of the types are peculiar, but they are effective. Pell Trenton, as the man whose courage was built up by outside influences, is the real centre of interest. Helen Jerome Eddy is of a type new to the screen, at first apparance a mistaken selection, but she gets there in the end, fully justifying herself and the role. To George Hernandez and Lillian Leighton are assigned difficult parts, but they are so well interpreted that the entire blend is a harmonious whole. Under the direction of George L. Cox, "The House of Toys" has been so capably handled as to prove a sure winner.

The Story.

"The House of Toys" is that in which David Quentin, poor young architect, lives with his wife, Shirley, long spoiled by an indulgent aunt. Shirley has been warned by her aunt not to marry a poor man, and she misses the luxury of her maiden life. She notes that another architect always succeeds where her husband fails. She disheartens him so by her complaints that they agree to live apart. He sells all he has, gives her the money and starts at the bottom as a draughtsman, while she returns to her aunt. In his new environment, Quentin receives kindly encouragement from his employer and deep sympathetic interest on the part of Esther Summers. To the latter he owes the inspiration that leads him on to success. His vain wife, meanwhile, after trifling with alleged admirers, gets to a tearful realization that the only true love possible in her life is the one she has lost. She upraids her aunt, and the latter is at last convinced of her error.

Quentin is aflame with the news of his first success as an architect, is in the midst of a sympathetic circle, spurred on by lovesick Esther, when his wife arrives. The arrival of the selfish young wife is a blow to Esther, but she is moved by the finest of motives. She helps all she can to bring about a happy reconciliation, finding reward in a love of which she was wholly unaware. Quentin's wife is cured of her selfishness, but she arrived just in time to save the love she thrust aside. Quentin is still aware that she is the sole object of his affections, and their future is one of assured happiness through better understanding grown out of bitter experience.

"The Trail of the Cigarette"

AS mystery stories go, the William Steiner production, "The Trail of the Cigarette," which is the fourth of the five-reel detective features, belonging to the "Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries" series, distributed by Arrow, will stand the strain of criticism. It has an interesting plot, and the construction of the picture is such as to create suspense. The secret of the perpetration of the crime is carefully guarded, providing fine mental exercise for the ordinary observer. The Story.

The story of "The Trail of the Cigarette" covers the mystery of a jewel robbery. Jessica Dale, companion to Hortense Bates, who has been the recipient of a beautiful pair of earings from her father, Hamilton Bates, is found dead at a mask ball given at the Bates home.

There are found on the body no marks of violence, except blood marks on the girl's face. A crushed cigarette is found beside her, which has the same aroma as one left by a burglar in a previous robbery, on which Tex, a famous criminologist, is busy, and the fact that the same kind of cigarettes are smoked by Edward Clive, the fiance of Hortense, complicates the situation. Finally Tex rounds up Henry Jevons, Edward Clive's secretary, and faces him with a photograph of the dead girl, which he has torn in pieces and tried to conceal. It is also noticed by Tex that Jevons is wearing a glove on his left hand, which, when torn away, reveals the marks of the girl's teeth in his hand, accounting for the blood found on her face. Jevons has been in the habit of helping himself to Clive's cigarettes, and thereby hangs the mystery of the "gentleman burglar" and the cigarette. The story also involves considerable romance as well as tragedy, and is interesting in detail.

"Under Crimson Skies"

Six-Reel Universal-Jewel Subject Features Elmo Lincoln in Elemental Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MUTINY at sea and a full-fledged revolution are two features of this six-reel Universal-Jewel production, written by J. G. Hawkes and directed by Rex Ingram. It features Elmo Lincoln at the head of a cast composed chiefly of stalwart men, all handy in a fight and equally ready for one. Brute passions are frequently unloosed in this picture, yet there is at the same time admirable restraint in many scenes, giving additional force to the melodramatic clashes when they come.

There is a love story of a sort, in which the hero, Captain Barstow, first pities and then adores the wife of one of the passengers on his sailing vessel. It develops that the woman's husband is shipping a secret consignment of munitions to assist a revolution. Captain Barstow holds his tongue in order to save the woman and her child, even accepting a term in prison rather than break his silence. The motive may seem quixotic to some spectators, but it has a fine touch of the heroic about it.

The outstanding picturesque feature of this entertaining number is not the attempted mutiny or the great storm, admirably as they are depicted, but the island scenes picturing the political exiles. This is a novel situation and the exiles, or beach combers, are decidedly interesting. The island home constitutes a sort of outdoor "underworld." Noble Johnson is admirable in the role of Baltimore Bucko.

The Story.

Captain Yank Barstow, in "Under Crimson Skies" is headed with his sailing vessel for the west shore of Yucatan. He has on board a set of tough sailors, requiring a strong arm to hold them in check. On the vessel also is a man named Vance Clayton, with his wife and child. It develops that Clayton is an exceedingly jealous man and he resents the friendship between Captain Barstow and his wife and baby.

The vessel is carrying a cargo of pianos and in an entirely accidental way Captain Barstow discovers that the piano boxes are really loaded with contraband munitions. The guns are being shipped by Clayton to the leader of a revolutionary party. The crew attempts mutiny and in suppressing this Barstow shoots one of the crew, wounding him slightly. He afterward is tried and sentenced, with his mate, to five years in prison for this offense, though a simple explanation would have cleared him. He held his silence to save Mrs. Clayton and the child.

Barstow and his mate escape prison and reach the shore of an island inhabited by beach combers and political exiles. He leads these men in a dramatic manner against the revolutionists, saving the American embassy. Clayton is killed and Captain Barstow wins the woman of his heart.

Exterminating the Mosquito Timely Subject Dealt With in Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph in Which Spring Beauties Also Have an Inning.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph includes in one of its coming releases a subject of great interest to suburbanites and those in rural districts. It is called "Amos Quito," and after describing the two most common types of mosquito, relating their peculiarities and showing the hatching of the young, a simple method of putting these pests out of business is demonstrated. This is done by spraying pools and any stagnant water with kerosene. This prevents the youngsters wriggling about in the water from getting air, and so one after another they are seen to succumb to circumstances.

Coupled with this, and in fact preceding the mosquito picture, is a delightful series of scenes illustrative of the coming of spring, including glimpses of orchards in blossom, dandelions bursting into bloom and spring flowers of different kinds being born. The brooks let loose from the grip of winter and other forms of nature included in the pageant of spring are alluded to or effectively demonstrated.

This is an unusually interesting release and particularly appropriate to this season of the year.

"Let 'Er Go"

Louise Fazenda Is Center of Attraction in Mack Sennett Comedy of Exceptional Quality.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the funniest of the Mack Sennett comedies since the memorable "Kitchen Lady" is his latest, called 'Let 'Er Go." Louise Fazenda was never more attractive than in this picture, in which she combines personal charm with the grotesqueness of farce-comedy make-up. The plot of the comedy is not of more account than is usual in such cases, but the business of the picture, without being vulgar or in the last objectionable, is screamingly funny.

The cast, in addition to Louise Fazenda, has Bert Roach, Charlotte Mineau, John Henry, Jr., Billie Bevan and Billie Armstrong, the Sennett dog and a cow. On the usual thread of romance are hung a series of amusing situations, and one of the most original is where one of the "fighting gentlemen" attempts to keep the tail of the cow he is milking still by tying it to his suspenders. When the cow takes fright and decides to make her getaway it is easy to imagine what happens. This, however, is only the outcome of another funny incident in which the dog and a couple of his grown-up playmates are engaged in a game of "blind man's buff" and he who happens to be chosen "it" gets in the way of an old-fashioned swing in motion. He is knocked into the midst of several hives of bees, and his mad rush to escape the stings of the insects sets several other comedy properties in motion. An old automobile, a team of horses in a runaway dash, driven by a tiny baby boy, and various persons on bicycles and otherwise propelled enter in the chase. Another amusing and original incident is where Louise Fazenda, in a perfectly modest bathing suit, is fished from the stream by the hook of a young man's fishing pole.

"The Return of Tarzan"

Numa Production Distributed by Goldwyn Contains Thrilling Scenes of Daring in Jungle.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THERE can be no question about the drawing qualities of the Numa-Goldwyn production, "The Return of Tarzan," which has been booked at the Broadway Theatre for an indefinite run. The picture has all of those thrilling qualities that the average audience likes, from a single-handed "set to" with a blackmail gang, to a genuine fight with the king of beasts in the jungle. Tarzan in society, or in the bewildering mazes of cabaret night life, is equally as fascinating as in the depths of the tropical forest. His return to his elephants, apes, tigers, lions and other inhabitants of primitive forests of the tropics is set in an irresistible atmosphere, fantastical and alluring.

Gene Pollar, splendidly adapted to the role of Tarzan by reason of his fine physique and apparently superhuman strength, is also an excellent actor. An excellent cast supports him, and the direction of the picture is skilfully done. The production will be classed as a spectacular melodrama, coupling adventure and romance.

Length, Seven Reels.

The Story.

The story of "The Return of Tarzan" shows Tarzan in society, being watched by his enemies, who lure him to the wrong street and number, in an attempt to blackmail him. D'Arnot, a government official and a friend of Tarzan's, employs him to trail Rokoff and his gang to South Africa. But before going Tarzan is again lured into danger, when he hastens to the aid of the Countess de Coude, in response to a fake telephone message. He is discovered in the countess' boudoir by her husband, who later seeks satisfaction in a duel. The fighting of the duel finds only De Coude using his weapon. The count is so disturbed by Tarzan's unusual display of bravery in the face of death that he shoots wild, and misses his aim.

On the trip to Africa, Tarzan sails under the name of Caldwell, which, however, is not sufficient to prevent Rokoff recognizing him. At a moment when Tarzan is off his guard he is thrown overboard, and finally lands on the shores of a jungle. Here he lives as of old, clother in the skins of wild beasts. Again the apes become his companions, and the elephants his friends. Here also he enters into the most thrilling combats with lions, and actually overcomes them with his bare hands.

Later a ship on which his sweetheart and her father are sailing takes fire, and they, too, are finally landed on the island. When the girl is being attacked by one of the crew, Tarzan suddenly appears on the scene and overcomes her assailant, and the reunion of the lovers takes place.

"The Little Cafe"

Pathe Presents Max Linder in Five-Reel Version of Sparkling Musical Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE reappearance of Max Linder on the American screen is certain to awaken fond memories in the minds of picture fans, for the time was when Max led them all as a comedian. He will find himself in rather warmer competition now, but from the initial showing of this Pathe release, "The Little Cafe," based on a former stage success by Tristan Bernard, it looks as though Max will still give a good account of himself.

His resources as a comedian are unusual; he can play the roustabout of the Paris streets or the man about town, the gentleman exquisite or the social bounder, the knockabout comedian or the immaculate lover. This subject alone proves his remarkable versatility. The plot is a cream puff of comedy, and will bring many laughs.

The cast and scenes are strictly Parisian, except for Wanda Lyon, an American girl, formerly appearing at the Winter Garden. The subtitles also carry some American slang, in odd but amusing contrast to the general atmosphere of the piece.

The Story.

Albert Lorifian, in "The Little Cafe," is first seen operating a push cart on the streets of Paris, attired in rags. Failing to make a living at this, he becomes a waiter in a restaurant, where he meets Edwige, a gypsy girl violinist. He loses this job also, but again becomes a waiter in the Little Cafe, operated by Monsieur Philbert and his pretty daughter, Yvonne.

It develops that Albert is really the nephew of the Marquis de Caspion, from whose palatial home he fled. But he keeps his identity a secret until the former caretaker, Bigredon, arrives and tells the proprietor. The Marquis has died and left Albert two million francs. Before announcing this important fact to Albert, Bigredon and the proprietor conspire to put him under a twenty-year contract as waiter, which neither he nor Philbert can break without the sacrifice of a large sum. Albert makes some amusing efforts to get himself discharged, but is finally released only through the aid of Yvonne. Edwige reappears and there is also a brief love affair with an actress, but in the end his heart turns to Yvonne.

"Wits Vs. Wits"

Marguerite Marsh Plays Attractively in Hallmark Production Based on Detective Story by Henry Grossman.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Hallmark five-reel production, "Wits vs. Wits," which features Marguerite Marsh, has many interesting features in spite of the fact that the construction of the picture has a tendency to confuse the spectator as to the intention of the author. The opening of the story gives a distinct impression that Helen Marsley is a crook; and there is no attempt made to explain the situation. The spectator gets the right idea by a careful survey of incidents as they occur.

Marguerite Marsh is attractive as Helen Marsley, a young woman who allows herself to be numbered with crooks in order to avenge her father's death. The atmosphere of the picture is convincing, and the weaving of the plot is skillful. A competent cast handles the characterization, and altogether the production is an interesting one, carrying the usual amount of suspense supplied by a detective story.

The Story

The young woman about whom the story of "Wits vs. Wits" centers is Helen Marsley, who enters the scene as a pickpocket. Charles Shelby, whose pocket she attempts to pick, threatens to arrest her, but on being told that she is not a thief by profession, he takes her to the luxurious home of a band of crooks known as the Chevy Faux, where she is employed as stenographer. In this position Helen, who is in reality working in conjunction with the police to hunt down the Chevy gang, by whom her father was killed, arranges to have telegraph connections placed in her room, concealing the telegraph instrument under her typewriter, operating it by the space bar on her machine.

The discovery of a dictaphone hidden in the mantel of her room leads finally to the awakening of the gang to the fact that she is double crossing them. But when they believe that they have her in their power, she pulls a revolver and holds them at bay while the police, who are stationed outside ready to obey her signal to enter the house, take them into custody.

Shelby, who has concealed himself in another room, commits suicide rather than face trial, and Helen wins the plaudits of the public for her skillful handling of the situation.

Exploitation Angles: Play on Miss Marsh and then stress the mystery angle with "Was She a Crook?" and similar appeals. Appeal to all lovers of detective stories and tell them that this is a good strong story of its type.

"A Woman's Business"

Jans Pictures, Inc., Releases B. A. Rolfe Production with Olive Tell in Lead.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A STRONG and consistent production is this Jans Picture's subject, adapted from a novel by Charles Belmont Davis and directed by B. A. Rolfe. It contains a wealth of social glamor, an unfailing source of appeal to the masses. The types are excellently chosen and the production moves with authority through many complicated and difficult situations. It is altogether a ranking number of its kind.

In addition to a splendid cast, headed by Olive Tell, Edmond Lowe and Lucille Lee Stewart, the story has a theme of universal interest. It raises the question of whether a woman's chief business in life is to marry for wealth and position. The heroine is an ambitious and beautiful member of an old Southern family. She and her mother are reduced to running a boarding house, and the girl determines to fight her way up in the world. She plays her cards skilfully, but with the goal finally in sight, turns back to real love and happiness.

The subject has caught in pictures the general lightness of treatment usually given a story by this author. It has many flashes of real humor, and while it probes well below the surface of certain sordid phases of high social life, it retains a pleasant and agreeable tone. The Fifth Avenue scenes at the beginning and close are as clever as they are amusing.

The Story.

Barbara Clyde and her mother, in "A Woman's Business," are the last of a proud Southern family, reduced to the necessity of running a boarding house. The girl is beautiful and determined to get on in the world. She decides that a woman's chief business in life is making a marriage which brings with it wealth and social position.

Acting upon this theory Barbara discards her admirer, David Hallowell, in favor of a young fellow with excellent prospects, named Johnny Lister. The latter is employed by a wealthy man named Ellis, whose wife, Margaret, is fond of Johnny herself. When Johnny weds Barbara, Mrs. Ellis uses her influence to have him discharged by her husband.

With his job gone, Johnny goes to New York, accompanied by Barbara. They make a brave attempt to invade high society and remain in it. Barbara is tempted by Ellis himself to leave Johnny. She does so temporarily, but later, after some harrowing experiences, goes back to him, cured of her desire for high station.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines: A Woman's Business Is to Marry for Love.

A Striking Picturization of the Davis Novel.

Olive Tell in a Story of Wealth and Wretchedness.

The Marriage Mart and the Garden of Love.

New York at Its Best—and Worst.

Exploitation Angles: In addition to the star work the title. Start off by teasing with "What Is a Woman's Business?" Ring the changes and then wind up with "What is a Woman's Business? Let Olive Tell." It's criminal, but it will help it get over.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Wrong Procedure

FROM Carl Ellis, Harlem, Montana, came a letter asking to which union he is eligible. Harlem is a small city and as a glance over the map of Montana did not reveal its location, we wrote asking information on that point.

Friend Ellis now replies:

Inclosed find map of Montana, with Harlem marked as you requested. I have written the Great Falls union several times, but have received no reply. It seems, from what I have heard, they do not care to accept new members.

Most emphatically I do not want a job in Great Falls, but I do want to be a union man. Would it be possible for me to join in Spokane, Missoula or some one of the other unions close at hand? I believe I am under the jurisdiction of Great Falls.

Now while we very well remember the warm hospitality shown us on the occasion of our visit to Great Falls, and most certainly do not wish to hurt the feelings of the Great Falls men, still in the interest of justice we are constrained to deal with this matter a bit sharply.

Remember that we speak as a union man whose membership dates back to 1883, and who well knows the problems involved in such matters as this and the objection to admitting men from all over a somewhat widely scattered jurisdiction.

But, gentlemen, there is an element of plain justice and RIGHT involved, which cannot be lightly set aside, and in any event if a local receives letters from projectionists within its jurisdiction requesting admission to membership, the very least it can do is to make proper reply thereto.

This I think you will all admit. Whether the Great Falls local did receive the letters written by friend Ellis is, of course, not for me to say, but the presumption is that it did.

A union is nothing in this wide world but a business organization, and business courtesy demands that reply be made to business letters. Don't you agree with this, Great Falls—and other places?

Jurisdiction and Duty.

The editor of this department firmly believes that a union which demands fair dealing on the part of employers should be not only willing, but anxious to accord a square deal to the men of the profession that it represents. That proposition is so self evident that we feel it requires no argument to establish its truth.

Admitting its truth, therefore, let us for a moment examine into the matter from the small town man's point of view, taking the case of friend Ellis, if you please, for example. Now we know nothing at all about either Ellis' competency or his character, but for the sake of the argument will assume them both to be satisfactory, as indeed they most likely are.

The situation then is just this: a certain local union, through the laws of its international head, automatically and of necessity has jurisdiction over the little city of Harlem. We will assume that local to be the Great Falls union, as we in fact think it is.

Cannot Join Elsewhere.

This means that by international law friend Ellis is denied the right to make application to or join any other union than the Great Falls local, and unless the Great Falls local will admit him he is debarred from becoming a union man except he quits his job, breaks up his home, if he has one, severs all social ties and removes to the jurisdiction of another union, works there six months, at the end of which time he may be faced with precisely the same proposition as now confronts him, because the other local has precisely the same legal right to refuse him admission as has the Great Falls local.

Swap Places.

Now, boys, try and mentally swap places with Friend Ellis for a moment. You are competent. You are of good character. You have studied and worked hard to master your profession. You want to become a union man. How would YOU feel, under these circumstances, if the union within whose jurisdiction you were refused, or failed to even answer letters you wrote in perfect good faith?

You hear the non-union man decried, yet you, who really want to do the right thing, are denied even the courtesy of a reply when you make application for membership, or write to obtain information to that end.

Oh yes, we well know that many small town men try to join because they want to remove to the city, where there is a wider field, or so that they may "go on the road," but we are nevertheless very firmly convinced that no matter what its legal right, no union has the moral right to reject the application of any competent projectionist of good character. It seems to us that the small town man has the right to graduate into city work if he so desires, and that his desire so to do is a laudable ambition.

But be that as it may, certainly the very least thing any union can in common decency do, is to religiously answer every application or request for information intended to lead to an application, which emanates from a projectionist within the jurisdiction of the local.

If a local union by its very existence automatically ties a certain territory, then it is just plain justice and right that it admit into its membership all eligible men in that territory, whether it desires so to do or not, the word eligible to stand for those various things necessary to membership in the I. A.

Not Roasting.

Now please clearly understand that we are neither roasting, condemning, or even especially singling out for criticism the Great Falls union. What it has done in refusing to answer friend Ellis' letter (if it has so refused) is an all too common practice. We receive many complaints from small city and town men that they can get no satisfaction whatsoever when they apply for membership in the local under whose jurisdiction they work. We have simply taken this particular incident, relying on the good nature of the Great Falls local, as well as its sense of right and justice, to set forth the small-town man's side of the matter.

Failure to treat the small town men within its jurisdiction with due courtesy tends to make them not only the enemy of the local, but of unionism as a general proposition, and certainly no one wants that.

Think it over, gentlemen and brothers. Think it over carefully.

What Is Wrong?

A. G. Smith, Dresden, Tennessee, has trouble with out-of-focus, which he describes as follows:

New Simplex. Sixty cycle, 110 volt current. Mazda 900 Watt lamp. About a 71-foot distance of projection. Projector over balcony. Some keystone effect.

Screen eleven feet eight inches, and I cover it all. Picture is good in its center, but out of focus or something at the sides. Not

Notice to All.

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

much spherical aberration. Acts like film cups over aperture. Objective 1.75 inches diameter—five inches E. F. Condensers 6.5 and 7.5 plano convex, latter toward film. Should I have a 2⅝ inch diameter objective? Reply with a pencil will be appreciated.

In the first place, brother Smith, there are several thousand projectionists who read this department, to say nothing of managers and exhibitors. If we were to reply to each we would not be able to attend to our correspondence, to say nothing of other things that we have to do.

That is the reason for the dollar rule. We feel that those who really want a mail reply badly enough to pay a dollar for it should be accommodated, so far as time will permit, but to let down the bars further than that is impractical. It isn't that we want your dollar, but that we need our time for other things.

As To Mazda.

In the second place we have not as yet given the Mazda proposition sufficient study to feel qualified to advise as to objective diameter requirements. The Mazda and arc present two entirely separate propositions in that respect.

Your out-of-focus might be due to either one of several things, but we are inclined to think it is that you have one or more of the elements of your objective in wrong side too. It is extremely unlikely that a new projector would have anything wrong with its aperture; also if that were the case it is almost a cinch that the effect would vary—not be the same all the time, as we take it, from what you say, is the case.

Probable Seat of Trouble.

We would suggest that you try out another objective, if you can get one. If not, then take the objective apart and examine it, first looking at Fig. 40, page 110 of the handbook. The first lens (one next aperture) will be found to have a heavier convex on one side than the other, and that side goes toward the screen. The second lens will be as shown in the cut, except that the concave is not apt to be so pronounced. The thick, double lens in front goes as shown.

Before re-assembling the objective, wash the lenses with a solution of half denatured or wood alcohol, and half water, polishing them carefully with a clean old handkerchief, and then be VERY careful that you do not touch their surfaces with your fingers ever so little. A faint, practically invisible finger mark will raise hallelujah with definition.

We think you must mean chromatic aberration. There is no spherical aberration in an objective, or at least it would be so very slight as to be entirely negligible.

Shea's Equipment

George H. Signor, projectionist, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, New York, sends in the following description of the projection equipment of that classy show house.

I am writing to give you details of the equipment and line-up with which we get the best results on the screen, remarking also that we think our screen results some better than the average.

We have two Simplex projectors, equipped with Extra Lite shutters and a one-and-a-half-to-one special shutter drive. The intermittent is a one-to-five. We project a seventeen foot picture at 112 feet, to a painted canvas screen, pulling seventy-five amperes with a fifty-five volt arc.

Take current through rheostats connected in multiple, using ⅞ cored upper carbons and 11/32d Silver tips below. Crater is 4.75 inches from apex of rear condenser, with 15.25 inches from aperture to apex of front lens. Use a 6.5 and 7.5 plano convex combination, spaced 1/16 of an inch apart.

Working distance (B. F.) is five inches, and the objective aperture 1 11/16 inches, which, according to Table No. 1, is too small. The light ray at the working distance of the objective is 2⅝x2¾ inches (error. If width is 2.75 height would be 2.06.—Ed.) Have tried objective with 2.5 inch diameter but there was loss of definition, which is, of course, undesirable.

Projection Room Renovated.

The projection room has just undergone a badly needed renovation, and must now be seen in order to appreciate the neatness of the installation and the work required to accomplish it.

Our chief projectionist, John W. Sayer, is a thoroughly practical and a very efficient man of long experience. Credit is due him for bringing about the conditions we are all a bit proud of.

I hope you will again honor us and the rest of the Buffalo men with a visit soon, and that you will then see some of our beautiful neighborhood theatres, as well as the excellent work of Buffalo men on the screen.

Maybe Perhaps.

We will of course be in Buffalo again, though just when it will be we cannot say. In the past we have not found the Buffalo men, as represented by the local union, overly enthusiastic, or even very cordial. However, because the Buffalo projectionists have in the past passed up something they should not have passed up is not conclusive evidence they will do so in the future.

Your equipment listens real well, though we are unaccustomed to locating the crater with exact relation to the curved surface of the arc lens. We are not even certain that it is best to do so, though from the purely optical viewpoint we would say it is the correct method.

But the starting point of optical system adjustment is, as you no doubt know, the distance the crater can be located from the lens without excessive lens breakage, and as there is, though there should not be considerable variation in the lenses of given focal length, due to a lens of proper curvative for given focal length being made too thick for a 4.5 inch diameter.

This variation amounts, in extreme cases, to as much as an eighth of an inch, and while it is true an eighth of an inch more or less of distance does not seem much, still every particle of shortening of distance between lens and crater from that provided in the charts is a reasonably serious matter, particularly if, as is too often the case, the lamphouse ventilation is not very good.

As To Objective Diameter.

As to your objective diameter, we would suggest considerable possible gain, without appreciable loss of definition, by using an objective of 2.5 diameter, stopped down to 2.25 on the aperture side, and a 6.5—9.5 M Bi-C condenser.

Still better would be in your case, we think, the three-combination lens put out by the Independent Movie Supply Company, of New York City. We have arranged with that company to send you two lenses on approval if you want them. If this meets your approbation advise me, sending exact E. F. of lenses you are now using; also include exact size of picture and distance lens to screen and we will have the lenses sent. There will be no obligation to keep the lenses unless your folks think there is sufficient advantage in the lenses to justify the expense of their purchase. We are interested in knowing whether or no they will deliver the goods in your case. We think they will.

Their Name Is Legion

Fred R. Pierce, Susquehanna, Pa., says:

I have understood there is grave danger of fire getting into the upper magazine, and that to date there is no positive way of preventing this except by projectionist grabbing the film, if he is quick enough, with his bare hand. I think I have found a way . . ."

And so the letter goes on at some length, describing the method that he proposes to use. For his information and the information of those others who may have in mind the invention of such a device, let me say that during the past ten years I have examined at least fifty and I believe that the correct number would be nearer one hundred inventions designed to accomplish the purpose named.

Some of them went very much further. I well remember one elaborate device which stopped the projector, put out the arc, cut both film loops, closed the magazine valves almost air tight, dropped all the port shutters and rang a bell in the manager's office.

This particular invention really worked perfectly, and did all these various things. It could be installed on two projectors for something less than a thousand dollars. The only trouble was that the exhibitors wouldn't buy.

There is now one really excellent device on the market. I cannot at the moment recall its name, but it is made in Brooklyn. So don't waste time chasing that particular will o' the wisp, friend Pierce. It has been already very well chased indeed.

As to Lenses

The editor of this department is receiving quite a few inquiries for high grade projection lenses. A typical one comes from the Lauve-Bodin Amusement Company, Franklin, Louisiana. It reads:

We are desirous of getting the very best projection objective made. Will you be good enough to advise where such lenses may be had.

Sorry, gentlemen, but you know the war shot several things besides Germany all to pieces, and among the lot was the lens proposition.

We do not say there are no better objectives now to be had, but we know of none better, at this writing, than the standard projection objectives put out by the Gundlach-Manhattan and the Bausch and Lomb Companies.

We would respectfully suggest that you consult the lens charts for the diameter lens you require, or that you get a large diameter objective and stop it down to the actual requirement, provided the diameter is too large.

How to Do It.

To do this install the lens, focus the picture as sharply as possible on the screen and then measure the exact distance from film to nearest surface of the lens.

Remove the lens and hold a piece of writing paper exactly the same distance from the film (without film in, of course) that the surface of the lens was and draw an outline of the rectangle of light which falls thereon, disregarding the halo which will surround it.

Cut a circle of thin metal to fit into the rear end of the objective and lay snugly against the lens, and in this metal cut a rectangle exactly the size of the one marked on the paper. Install the mask thus made and secure it in place by any convenient means and the job is done.

Caution: Before doing this be sure the center of the ray emerges from the center of the front of the objective. If it does not your system is out of line and the hole in the mask will probably not come in the right place.

The object is to eliminate all waste light, since it injures the definition of the picture on the screen. You may accomplish the same thing, though not to such good purpose, by stopping down to the actual effective ray at the aerial image or the projection room wall.

Accused of Being Unfair

C. Russ Van Vlist (guess that's right. The signature is no cinch), Minneapolis, Minnesota, arises to remark:

It has been quite some time since I met you personally, or have troubled you in the department with my impossible questions. But please don't imagine that I ever miss an issue, for I don't. Why, man, I am so excited over the actual contents, and over your efforts for the advancement of projection that I overlooked the new head for several weeks.

Finally, however, I once-overed it and was sadly disappointed to find you adding to Simplex propaganda by incorporating therein not only an intermittent sprocket, but a star as well. Personally I don't find it attractive, or in the least artistic; also I don't think it is playing fair to manufacturers of other projectors.

An Old Timer.

I have been a reader of the "World" for eight long years, and would have read it before had I known of it. The other seven years (prior to that, I suppose you mean, Ed.) I spent in the attempt to learn projection by experience alone. I certainly have enjoyed the very real help and the increased knowledge gained through the medium of the department, but to find it headed by a certain make of projector parts is not good—that is for me, anyhow. I hope the next issue will have a head which favors no one.

Man, man, man, I'll bite you and you'll have hydrophobia or sump'n. I planned that head myself, and while the gink who actually made it did not follow my plans, which were a line of sprockets top and bottom, with a star at one end and a cam at the other, still we all thought the way it was worked out did very well, and was eminently appropriate.

Favors No One.

You say it favors the Simplex. Why? The Simplex, Motiograph, Master Model, Baird, as well as every home projector on the market, except one, uses the star and cam movement—the regular geneva movement, which is some hundreds of years older than the motion picture.

Of professional projectors, all but one uses the star and cam, and all the older models of the Powers' used it.

You are a fine feller, brother Van Vlist, but in this particular thing you are splitting very fine hairs, and drawing copiously on your imagination. As between the Simplex and Powers' (for those are the two projectors you have in mind, unquestionably—more or less calmly ignoring all the rest) we play absolutely NO favorites. We had that heading made because it was appropriate for a projection department, the geneva movement being the very heart of the projector. Had the Powers' type of movement, which is, by the way, in our opinion, an excellent movement, been the form of the original geneva, used by all except one projector, we would most certainly have used that instead.

We believe your criticism was well intended. We are sure you will, upon further consideration, withdraw your objection, as being builded upon a foundation of very sandy sand.

Book on Cleaning Film?

D. J. Murray, Brooklyn, New York, asks:

Will you kindly advise me if there is any book dealing with film cleaning. Am a projectionist and would like to get such a book if one exists.

So far as we are aware there is no book dealing with the renovation or cleaning of film. The most information we know of contained in one book, on that particular subject, is contained in the Third Edition of the Handbook, pages 206-7, and that deals more with film cleaners than with the actual processes of cleaning.

The Baby Arc and What It Accomplishes in Filming Realistic Lighting Effects

By HUNT STROMBERG

Director Publicity and Advertising, Thomas H. Ince Studios

ONE of the most intricate and difficult problems of the screen has been solved by Reve Houck, superintendent and chief electrician of the Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City, Cal. For years the production of natural lights, such as candle light, gaslight, firelight and so on, has perplexed the minds and tried the patience of studio electricians. The light itself was never strong enough to photograph successfully. For instance, the picture would never show the actual effect caused by the glow from a match when a man lights a cigar. So to reproduce the light as it really is some artificial means had to be devised.

For a time incandescent lights were used, but these did not have photographic value, so some form of the arc light had to be used, and to find and perfect just the right form has been Mr. Houck's aim. First he used hand-feed arcs, but that was a very difficult and tedious process when a great number of them were required. He recalls a cafe scene where he used forty table lamps, and each one had to be individually lighted and watched, for it is the nature of an arc to go out when the distance between the points of the two carbons widens beyond a certain percentage of an inch, and if a light went out the scene had to be retaken.

Now that dangerous distance between the two carbon points is automatically controlled, and any number of lights can be switched on and off, forming a main switch—thanks to Mr. Houck.

The Problem of Size.

But after that was accomplished, the problem of size still confronted him. There was no existing arc small enough to use with perfect satisfaction for wall brackets and general interior effects.

The lighting fixtures were very frequently out of proportion to the size of the room and the furniture, so Mr. Houck set himself the task of making a baby arc.

The first form he perfected was the can-

The Baby Arc Match Substitute.

When one lights his cigarette with the ordinary match the spot lights are necessary in order that the effect may be brought out on the film.

With the Baby Arc concealed in the palm of his hand all the illumination desired for the natural effect is registered by the camera.

dle. In a certain scene the heroine had to go downstairs in the dead of night to find a burglar, or something equally exciting, and she carried a lighted candle. You can imagine how important that candlelight was, and strange as it may seem, there was no known way of getting that light into the picture. Mr. Houck tried out his baby arc and it worked beautifully. That was about five years ago. Since then he has been steadily at work improving and perfecting and creating new forms.

Five New Babies.

A few weeks ago he went to Thomas H. Ince and announced that he had perfected five different automatic baby arcs and was ready for the supreme test. The experiment that followed found Mr. Ince and the heads of the various departments in attendance, and proved beyond a doubt that the baby arc would eliminate many of the lighting difficulties of the past.

It is the smallest automatic arc ever used in studio lighting and has 1,000 candlepower. All the five types operate on the same basis and give the same effect, but they are designed for different purposes—the watch, the table light, the wall bracket, the flashlight and the fireplace. Of these the match substitute is, of course, the tiniest, being but seven-eighths of an inch in diameter and four and one-half inches in length. It can easily be concealed in the palm of an actor's hand, with the connecting wire extending up his coat sleeve and down his trouser leg, out of the focus of the camera.

To Eliminate Smoking.

So the difficulty of size has been overcome and also the one of smoke. To eliminate the smoking, the use of less current was necessary, and in reducing the current the actinic ray was subsequently reduced. Therefore it was necessary to cut down the size of the carbon, and with a smaller amount of current it was found possible to produce the actinic light capable of registration on the film without showing the smoke.

To seem natural, we must become masters of the artificial. Natural lights appear today in pictures so very naturally that only the initiated know and realize that it is all a hallucination produced by electricity. No one who is familiar with the difficulties of studo lighting can realize what a task it has been to obtain satisfactory results.

The man who sees the finished picture may not be able to see a very great improvement when the arc takes the place of the incandescent lamp, but to those engaged in providing the lighting effects this automatic baby arc is of the utmost significance. It speeds the photography of a scene at least fifty per cent., and in these days when time seems to be more valuable than anything else, that is of vast importance, to say nothing of its other advantage. But it has others. In speaking of the invention, Thomas H. Ince said, "I believe the baby arc will revolutionize the studio lighting system."

The New Century of Baltimore Will Have Really Swell Monsoon Ventilating Lay-out

THE construction of the new Century Theatre at Baltimore will be followed with great interest by exhibitors all over the country, as the owner, C. E. Whitehurst, and the architects, Zink-Sparklin, Inc., have expressed the intention of making it the most up-to-date house in America.

They feel that they have exhausted every possible means to obtain this end, in the careful attention paid to appointments among which one of the most carefully considered items is the ventilation and cooling system. This branch of the work has been turned over to the engineers of the Monsoon Cooling System, New York City, who have designed their system on the principle of introducing fresh air at the ceiling line and exhausting it at the floor line.

For heating and ventiating, fresh air is pulled through heating coils and blown directly down into the theatre. As the foul, heavy air which hangs at the floor line is exhausted, it is replaced by the fresh, warm air, providing an even warmth all over the house. The excess of fresh, warm air not exhausted at the floor line builds up a slight static pressure in the theatre, thus preventing any inrush of cold air with the opening of entrance doors. This very efficient system, being simple in design, eliminates all expensive duct work and underground trenches.

Summer Method of Ventilation.

At this season of the year probably exhibitors are more interested in the cooling problem of the Century Theatre. This has been adequately taken care of by the same method as explained above. Only, instead of warm air, cool, fresh air is taken from high above the street and blown by Monsoon fans through grilled openings into the theatre—right down to the floor line and in such enormous volume as to create a steady breeze all through the house. Everyone knows that moving air has a cooling effect, and it can be readily understood how these enormous Monsoon blowers will keep the Century's patrons in a cool, refreshing atmosphere—even during Baltimore's hottest weather. And anyone who has ever visited Baltimore in summer knows that it is indeed HOT.

Part of the equipment provided for heating in winter is reversed and becomes an auxiliary to the cooling equipment provided. This constitutes a very welcome economy.

Alaskan Exhibitor Pays $48 Per Ton for Coal

FROM Candle, Alaska, Rodney S. Dimmick writes under date of March 10, telling how he keeps his theatre, the Aurora, warm, and describes the film delivery system utilized by him. Mr. Dimmick says:

I use a Coles hot blast heater for heating purposes, a large size, No. 26, and use soft coal shipped from Seattle, cost landed here last year was approximately $48.00 per ton. I have used since October 1, 1919, to date, one and one-half tons, making an expense of $72.00. The seating capacity of the Aurora Theatre, of which I am the owner and manager, operator, engineer and so forth is 100; the admission charged is $1, and I pay the tax; children, 25c., for any seat in the house. I give two shows per week and get my film from Code and Clark, of Nome, Alaska, during the summer or fall on the last boats arriving in this section, which is the last of September when we are lucky. I also exchange film with a theatre at Dime Creek, about 65 miles south of here. These are brought back and forth by dog teams, which take about two days to make the trip each way. With a lead traveling light with only the driver, the run is made by some teams in one day. I have frequently made the trip in less than twelve hours.

Gets Stove Red Hot.

I find the only system for heating my place properly is to get the stove red hot from floor to ceiling. Of course, not having a fire in the building only twice a week, it sometimes gets slightly chilled, inasmuch as the weather ranges in the winter here from 10 below zero to 50 below. The latter does not last very long at a time, but we have many days that cold. It does not take more than about three hours to heat up the building on show nights, and after it is once heated it takes very little coal to keep it warm, consequently any heating plant or system used outside I doubt if it would be of much use up here, as what we most need is a quick hot fire.

I run six reels to a show, which lasts about two hours. Once or twice during the show I usually go to the engine room, which is located in the back end of the building, and oil the engine or dynamo. I use an arc light on a Power's No. 6 machine, dynamo make unknown; Fairbanks Morse gasoline 6 horse power engine, have a 40-foot throw.

We get some of the best pictures up here. A few weeks ago I ran Dorothy Dalton in "A Flame of the Yukon," which I saw advertised in your December 6 issue of the World. Most of the film we get here now are very good; have Fairbanks in "Wild and Woolly," and most of the top notchers in other features equally as good.

The Light That Doesn't Fail Will Go to India

THE Sun-Light Arc Corporation, 218 West Forty-eighth street, New York, is rapidly branching out in foreign fields. The latest agency has just been established in India, the first sale and shipment into the territory going to the Indian Empire, Famous Players-Lasky, Ltd., Bombay, India, where that company will produce.

The accompanying photograph shows the cases containing two Sun-Light Arc units complete, shipped on the "City of Chester" on May 31, 1920. President J. Justice Harmer, of the Sun-Light Arc Company, states that Sun-Light Arc will soon be represented, and its present and new models obtainable in every leading country in the world.

The Boston Moving Picture Supply Company Has Moved

THE Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, exclusive Simplex distributors for Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, has moved from its former quarters, 54 Broadway, Boston, to larger offices at the corner of Shawmut and Church streets, formerly occupied by the Select Pictures Corporation.

The new tenant has secured a long lease of the premises and made extensive alerations. The remodeled building houses an attractive reviewing room, fully equipped, where visiting exhibitors may inspect films from the neighboring exchanges. This miniature theatre will comfortably seat twenty-five persons.

The sales room is on the Shawmut street side and contains a display of the latest model Simplexes, each electrically connected and a fully equipped box office with an automatic ticket seller all ready for business.

Well Arranged Quarters.

In the lower portion of the establishment is located the used equipment section, the carbon and date strip displays as well as other theatre requirements.

The arrangement of the basement shipping room, under the management of Joseph Burke, obviates the handling of cases in the main sales room.

On the second floor is a film-cleaning department where this operation will be performed by up-to-date scientific methods.

Large and comfortable quarters have also been provided for the use of visiting exhibitors where appointments may be made and business transacted. This feature will add to the attractiveness of the new offices as a meeting place for the trade.

In addition to Simplex projectors, Automatic ticket sellers and National carbons, booths, screens, lobby display frames, ticket choppers, tickets, stereopticons, announcement slides and poster strips are on display and for sale.

The organization includes S. Y. Merchant, manager; Miss Rose Asher, chief of purchasing division; James Berry, road salesman; Joseph Cifre, road salesman, and Dan Dalziell, who is in charge of the repair department on the second floor, where a complete equipment of precision tools insures accurate workmanship and satisfactory results to the patrons of the establishment.

Getting the Best

SOME men don't have to stay in bed to keep asleep, and a fool, when words of wisdom are spoken, reacts like a deaf mute! If such men were ever motion picture exhibitors they have either died or failed long since. So, when we speak of the qualities of the RITCHEY poster, we are at least sure of an intelligent and attentive audience. When we say that posters such as the RITCHEY posters can only be turned out by the greatest organization of poster artists and poster printers in the world we expect them to look upon our work with eyes intelligently critical, and to realize the truth of our words. Every time that they study their posters and count the receipts that they bring in a realization should come to them of the absolute necessity for having posters with a potent advertising value.

Because the RITCHEY poster is the poster with the maximum of advertising value the exhibitor should always have them. To make the maximum of profit he must always have them! Getting them should not be left to luck and chance. Getting them requires constructive work. The first step should be in the voicing of the demand for them. The intelligent exhibitor should insist upon having them because he is entitled to them! AND HE WILL GET THEM!

Ritchey

RITCHEY LITHO. CORP.
406 WEST 31st STREET, NEW YORK PHONE, CHELSEA 8388

IN the year to come, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will continue to produce and distribute the majority of the motion pictures that bring profit to the exhibitors that show them. The producing department, under the direction of Mr. Lasky, will deliver from studios in New York, in California, in England and in India, a quality of product perhaps even better than that which has marked the most prosperous year that exhibitors of Paramount Pictures ever have experienced.

We shall make about one hundred and twenty pictures a year, and will release at least two pictures every week.

A great many of these new productions are completed. To say that they are as strong box-office attractions as the best pictures of this year is to state a fact based upon actual observation of the finished product.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation enters the new year with more friends than ever before. It has made these friends by delivering a consistent supply of the most popular motion pictures at a fair price. It will keep these friends by continuing to supply the demand for productions of genuine quality.

These new Paramount Pictures will be booked on any plan that suits the convenience of the exhibitor.

SEPTEMBER

Adolph Zukor Presents a

GEORGE FITZMAURICE PRODUCTION
"THE RIGHT TO LOVE"

with Mae Murray and David Powell

Photoplay by OUIDA BERGERE Adapted from the play by Pierre Frondaie and Claude Farrare

A Paramount Picture

A picture as rich in setting and costuming, as strong in appeal, and as tremendous in box-office value as Mr. Fitzmaurice's "On With the Dance"

Adolph Zukor Presents

ELSIE FERGUSON in "LADY ROSE'S DAUGHTER"

Directed by HUGH FORD

By Mrs. Humphry Ward Scenario by Burns Mantle

A Paramount Picture

Mrs. Humphry Ward's famous novel provides the best vehicle that Miss Ferguson has ever had. Like "His House in Order" it is another triumph of Hugh Ford's directorship

---

Thomas H. Ince Presents

CHARLES RAY in "A VILLAGE SLEUTH"

By Agnes Christine Johnston

Directed by Jerome Storm Photographed by Chet Lyons A Thomas H. Ince Production

A Paramount Picture

Charlie's the hired man in a sanitarium—and a correspondence school detective! That makes a story head and shoulders over any of his past stuff. Like "Greased Lightning" and "The Girl Dodger," but funnier

---

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

THOMAS MEIGHAN in "CIVILIAN CLOTHES"

Directed by HUGH FORD

From the play by Thompson Buchanan Scenario by Clara S. Beranger

A Paramount Picture

Thomas Meighan has become famous for his work in "The Miracle Man," "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife?" Now a star in his own right, in a Broadway success of proven box-office appeal, he will be one of the really big money-makers of the year by the author of "Male and Female" and "Peter Pan"

RELEASES

Adolph Zukor Presents

DOROTHY DALTON in

Cosmopolitan Productions

"HUMORESQUE" Featuring ALMA RUBENS

Story by Fannie Hurst

Scenario by Frances Marion — Directed by Frank Borzage

A Paramount Picture

A story of mother love—with all the comedy of "Potash and Perlmutter," all the pathos of "The Music Master" and all the heart appeal of "Madame X"

The New Art Film Company Presents

DOROTHY GISH in "LITTLE MISS REBELLION"

by Harry Carr

Scenario by Wells Hastings — Directed by George Fawcett

A Paramount Picture

Here's something out of the ordinary for Dorothy Gish. Now she is a Princess who in the whirligig of revolution becomes a flapjack artist in a lunch room. There's excitement, comedy and romance in every minute of it

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

WALLACE REID in "WHAT'S YOUR HURRY?"

by Byron Morgan

Directed by Sam Wood — Scenario by Byron Morgan

A Paramount Picture

Wallie Reid's best pictures were his automobile stories—"Double Speed" and "Excuse My Dust." Now in "What's Your Hurry?" he drives a motor truck. It has the same zip and pep, and it beats them both in power and speed and box-office appeal

OCTOBER

Cosmopolitan Productions

"THE RESTLESS SEX"

by Robert W. Chambers

with MARION DAVIES Directed by Robert Z. Leonard

A Paramount Picture

A sure-fire box-office title, a famous author and a wonderful cast make this a genuinely great money-maker. It is an ultra-luxurious production of Chambers' story which ran in the Cosmopolitan and later in book form, fascinating millions of readers

---

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

GEORGE MELFORD'S PRODUCTION

ROSCOE [FATTY] ARBUCKLE in "THE ROUND-UP"

From the play by Edmund Day A Paramount Picture Scenario by Tom Forman

Roscoe Arbuckle in a full length drama! That's all you need to get the crowds. The play was a sensation on the stage, and on the screen, with Arbuckle in his first straight comedy role, it combines every element of success

---

Thomas H. Ince Presents

DOUGLAS MacLEAN in "THE JAILBIRD"

A Thomas H. Ince Production

A Paramount Picture

Douglas MacLean was unanimously pronounced the brightest star in the film firmament last year. Exhibitors who cleaned up on "23½ Hours' Leave," "What's Your Husband Doing?" and "Mary's Ankle" don't have to be told that this is a winner

---

WILLIAM S. HART in "THE CRADLE OF COURAGE"

A William S. Hart Production

Directed and Adapted by Lambert Hillyer

A Paramount Picture

William S. Hart has been producing the best pictures of his career under his own management. First "The Toll Gate" and then "Sand!" And this one is on the same big scale, as human, as original, as thrilling as the others

---

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

CECIL B. DeMILLE'S PRODUCTION
"SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT"

by Jeanie Macpherson

---

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

"HELD BY THE ENEMY"

with Jack Holt, Agnes Ayres, Wanda Hawley and Lewis Stone

From the play by William Gillette — Directed by Donald Crisp — Scenario by Tom Forman

A Paramount Picture

NOVEMBER

Jesse L. Lasky Presents a

GEORGE MELFORD PRODUCTION

"BEHOLD MY WIFE"

from the novel, "The Translation of a Savage"
by Sir Gilbert Parker. With Mabel Julienne Scott

A Paramount Picture

The magnificent natural scenery of the Northwest, and the richness of modern England form highly contrasted backgrounds for an engrossing story of a man's sacrifice for love, and of an Indian woman's development. This production is as rich in box-office possibilities as it is in power and beauty.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

ETHEL CLAYTON in "ROZANNE OZANNE"

(Working Title)

by Cynthia Stockley

A Paramount Picture

Greater than "Poppy" this tale marks the highest art of Cynthia Stockley and the main character is perfectly fitted to Miss Clayton's talents. It is being produced with a wealth of investiture worthy of so strong a story plot and every effort will be made to make it the Ethel Clayton picture de luxe, the best thing she has ever done.

Adolph Zukor Presents a

GEORGE FITZMAURICE PRODUCTION
"IDOLS OF CLAY"

with Mae Murray and David Powell

By Ouida Bergere

A Paramount Picture

A picture that extends over every phase of life—the glamour of the South Seas, the gaiety of London's Bohemia, and the vice of the lurid Limehouse District. More spectacular than "On With the Dance."

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

WALLACE REID in "THE CHARM SCHOOL"

by Alice Duer Miller

Directed by James Cruze — Scenario by Tom Geraghty

A Paramount Picture

From the famous "Saturday Evening Post" story of the young man who inherited a girl's boarding academy aud turned it into a "charm school." One of the most original and entertaining plots ever devised and filled with humor. Wallace Reid is given a chance to play the real lover again and the supporting cast will be virtually all-star.

RELEASES

Adolph Zukor Presents

DOROTHY DALTON in "A WINTER CITY FAVORITE"

(Working Title)

By Charles Belmont Davis Scenario by Rosina Henley Directed by Harley Knoles

A Paramount Picture

The winter city is, of course, New York and the favorite is a young woman of just such charm as Dorothy Dalton possesses. The story allows for elaborate and thrilling scenes and provides Miss Dalton with a characterization of beauty and gripping dramatic power. The author, brother of Richard Harding Davis, is one of America's greatest short story writers.

Thomas H. Ince Presents

ENID BENNETT in "HER HUSBAND'S FRIENDS"

Directed by Fred Niblo By Marjorie Benton Cooke A Thomas H. Ince Production

A Paramount Picture

A picture about marriage—the kind of picture that rings true, with that human touch that made "Stepping Out" and "Hairpins" so popular. Enid Bennett gives a wonderful portrayal of the wife.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

"BURGLAR PROOF" with BRYANT WASHBURN

By William Slavens McNutt

Directed by Maurice Campbell

A Paramount Picture

A little different sort of picture from every angle. A story that is filled with real humor and heart interest and one of the best characterizations ever made by Mr. Washburn, who is supported by a cast de luxe headed by Lois Wilson.

Adolph Zukor Presents

BILLIE BURKE in "THE FRISKY MRS. JOHNSON"

(By arrangement with F. Ziegfeld, Jr.)

Directed by Edward Dillon Scenario by Lawrence McCloskey

A Paramount Picture

The famous play by Clyde Fitch made into a captivating romance of humor, especially suited to Miss Burke's personality. The story of a lively young widow who amuses herself with men, but who sacrifices her reputation and jeopardizes her chances for happiness to save the sister she loves.

BESIDES the productions to be released in September, October and November, the following will be among the year's releases:

ROSCOE [FATTY] ARBUCKLE in "The Life of the Party" from the Saturday Evening Post story by Irvin S. Cobb, "The Traveling Salesman" from the famous play by James Forbes and "Brewster's Millions," George Barr McCutcheon's famous novel and play.

"ALWAYS AUDACIOUS" from the Saturday Evening Post story by Ben Ames Williams.

JOHN BARRYMORE in "Amos Judd" from the well-known novel by John Ames Mitchell.

ENID BENNETT in "I Wonder If" and "The Incubus," Thomas H. Ince Productions.

SIR JAMES BARRIE'S "Peter Pan," "What Every Woman Knows" and "The Little Minister" in which Maude Adams has starred for many years. These will be produced as big special productions.

"CAMILLE," Dumas' famous novel which has been a starring vehicle for the world's greatest actresses.

SYDNEY CHAPLIN in "One Hundred Million."

"THE CONQUEST OF CANAAN" from Booth Tarkington's novel.

"THE CURSE OF WEALTH" by Cosmo Hamilton.

WILLIAM DE MILLE'S "Conrad In Quest of His Youth," with Thomas Meighan; from Leonard Merrick's famous novel; and "His Friend and His Wife" by Cosmo Hamilton.

DOROTHY DALTON in "Jeanne of the Marshes" by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

ELSIE FERGUSON in "Sacred and Profane Love," Arnold Bennett's play, in which Miss Ferguson has been starring on the stage in New York.

"GOOD FOR THE SOUL" by Margaret Deland.

"THE GREAT DAY," the Drury Lane melodrama by George R. Sims and Lewis N. Parker.

VIOLET HEMING in "The Princess of New York" by Cosmo Hamilton.

"HER OWN MONEY" from the successful play by Mark Swann.

"IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE?" which was adapted from the Continental comedy by Leo Ditrichstein.

DOUGLAS MacLEAN in "Lucid Intervals" and "Yancona Yillies," Thomas H. Ince productions.

THOMAS MEIGHAN in "The Frontier of the Stars" from the novel by Albert Payson Terhune, directed by Charles Maigne.

GEORGE MELFORD'S productions, "The Jucklins" by Opie Reid; "The Faith Healer" by William Vaughan Moody, and "The Old Homestead," with Theodore Roberts.

"THE NEW YORK IDEA" Langdon Mitchell's play in which Mrs. Fiske attained her greatest success.

"THE NIGHT HAWK" from the novel and successful play by Edgar Jepson.

"PETER IBBETSON" Du Maurier's novel, which in its dramatic form was one of the most successful pieces in which John and Lionel Barrymore have ever appeared.

"THE QUARRY" from the novel by John S. Moroso.

"THE SIXTY-FIRST SECOND" from the novel by Owen Johnson.

GEORGE LOANE TUCKER'S production "Ladies Must Live" presented by Mayflower.

"THE WITCHING HOUR" Augustus Thomas' most popular play.

JESSE L. LASKY PRESENTS

ROBERT WARWICK in "The City of Masks"

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

By George Barr McCutcheon
Directed by Thomas Heffron
Scenario by Walter Woods

SOME knew him as Tommy Trotter, chauffeur. Others bowed to him as Lord Eric Temple. Which was the mask, which was the man?

It's a love story, one of the strangest and most fascinating ever screened. The notable cast includes Lois Wilson, Theodore Kosloff and J. M. Dumont.

HE didn't want to testify in a big divorce scandal—so he played sick.

And then when his nurse—Bebe Daniels—came along, he didn't want to get well! "What a heart!" said the doctor when she kissed him!

It's another of those joyous rollicking Wallie Reid comedies that the whole family revels in. It was a big hit on the stage, and on the stage they couldn't do half!

ARTCRAFT PICTURES

One Group Will Sell You Out As Quickly As The Other

Let's talk some English without chewing the words. What are any of the various producer and distributor crowds giving you when they sell you a franchise?

In addition to paying for hollow, valueless franchises you also pay for the pictures they cover—many of them pictures you wouldn't buy unless the franchise forced you to do so.

Associated Producers, Inc., isn't franchising or sub-franchising anything or anyone.

Seven powerful producers—and there will be others—have burned all the bridges that linked them to other organizations and banded irrevocably together for a long term of years. Their productions will enable any exhibitor who wishes to be free and independent to hold his theatre and escape any organization's franchise yoke.

With our first release September 12th we guarantee a minimum of thirty of the most powerful productions the industry has ever known.

You do not have to be owned, controlled or throttled by us to get our productions. We have always believed and still believe that powerful pictures, independently and cleanly sold, guarantee the success and independence of any theatre.

The chief value of a franchise is that it makes you "human collateral" for the organization that sells you the franchise and that once securely franchised you can be—have been—and will be sold out by selfish individuals who measure you only from your dollar values to themselves.

A SHOULDER TO SHOULDER TALK

IN ALL THIS TALK—and proof—of the big producing organizations buying up key theatres and driving the small owner and non-monopoly producer to the wall there is one fact that sticks out like a sore finger—you can corner anything in this world except brains.

Just so long as brains will continue to make better pictures than merely money, you—be you big owner or small owner—need not be afraid that you can't pull the crowds and do the business. If you have the best pictures in town, people can't stay away from your theatre—and all the advertising of the monopoly outfit can't alter the fact—it simply isn't human nature.

Read Universal's latest announcement on the following two pages. These forty-eight pictures were made by a non-monopolizing organization for any-and-every theatre in the land—made with the brains and the experience that mere money can't buy—made to be your pictures with which successfully to fight monopoly—made to be the best pictures in town.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS

HARRY CAREY'S first, "BLUE STREAK McCOY," released July 26th, directed by Reeves Eason, is exactly the kind of picture in which this fine and vigorous actor has made his greatest hits—full of hard riding and fast fighting, picked out with that genuinely human humor which keeps CAREY in a class by himself. Seven more of the same kind to follow—the country can't get enough of HARRY CAREY.

A GREAT year of stage success and then, back to the infinitely bigger audience of the screen comes bewitching CARMEL MYERS, where millions of admirers will welcome her first on August 23rd in a delightful heart-appeal feature called, "IN FOLLY'S TRAIL," directed by Rollin Sturgeon from the story by Katherine Lieser Robbins.

JULY 12th is the day—the first release of The Great Forty-Eight, and the first of eight FRANK MAYO productions, full of action and red-blooded romance. "THE RED LANE," directed by Lynn Reynolds, who made one of your last-year's biggest money-getters—"The Brute Breaker," and who will give you another just like it in this great Canadian border-smuggling story by the famous author, Holman Day.

Notice to Applicants For First National Franchises

It is rapidly becoming evident that it will be impossible to grant Franchises to hundreds of exhibitors who have applied for them. There can be but one franchise holder in each zone. We assure you that every application is given careful, impartial consideration. It is because we desire to be perfectly fair to applicants—and at the same time select the exhibitor best qualified for a membership in the organization that we have gone slowly in announcing the award of franchises.

If you are the leading exhibitor in your zone, have no fear—we will find it out and you will get your franchise.

To those disappointed ones who fail in securing Franchises, we can only say—The best man has won.

Yours for fairness,

The Convention One Worthy of the Name

WRITING in Cleveland in the morning hours of Thursday, June 10, and estimating what may be contained in the coming day or two as judged by what has happened in Cleveland for the three preceding days, it is no large statement to say that the exhibitors of the United States have formed a genuine organization.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, while at this moment of writing does not possess a constitution and by-laws or a board of permanent officers, is a fact. The hundreds of exhibitors gathered in Cleveland from every quarter of the country settled the question of permanency and singleness of purpose on the first day of the sessions.

As was remarked by Willard C. Patterson, one of the figures of the convention, on the evening of the first day: "If anybody thinks he can stage a bolt here, let him go out and try it, and see how many he can get to go along with him." The gathering has been remarkable for many reasons. One of the upstanding factors is the number of picture showmen in attendance. And that, too, in spite of the factional squabbles that marked the pre-convention period. One of the men prominent in the convention suggested that had it not been for the ill-advised and unauthorized calling of a counter-convention at the Hotel Cleveland there would have been hundreds more present.

Another factor was the determination of the exhibitors to keep things moving along straight lines. There were stormy moments, many of them, but it was any man's convention, any minute and every minute. If there was a steam roller in operation its guidance was in the hands of the more than half a thousand men on the floor. The convention was its own steam roller. Of politics there was a-plenty. There is no question about that. But the men of the larger influence were determined there should be a square deal. Naturally, toes were stepped on, but it was always the majority that indulged in the treading operation.

For once in the history of motion picture exhibitor conventions the men nominally in control were persons of vision. They know that to build securely there must be a respect for the principle of the Golden Rule. In no one way was this fact better exemplified than in the proceeding for the committee of arrangements, known better as the Committee of Twenty-seven. Here were men drawn from all quarters of the country, few of whom had ever before met those with whom they were associated. Old-timers, whose eligibility through the mutations of business or politics has been challenged, were unanimous in their praise of the courtesy and fairness with which they were met. And in every case the committee stretched a point and admitted the challenged to full membership.

One of the notable incidents of the convention was the admission of Marcus Loew to the floor with voice and vote. The committee had decided Mr. Loew should be given the privilege of sitting with the New York delegation. The convention accepted the suggestion of one member that surely seven hundred exhibitors should not be afraid of one, and admitted Mr. Loew to membership. In another column will be found some of the interesting things Mr. Loew said to the exhibitors assembled.

Praise is due the men who through thick and thin have plodded steadily ahead to make possible the result of the work. Sydney S. Cohen and Sam Bullock are two of these. Yet, during the proceedings they kept practically aloof from the debates on the floor. Others deserving of praise for the outcome were the men composing the committee of three sent by the Patterson convention to Cleveland to make arrangements for co-operation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners—Messrs. Kress, Farley and Van Pragg. To those Patterson adherents, confused by the smoke of the preceding works, they made clear the exact situation, told them of the hearty co-operation of the Cleveland men.

The convention, too, was fortunate in its presiding officer. Henry H. Lustig stands second to none in ability to any man who has wielded a gavel over exhibitor gatherings. He is clear headed and just—and he knows the ways of parliamentarians. Seconding Mr. Lustig was Ben Sawyer, veteran of eleven years in the lower house of the Ohio legislature. The convention was notable, too, in the calibre of the men who attended.

There was an unusual number of able speakers, of men who could think on their feet and who maintained their temper in tense moments.

No convention of motion picture men ever listened to happier speeches than those delivered on Wednesday afternoon by former Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane and Senator James J. Walker. Both the men, orators in the full and in the best sense of the abused word, could not help feeling inspired by the character and size of the gathering they were addressing. The effect of the infelicitous and embarrassing remarks uttered by Mr. Rembusch at the conclusion of the speech of Senator Walker was largely obliterated by the tactful motion of Mr. Goldberg of Maryland.

The attendance of men prominent in the industry was unusual. Not even the annual session of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry could account for the presence of so many producers, distributors, exchangemen and salesmen. They came prepared to meet a crowd and were not disappointed. The convention has made motion picture history. It is not necessary to wait until the completion of the organization to say this with safety. If nothing more is accomplished than what two days have brought forth, the statement is true.

Greetings and salutations to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Paul Chalfin, Noted Architect, Enters the Production Department of Famous Players

IN accordance with its plans to fill the ranks of its organization with leaders in every phase of motion picture production the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that Paul Chalfin, one of the foremost authorities in this country in the field of architecture, interior decoration and landscape gardening, will go to California in about three weeks where he will work at the Lasky studio in association with Cecil B. DeMille.

Negotiations with Mr. Chalfin were opened by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky, in charge of production, some time before the latter's departure for Europe, and the announcement of his engagement was made by Adolph Zukor just prior to his departure for Cleveland to attend the meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

In addition to being a leading figure in the field of art and architecture, Mr. Chalfin is an expert in determining the authenticity of antiques and often is called into consultation by leading collectors and importers. He was graduated from Harvard in the class of 1898, after which he studied at the Art Students' League in New York and at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris. Later he painted portraits under the tutelage of James McNeil Whistler of his London studio and spent three years at the American Academy in Rome, where he won the Lazarus scholarship in 1909.

Prominent in College Work.

Returning to this country, he was instructor in architecture at Columbia University in 1902 and 1903 and was curator of the Oriental section at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, from 1903 to 1906. His principal work in New York in recent years has been the designing of the city decorations for the welcome of troops returning from the great war; the decorations and general scheme of the great Heroland Bazaar at the Grand Central Palace in the Winter of 1918, and the remodeling of MacDougall Alley for the Alley Fiesta held there in May, 1917.

In commenting upon his entrance into the motion picture field, Mr. Chalfin called attention to the fact that the leading figures in literature and in other branches of the fine arts are turning their attention to the films. "The time has come," he said, "when the work of men like Barrie and Henry Arthur Jones should have an attention as serious and as highly considered as has been their work in literature.

"It is the time for architects and artists to step forward to put their work on the screen in suitable and proper settings. I am entering the motion picture field in a spirit of co-operation, with a desire to be of assistance in establishing the motion picture as one of the permanent expressions of artistic feeling."

Dealy Awarded $30,000 Verdict

James J. Dealy, 50 Cathedral Parkway, an assistant director at the New York studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has just been awarded a verdict of $30,000 against Gus Hill, Inc., before Supreme Court Justice McCook, for injuries that destroyed the sight of an eye. The accident occurred during a performance of "Mutt and Jeff" at Gallipolis, Ohio, in February, 1918, when there was a flareback from a weapon the plaintiff had to discharge.

Thousands Piled on Table When Money Is Solicited

Cleveland, 3:25 P. M., June 10, 1920.

THE most intense enthusiasm ever witnessed at an exhibitor gathering was seen here this morning when a call was sounded for the immediate financing of a new organization. Men and women from all parts of the country crowded to the speaker's table and piled $15,000 in cold cash before him. Contributions ranged from $5 to thousands—Marcus Loew, $2,000; Charles H. Miles, of Detroit, $2,000; John F. Kunsky, $500.

Oklahoma was first with $500. New York and Michigan followed with $1,000, and Pennsylvania with $1,500.

The attack made earlier in the session on a pamphlet circulated by Alfred S. Black, charging personal gain for Messrs. Cohen, Berman, O'Reilly, Lustig and Herrington in an advertising reel play, was called by Mr. Berman that "Last gasp of the octupus." A resolution of confidence in the men attacked was passed.

Enthusiasm is rife. No spirit like it was ever seen before. A real national organization is already under way.

Pathe's Far East Agent Is in America to Investigate

LEON Schwartz, foreign representative for Pathe, has arrived in New York from Java and the Fast East, where he has lived for the past twenty-two years. This is Mr. Schwartz's first visit to America.

He will remain for three weeks and while here will look into theatrical conditions, investigating the methods and equipment of our theatres. On his return to Java, Mr. Schwartz will introduce many of the ideas he will have absorbed while here.

In addition to representing Pathe in the Far East, Mr. Schwartz owns and conducts several theatres in Batavia, Soerabaya and Samaraing, in the Dutch East Indies. He has heard reports in his territories that American producing companies will invade the theatrical field in the East Indies and erect their own theatres there.

Up to the present time the theatres of the East have not been the most pretentious and substantial possible, but now motion pictures are so popular they are erecting more commodious buildings of concrete material. Altogether there is a great boom this year in the building line.

Far East Fans Demand the Best.

American films are in great demand all through the East, he says, and the people demand the best pictures it is possible to obtain. Mr. Schwartz while in this country will negotiate the purchase of photoplays for distribution in the Far East.

The people of the East are partial to serials, westerns and pictures with plenty of action. They are familiar with the players and speak of them as intimately as they do in America. They ask for their favorite and demand them until they get what they want.

More Criminal Prosecutions for Fraudulent Tax Returns

WITH two convictions already secured in the courts for the filing of fraudulent income tax returns, the Bureau of Internal Revenue has inaugurated a series of investigations which, it is believed, will lead to other criminal prosecutions. In the cases already tried fines of as high as $3,000 and imprisonment for one year were imposed, and in one case $32,000 in additional taxes was recovered.

"The policy of the bureau will be to pursue tax frauds relentlessly," officials of the bureau declared in discussing the cases. "In the checking up of returns evidence to show fraud will be followed by thorough investigation which will be continued until the persons involved are brought to justice. This, in fairness to the man who honestly pays his share of the common levy, is the only course possible.

Act Before Prosecution.

"Taxpayers who have not met the full requirements of the income tax laws should not wait until discovery is made by a revenue officer. There is a great difference between the self-discovered tax delinquent and the tax evader discovered by the bureau. The time for offers of compromise is before discovery by a government official."

Alice Brady Not to Desert Stage for Motion Pictures

IN a statement from Alice Brady she announces she will not desert the stage for one year to devote her time exclusively to the screen as previously reported, but after a month's vacation, and the completion of one picture, will reappear on the stage in the autumn.

"I have no idea of devoting myself exclusively to either the screen or the stage, but intend combining the two as I have been doing," says Miss Brady. "I feel that I have much to learn from both the stage and the screen, and I believe in making the most of my opportunities. Following the close of my season in Chicago in "Forever After" I shall devote a month to rest and will then make one big picture before resuming my theatrical work early next season. I have one play by Harry Chapman Ford which has already been tried out with satisfactory results, and in addition have several other plays in which I may appear during the season."

Exhibitor-Made Steam Roller Quickly Breaks Parliamentary Red Tape and Sweeps Down the Stretch to Victory

Cleveland, June 9, 1920.

THE tablets of stone are smashed, the old traditions of transgressions of exhibitors' conventions are broken, and by a machine of exhibitor making, their own convention steam roller. Out of the ruck of infernal parliamentary machines, this new engine emerged and is even now sweeping down the stretch to victory. Assembled at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, for the purpose of gaining theatre independence and eliminating the producer-exhibitor from the field, 700 exhibitors, the greatest number ever gathered in convention, are backing this steam roller thoroughbred of theirs to win.

Already the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is born out of the three bodies which came under separate calls to Cleveland, and already it is evident, with the convention possibly two more days to go, that its organization will effect a change on the face of the industry.

Marcus Loew Seated.

The strength of delegations from all parts of the country was evidence of the national scope of the movement for independence. California arrived with twelve delegates, but the total climbed to seventeen. Ohio had 200 representatives.

New York and Pennsylvania ran neck and neck with about seventy-five each. Michigan was on hand with forty-five. Texas, New Jersey, South Dakota, Indiana, Arkansas, Missouri—all were there, each unit organized, informed and scrappy.

The guns of the convention, turned since Tuesday upon all producers-exhibitors, all are still smoking.

Mr. Loew, given a seat with voice and vote among the New York delegates, made a defence of his producing activities on Wednesday afternoon, saying: "It was the percentage bugaboo which drove me into producing pictures. I called Richard Rowland of Metro on the telephone immediately after a certain producer had left my office, saying that I would be obliged to play all his pictures on the percentage basis next year."

Zukor Replies to Charges.

Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky, issued a statement Tuesday night, June 8, saying that he was willing at any time to confer with a committee representing all exhibitors, and that he had been forced to enter the exhibiting field because a large group of exhibitors had indirectly gone into producing, and shut off their screens from his pictures.

Mr. Zukor and William Fox were the only producers who failed to meet the Committee of Seventeen appointed at the Chicago conference for the purpose of coming to New York and ascertaining the intentions of every producer as to owning or operating theatres.

The report of the Committee of Seventeen, delivered by its chairman, Frank J. Rembusch, to the convention on the afternoon of its opening, was in itself an indication of the grip the exhibitors intended taking on "the producer-exhibitor octopus." It contained not only the answers given by the producers in New York to the question: "Are you going to get out of the exhibiting business?" but an outline of the organization for a new national body.

Included in this embryo platform was the plank that the president of the new organization be an outsider to the film industry and a "great American." Ex-President William Howard Taft was mentioned, but Franklin K. Lane, former secretary of the interior, loomed up big following his address to the convention Wednesday afternoon. Joe Hopp also suggested Senator Walker for the position, following the New Yorker's stirring address.

A soft spoken and modest appearing young Southerner, Willard C. Patterson by name, must have felt that thrill which comes but once in a man's lifetime when he heard former Secretary Lane and State Senator James J. Walker of New York talking to the 700 theatre owners whose presence at the Winton was partly the outcome of his call to arms at Chicago in April.

The movement for theatre independence was generally referred to as "The Patterson movement," and as such will no doubt go down in history.

Exhibitors who attended the Cleveland convention will carry away memories of many big moments, but none any greater than the moments spent listening to the addresses of Franklin K. Lane and Senator "Jimmy" Walker, men who have been in close touch with the picture industry.

They will remember also the dramatic attempt made by Fred Herrington of Pittsburgh to deny Marcus Loew a seat among the New York delegates after the convention had passed a motion seating Mr. Loew with power of voice and vote.

They will remember, too, the cool floor generalship of Charles L. O'Reilly, who straightened out many a crooked tangle, and the "ringside" atmosphere injected into discussion by A. N. Jackson, the big man with the big voice, who led sixteen Californians 3,000 miles to stiffen the offense against any filibuster or stampede.

Lustig Permanent Chairman.

Cleveland was honored when a native son, Henry H. Lustig, was elected permanent chairman of the convention, succeeding Sydney S. Cohen, who had so ably commanded during the interim since the Chicago conference.

The convention's entertainment committee prepared a program whose features were a moonlight ride on Lake Erie, a sightseeing tour for the women, a theatre party and a monopoly on 2,000 seats at the baseball game between the Cleveland Indians and Connie Mack's Athletics.

Practically every producing and distributing company in the business had representatives of its sales forces at the convention. Famous Players had practically its entire field staff of field men there and several representatives from the home office. First National and Selznick also were well representd.

Exploitation Stunts Galore.

The exploitation artists were busy. United Artists staged showings of Mary Pickford's "Suds" and Doug Fairbanks' "The Mollycoddle" at Loew's Stillman. First National swung a luncheon at the Statler on Wednesday showing Mack Sennett's "Married Life" and Norma Talmadge's "Yes or No." Maurie Meyers was busy keeping the exhibitors' mail boxes filled with suspicuous looking flasks filled with water and "Annette Kellergrams" and Sol Lesser's "What Women Love." Cleveland has for a week been a motion picture city. Besides the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Associated Exhibitors and the Ohio franchise holders in First National were in session.

TUESDAY—MORNING SESSION.

THE opening session, as is customary, was largely taken up with formerly introductory speeches and reports. Sydney Cohen, the temporary chairman, early sounded the dominating note by clearly stating that the exhibitors were met to organize a permanent national body which would protect them against the entrance of the producer-exhibitor into the field of independent theatre owners.

The meeting was conducted with reasonable harmony, a note of good fellowship being struck in a speech by Floyd Waite, commissioner of parks in Cleveland, who extended a welcome in the name of the city.

Although called for 10:30 on Tuesday morning, June 8, the first session of the convention did not come to order until 11:50. At that time Messrs. Sam Bullock, Sydney S. Cohen, H. H. Lustig and Floyd Waite, commissioner of parks in Cleveland, ascended the platform. Mr. Cohen presided.

The chairman addressed his opening remarks to an audience of over 500 exhibitors.

Mr. Cohen commenced by calling attention to the nationwide interests which the convention represented. For instance, he pointed out that from the distant state of California had come a delegation of twelve exhibitors, who represented 400 theatre owners in their state.

The task which faced the convention, he explained, was to create a permanent national organization which would protect the independent exhibitor from the so-called producer-exhibitor who up till this time had been able to maintain a position in the exhibiting field by playing on the jealousies of rival factions in the ranks of the independent theatre owners. The entrance of Wall street in the business meant inferior picture at higher prices, he said.

An instance of what a united stand can accomplish, Mr. Cohen said, was the recent deposit law passed by New York State. Given the same co-operation among exhibitors elsewhere, he predicted the elimination of the deposit system altogether.

The chairman commended the work of the F. I. L. M. clubs, and concluded by saying that the convention had been called not in a mood of defiance but for self-protection.

Mr. Waite, who followed, commenced by characterizing the motion picture industry as "the greatest and most helpful in the country." He welcomed the exhibitors to Cleveland and said that he was speaking not only as a representative of the Mayor's cabinet but as an ardent movie fan as well.

"My vices are movies and English bulldogs," he said.

"I remember the time when it was considered a heresy for children to play baseball on Sunday. But Cleveland has always taken an advanced stand on the question of recreation. I have under my supervision the recreation of 100,000 young men and women and I believe that the rights of the common people are paramount.

"The mayor of this city, who even now is being proposed for vice-president of the United States, has always stood for Sunday opening of motion picture theatres, and I agree with him."

Mr. Waite said that not only are pictures the one great recreation for tired working people, but that the right kind of pictures are a positive inspiration. That being the case, he considered the exhibitor as being the holder of a public trust, and he made an appeal to his audience that they should always keep their scale of prices within the reach of the common people.

In presenting the key to the city of Cleveland to the chairman, Mr. Waite said that in case any members of the convention should in the exuberance of their spirits transgress somewhat on the letter of the city's laws, he promised them his personal immunity from arrest. This promise he backed with the thousands of acres of parks under his supervision.

Mr. Waite was soundly applauded at the conclusion of his speech and was escorted from the room by a committee composed of Messrs. J. T. Collins, Glenn Harper and J. C. Ritter. Joseph Hopp, of Illinois, thanked Mr. Waite for his welcome, and suggested that in the present situation exhibitors should show the same spirit of co-operation which they did in helping to win the war.

At this point Thomas Goldberg of Baltimore, who previously had made several attempts at speaking, was recognized by the chairman. He attempted to move that a new temporary chairman be appointed but was declared out of order on the grounds that the convention had not yet taken up the disposal of business.

The chairman then read a telegram of congratulations from Governor James M. Cox, of Ohio.

In presenting the report of the National Committee on Arrangements, Charles L. O'Reilly said that although two-thirds of the committee had never met before they were able to give a unanimous report.

The report was then read by the chairman, and on the motion of William Brandt was accepted. It included a list of names of the committee on credentials.

Mr. Goldberg rose again at this point and said he believed that some members

Action of Exhibitors Themselves Forced Famous Players to Acquire Theatre Chain

By ADOLPH ZUKOR

(By wire to Moving Picture World)

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had no idea of entering the exhibiting field until two years ago, when a group of exhibitors decided to go into the producing and distributing field and made offers to every star and every director employed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The main argument these exhibitors had to offer our people was that these exhibitors, through their ownership of theatres, could offer the stars and directors better distribution of their product than could be had through a company that was in no way engaged in the exhibiting end of the business.

In self-defense we were forced to take steps to provide an outlet for our pictures in every section where the proper presentation of our product was threatened by activities of exhibitors who were producing and distributing their own pictures. We were faced with a situation in whch we were not able to obtain proper representation in many important communities without becoming interested in theatres—a situation forced upon Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by exhibitors who are distributing their own product. We had no desire to enter the exhibiting business. We have no desire to extend our theatre interests.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be very glad at all times to confer with a committee representing all exhibitors, including exhibitors who are producing and distributing pictures, for the purpose of bringing about harmony and understanding in all branches of our industry for the mutual benefit of all.

on the committee were shareholders in producing companies. A motion for adjournment being in order, he was overruled and the meeting adjourned at 12:37, to re-assemble at 4:00 p. m. when the committee on credentials was to report.

TUESDAY—AFTERNOON SESSION.

FOLLOWING a report from the Committee on Credentials, Henry H. Lustig, of Cleveland, was unanimously elected permanent chairman. Frank Rembusch then reported for the committee of seventeen. Most of his reading he confined to the sections of the report which related to the committee's negotiations with producing companies as to their intentions in the exhibiting field. According to the report, the Famous Players-Lasky company was the only concern which absolutely refused any sort of compromise with the exhibitors' demands that producers shall not compete with them in their own field.

The report included a suggested platform for a new national organization of exhibitors. The platform called for the election of some man of nationally known integrity, such as William H. Taft, for president, for a one-man one-vote basis, regardless of the number of theatres owned by individual voters; for a budget system, and provided that members are to transact business only with such producers as refrain from entering the exhibiting field.

The report of the committee on credentials was the first business before the convention. Following its presentation, the Californian, A. N. Jackson, took the floor to nominate Henry H. Lustig, of Cleveland, as the permanent chairman of the convention.

The "Lustig movement" swept over the house. Leader after leader of delegations from all parts of the country rose to indorse the name of Lustig, and his unanimous election was given with what in the pun language might be called a "Lusty" cheer. Willard C. Patterson and Sam I. Berman were unanimously elected recording and reading secretaries, respectively.

Lustig Would Melt All Differences.

On taking the gavel from the hands of Sydney Cohen Mr. Lustig sent a thrill through the hall when, with a flourish of oratorical trumpets, he called:

"Let's make this meeting a crucible in which to melt all our differences, and let's emerge from it bright and glowing like a beacon light, guiding the industry. Are you with me?"

A roar of approval was his answer.

It hushed as Frank Rembusch advanced to delver his report as chairman of the Committee of Seventeen. Secrecy had been the watchword of the guardians of the report. Everyone knew that it was going to shove the pulse of the session up to the danger mark, and it did.

The report of Mr. Rembusch's committee of seventeen independent exhibitors, appointed at the Chicago conference to determine if it were possible to keep producers out of the exhibiting field, was the product of six weeks' labor and the result of facing the producers in New York with the direct question, "Are you going to get out of the exhibiting game?"

"Looked Into Their Eyes."

"I have looked into the whites of these men's eyes," said Mr. Rembusch, "and I have endeavored to get not only their answers to our proposition, but the spirit in which they reacted to us. I am not giving you their entire statements: they were miles long and would require a months' convention to be read. I shall give you the synopsis of each company's statement and sentiment, one by one. Here they are:

"Vitagraph—Bought one theatre in 1914 to get a Broadway showing. Sold that when it was found not to be in harmony with exhibitor sentiments. Own no theatres now. Favor exhibitor independence.

"Pathe—Indorse Patterson movement. Own no theatres. Hope exhibitors will organize to insure fair business. Pathe mostly concerned with distribution—handling American, Hodkinson, Associated Exhibitors and its own product.

"Universal—Laemmle and Cochran indorse Patterson movement. Have six theatres. Willing to dispose of these if exhibitors will organize.

Sentiment of All.

"United Artists—Hiram Abrams with the movement for exhibitor independence, but believes exhibitors will never get together. Exhibitor injures industry by signing long-term non-cancellable contracts.

"Selznick—Lewis J. Selznick most enthusiastic for Patterson idea. Wants exhibitor to dominate industry. Good exhibitor organization an insurance policy for the producer.

"Robertson-Cole—Heart and soul with movement. Own no theatres. Want exhibitors to be able to support good pictures and keep out of production game themselves.

"First National—Backing movement for independence since its inception. J. D. Williams wants exhibitor to have such strength as will force fair play and become dominant factor in the industry. First great issue exhibitors have favored.

No "Marcus Loew Presents."

"Metro—Marcus Loew wants a strong exhibitor organization. Was conscious of a shut-off of pictures for his theatres and entered the producing field to guarantee product for his screens. The salvation of the exhibitor is to keep the small producer producing. Agreed to take the line 'Marcus Loew Presents' off Metro pictures because exhibitors complained it gave Loew houses unfair advertising advantage.

"Goldwyn—Agreed not to enlarge its holdings or to compete against exhibitors except in cities where they could not place their product otherwise.

"Fox—William Fox out of town. Committee didn't believe Fox was hostile to exhibitor interests, but could say nothing as to his intentions.

"Famous Players-Lasky—Mr. Zukor out of town. Could not be reached by committee, which called upon Mr. Lichtman and told him Famous Players' invasion of exhibiting field was the only really serious one. No satisfactory answer was given. Mr. Lichtman said: 'We can't deal with organizations. We deal with individual exhibitors only.' Mr. Lichtman disclamed any knowledge of the whole independent movement."

Asked about Realart, Mr. Rembusch said, "I take it that Realart and Famous Players-Lasky are one and the same thing."

The report of the Committee of Seventeen on the response of the producers to their question was prefaced by a skeleton platform for a new national organization.

Main Points of Platform.

Seven main points constituted this platform. They were:

1. That the president of the new organization be a man not connected with the film business in any way. A man of the calibre of ex-president Taft was suggested and a salary as high as $100,000 a year mentioned.
2. That voting be on an individual basis. Each member to have one vote, no matter how many theatres he owned.
3. That the majority rule.
4. That a budget system be established.
5. That exhibitors do business only with those not in the exhibiting field.
6. That the present three exhibitor organizations merge into one body.
7. That the basis of representation at conventions be that of the congressional district, one delegate for each district.

"Need a Great American."

After delivering his report, Mr. Rembusch enlarged upon its vital points. An attempt was made from the floor to cut his remarks short, but his interrupters were voted down. One Californian insisted that his delegation had come 3,000 miles, sixteen strong "to hear that kind of stuff" and they intended to hear it.

"We need a great 'outsider' at the head of our organization," said Mr. Rembusch, "because we have always lacked leadership and have been the most powerful and at the same time most helpless body of men in the country.

"We need a great American as our leader because we have been commissioned to interpret the spirit of Americanism and we have been balked because a few reels of pictures have been made for this purpose and outrageous prices charged for them.

"You're doing more than selling toothpicks. You're catering to the mind and the heart," continued Mr. Rembusch. "You must demand fair methods of trade. If they are granted, then place your business accordingly.

Stage Set for Big Business.

On the motion of John Manheimer of New York it was moved that the report of the Committee of Seventeen be received and made the first and special order of business of next morning's session. In accordance with amendments made by Hector E. Pasmezoglu and others and accepted by Mr. Manheimer, the motion called for the mimeographing of the sections in the report which dealt with the answers made by the producers and the recommendations thereon made by the committee.

A discussion ensued as to future times of meetings of the convention which through misunderstanding of rules of order and diversity of opinion protracted the meeting until 6:30, when it adjourned to reconvene at 10 a. m. the following day.

WEDNESDAY—MORNING SESSION.

EVEN Old Man Point of Order and Mr. Personal Privilege, so efficacious in the balking of business, could not stop the racers in the Cleveland field from straightening out Wednesday morning and rushing for the independence sweepstakes.

Time and again some parliamentary quibble was booed down and a would-be point of order maker shouted from the floor. The convention had assembled to get down to the report of the Committee of Seventeen, and it was relentless as the old machine steam roller itself in insisting that such be the order of business.

An attempt was made before the session opened to bar the press from the conven-

The World at the Convention

FOLLOWING through its heavy editorial backing of "one convention," Moving Picture World saw that it was represented at the Cleveland meeting as no other trade paper was, and probably as no other trade paper was ever represented at an exhibitors' gathering.

George Blaisdell, editor, was at the Hotel Winton, accompanied by Edward Weitzel, associate editor, even before the convention started.

They were followed by D. J. Shea, G. N. Gnaedinger, William J. Reilly and Paul C. Hinz, making a total of six representatives for "The Trade Paper of Features."

tion floor. But when the representatives of the various trade journals assembled outside the assembly hall and insisted that they be given a square deal—as they had given the movement for independence—they were admitted.

No sooner had Chairman Lustig begun to read the list of his committees than interruptions and protests began. So insistent were some of the parliamentarians on their points that opposition to them reached the stage where A. N. Jackson, the husky leader of the California aggregation, led the convention in three "regular" cheers for Chairman Lustig.

Praise for Governor Coolidge.

At this juncture Mr. Lustig was called from the convention by a message from his home and turned the gavel over to his Cleveland colleague, Ben Sawyer.

On motions by Leo Bracher of New York, the two divisions of the report of the Committee of Seventeen, relating to the answers of the producers to the committee and the outline of organization, were referred to committees on business relations and organization respectively.

The convention then listened to Ernest H. Horstman of Massachusetts and on his motion appointed a committee representing five states to wire Governor Coolidge of Massachusetts, in Chicago, the sincere thanks of the exhibitors of America for his veto on the drastic Massachusetts censorship bill.

It was following this motion that the real storm of the morning broke—the storm centering around the question of seating Marcus Loew in the convention.

Liverly Fight Over Marcus Loew.

The clouds began to loom up when Charles L. O'Reilly as chairman of the credentials committee reported that his committee recommended the seating of Mr. Loew in the New York delegation without voice or vote.

Mr. O'Reilly pointed out that this was done because it was the committee's sentiment that Mr. Loew was first of all an exhibitor, and that he had entered the producing field to protect his showman interests.

The cry then came from A. N. Jackson that Mr. Loew be given both voice and vote. It was seconded by Maurice Coyinski of Chicago and Mr. Vincent of New York.

"Mr. Loew is an exhibitor and a credit to the industry," said Mr. Choyinski. "Let us have him in here and have the benefit of his experience, his executive training, his skill in organization. Prejudices are not going to get us anywhere."

"Here you are seven hundred strong," said Mr. Vincent. "Are you afraid of one man? Bring him in and let him as an exhibitor deliberate with us. He knows whether or not we as a body are strong enough to grant him protection in case he leaves the exhibiting field."

Herrington Attacks Loew.

Mr. O'Reilly's motion amended to give Mr. Loew both voice and vote was passed, but just as the rumble "Let's adjourn," was heard, a little Napoleon in the form of Fred Herrington of Pittsburgh, former national president, stepped upon the platform to unleash a string of war dogs all his own.

"We exhibitors of Pennsylvania," said Mr. Herrington, "instituted a measure which was passed by both assembly and senate at Harrisburg, requiring producers who demanded deposites from exhibitors to put up like amounts as guarantees of their own good faith.

"I was called to the convention in St. Louis last year as this bill was going to the governor. There I was denied a hearing on the floor. It was then that Mr. Loew in a great speech said that if this insidious deposit bill were passed in Pennsylvania it would put 95 per cent. of the producers out of business.

"In the name of God," cried Mr. Herrington, "if Pennsylvania alone could put 95 per cent. of the producers out of the business, what could all the states do?

Asks Why Attitude Is Changed.

"Why admit to our councils our enemies? In New York City these men refused to see your committee. Last night they told a body of exhibitors who waited on them that they would do anything the independent exhibitors asked.

"Why are they willing to sacrifice everything now when a week ago they refused to hear you? Because you've got them on the run."

At this dramatic juncture, "time" was called on Mr. Herrington. He left the platform, but was waved back amid wild cheering. Continuing he said: "You all recall the eleventh hour—the eleventh month—1918, when Germany after having destroyed and desolated from Flanders to Galicia, fell on its knees before the oncoming allied armies and cried: 'Don't destroy me.' That situation might well be recalled today. Now is the time to stick together and press forward to the end."

A motion by Sidney Samuelson of New Jersey to re-consider the motion seating Mr. Loew was tabled, the hour being near that when the speakers of the afternoon were due to be received. The session adjourned until 2 o'clock.

WEDNESDAY—AFTERNOON SESSION.

THE session opened with speeches by two distinguished visitors to the convention. Former Secretry of the Interior Franklin K. Lane and Senator James J. Walker of New York, men who have done much for the industry, the former in the chambers of the national government, the latter in the legislature of his state, brought to the convention messages which were the most inspiring of any it had heard.

It was fitting that speeches from two such men should mark the day upon which a new and greater exhibitor organization should receive its official name—Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Coming to order at 2:45, the session prepared itself to receive its distinguished guests. In order to do this, a great number of exhibitors had been specially summoned from the witnessing of a special film showing the luncheon arranged by First National.

When the ex-secretary and senator arrived, Chairman Lustig proceeded immediately to introduce Mr. Lane.

Mr. Lane's Address

"I am very proud indeed to meet you," Mr. Lane commenced, "and what I have to say is more along the lines of a business talk than a formal address. I have been meeting men in your industry, in your branch and in other branches for several months, and this meeting, which is much larger than any other that I have seen and which I am told is the largest meeting of men in this industry that has ever been held, is the culmination of an appeal that I have made to the motion picture industry. That appeal consists of a request that you appreciate yourselves at your true value.

"You represent 18,000 exhibitors. You represent every city and town in the United States. You represent an art that has gone into its early fruition within twenty years. You represent an educational influence of a kind that had not been dreamed of when I was born. You represent a new method of drawing out of the young mind the possibilities that it has and of imposing upon the old mind the thought and sentiment and passion, hope and national ideas and international ideas as well.

Use Your Imagination.

"We don't today listen to the pulpit as we did, we do not today have our community around the little school house. You gentlemen are the possessors of that thing around which our modern life turns.

"But unless you have the appreciation of your community, you are not going to last as an industry. In order to have their appreciation you have to put into your work the imagination that the dramatist has put into his art, that the man of the newspaper has put into his, or that the man of the pulpit put into his art in times past.

"You have a wider field and a larger and more expanding opportunity to reach far more people. If your business, if you can call it that, is merely to succeed, it must succeed by treating the American people with the greatest respect. And what do we ask in the way of respect? We ask satisfaction for those qualities in us that we regard as superior.

"We ask in every newspaper that there shall be items of thought as well as of news, that newspapers shall not be merely purveyors of scandal, but that they shall challenge our minds as well.

Stir the Finer Qualities.

"And you must be able to present pictures that arouse the finer qualities in ourselves, that make us feel that there are challenges which are noble in this country and in all countries.

"There is no man in our western country that has not in himself lived a moving picture that could be put on the screen. I like to see any kind of contest. Not merely the contest between two men for a girl, but a contest between two men for a piece of land, two men for the right of a ship.

"Take out of your life, take out of our national life, any single item for challenge and you will find in it the basis of a moving picture.

"Is not this the land in which dreams come true. Who are they in this country who will show the possibilities of Americanism and preach a philosophy that is not the philosophy of despair but of confidence?

Joneses Were From Same Town, But They Couldn't Be Doubled

JUST illustrating the kind of messages that come to the director of reservations for a convention committee Sam Bullock told a World man of the near shock administered to him the week preceding the Cleveland convention.

From a town in a certain state he received a request to reserve for A. Jones one single room with bath. Before he had an opportunity to reply to Mr. Jones, there came an application from the same town and the same state from B. Jones asking for the reservation of a single room and bath.

Single rooms being scarce Mr. Bullock took it for granted the Joneses, living in the same town, possibly might be related or at least on terms of amity. Accordingly he sent this word to A. Jones:

"Can't give you a single room with bath, but have arranged to put you and B. Jones of your town in a double room with bath with twin beds. Hope this will be satisfactory."

The reply was prompt and likewise somewhat disconcerting to the man who is known sometimes for the pipe he keeps. The message ran like this:

"Don't you do any such thing. It won't be satisfactory. My wife won't stand for it. Everybody knows that B. Jones is a most estimable person and also that she's one of the best little women exhibitors in this state."

Who is there in this country who can do it? Will you do it? Then let me say that you must co-operate with us.

The Americanism Work.

"I had been trying to get from Congress a few dollars that would be enough to sustain an Americanization bureau, and had failed. But when you came down to me and asked if I would help in a movement of this kind, I took it up with the education committee of Congress and they passed a resolution asking the motion picture industry to do everything possible to support the morale of the country.

"As a result we formed an Americanization committee. We had a representative exhibitor, a representative producer, a representative distributor, a representative municipality. We now have a representative of the loyal legion, and I am the chairman of that committee.

"It is to be in no sense whatever a commercial proposition. We have an executive secretary. We have passed a formal resolution that no man is to make money out of this work, but that it is to be the fine self-supporting effort of a great industry.

His Faith in the Industry.

"If you gentlemen wish, you can appoint a representative to supplement Mr. Crandall, who represents you on this committee, and see that the words that I say to you are true. If you wish you can go to him and bring before us such suggestions as you may have in your mind as to the way by which these pictures can be most widely distributed.

"I am new to your people. I say this as a matter of no financial interest to me whatever, but of the deepest personal concern. I have taken at their word those gentlemen whom I have met in this industry and when they have said to me: 'We will give you fifty-two films,' I have said, 'Gentlemen, I expect you will.'

"We want to have America's record put before the eyes of Americans, and I propose to help you to put graphically before the eye of the American people those things that appeal to us as the most noble and most worthy in the life of this growing thing which we call America."

Extend Field of Patriotic Work.

At 9 a. m., at the close of Mr. Lane's speech, Harry Crandall proposed a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, that a committee be appointed to further the work of co-operation with the work of Americanization. The former secretary was then formally thanked by the chairman and escorted from the convention by a committee of three.

Senator James J. Walker of New York who was largely responsible for the passing in his state of a local option Sunday opening law, of a law permitting children to attend picture performances with the consent of their parents, for the defeat of censorship and of the passing of a deposit bill which requires that exhibitors' deposits be segregated from the general funds of producers and distributors and that they shall bear interest, spoke in the characteristic style which has made him famous among New York State exhibitors. After an appreciative reference to the previous speaker he plunged into what turned out to be one of the best speeches to which exhibitors have had the privilege of listening.

Senator Walker's Speech

"I congratulate you on this wonderful convention," said the senator. "This is the open season for the signs I see about me," he went on, referring to the large white standards bearing the names of the states that rose above the heads of his audience.

The senator indorsed the action of the exhibitors in calling a convention and said that in his "humble opinion" it was the only method for making progress in any field.

"That opinion is predicated upon eleven years' appearance in the New York State Legislature, from which I come to you today as the minority leader of the Senate, not representing myself, not because an invitation so flattering was extended to me for my personality, but rather because that legislature has learned to look so favorably upon the exhibitors of that state.

Accept Decision of Majority.

"In conference betweeen the most prominent men in our legislature, including the majority leader, the speaker and the governor, I was asked to respond to your invitation, and I only hope that if that representation be ever so feeble, you will not hold it against my state. For they have really good great big men out there.

"I like this organization, I like this convention. I have a personal interest and a selfish one. The attitude of the people back home, the confidence of my legislature, makes me keenly sensitive to the success and the conduct and the platform and the tendency to uplift that has been manifested by the exhibitors of my state. We have confidence in them. There are enough Celtic tendencies in me, enough Celtic blood, to love a good fight, and there is no convention worth while that does not carry their fight with them, with this reservation, that when the fighting is over the majority rules and the minority accepts the will of the majority."

Need of United Front.

Senator Walker stressed the need of preserving a united front, regardless of dissension within the ranks. "You may differ with each other while in this hall and while in your councils, but in order to get anywhere or acquire any prestige, attention or respect you have to stand unified, all for one and one for all, otherwise you will be lost.

"Probably I am only repeating to you the things that you have heard said so often. I say that I know a little about your industry. I do. In my official capacity I have to find out something about it. And it is because of that knowledge that I speak thus. I know it because I have met its members officially, and I say to you that you are public service individuals. You are serving the people and the people in some instance look to you.

"I may say to you with all the truth of which I am capable that I am a movie fan. I appreciate both angles of the situation, as far as my limited capacity to understand goes. I do not know screens throughout the country, but I know them in my own state.

Praises Cohen, O'Reilly and Berman.

"Three men had come that year representing the exhibitors of my state and of the capitol of my state. They were Sidney Cohen, Charles O'Reilly and Samuel Berman, and no delegation and no representatives ever came to an official body with cleaner hands or a better brief. They had a simple story and they told it truthfully.

"Let me say that it has not been the custom of the legislature of my state to stop in their serious deliberations to give consideration to theatrical people. They all like the theatre; they all enjoy it. But it is a medium of amusement, something to enjoy, but not to be taken seriously.

"That is how they feel about it. But the men got attention and all the opposition to their efforts to open motion picture houses on Sunday came first from the so-called goody-goody and reform societies and most of the churches throughout the state. No small political influence.

The theatre men got a hearing, but that was not so important. The big thing to them, what gives them an enviable position in our community, is that when they had received their first recognition and the picture houses were open throughout the state, they stuck to their promises.

Against Censorship.

"When a fellow gets what he is looking for you seldom hear from him again. It is only when he does not get it that he comes back. There never was a more grateful organization. They accepted the responsibility put upon them so that when they returned the following year they were welcome.

"I do not like censorship. I do not think it is practical. I do not think it is feasible. I do not think it is workable. It remains for the exhibitors alone to stop it. In my city, if a picture were wrong, what happens in the absence of censorship? The exhibitor loses his license, but the manufacturer does not suffer. He goes on and sells it elsewhere. But the exhibitor who took the chance, and predicated upon a contract wherein he agreed to take a certain number of pictures, had to show them or go out of business.

"He receives the villification and the criticism, and he takes the chances of losing his business, while the man in the street believes that the screen belongs to the manufacturer. I don't think so any more. I did once.

"Scientific Legislation."

"When those three cavaliers came to Albany, they wrote the most scientific piece of legislation that the oldest timer had ever read. The bill compelled the segregation of deposits—some form of deposit is used in every business on the face of the earth—yet so skilfully that it did not strike any other industry. And while it even seemed unconstitutional to some of us, confidence was so strongly reposed in the representatives of your organization that we did not hesitate.

"We knew that they would fulfill the obligation that had been placed upon them and the state was willing to do whatever it could to help them in their industry. It only exacted one promise, that they be honest with the state, and in so doing make themselves public servitors and great citizens of one of the greatest states in the union.

"Remember the Little Fellow."

"May I just say this to those of you who represent the big cities in your forward

Meighan Rescues Pretty Ones at Cleveland "Fire"

A SPECTACULAR publicity stunt pulled off during the convention in Cleveland—and probably the one that caused the greatest discussion—was staged by Famous Players-Lasky with Thomas Meighan, star in Paramount Pictures.

It was announced that from all the good looking young women in Cleveland, Meighan would pick out the ten prettiest at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, in the Public Square, on Tuesday morning.

The result was that 10,000 people stormed the monument at 10 o'clock when the Paramount star appeared. The girls were selected to appear with the star in a special convention picture, and in the making of the picture the entire department of the city was called out in the middle of the afternoon for an imaginary fire in the heart of the downtown district. A crowd of fully 20,000 people gathered at the scene of the fire and watched Meighan rescue the girls from a burning building.

march in the industry. Do not forget the fellow back in the woods, the fellow with the little 300-seat theatre. He is just as much a part of the show as any Broadway house, and he gets an undesirable censorship that Broadway could not stand, so in your mad rush do not trample on the little fellow.

"I am absolutely fond of your business because you have made good and are going to do more good. That is my wish today in coming here to felicitate you on behalf of the legislature of New York. I thank you."

Following loud continued applause, a resolution proposed by Joseph Hopp of Chicago was passed by the convention, thanking Senator Walker for the work which he has performed for the industry and for the speech which had so stirred the convention. Votes of thanks were also delivered by Ben Sawyer and others. Although invited to remain on the platform for the remainder of the meeting, Senator Walker was unable to continue longer and left, escorted by a committee of three.

Committee Reports.

A desire to get down to business having been expressed by several members, the chairman called on reports from committees.

A telegram to Governor Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts, commending him on his veto of the radical censorship bill, was read and approved by the convention.

The committee on rules and resolutions made the following report: that the name of the new exhibitors' organization which had come into being during the previous day's sessions be the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, approved by the convention.

That the exhibitors renew their pledge of co-operation with the government in the work of education. Referred to the screen committee.

That all members should agitate in their legislatures for a deposit law similar to that recently passed in New York State. Referred to the committee on laws and legislation.

That a communication be sent to the attorney general informing him that the unauthorized and self-delegated power of arbitration in industrial disputes manifested by organizations generally known as F. I. L. M. clubs constitutes a case of presumed jurisdiction. Referred to the committee on laws and legislation.

Disapprove Percentage Booking.

That producers be enjoined from promising to certain interests the backing of the screens of exhibitors. Referred to the screen committee.

That percentage booking is entirely against the interests of the exhibitor. Approved by the convention.

That a resolution of appreciation be tendered to the various trade publications for their support of the exhibitors and that they be urged to become entirely independent, either of advertising or any other interests.

A message congratulating Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York for his approval of a bill permitting children to attend motion pictures with the consent of their parents was read and approved by the convention.

Marcus Loew then came to the platform and gave the first speech by a picture man heard that afternoon.

Marcus Loew's Speech

"Mr. Chairman and fellow exhibitors," said Mr. Loew, "really I am overcome. I wanted to avoid this appearance, but I wanted to speak on this resolution. (Cries of "louder"). I will speak louder when I get my breath. I think that this is an opportune time to express to you just exactly what I feel. The resolution could not have been drawn any better to my liking had I drawn it myself for my own particular interests.

"Ever since I became interested in this industry I have always favored the independent producer. I want to say to you gentlemen as I said to you last summer, when I had no producing interests and could not speak a great deal more freely than I can now because I don't want to say anything that could be misinterpreted.

"This time, no mater what I say to you, no matter what you think of me, no matter how little or how much, don't let that influence you to buy films with which I am interested. On this independent project from the time I was able I have always favored the independent man. I have always favored the independent producer. I went further than that encouragement by lending money when it looked as if the jig was up.

Clique Control Impossible.

"I did this not from philanthropic but from selfish motives. I wanted producers —the more the merrier—because without the producers we might as well take the key and lock up the theatres. I want to say to you gentlemen that the most serious thing that could happen in this industry would be to have but a handful of producers. If such a thing were possible, if I could control the producing business myself, I would be sorry if I lived to see such a day.

"No single individuals or clique or Wall street money, as the phrase is, can control this industry. I want to talk on this Wall street money question, if you will pardon me if I get away from the question.

"Did you ever stop to consider what Wall street money means? The fact of this matter is it is your friends' money. Wall street could not put over any project if your friends did not believe in you.

"Wall street is interested only when it thinks your proposition is properly financed. Did you ever stop to think how many producers you would have today if you didn't have that Wall street money?

Review's Industry's History.

"You began with the World, you followed with Triangle, then came Famous Players, then Goldwyn. I believe Fox came first. It was not Wall street directly, the public service commission of New Jersey. Then came ourselves. I became interested through a group of independent theatre owners. I tried through some friends I had that were brokers to finance these people that were working on it, and that is how I got into it.

"They wanted me to be the head of it but I refused. For eight months I told them no, that I had all the theatres I wanted, that all I sought to do was to make enough money and do what I could to personally uplift the industry so we would not be ashamed to be in it. Finally they told me they would consider it a mark of respect to the industry if I became the head, and when they told me that I, like any other human being, felt flattered and then I fell.

Must Encourage Production.

"I want to say that the most serious mistake you can make is to ignore the independent producer. You must have production; you must encourage it. Producing takes money. Nobody knows that better than I do now. (Laughter.) I am going to tell you a secret. Since the time to which I have just referred, they have got $5,000,000 of my money and the budget calls for $4,000,000 more.

"Now I should not have gone into producing if the independent producer had been stronger. Unfortunately I have got too many big theatres where I could not afford to take chances. That is what forced me into producing. To be frank with you, I was pretty much worried. I was building and had quite a few theatres. When you figured it up, it ran into the millions. To think that some time I might be told 'We'll give you $60,000,000 for your theatres, but we can't give you any film' was enough to give me concern.

What Frightened Him.

"What really frightened me was when one of the big producers came into my office and said: 'It looks like next year we won't sell any film unless on the percentage basis.' When I heard that I said I would get out of the business. After that I called Dick Rowland of Metro, a man I knew, and asked him to go to luncheon with me. The result was a tentative agreement with him. I called him up because he was important. I had done independent business with him and that was the kind of combination I wanted to make.

"I didn't want to take any chances. I had to go into that combination. If it had not been for that bugaboo of percentage I would not have gone into it. I don't mind telling you now that is the thing that should scare you, or in about five years from now you will be the jaintor of your theatre. (Applause.)

Discusses Deposit System.

"In talking on this independent producer proposition, don't think I am talking about myself, for I am not. I am talking about the man who is struggling to give you film. The independent producer is in a position similar to the independent exhibitor. So far as being in the producing business is concerned, I had rather be out of it. So far as producing is concerned, all I want is to be protected for my needs."

Mr. Loew took up the deposit question and told how when one producer started he was advancing to him as much as $100,000 at a time. He declared that he was not seeking to change the opinion of any exhibitor.

"I only want to urge caution," he declared. "It is true to say the producers need a lot of money, but you would be surprised how little the big producers need deposits. But the independent producers need them. If they cannot get them they cannot possibly get enough money to conduct their business.

Large Production Necessary.

"You take the big directors starting in on their own. Supposing you leave them in the lurch, supposing something bent and all these independent producers were driven out and the only possible supply would be from the Famous Players, Metro and Goldwyn, how would you like it if these were the only three who were making films? You haven't the slightest idea what the calamity would be.

"Now as I said at the outset, this is simply my opinion. Don't let it swerve you a bit. I have attended three or four conventions, not because I was interested in organization, but because I was interested in exhibiting. At your first convention somebody jumped up every two seconds on a question of parliamentary law. That may be all very fine, but I know a lot of good business men that don't know the first thing about parliamentary law. (Applause.)

Lauds Secretary Lane.

"There is not any organization that can get along unless you have confidence in the man at the head of it. The only way you can succeed is to give your confidence to your officers. Now you had a wonderful man in here to-day, Secretary Lane. I haven't the slightest doubt that he is one of the most brilliant men in this country. I haven't the slightest doubt that if you asked him to be the head of your organization at a fair compensation, you might land him, and if you did you would do something to be proud of.

Industry Triumphs When Gov. Coolidge Vetoes Massachusetts Censorship Bill

Chief Executive Bases Act on Opinion of Attorney General That Measure Is Unconstitutional Because It Would Regulate Interstate Commerce— House of Representatives Concurs by Vote of 202 to 14

MOVING picture censorship in Massachusetts is dead. Opponents of the bill calling for censorship scored a smashing victory when Governor Calvin Coolidge on Friday, June 4, vetoed the measure, which had passed both branches of the legislature.

Governor Coolidge based his veto on an opinion from Attorney General J. Weston Allen. The attorney general said one section of the censorship bill was unconstitutional because it "is an attempt directly to regulate interstate commerce." Another section he found loosely drawn and capable of more than one interpretation.

"Unconstitutional legislation," said Governor Coolidge, "would be entirely useless and would not avail."

A short, sharp debate began in the House of Representatives when the veto message and the attorney general's opinion was read. Explaining for the Mercantile Affairs Committee which drew the final draft of the bill, Representative Keniston, of Boston, said the committee had been informally informed by the attorney general's office that the bill was constitutional.

Mellen Attacks Attorney General.

Speaker Warner, by use of his gavel, was called upon to check a sensational attack on the attorney general by Representative Mellen, who charged the attorney general as being one who would "render any opinion which was desired of him." The upshot of the House proceedings was that by the overwhelming majority of 202 to 14 the House sustained the governor's veto. Action by the Senate being unnecessary, the bill was dead and opponents of censorship had won a long and hard fought legislative battle.

Governor Coolidge's veto message follows: "A bill entitled 'An Act Relative to the Approval and Public Exhibition of Motion Picture Films', being House Bill No. 1540, is herewith returned without approval. Hereto attached is the opinion of the Attorney General that the second section, which is the important section of the bill, is unconstitutional, and that section four, which undertakes to provide for a court review, is not in a form which expressly preserves the constitutional rights of trial by jury, although it is possible that it might be interpreted to give that right.

"The entire purpose of the bill would fail with the failure of section two, and the entire bill would fail if the court should determine that the right of trial by jury is not provided for according to the Constitution. There is no need to point out that unconstitutional legislation would be entirely useless, would bring about expense to the Commonwealth which would be without avail and would cause the appointment of persons and the installing of machinery, all of which would be a total loss to the Commonwealth."

Text of Opinion.

Attorney General Allen, whose opinion on the bill was requested by the governor, said in his letter to the governor: "Your Excellency has requested my opinion upon the constitutionality of House Bill No. 1540, entitled 'An act relative to the approval and public exhibition of motion picture films.' Section 2 of said bill provides: 'On and after January 1, 1921, it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, lease, loan or use for public exhibition or commercial purposes any motion picture film unless the said film has been submitted to and approved by the commissioner.

"The language of this section is not limited to the inspection and approval of motion picture films to be used for public exhibition within the Commonwealth, and, in this respect, it goes farther than the motion picture censorship laws which were upheld in Mutual Film Co. v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 215 Fed. 138, affirmed 236 U. S. 230, and Mutual Film Corp. v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 248. It is my opinion that this section is so broad that it would apply to a sale, lease or loan in this Commonwealth of a motion picture film made in this state and on its way into another state, and would also apply to a film in the original package in which it might be shipped into this state from another state or from a foreign country.

Finds Section Four Weak.

"If so, it is to that extent in conflict with that clause of section 8 of Article 1 of the Constitution of the United States which confer on Congress power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes.' Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419; Letsy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1. I am, therefore, of opinion that said section 2 is an attempt directly to regulate interstate commerce, and is, accordingly, unconstitutional.

"I would also call your attention to section 4, which provides for an appeal to the superior court sitting in equity. While I feel that there is a strong probability that the constitutional requirement that one shall have a right to trial by jury where the value in controversy exceeds $20 is complied with, in that the remedy in equity is not necessarily exclusive, nevertheless, in my judgment, it would have been advisable to add to the section some provision stating that it should not be construed to deprive any person of the right to pursue any other lawful remedy. If this section is constitutional it would be so because of an interpretation of its meaning made by a court rather than by the clear wording of the section itself. In its present form the question of its constitutionality might be raised."

Claims Favorable Informal Opinion.

Seldom, if ever, has a governor's repudiation of a question of such wide importance been approved with such a unanimity of feeling in either branch of the Massachusetts legislature as the sustaining vote in the House of Representatives. As is evident from the figures, Republican and Democratic members alike supported the governor's attitude to make the vote 202 to 14.

The House was speeding up on the next to the last day of the session when the veto message and the attorney general's opinion arrived. Representative Young, of Weston, asked that the opinion be read. Clerk Kimball then read it at the direction of Speaker Warner.

Representative Keniston, of Boston, arose to explain the position of his mercantile affairs committee. He said the bill had been submitted informally to the attorney general's department. The committee, he said, was told that there was nothing unconstitutional in the bill. "But I recognize that counts for nothing now," he added.

Calls Attorney General a "Tool."

Representative Mellen then began his attack on the attorney general. Mellen said there are plenty of men in the Senate and House who are as competent to determine the constitutionality as the attorney general.

"Much pressure," he added, "has been brought to bear upon this matter and it is to be presumed that the attorney general has been found an efficient tool to support a desired opinion."

By pounding the gavel, Speaker Warner checked any further utterances. Representative Mellen said he did not refer to the governor but to the attorney general who "would render any opinion which was desired of him." Speaker Warner directed Mr. Mellen to take his seat.

The Boston member arose again at once and said that he desired to debate the veto. Speaker Warner said he must not reflect on any state official. Mr. Mellen said he had no intention of reflecting upon the governor and if any one thought his words bore that construction he apologized. Then he went on to uphold the action of the legislature in passing the bill.

Minister Asks Support of Governor.

Representative Winn, of Worcester, moved the previous question. The Rev. Roland D. Sawyer, representative from Ware, said he hoped the House would sustain the governor as the principle of pre-publicity censorship was abhorrent to any American, particularly at a time when

Boston Post Tells Trade to "Clean Up the Films"

THE industry's victory over proponents of the bill was generally commented on in the Boston newspapers. The Evening Record and Evening American rejoiced at the governor's veto, while the Transcript was non-commital.

Under the editorial caption, "Clean Up the Films," the Post urged "movie picture people to reform their films of their own motion, and not wait until another legislature passes another censor bill which will stand the test of constitutionality."

"That a considerable proportion of the films need revision in the interest of public morality, and especially for the protection of young people of both sexes, is apparent to any careful observer," charged the editorial writer.

so much impressive legislation had been imposed on the people.

Representative Monk, of Watertown, resented the attack on the attorney general by Representative Mellen. A member, he said, might impeach the knowledge of the attorney general, but no one can impeach his character. His written opinions, Mr. Monk went on, show that the attorney general's opinion was based on the laws of the state and of the United States.

"It would violate the principle of real democracy to allow any one man or group of men to decide what the 4,000,000 people of the state may or may not see," put in Representative Sawyer, of Ware. Representative Thomas, of Gloucester, thought it humiliating to all the legislature to have this development at this final stage of the game.

Full Confidence in Both Officials.

"With all the lawyers here it is rather amazing that the unconstitutionality of this bill now so evident to us all when it is pointed out by the governor, did not strike us sooner," said Mr. Thomas. "I have full confidence in the governor whom I love personally and whom I regard as the best we have ever had and will, of course, vote to sustain his veto of the bill. I also have confidence in the opinion of the attorney general."

Representative McDonnell, of Boston, Democratic floor leader, announcing that he would vote to sustain the Governor's veto, said the time spent in consideration of the bill had not been wasted if some of the motion picture interests "sense the situation accurately" and start to "put their house in order."

On the roll call on the passage of the bill over the Governor's veto there were 14 yeas and 202 nays. The yeas were Representative Gilman of Boston, Hamburger of Boston, Keniston of Boston, Kingman of Walpole, Lane of Boston, Larson of Everett, Mellen of Boston, Niland of East Boston, Penshorn of Boston, Rice of Newton, Tirrell of Weymouth, Brown of Brockton, Beardsley of Boston and Lombard of Everett.

Newspaper Comment.

The censorship bill that passed both branches of the Legislature and was vetoed by the Governor was the outgrowth of two censorship bills filed early in the session. The final draft provided for censorship by the State Department of Public Safety, for a censor board within the department and for a preview of all films intended for commercial use.

Boston newspapers, especially the Boston Evening Record and Evening American, which waged a tireless, vigorous fight against the censorship bill, were elated over the victory. Said the American editorially: "The Governor's veto entitles him to the appreciation and gratitude of everybody who believes in free speech and a free press, and who believes that all men should have their day in court and a fair trial. Good for Governor Coolidge!"

The Evening Record editorial said: "Governor Coolidge has again demonstrated his grasp of government and law by his veto of the motion picture censorship bill. His veto rests upon points of law. The bill was bad legislation, futile, ill considered and unconstitutional. Discussion of the bill before the Legislature often wandered far from the point. There was much said in criticism of motion pictures and in their defense. Yet the issue was far larger than this, for establishment of a censorship would be a departure from our system of democratic government and an invitation to evil."

The Transcript remarked: "His veto of the bill to provide censorship for moving pictures ended a long controversy, but did not discuss the general proposition of the wisdom of censorship being based on the opinion of the Attorney General that the bill as passed was unconstitutional."

Under the editorial caption "Clean Up the Films" the Boston Post, with the largest morning newspaper circulation in the country, said: "Now that the Governor has vetoed the movie censor bill and the veto has been sanctioned by the House, it is up to the movie picture people to reform their films of their own motion, and not wait until another legislature passes another censor bill which will stand the test of constitutionality.

"That a considerable proportion of the films need revision in the interest of public morality, and especially for the protection of young people of both sexes, is apparent to any careful observer. The influence of the screen for good or ill is so patent that no community can afford to permit the continued protection of demoralizing films. The well-being of the coming generation is the paramount consideration, and any vehicle of publicity, be it the moving picture, the legitimate stage or the newspaper, that fails to keep itself clean and decent will sooner or later be forced to do so by statute. And this is as should be."

New Famous Players and Spirit of "The Boys" Praised by "Vic" Smith

COMING to his new position just prior to the opening of the new studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Long Island City, Arthur V. Smith, recently appointed general manager of eastern studios, will devote his time and attention first to the plans for the equipment of the Long Island studio and laboratory. After carefully going over the work that has been done and is to be done, Mr. Smith said that he could make no criticism nor could he find a single fault in the plan or construction of the building.

"The layout is splendid in every way and shows quality in every angle considered," said Mr. Smith. "The lights and machinery will be placed in readiness by the time the electrical equipment is complete and there is no doubt that we will be working with six or seven companies between July 15 and August 1. There is sufficient space there for twenty companies, if necessary. Altogether I consider the studio the last word in perfection for the production of motion pictures.

Busy on Three in New York.

"At the present time we are producing three pictures at the Fifty-sixth and Forty-fourth street studios. George Fitzmaurice is at work on 'Idols of Clay' with Mae Murray and David Powell. Harley Knoles is working on Dorothy Dalton's next picture, 'A Winter City Favorite,' and Edward Dillon has begun 'The Frisky Mrs. Johnson' with Miss Burke. Charles Maigne will commence shortly with Thomas Meighan in 'The Frontier of the Stars." John S. Robertson has been loaned to Realart and is at this time completing 'A Dark Lantern' at the Essenay studios in Chicago with Miss Brady."

Considering the personnel of the studio Mr. Smith said: "I certainly have been handed an efficient and well organized staff. Mr. Naulty deserves the utmost credit in his selection of men in which to place the responsibility of his various departments. My policy will be unlike the usual one of a newcomer putting in his own staff, but, better than that, I shall adjust myself to the conditions existing, for they could not be better, and in that way I feel that I will obtain the confidence of all.

"The Boys" Co-operate.

"I particularly like the way the boys talk about their work. They come to me with the spirit and attitude of co-operation and instead of 'I did this' and 'I did that' they use 'we' and that means a lot. Considering each department, the art and decoration, purchasing, still, casting, wardrobe, electrical, accounting and carpenter shop, all are in charge of the best men obtainable."

Arthur V. Smith, better known as "Vic" Smith, is a brother of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph.

Keep Politics Off Screen, Urges Brady; Plan Great Battle Against Censorship

Retiring Head of National Association Pleads in Annual Meeting Against Giving Over Films to Politicians and "Free" Advertising—Committee Will Carry Fight Against Censorship to Legislatures in 1921

KEEP politics off the screen," declared William A. Brady, retiring president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at the annual meeting of that body on June 8 at the headquarters of the Old Colony Club in the Hotel Cleveland, Cleveland.

"There are many persons who realize the power of the screen, who will be trying to use it for political purposes," he continued, "but it should be made emphatic that the screen of this country is not in politics. Neither should a man be asked to pay his money to go to the theatre and then be forced to sit through the presentation of a lot of advertising pictures."

Mr. Brady has announced he will not be a candidate for re-election.

Films for Young People.

Matters of importance not alone to the motion picture industry, but also to the motion picture patrons were discussed at the meeting, which was attended by many of the most prominent film men of the country. One resolution pledged the association to the program of the production, distribution and exhibition of selected pictures for young people.

An amendment to every state constitution so as to guarantee the motion picture screen the same freedom now guaranteed the press and spoken word by those same constitutions was a recommendation made by the censorship committee in its annual report.

"While no state in 1920 has written upon its statute books a censorship law," the censorship committee reported, "and while no censorship law has been enacted since our national association has been organized, censorship continues to be the overshadowing menace to our industry.

Well Intentioned But Deluded.

"Well intentioned men and women, firm in their belief they are doing a public service, but as destructive as their prototypes of the earlier days who burned the Bible and destroyed the first printing press, are advocating censorship, virtually asking that civilization take a backward step, and that the motion picture, a medium for thought expression, be censored prior to exhibition to enforce their varied opinions of moral standards.

"The intolerance of these men and women and the danger of their prapaganda is illustrated in the attack recently made by a religious denomination in convention assembled. The same delegates who advocated a censorship of the motion picture attacked the Associated Press, that great international, unbiased medium for the collection and dissemination of news, urging a censorship of the press as well as of the motion picture. Such bigotry would undo the great work of John Milton and would prevent that free expression of thought, if any people are to retain their freedom.

To Take Offensive Action.

"Heretofore the censorship committee has made its fight for the freedom of the screen on the defensive, by opposing the censorship bills introduced in the several legislatures. The time has come to make a change. The first is for a great principle, and the fight for a principle should be an offensive and not a defensive one. We recommend there be submitted to each of the legislatures in session in 1921 a proposed amendment to the constitutions of the several states to guarantee the screen the same freedom now guaranteed the press and the spoken word in every constitution.

"In making this fight for the great principle of freedom of expression of ideas, we can demand and receive the support of men and women who will not otherwise interest themselves in opposing particular consorship legislation.

Do Not Seek License.

"In demanding freedom for the screen we do not ask for license. If an indecent or immoral picture is produced or exhibited we ask, and should demand, that the producer and exhibitor be punished, and the punishment be so severe that it will act as a deterrent to others who would degrade the screen.

"The principle of classifying the motion picture film with books, magazines and the printed word, which we seek to have recognized in the several states by constitutional amendment, has already been recognized by the federal government. The bill introduced by Congressman Joseph Walsh of Massachusetts, at the request of the censorship committee of this association, which passed both houses of Congress without a dissenting vote and has been signed by President Wilson, amends the penal code by adding indecent and immoral motion picture films to the indecent and immoral books, magazines and photographs, the transportation of which in the main or in interstate commerce is prohibited."

The report of Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott showed that three times during last year the vigilance and activity of the national association had prevented the closing of the motion picture theatres of the country. He also recommended an affiliation of the national association with similar film organizations of European countries, and a committee was appointed by President Brady to see if such an affiliation could be brought about.

Reports were received from the Sunday opening, the transportation and the film theft committees on their activities. It was stated by the Sunday opening committee that more theatres are open now on Sunday than ever before. The film theft committee reported that many dealers in stolen films have been driven out of business.

Committees Appointed.

President Brady appointed as a committee to confer with a similar committee of the exhibitors, if the occasion should arise, the following: Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldwyn, W. R. Rothacker, Fred J. Beecroft, Martin J. Quigley, Charles C. Pettijohn and Harry M. Berman.

Directors of the national association for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

Producers' Division—Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; J. Stuart Blackton, J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc.; William A. Brady, William A. Brady Picture Plays, Inc.; Paul Brunet, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; William Fox, Fox Film Corporation; Samuel Goldwyn, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; D. W. Griffith, D. W. Griffith Enterprises; Carl Laemmle, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Richard A. Rowland, Metro Pictures Corporation; Joseph M. Schenck, Norma Talmadge Pictures Corporation; Myron Selznick, Select Pictures Corporation; Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph Company of America.

Elect Officers in September.

Distributors' Division—Percy L. Waters, Triangle Distributing Corporation; W. E. Atkinson, Metro Pictures Corporation; B. N. Busch, Republic Distributing Corporation; R. H. Cochrane, Universal Film Manufacturing Corporation; Gabriel L. Hess, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Lewis Innerarity, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Walter W. Irwin; Charles C. Pettijohn, Select Pictures Corporation; William Wright, Vitagraph, Inc.; W. R. Sheehan, Fox Film Corporation; J. D. Williams, First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Supply and Equipment List.

Supply and Equipment Division—J. E. Brulator, Eastman Films; Harry H. Allen, Wyanoak Publishing Company; Willard B. Cook, Pathescope Company of America; Joseph F. Coufal, Standard Slide Company; Walter J. Moore, H. C. Miner Lithographing Company; B. F. Porter; E. M. Porter, Precision Machine Company; Will C. Smith, Nicholas Power Company; L. P. Weber, Acme Lithographing Company.

General Division—John C. Flinn, George Blaisdell, Fred J. Beecroft, Paul H. Cromelin, Paul Gulick, Lesley Mason, James R. Quirk, Fred Rothenberg, Thomas G. Wiley.

The directors will hold a meeting in New York in September for the election of officers and in the interim the old officers will hold over.

Want States to Guarantee Films Freedom of Press

THE campaign to convince the people of the nation that censorship of the screen is as radical and mistaken an idea as was the destruction of the printing press in days gone by, will be officially inaugurated when the different state legislatures convene in 1921.

It will be an offensive, not a defensive, campaign that will be waged. To each legislature will be submitted a suggested amendment to the state constitutions, guaranteeing the screen the same freedom now guaranteed the press and the spoken word in many constitutions. The intent is to have films classified along with books, magazines and the printed word.

An amendment to the penal code recently passed unanimously by both houses of Congress prohibits the transportation in the mails or in interstate commerce of indecent or immoral films, removing the necessity for any censorship of motion pictures.

Japanese Film Men Come to America for Studio Supplies

EDWARD K. TANAKA, supervising director and counsellor of the Shochiku Kinema Corporation of Tokio, Japan, and H. K. Kotani, director of the photographic department of the same corporation, who for six years was with the Paramount Artcraft Pictures Company and also with Thomas Ince and Griffith as a technical director, are in New York stopping at the Hotel Astor. Mr. Kotani has had ten years' experience in this country and will be invaluable to the work projected by the Shochiku Kinema Corporation in its new studios soon to be established in Tokio.

Mr. Tanaka is in this country to purchase equipment for the new plant. He is also controller of most of the larger theatres throughout Japan. His company is about to start on an extensive scale to make pictures by Japanese players, of whom he has four thousand in his employ.

In an interview with Mr. Tanaka, he said: "The motion picture business in Japan is beginning to take on proportions that surpass all expectations. At the present time the pictures mostly shown are of American origin, but the Japanese want their own pictures, too. Nothing but the legitimate drama has, up to the present, been popular in Japan, but the demand for moving pictures had compelled us to take the matter seriously and open studios.

"The Shochicu company is one of the largest in Japan, but has not previously gone outside the drama. We are not only planning for local consumption but will present our productions to the western world as well."

With Messrs. Kotani and Tanaka is C. Tamaki, treasurer of the company. They will sail for Japan, by way of San Francisco, on July 2.

Charles Sarver, producer of "The Gibson Upright" for the Outlook Photoplays, Inc., has just completed the editing of the production and it will soon be ready for release. The principals in the picture are Catherine Calvert and Herbert Rawlinson.

Allens Invade London; to Build Two Big Picture Houses Involving Millions

CULMINATING plans which were originally formulated shortly after the return of J. J. Allen, of the firm of Jule and Jay J. Allen, with headquarters in Toronto, from London, last Fall, comes an announcement that this concern has consummated a deal which includes the purchase of one of the most costly parcels of business property in London and the erection, on this site, of two big motion picture theatres. The transaction, according to the Allens, involves a total expenditure exceeding $4,000,000, half of which amount is property cost, and calls for the razing of two of the most historic buildings in the British Metropolis, the far-famed Empire Theatre and Queen's Hotel in Leicester Square.

Starting in a small way in Brantford, Ont., fourteen years ago, Bernard Allen, together with his sons, Jule and Jay, formed the nucleus of what is now a powerful theatrical organization. At that time—the days of the "store room" picture show—the Allens opened what was known as the Theatorium, a cinema house of no small pretentions for those pioneering days.

Through sheer perseverance and natural ability, the brothers progressed until today they own or control over fifty theatres in Canada, representing an investment exceeding $20,000,000, and have under construction big picture theatres in the leading cities of the United States, including a theatre in Cleveland and another in Detroit, both of which houses are well under way.

Plans Now Advancing.

C. Howard Crane, in charge of the architectural department of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, is leaving for London immediately, where he will consult with the builders and submit sketches for approval, after which plans will be started at once. It was originally intended to construct one large theatre on the London site, but on account of the tendency of the picture business toward super attractions and long runs it was deemed advisable to meet this condition and erect two houses on the property just purchased.

The smaller of the two theatres will be similar to the Allen Winnipeg Theatre. Present plans call for a house to seat 4,000 persons, and the second one to have a capacity of about 2,000. The smaller theatre will be given over to super film productions, which will enjoy long runs from one to six months, while the larger house will feature high class program, which will be changed weekly. Fifty piece orchestras and elaborate stage settings will be employed in the two theatres.

The fronts of both theatres will be constructed of glazed cotta and will be most ornate. There will be a double ornamental marquee extending to the curb running the entire length of the houses. The floors and walls of the lobbies will be of white and green marble, and a large foyer will also assure ample protection for crowds awaiting to purchase tickets against inclement weather.

Innovations to be Introduced.

An unusual feature of the present plans for the two houses are the plans calling for an immense tea and soda grille. The tea room will be located in the basement, with entrances from the theatre foyers, and will be readily accessible either from within the houses or from the street. The soda grille will be situated on the main floor near the theatre entrances and will accommodate 1,500 patrons. Flanking the entrances to both theatres will be individual shops, while the front of the building will be given over to offices.

When one enters either theatre, they will be confronted with a scene of luxury and quiet splendor. Scattered throughout the lobbies, foyers and promenades will be luxuriously upholstered divans and settees and the walls will be adorned with the paintings of masters.

Concealed lighting systems will be employed in both houses, and electrical engineers are now at work planning a new illumination project, which will make it possible for a patron to read the program in the theatre while the pictrue is being projected. This will do away with the inconvenience of groping for seats and the attending difficulties of a poorly lighted theatre.

When the system is installed the auditoriums of the new London houses will be completely filled with a softly subdued light that is restful to the eye. Although subdued the illumination will be of sufficient nature to insure reading without eye strain.

Other innovations in the contemplated theatres include the most modern ventilating and heating system, plate glass inclosed projection rooms equipped with a battery of six machines each and retiring or rest apartments. Then there will be lengthy promenades where patrons may stroll between rows of palms and hothouse plants during intermissions. Dozens of other features new to theatre-goers have been incorporated in the plans. The new theatres will feature British made pictures.

Kleine Revives Flagg Comedies

George Kleine some time ago persuaded to well known illustrator, James Montgomery Flagg, to make a series of motion pictures under the title "Girls You Know." The series was popular with exhibitors and the public and as there is a call for their reissue or revival, Photo Products Export Company, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, has undertaken the selling agency. There are twelve of these one reel comedies based on Flagg's familiar drawings and idealizing his types.

Grauman Has "Lovers' Week" for Wanda Hawley's Premier

WANDA HAWLEY'S debut as a Realart star in "Miss Hobbs" at Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles has been hailed as one of the big events of the season by the critics of the local newspapers.

Sid Grauman made a special event of the American premier of the new star by designating the week of showing as "Lovers' Week" and conducting an unusually heavy billboard and newspaper advertising campaign. In his advertising he described Miss Hawley as "conceded to be the most beautiful girl of the screen" and the play as "the story of a great, big, wonderful love."

The showing at Grauman's was a prerelease booking and the reviews by the Los Angeles critics consequently give an accurate line on the manner in which Realart has kept faith with exhibitors in making a worthy production for the new star. Every critic in the city greeted the picture with praise and appreciation.

Transfers Eastern Activities

The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation has transferred its eastern producing activities from the Paragon Studio, Fort Lee, to the Biograph Studio, 177th street, New York, where space has been leased for the making of R. A. Walsh's second independent production to be presented by Mayflower through First National. Mr. Walsh will occupy the main stage at the Biograph plant and has already taken possession of his new quarters.

"The Burden Rests on You to Prove That Woman Is Really a Riddle."

H. M. Thomas Leaves Omaha Position to Direct Famous Players Canadian Chain

H. M. THOMAS, who in the last six years has won for himself a reputation as an exhibitor while managing the Strand and the Rialto theatres in Omaha, has accepted the position of director of theatres for the Famous Players-Lasky Canadian Corporation, Ltd., and will be the directing manager of about forty theatres located in the leading cities of Canada. Mr. Thomas has resigned as manager of the Rialto in Omaha, effective August 1. He will go to California for a month, then to Canada to take up his new duties.

A. H. Blank, owner of the Rialto Theatre, asked Mr. Thomas to name his own successor. Charles Branham, former manager of the Majestic Theatre in Detroit, the Strand of Minneapolis and a former newspaper man, has accepted the managership of the Rialto.

Mr. Thomas will make his headquarters in Toronto. One of his first activities will be to open eight new houses, which will be opened early in the fall season.

Fourteen Years an Exhibitor.

For fourteen years Mr. Thomas has been an exhibitor. He came to Omaha from Kansas City six years ago to manage the Strand. As the American legitimate theatre this house had proved a sad failure, because it was off location. When it was opened as a picture house under the direction of Mr. Thomas there was no other house in Omaha like it. It was large, beautifully decorated and boasted an orchestra.

The city sat up and took notice. The Strand was different from the other houses, which were still in the 5-cents-straight class, with electric pianos, poor projection, cramped quarters and the other disadvantages of a few years ago. The Strand was a success from the start.

Mr. Thomas waged a "Do You Believe in Me?" campaign through the billboards and newspapers to convince the people that when he said a picture was good it was going to be good. He established a reputation at the Strand and when the Rialto was opened two years ago he became the manager there. Since the Rialto was opened it has steadily averaged a business of $10,000 a week.

Active in Civic Affairs.

Mr. Thomas has taken an active interest in civic affairs. He was the first exhibitor in Omaha to speak before the Women's Club and similar bodies. He headed the Nebraska Exhibitors' Association when it was organized. He has strongly advocated fighting censorship by showing clean pictures. His ability to write advertisements with punch in them is little short of marvelous, and his abundant use of newspaper space in Omaha has startled many exhibitors from other cities.

Within five minutes after newspapers appeared on the streets of Omaha the other day saying Mr. Thomas was going to leave he was called upon by an Irish policeman and a Methodist preacher, both of them declaring they were sorry to see him leaving. His ability to meet all kinds of people on their own grounds has won for Mr. Thomas hundreds of friends of every walk in life in Omaha, and the expressions of regret at his leaving have been numerous.

East Meets West and West Is Best When Metro Men Dash Madly Around Bases

WEST was best, to paraphrase Kipling, when Metro exchange men mingled in what began as a ballgame but degenerated into a track meet at the outing held last Thursday in connection with the annual convention of Metro district and branch managers. The melee was staged at Glenwood-on-the-Sound, on the picnic grounds of Saratsonyi's Hotel, and the western team won by a score of 20 to 6 after four and a half innings of frenzied play.

T. J. Connors, manager of Metro's New York exchange, captained the eastern forces, while B. F. Rosenberg of Los Angeles led the victorious westerners. The presence in the western line-up of Bert Lytell, Metro star who was a specially invited guest at the outing, may have accounted for the easy win of the men from the "wild and wooly." Bert made two hits, one of them a triple, scored a brace of runs and, playing right field, speared a long fly with the skill of a Tyrus Cobb or an Eddie Roush.

For three innings it resembled a ballgame. The East took the lead and at the end of the third the score was 6 to 4 in favor of Connor's tribe. But in the fourth and the first half of the fifth the westerners scored 16 runs and Umpire Neufeld stopped the game of general "charley horse." Everybody's tongue—or tongues—was hanging out, and as nothing liquid rested on third base there was no incentive to run any more.

Nebraska Exhibitors Like Pathe's Open-Booking System

HARRY D. GRAHAM, Pathe's branch manager from Omaha, asserted that Pathe's system of open booking has met with the highest approval in his territory.

"Big and small exhibitors," says Manager Graham, "appreciate the policy of Pathe in not compelling them to bind themselves to ironclad contracts. Exhibitors also seem to have confidence in our features and short subjects.

"Theatregoers in and around Omaha seem to want a production depicting outdoor life. To this I lay the success which 'Rio Grande' and 'Other Men's Shoes' has enjoyed. The Blanche Sweet Specials have been doing remarkable business, and this star is getting more popular with every production.

"Harold Lloyd is a sensation, with Rolin comedies featuring 'Snub' Pollard running him a close second. Serials are getting more popular with the new series Pathe has been releasing, including 'The Third Eye,' 'Trailed by Three' and 'Daredevil Jack.' George Seitz scored a tremendous success in 'Bound and Gagged.' Exhibitors in our territory swear by newspaper and tradepaper advertising," he stated.

Plunkett Succeeds Eaton

Moe Mark, president of the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation, owners and operators of the Strand theatres in New York, Brooklyn and other cities, announces that the post of managing director of the Strand Theatre, New York, which is to be vacated on June 14 by Jack Eaton, will be filled by Joseph L. Plunkett, who has just returned from London, where he was European representative for an American film corporation. Mr. Plunkett before his departure for Europe was managing director of the Strand Theatre, having replaced Harold Edel, who died in November, 1918.

World's Projection Expert Addresses Showmen on "Optics of Projection"

By F. H. RICHARDSON

THERE are times when one wishes most devoutly one hadn't. In our case this is one of them. Being invited by the Allentown exhibitors to address the Kiwanis, a business organization of that city, on "The Moving Picture" we, feeling real strong and capable, concluded to murder several birds with one stone and wrote the Scranton, Wilkesbarre, Easton and several other locals that we would, if they wished it, visit their various bailiwicks and give them an illustrated lecture on the "Optics of Projection."

And then just when acceptances began to come in we fell off the running board of an automobile, whereupon the doctor presented us with a nice pair of crutches and "predicted" everything from the mumps to sure death if we put our right foot on the ground for at least ten days.

Oh fudge! But rather than renig on our promises we draped ourselves on the crutches, and a Lehigh Valley train grabbed our courage by the neck with both hands and fared forth into Pennsylvania.

Is Met by Union Members.

The Scranton local had not considered our offer as worth even a refusal—no reply at all—so Wilkes-Barre came first. And say we will remember that little city for quite some time. We were to arrive at 1:23 a. m., crippled and pretty well encumbered with a suitcase and a bag containing a stereopticon and some slides.

We got there at 1:30 and there on the platform at that hour of the night were Edward Seaman, secretary L. U. 325 O. A., and Robert Fine and Edward Parsons, two of the members. They had a room reserved and an automobile to take us to it. They will never know how narrow was their escape from being kissed a la French fashion.

And now I have some nice things to say about Wilkes-Barre, but I suppose you will all think its bull because they treated us so well. Can't help that though! The truth is the truth and Wilkes-Barre is, to our way of thinking, one of the prettiest little cities in the country—and we've seen a few, too. Moreover, she is hustling, modern and thoroughly up-to-date.

Discovers Some Wrong Things.

On account of our bunged-up condition we only visited a few of her theatres, which, while they have faults, are in the main well managed and modern. The Savoy, Strand, Alhambra, Bijou Dream, Sterling Hazle and Majestic are owned and operated by the M. E. Commeford Amusement Company, which owns a total of fifty-seven theatres and has its executive offices in Scranton. They have little competition in Wilkes-Barre, but that fact has apparently not operated in any way to make them careless. Their theatres are as well appointed and as snappy in their operation as any I have seen in other cities of the same size.

I did notice, however, that when there is a wrong thing (and a few things were very wrong) it prevailed in pretty well all the houses. For instance in all of them we found little 4 by 6 inch, or thereabouts, observation ports, which are about as wrong and senseless as anything can be. We found in two of them, or was it three, practically all illumination of auditorium to be by means of the objectionable side lights; also there were objectionable exit lights on the front wall.

Now don't run away with the idea that we are "roasting" for we are NOT, but just pointing out objectionable things which tend to injure the results in otherwise really fine theatres.

The Savoy is a dandy house, well managed by Fred W. Herman. Jack Jones is his able assistant. The Savoy picture is well lighted and of proper size.

Side lights and exit lights need attention badly. Edward Parson is chief projectionist and Joe Moser is his assistant. The projection room is practically opposite the screen. The observation ports were very small—bad—and the walls of the projection room were too light in color.

The entire Savoy balcony is given over to loges filled with comfortable wicker arm chairs. The house seats about 1,100, and has a fine front and lobby.

The Bijou Dream is a curiosity. It is a 250-seat storeroom theatre. It puts on a good picture and is making money. We met T. J. Riley, its manager, who is a live wire. Its projection room is, of course, opposite the screen, but the observation ports are absurdly small and it is flooded with light from incandescents which the projectionist keeps burning.

Stanley Company of America,
Philadelphia, Pa.,
June 1, 1920.

Motion Picture World,
516 Fifth Avenue,
New York City.

Gentlemen: Mr. F. H. Richardson of your Projection Department gave us a lecture this morning which was attended by all our managers and as many operators as could be spared, and to say that Brother Richardson told us something worth while would be putting it mildly.

If you can arrange to send Mr. Richardson over here some time in the fall, on a Sunday, we will give him a worth-while reception, and possibly five or six hundred operators and managers would be much benefited by Mr. Richardson's lecture.

Yours very truly,
THE STANLEY COMPANY OF AMERICA,
Frank W. Buhler.

Has Beautiful Arched Ceiling.

The Orpheum is a very fine house, owned by Jacob Theis and managed by A. C. Gramps, with both of whom we had a long talk. The house seats 870, all on one floor. Its auditorium is covered by an arched ceiling—very handsome, but its lighting is bad. We suggested remedies, and these suggestions were well received and will be tried out. We were unequal to the task of examining the projection room.

Wilkes-Barre is a Power's stronghold, there being only two projectors of other manufacture in that city.

While in Wilkes-Barre we called up our old friend S. M. Walkenshaw, general manager of the Lyman H. Howe laboratories, which specialize in high grade printing and toning.

Walkenshaw An Old Timer.

Friend Walkenshaw promptly sent his gasoline battleship to the hotel, conveyed us in state to his sanctum sanctorum in the midst of the aforesaid laboratories and darned near shook our hand off.

Walkenshaw is one of the old, old timers. He began as projectionist for Hyman Howe many years ago. He has made almost fifty trips to Europe on behalf of the Lyman H. Howe interests.

Said he: "Gee, Rich, I wish you could stay awhile. You've just got to come down and visit us. What a time we'll have talking over old times!"

The Lyman Howe laboratories specialize in fine printing. Said Walkenshaw: "We can take a negative from which they are turning out poor prints by ordinary processes and get a good sharp print."

And we believe him, for Walkenshaw is a man who is not given to making statements he can't back up. The laboratories started a year ago with eight employes. They are employing forty now, but find, as others of us have found, that the number who appreciate high class work sufficiently well to pay an added price for it is limited.

Is Given Midnight Dinner.

In the evening we were very agreeably surprised. Due to the acts of a union secretary, who has fortunately been replaced, but who seems, during his term of office to have done just about as he individually pleased, instead of as the union pleased, we had been given the impression that the Wilkes-Barre men were non-progressive. This evidently is not true, for non-progressives would not do things up shipshape as they did that day.

At midnight we were conducted to the restaurant of the Hotel Redington, one of the best in the city, and there found waiting, around a nicely arranged banquet table, practically every theatre manager and projectionist in the city. In fact, we were told that the aforesaid union ex-secretary and his brother were the only absentees.

The boys had even arranged for the mayor to be present, but that worthy official was detained through the arrival of some out-of-town official, and officials naturally come first with officials.

Fred W. Herman, manager of the Savoy Theatre, was toastmaster. He welcomed the company and spoke briefly of the good derived from such get-together meetings; "the first" said he, "the managers and projectionists of Wilkes-Barre ever had."

Gets Handsome Souvenir.

He then sprung a genuine surprise by presenting to the guest of the evening, our more or less 'umble self, on behalf of the members of local union 325, a really unique souvenir of Wilkes-Barre (center of an enormously productive coal field) in the form of a carved and highly polished ink well made of coal.

It is not a toy, but a real ink well, and certainly is as appropriate a token of their regard as the Wilkes-Barre men could possibly have selected. It will have a place among our treasures.

At one o'clock the decks were cleared for action and until three ten we, assisted by Brother Robert Fine at the stereopticon, talked projection optics to as attentive an audience as one could wish to have.

Many remarks complimentary to the value of the lecture were overheard afterward, and a warm invitation to return to the city at a later date was extended by both the managers and officials of the unions.

(To be continued in next issue.)

Samuel Rothapfel
Who is directing the programs at New York's Capitol Theatre.

"Return of Roxey" Staged at Capitol as Incident of New Ownership-Policy

THE New York Capitol re-opened Friday evening, June 4, after having been closed three days while Samuel L. Rothapfel was setting the stage for his return to the local field as a movie presentationist. The lights went up on a new order of things generally; Goldwyn having come into active voice in the management of the house through purchase of enough stock in the corporation to make themselves heard.

With the advent of "Roxey" a new box-office and performance policy was inaugurated. What is termed a "Summer Schedule" now calls for continuous performances starting early and running late with an afternoon scale of 30 and 40 cents nd evening prices 40, 55, 75 cents and $1, war tax absorbed by the management.

Change of Show and Prices.

Edward Bowes remains managing director but Rothapfel will have charge of the presentations with his name featured in the electric signs in front of the house and in the newspaper advertising. Ben Atwell continues as publicity director and John Wenger is still in charge of the settings and stage lightings.

Save for changes in the stage and orchestra arrangements the interior aspect of the tremendously spacious interior is unchanged. The time of closure was devoted to preparing the stage to lift the orchestra out of the pit and provide more seats down in front.

Here's the New Program:

The running order of the opening show called for this detail: Victor Herbert's "American Fantasie" as an overture, in which singing, tableaux and motion pictures were effectively introduced. "Whispering Flowers," a dance by the Albertieri dancers, followed, and then came a Prizma color picture "Hagopian, the Rug Maker." Lawrence Hope's "Indian Love Lyrics" as set to music by Amy Woodforde-Finden were given next with recitation, singing and tableaux, accompanied by the orchestra.

"Scratch My Back" Applauded.

"Scratch My Back," a Goldwyn feature, with T. Roy Barnes and Helene Chadwick the center of interest, followed the shorter numbers. Elsewhere will be found a critical opinion of the production. If an audience applauding sub-titles and laughing at practically everything gazed upon means anything in the life of a film, "Scratch My Back" should become the Methuselah of Goldwyn presentations. This is simply a report of how the audience seemed to feel about it.

Stage Settings and Light Effects.

Wenger's stage setting left nothing to be desired. The old-time genius of Rothapfel and Wenger in combination evolved a presentation that brought satisfaction to everybody within ear-shot of the reporter.

Another "answer" to the proposition: "Why Rothapfel?" was found in an audience that filled the house as far as the eye could reach from front seats. When the 'ast show "went in" there was a lobby-full "standing out." It's only fair, in concensus of general opinion, to give credit for these propitious conditions to "Roxey" and his style of show.

Technical Qualities of American Films Delight French Fans, Says Leon Madieu

AMERICAN films are predominant in the picture market of France. The French public seems to take pleasure in attributing to them technical qualities of the highest kind—all to the honor of American directors and American picture artists, whose work often approaches close to perfection.

This is the keynote of a statement made by Leon Madieu, chairman of the board of directors of Pathe Cinema, Paris, who lately arrived on a visit to this country and immediately plunged into an exhaustive inspection of American methods of picture production.

Mr. Madieu, who is also treasurer of Pathe Exchange, Inc., of the United States, of which Paul Brunet is vice-president and general manager, is personally conducting his researches into both the art and commercial sides of the film industry here. After a week of this sort of activity, Mr. Madieu replied to a few of the many questions put to him. He said:

Stronger Scenarios Required.

"Aside from the excellent qualities observed in American direction and acting so highly esteemed in France, the mentality of the French masses in general would require stronger and better constructed scenarios. It is my belief, moreover, that in the very near future the American public itself will make the same demands.

"In France, great efforts have been made in the detailed production of artistic emotional photoplay. One of the latest works that Pathe Exchange, Inc., has chosen, is the fascinating drama by Abel Grance entitled 'J'Accuse.' By this intensely realistic film, Americans will be brought to a realization to what impressive progress in pictures has been made by the French.

"I have been asked also how the Italian product is received in France. A considerable number of reels have crossed the frontier, but very few of them have met with success. Italian acting seems too exuberant, in the gestures especially, and there are many discrepancies in scenario.

Explains Film Embargo.

"There is one question especially which seems greatly to interest American motion picture producers—the decree prohibiting the importation of raw film into France. The sole reason for this law is the critical financial situation in our country. We have been obliged to restrict our purchases from other countries in all branches of commerce and industry, and the attention of the government naturally was brought to the importation of raw film.

"The French government, knowing the capacity of the Pathe Cinema plant, and that Pathe Cinema could supply the French market, did not hesitate to take this step. Pathe Cinema will most assuredly draw out a profit from this restriction, but it has done nothing and could do nothing to provoke it. Aside from this, it is sure of its position as an international factor in the industry and looks forward to the time when competiton, which is the life of trade, will be resumed.

"My ideas concerning the American market are not yet quite definite enough to allow me the pleasure of setting them forth."

Myron Selznick Goes West to Arrange Transfer to East

MYRON SELZNICK, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, accompanied by his brother David, left recently on a flying trip to California in order to despatch the western production activities of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises to the East.

It will be recalled that Mr. Selznick announced recently that the Selznick production units would hereafter work exclusively in the East, and had signed a long term lease for the Paragon and Solax studios; also that the number of productions would be increased.

"I am going west on a two weeks' trip," Mr. Selznick stated just before his departure, "to insure the expeditious transfer of our companies now working in our west coast studios. This transfer will be made without any hitch in our working schedule. It will be during the intervals between pictures, and immediately upon the arrival of the companies at Fort Lee they will find everything in readiness for the starting of their next pictures."

It is intimated that in addition to supervising this transfer, Mr. Selznick will consider the acquisition by his company of certain important stars and directors now working on the western coast.

Goldwyn Exchange Manager Is Host to Western Exhibitors

MAURICE WOLFE, resident manager of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation in Los Angeles, was host to some twenty theatre owners last week. The big feature on the program was a visit to the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, where vice-President Abraham Lehr presided at a luncheon in their honor.

A Showman's "Who's Who.

Among those present were L. A. Grant and F. A. Smith, Windsor Theatre, Los Angeles; J. Leslie Swope, Hollywood Theatre, Los Angeles; W. G. Bailey, Lyceum Theatre, San Francisco; M. Blumenfield, Empire Theatre, Napor; C. C. Griffin, New Piedmont, Oakland; A. Markowitz, Strand Theatre, San Francisco; D. S. Markowitz, Crescent Theatres, Inc., San Francisco; J. M. Young, Apollo Theatre, Hollywood; D. B. Vanderlip, Huntington Theatre; Sol Lesser, Claremont Theatre, Oakland; T. Karski, Royal Theatre, San Francisco; S. Frankel, Hayward Theatre; M. Klein, Majestic Theatre, San Francisco; A. L. Salmon, Polk street, San Francisco, and Glenn Harper, Apollo Theatre, Los Angeles. A general good time resulted.

Realart Celebrates First Anniversary; Statement of Record Relates Progress

THIS week Realart Pictures Corporation celebrated the first anniversary of the founding of the concern. Congratulatory wires and messages were received from exhibitors in all parts of the country on the year's success.

Actual business was started on June 11 last year when offices were opened at 112 West Forty-second street, New York. Within a few months' time exchanges had been opened in twenty-one important centers and in December, 1919, the first picture was available.

Thirteen pictures have been reelased by the company to date and four more are practically finished and will be put on the market during July and August. They will be included in this year's business and round out the concern's activities for its first year.

Important among the achievements of the new concern during the year are the signing of two new stars in addition to the original trio, the acquisition of the old Morosco studios in Hollywood as a producing plant; and the establishment of a Broadway record which shows every production to have played a week at one of the big Rialto houses and with a return engagement on the Loew circuit.

First Year's Accomplishments.

"From a very small beginning last June," said John S. Woody, general manager of Realart, in a brief resume of the year's activities, "Realart has grown in a year's time with incredible swiftness to a dominant position as a proucing organization. Success has been ours in a measure far beyond our highest hopes at the start and for this we must thank our exhibitor partners who have made it possible.

"We opened with a small suite of offices at 112 West Forty Second street. Arthur S. Kane, our first president; Ben F. Simpson, then field manager; John P. Fritts, director of publicity and advertising, and myself, were the original quartette who gathered at that place to make of Realart a thing of substance out of our hopes and ambitions.

"We stayed in those quarters only a short time when our quickly expanding activities demanded larger space and we moved to 729 Seventh avenue. We remained there until November when our present home, the entire fourth floor of the new and modern Winfield Building at 469 Fifth avenue, had been completely remodeled to suit our needs.

"Early in the summer, Mr. Simpson and myself went into the field to establish our branch offices. Mr. Simpson took the Eastern and Southern districts, while I hiked across lots to the West. Within a few short weeks we had engaged managers, opened quarters and had things humming in twenty-one recognized exchange centers. I don't believe a more efficient sales force was ever got together—and at a speed which established a record.

Released First Picture in December.

"After several heart breaking production incidents we finally released our first picture in December. We had planned to release Mary Miles Minter's first picture, 'Anne of Green Gables,' in September but discovered that weather conditions had spoiled the photographic work. Rather than put out an inferior product we ordered most of the picture retaken.

"In December Mr. Kane resigned to head his own concern and Morris Kohn, who had been Realart's treasurer, became president. Later in the year J. C. Ragland resigned as general sales manager and Jay A. Gove was promoted from the post of associate director of publicity to that of assistant general manager. Those were the only changes in personnel of importance during the year.

"In March, Mr. Kohn negotiated the purchase of the old Morosco studios in Hollywood and they were renamed the Realart studios, the former efficient studio staff headed by Frank Garubtt remaining under the new management. The studios are large and equipped with the most modern facilities. The large dark and open stages are each capable of accommodation of three productions at one time.

Now Have Five Stars.

"We started the year's business with three stars, but soon discovered that the market for quality pictures with the Realart trademark on them called for more than this trio could turn out. Within the last three months we have added two new names to our list, Wanda Hawley and Bebe Daniels.

J. S. Woody.
General manager of Realart Pictures Corporation.

"The selling campaign on the first of these, Wanda Hawley in 'Miss Hobbs,' stands out as one of the biggest events of the year. More than 3,590 bookings for this picture were obtained in a short drive some time before the picture was ready for release. No only this but playing dates were obtained and the picture will complete its runs in practically every key city in the country within three weeks of its release date.

"A short time ago we held our first convention and get-together at the Hotel Astor. It was one of the most inspiring and successful gatherings of its kind I have ever attended. The members of this field force met one another for the first time and exchanged ideas. Together we formulated our policy for the coming year.

"Exhibitor Co-operation Biggest Thing."

"But the biggest thing in our record for the year, to my mind, is the demonstration we have given of co-operation between producer and exhibitor. That is the principle upon which Realart was established. We have avoided making glowing announcements of our intentions, and have been content to spend our time and efforts in carrying them into practice.

"Co-operation is the keynote of success in any undertaking. This is more than true in the motion picture industry. Realart takes the position that a man who shows Realart pictures has as great an interest in the company as though he were a stockholder. On this basis we are looking forward to our second year with high hopes of success in our extended field of activity."

Hoffman Announces Pioneer's Stand on Exhibitor Question

M. H. HOFFMAN, general manager and vice-president of the Pioneer, who heads his firm's delegation to the Cleveland Convention, says: "I wish to reiterate that my firm has always believed that the picture industry must be kept free and offer equal opportunities for all, if it is to continue to be the big factor which it is now in the life of our country.

"We do not believe that the film industry can ever be monopolized by big monied interests. Motion pictures are dependent entirely upon brains, training and originality and it is impossible for any man or group of men to secure the corner on these requrements.

"If the exhibitor will only realize the importance of co-operation, the danger of being forced out of business will never become an accomplished fact.

"The Pioneer believes in the 'open door' policy of equal opportunity for all. Not alone must the independent exhibitor be protected, but the independent producer must be given encouragement and the assurance of a square deal at all times."

Scenario Writers Form Body

Katherine Hilliker announces the formation of an organization of expert scenario writers to be known as the "Hillikerites," which will include besides herself Raymond S. Harris and H. H. Caldwell. All three are well known in the industry, and for the past year and a half have been associated with Outing-Chester Pictures organization which they recently left to form the new association.

Mr. Caldwell left Hollywood on Sunday, June 6, for New York, where he will close pending deals for the organization. He is making his headquarters at the D. H. Hilliker Studios, 125 West Fortieth street. The organization will be represented in Hollywood by Edna Schley with offices in the Markham Building.

Maigne's Assistants Arrive

Faxon M. Dean and Bert Dorris, cameraman and assistant director, respectively, have arrived from the Coast to work with Director Charles Maigne at the New York studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on "The Frontier of the Stars," with Thomas Meigham. Mr. Dean and Mr. Dorris were associated with Mr. Maigne on the production of "The Copperhead," and immediately after its completion went to the Coast with him to make "The Fighting Chance" with a special cast and "A Cumberland Romance," with Mary Miles Minter, for which latter production they were loaned to Realart.

Drawing Art Titles for Metro

Work on "The Saphead," which is an adaptation of "The New Henrietta," revised from Bronson Howard's "The Henrietta" by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes, is progressing rapidly.

Wallace Worsley Coming East to Direct Goldwyn Production

WALLACE WORSLEY, [illegible] who has been working at the Culver City studios, is coming east to make his next production at the Goldwyn studios in New York. It will be an elaborate picturization of Maximilian Foster's "The Trap," renamed "To the Highest Bidder." Mr. Worsley's great success with the Goldwyn productions, Jack Pickford in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," Basil King's "The Street Called Straight," and finally Gouverneur Morris' "The Penalty," led to his being assigned to the Maximilian Foster work.

Metro Installs Eugene Presbrey

Eugene Presbrey, author and playwright, has occupied his offices in the administration building of the Metro studios in Hollywood. Mr. Presbrey will in the future devote his time and talents to preparing plays and stories for the screen for Metro productions.

Mr. Presbrey is one of the best known dramatists of today. Among his most popular plays, which have been big successes on the speaking stage are "Raffles," which was founded on E. W. Hornung's stories of the master cracksman; "The Right of Way," which was taken from Sir Gilbert Parker's famous novel and recently done for the screen by Bert Lytell; "The Barrier," from Rex Beach's novel of the same name; "The Virginia Courtship" and many others.

Gaumont Color Pictures on View

Gaumont natural color pictures will be shown in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Astor on Friday and Saturday evenings of this week, June 11 and 12, showing the Victory Parade in Paris, July 14, 1919.

Inter-Ocean Representative to Spread Gospel of American Films Among Latins

CARLOS SALAZAR of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation sales staff, has been selected by Gus Schlesinger, manager of the department of foreign film sales, as the emissary who will spread the gospel of American films and motion picture accessory products for Inter-Ocean throughout Central America and the West Indies, according to an announcement made during the week from the New York offices of the company.

The decision to dispatch a representative into these undeveloped regions is the culmination of intensive investigation and research work, and is in line with Inter-Ocean's recently announced policy of opening up wider avenues of distribution for the American manufacturer who intrusts his product with the Inter-Ocean organization.

Mr. Salazar left New York on Monday, June 7, for Costa Rica, where he plans to spend one month visiting his parents. Mr. Salazar's itinerary will take him into the principal film centers of Central America, where he proposes to study local conditions as applied to the marketing of American films and motion picture accessories in these territories. After he has completed his work here he will then proceed to the West Indies to perform a similar task. The entire tour is expected to consume three months, but if necessary the trip will be prolonged indefinitely until the work in question is completed.

In a statement issued to the press Mr. Schlesinger said: "Mr. Salazar is eminently fitted to the task before him. He is a native of Costa Rica and has traveled extensively throughout North and South America. He brings to his new duties the wisdom of many years' experience and association with Inter-Ocean, with which company he has been affiliated in various capacities.

Taking Along Prints.

"Mr. Salazar takes with him a number of prints of American films and a large variety of accessory products of American manufacture which he will show for the first time in Central America and the West Indies. By having capitalized on a 'live' mailing list of prospects in these territories Mr. Salazar has already paved the way for many exhibitions with local film renters and buyers.

"It might be of interest to know that every American film which we are sending down to Central America and the West Indies has been re-edited and retitled in the Spanish tongue."

New Buildings Going Up at Metro Studios in the West

THERE are signs innumerable of great building activity at present in and around Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood. Studio construction operations undertaken a few months ago are being rushed to completion. Work on the new fireproof paint and assembling shops has progressed so rapidly that the building is expected to be finished within a fortnight. It is entirely of brick and steel construction.

Work is also well under way on the three-story receiving, shipping and property building. This will be a frame structure and will include a separate property room for every company. Plans are now being prepared for the new scenario quarters and also for another enclosed stage which is to be built wholly of glass and steel—the largest stage on the Metro lot. Already the plant boasts of three large dark stages.

Frances Edmonde Now Heads Her Own Producing Company

FRANCES EDMONDE, whose interpretations of classic characters earned her the title of "The Classic Girl" while she posed for noted artists and sculptors, has become a film producer, at the head of her own company, and has already nearly completed her first production.

Elsier La Maie, author and director of the play, is responsible for the discovery of Miss Edmonde and the launching of the new company, and "Peggy Wise," the story, was written around the personality of the star. Miss Edmonde is well known on the vaudeville stage of both continents, and on her recent trip to France and England she made big hits with a repertory of songs of her own composition.

The first Frances Edmonde production is being filmed at the Garson studios, and the all-star supporting cast includes George Larkin as leading man, Harry Van Meter, Katherine Lewis, Earl Shafer, Dick Johnson and Jeanne Roe. The camera work is being done by Reggie Lyons.

Three Scenes Taken from "A Splendid Hazard," Which Is Being Released by First National.

Little would one think that Henry B. Walthall, the calm lover in picture 1, becomes Napoleon in picture 3. Norman Kerry and Ann Forrest don't seem to mind the flourishing of swords very much in the play, which is called "A Splendid Hazard."

Why Shouldn't an Archer Draw a Very Long Bow?

We inquired of Johnnie Archer the possibilities of getting a full page spread of scene stills in the W. k. (well known, not W. K.) World. In an unguarded moment we facetiously asked:

"How many men must we kill to get the space?"

Thereupon said Mr. Archer momentarily forgot his editorial decorum and indulged in a pun to the effect that we'd "have to kill 130 iron men to get the page."

A pretty good "shot" even for an Archer, wasn't it?

Allan Dwan just hired an "extra" named Cash.

Now the question is will Cash register?

Fifteen Units to Make Sixty Features for First National Release in a Year

FIFTEEN independent production units having contracts for the exhibition of their total minimum of sixty special feature attractions for the 1920-1921 season is the 6,000 independent theatres which, this fall, will be enfranchised members of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., this week announce the list of titles of their respective releases.

This information is augmented by a detailed schedule of release dates which exhibitor officials of Associated First National Pictures have established for the sixty attractions. This schedule lists each production, the star, producer or director-producer, with its release date from August 30, 1920, the start of the new season, to May 2, 1921, on which date the summer season for that year will begin.

Apart from being the most pretentious array of attractions for a single season in the history of the co-operative efforts of First National members, it is termed an unprecedented grouping of independent production interests, entirely separate and distinct from the theatre branch of the industry.

In its announcement First National emphasizes the fact that its production sources are available only through contracts with independent stars, producers and directors, and not through ownership, stock interest or control of loan collateral in any of the studio operating units affiliated with it.

Charles Ray in Cohan Success.

The following release-date schedule with the attraction that may be expected from First National stars is tentative. In some instances the course of production of several of the forthcoming attractions may require a period of from three to six weeks longer than officials estimate at present.

Beginning August 30 the First National schedule opens with "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," on which Charles Ray is working at present. The story is one vehicle which largely contributed to the stage success of George M. Cohan. Production has already started on "Good References," the forthcoming Constance Talmadge production that will be directed by R. William Neill. The success of Constance Talmadge's previous First National release indicates that "Good References" will be one of her biggest productions. The release date will be August 30. September 6 will mark the release of "The Scoffer," an Allan Dwan production. In story value, direction and cast it is said to be most appealing.

Louis B. Mayer's production of "Harriet and the Piper," in which Anita Stewart will be starred, is announced for release on September 13. This story by Kathleen Norris ran serially in the Pictorial Review and is now being published in book form. Bertram Bracken will direct. Miss Stewart will be supported by Ward Crane, Irving Cummings, Byron Munson, Charles Richman, Myrtle Stedman, Margaret Landis, Barbara LaMarr Deeley and Loyola O'Connor.

Norma in "Smilin' Through."

Norma Talmadge in Jane Cowl's successful stage play, "Smilin' Through," will be released on September 20. Choice of this vehicle in which to star Miss Talmadge has brought considerable enthusiastic comment from New York State exhibitors, who themselves suggested to Joseph M. Schenck that Norma Talmadge be starred in a picturization of this play.

Whitman Bennett announces that the initial Lionel Barrymore feature to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, entitled "The Master Mind," will be ready for release by September 20. Sydney Franklin, who scored a triumph in his direction of "The Hoodlum," starring Mary Pickford in her second production from her own studios for First National, is now working on his intial independent production for the circuit. This will be entitled "Athalie" and is adapted from the story by Robert W. Chambers.

"The Woman," a special feature production which will be exploited in very much the same fashion that characterized First National's handling of "Auction of Souls will be released on October 4. This production, based on the problems that have been confronting man since the beginning of the world, is said to be a great box-office attraction.

Arthur S. Kane announces that "Peaceful Valley," Charles Ray's second production for release through First National, will be ready on October 11. This production will faithfully follow the well-known story by Edward E. Kidder. "Peaceful Valley" will be remembered as the stage play in which Sol Smith Russell scored a great success. It has been played 5,207 times on the legitimate stage and still is being used by stock companies.

The initial special production of R. A. Walsh, and personally directed by Mr. Walsh, will be ready for release on October 18. In view of the fact that his working title will be changed several weeks in advance of the official release of the attraction, Mr. Walsh has asked that no title be mentioned. His picture deals with a problem of the ages relative to the fine workings of the conscience of good and bad.

Carrying the prediction of James Oliver Curwood that it will surpass in entertainment, thrills and box-office receipts the record scored by "Back to God's Country," First National will issue "Nomads of the North," from the pen of Mr. Curwood and directed by David Hartford, on October 25. Under the belief that it would require at least eight months to produce this special feature, Mr. Curwood and producing staff commenced work three months ago.

Mildred Harris Chaplin's Play.

"Old Dad," from the novel of the same name by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott, and which ran serially in the Woman's Home Companion and is now in book form, will be the attraction starring Mildred Harris Chaplin. This picture will be released on October 25. Lloyd Ingraham will direct the presentation.

November 1 will mark the release of Katherine MacDonald in "Curtain," adapted from Miss Rita Whitman's story, which was originally published in the Saturday Evening Post. The author is cooperating in the preparation of the script and will remain in consultation with the MacDonald studio staff until the production is completed.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven will make their debut as a First National starring combination on November 8 with the release of "Twin Beds," screen rights for which were purchased a month ago from the Selwyns. The De Havens are at present on the West Coast preparing the production.

"The Heart of a Fool," an Allan Dwan production scheduled for release on November 15, will represent the supreme accomplishment in Mr. Dwan's career as a director, it is said. This picture has been completed.

"The Honorable Peter Sterling" will probably be the title of the attraction in which Lionel Barrymore will make his second appearance as a First National star. This picture will be released on November 22 and, according to Whitman Bennett will be a radical departure from the various other screen and stage roles in which Mr. Barrymore has appeared.

Wesley Barry as "Penrod."

"The Girl of Gold" will be the Norma Talmadge release for November 29. Selection of the cast for this picture is now under way and the scenario and working script have almost been completed.

Probably one of the most gratifying bits of exhibitor interest yet mentioned is the fact that "Penrod," Marshall Neilan's screen version of the famous character created by Booth Tarkington on stage and in fiction, is slated as a November 29 release. Wesley Barry, the screen juvenile, will be featured as Penrod.

On December 6 "The Woman in His House," adapted from an original story and directed by John M. Stahl, starring Mildred Harris Chaplin, will be released. R. A. Walsh's second personally directed production will be released on December 13.

"The Human Chess-Board" will be the title of Constance Talmadge's starring vehicle, to be published on December 13. This story will be supervised and adapted for the screen by John Emerson and Anita Loos, who declare it to be the most humorous of all their screen adaptations for Constance Talmadge.

Christmas Attraction Not Announced.

Tentative arrangements at the Charles Ray studios call for the completion by December 20 of an original story by Bob Wanger, staff writer for the Saturday Evening Post. The Ray staff is enthusiastic over this attraction. Richard Willis, general manager of the Charles Ray studios; Albert A. Kidder, assistant manager, and Jerome Storm, who has directed Ray in his last picture, declare the advance synopsis to be "a riot." The scenario will be written by Isabelle Johnson and Chester A. Lyons will take care of the photography.

The release for December 27—usually termed the Christmas week picture—has been reserved for a special attraction which will not be announced until later.

A feature production written and supervised by James Oliver Curwood will follow soon after the beginning of the year of 1921. Mr. Curwood has written the story but is forced to await pending matters of international and political signficance before making a definite announcement.

Allan Dwan's production of "Faith in Humanity" will be released on January 17.

"Sowing the Wind," starring Anita Stewart and adapted from the successful stage play by Sidney Grundy, will be released on January 24. The picture will be directed by John M. Stahl. This will be followed a week later with the release of "Jim, the Penman," a Lionel Barrymore starring vehicle, the picturization personally supervised by Whitman Bennett.

Neilan Release in February.

A surprise release starring Norma Talmadge in a production that will probably require her presence in Europe for a period of weeks is slated for February 7.

Marshall Neilan announces a release for February 7 or thereabouts. Other than to say the picture would be of the nature of "The River's End" and feature a cast of prominent American screen stars, Mr. Neilan has decided to withhold announcement prior to the time his working script is ready.

The release of Katherine MacDonald's production of "The Notorious Miss Lisle" is set for February 14. Miss MacDonald has announced that she is likely to come east for certain scenes for this production. Final assignment of cast roles has not yet been made.

February 21 will mark the release of a super-special which First National is not inclined to announce at this time, while February 28 is the release date for "Ramsey Milholland," from the latest book by Booth Tarkington and in which Charles Ray will be starred. This book has already enjoyed a sale of several hundred thousand copies and is apt to be produced on the stage previous to its picturization by Charles Ray.

"Wedding Bells," adapted from the stage play produced by the Selwyns, in which Constance Talmadge will be starred, will be released on February 28.

A Mildred Harris Chaplin release on March 7, an R. A. Walsh production to be released on March 14, and a Katherine MacDonald feature for release on March 28, lead up to the release of "The Devil's Garden," in which Lionel Barrymore will be starred and which will be released on April 11.

A Norma Talmadge and a Charles Ray release on April 18, a Marshall Neilan picture on April 25, and Constance Talmadge starring in "Mamma's Affair," to be released on May 2, carry the Associated First National schedule almost a year in advance.

Realart Promises Statement of Policy for Coming Year

AN announcement of its 1920-1921 plan and policy will be issued shortly from the offices of Realart Pictures Corporation. The statement will be of a most comprehensive nature, including not only the production activities of the company for the next year, but a complete booking plan which will embrace new and novel features for both large and small exhibitors.

The new policy announcement is the result of the strenuous conference held recently for a week between the Realart field men and home office officials. It will be the first detailed statement which the company has made, inasmuch as its activities during the last season were limited to six months of actual business.

"There will be some welcome news for exhibitors all over the country," declared General Manager Woody, "in the announcement we are to make within a short time. Not only our old clients, but hundreds of other exhibitors who, I am confident, will join the Realart family this year, will be interested in the proposition we will have to offer."

Dream of Five Years Comes True June 20 When Educational Opens Exchange System

A COMPLETE announcement of policy for the year, starting with the week of June 20, covering all of its various activities, is authorized by Educational Films Corporation. The past six months has seen many more radical developments with Educational than with any other motion picture company, and its officials promise that the next few months will be marked by equally notable achievements.

Educational began operations a little more than five years ago with the idea of confining its attention to short subjects. From this purpose it has never departed and the whole of its expansion continues in the one and two reel field. Although the industry as a whole regarded the company as a bold experiment, Educational points out that of all the companies producing and distributing pictures at the time it began business only six remain in the field today.

With the week of June 20 Educational starts business through its own exchanges in the principal distributing centres of the country, with its product more than tripled and the claim that its product represents the cream of the short subject field. The next few weeks will see Educational exchanges operating in twenty-four cities—New York, Buffalo, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Louisville, Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Indianapolis, Chicago, Minneapolis, Detroit, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle.

First Venture With Comedies.

In each of these exchanges local interests are represented financially, but Educational maintains the majority stock of every branch, believing that this represents an ideal plan in insuring the ultimate in co-operation in sales and exploitation effort and at the same time maintains competitive exhibitor purchase opportunity.

Opening of this exchange system marks Educational's first venture into the comedy field. It begins activities with five two-reelers available each month, with the indication of several others being added soon. Christie Comedies will supply a two-reeler every two weeks, while there will be a monthly two-reel release of the Chester, Mermaid and Torchy series; also the Judge Brown Stories, with a monthly or possibly semi-monthly release, and it is expected that another two-reel series of unusual heart interest will be announced in a short time.

But with these extensive additions Educational has not cut down on the scenic, travel, animal, scientific and educational pictures that have been so intimately associated with its growth. In fact, there has been marked expansion in this field. Chester-Outing Scenics have been taken over and added to the Bruce Scenics. Chester Screenics will be a bi-weekly release, while a number of series of travel and scenics have been acquired.

During the past few months the company has made many additions to its organization in New York and its field forces, and it is promised that exhibitors will be given unusual service both through the various exchanges and direct from the main office.

Review of Five Years' Growth.

"Educational Films Corporation," says its statement, "has preferred to grow slowly along sound business lines. When this company was formed, five years ago, its founders had many plans in view, but they did not attempt to put them in operation until they believed that the time was ripe. They realized that it was a radical departure for a company to devote its whole attention to short subjects, especially at a time when there was a general rush toward 'features,' but they were confident that the time would come when an organization handling nothing but one and two reel scenics, travel, educational, scientific, cartoon and comedy pictures would be as important and as powerful as any others. We believe that this day is here.

"For five years we devoted the greater portion of our time to developing the quality of our product and to proving the necessity of these short subjects to the theatre. The Bruce Scenics, the Ditmars Living Book of Nature, George D. Wright's Mexico Today, the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement and various series of similar character have been shown in thousands of theatres and there has been created such a demand as to cause us to greatly increase the volume of product.

Much Material Available.

"During this period we were compelled to distribute our product through the best medium available, though from the start we have felt that the only perfect distribution for our interests and those of the exhibitor would be our own exchange system. We have believed that it was impossible for an organization devoting the greater share of its attention to 'features' to give the proper attention to short subjects.

"So, when we felt that the time had come for us to establish our own exchange system, we let the fact be known among producers of short subjects whom we knew to desire better results. The result would have astounded any one who had not made the study of the short subject field that we have given it for five years. We were literally overwhelmed with quantity of material. We have given all of this material attention, though we have rejected the greater portion of it. But this vast opportunity of selection, we believe, has given us the very cream of the field. We believe that we have achieved an unusual comedy combination with the Christie, Chester, Torchy and Mermaid series. We expect to add other comedies, for in this field, as with all other short subjects, we will be neither tempted by a desire for quantity nor will we deny distribution to product that reaches our quality standard on these points we are resolved.

Cover the World Scenically.

"In the Judge Brown Stories we have comedy dramas of proven appeal and we expect the new productions to be of even greater value. Another comedy-drama series made from stories that have been read by literally millions will be announced shortly.

"Robert C. Bruce is now in Europe making a new series of his Scenics Beautiful. We have taken over the Chester-Outings and the Scenics from the same producer. We have purchased several stories from independent cameramen, a source that have been productive of much excellent material after we have made the liberal cuts. We control all of the pictures made by the American Red Cross for theatrical release. We have cameramen with the two expeditions of the Interchurch World Movement and these pictures will soon be available for early release. We are about to release the first picture made by an expedition of the National Geographic Society. We will distribute all of the pictures of the New York State Conservation Commission. In fact, we have co-operative agreements with several other such organizations, and the recognition of the company by such bodies is to our mind one of the best evidences that Educational can claim unusual accomplishments."

Hobart Henley
Who is now directing William Faversham in Selznick pictures.

Henley Urges Closer Alliance of Directors and Co-Workers

BEING a director with a long and varied experience, Hobart Henley, who is confining his efforts to a series of special productions for Selznick Enterprises, which include productions starring William Faversham, recently expounded on the human side of a director with its attendant results.

"At the outset," said Mr. Henley, "let me say that too often the tendency is to follow the method of least resistance, to plunge blindly into the task without consideration and without calculation.

"But it is certainly to the director's advantage to take a more deliberate and systematic manner in the filming of his production. As a beginning let him take into consideration the author and the continuity writer. But he must never lose track of the exhibitor whose box office must be kept continually in mind.

"The director who neglects his invaluable aids and begins to direct out of a vacant mind may string together the requisite number of scenes, but will surely not construct an effective and impressive production. The discussion of a story, before production, has proved its value time and again. The sum total of information thus obtained is likely to exceed the amount any dividual director may have."

Herbert Brenon Will Produce One Americanization Picture

THE willingness of Herbert Brenon, producer, to co-operate in all possible ways with the plans of the Americanism Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry are set forth in a letter recently received by Franklin K. Lane, former Secretary of the Interior and chairman of the committee.

Mr. Brenon had previously cabled; "Will be delighted to make one production here in Europe for which Miss Marie Doro has consented to play star role."

The letter came from Rome and is an enthusiastic endorsement of the plans of the committee. The title of Mr. Brenon's picture may be "An American Abroad." He urges that if this country is to maintain its position as the mightiest nation in the world it will be "by making friends and not enemies; through modesty, charity and those other virtues which build up human or national existence."

Twelve Weeks Will Be Devoted to Each Comedyart Release, Says Ward Lascalle

TWELVE weeks will be devoted to each Comedyart release, according to Ward Lascelle, director general of the Special Pictures Corporation. By that schedule the director, continuity writers, players, film editor and sub-title writer will have ample time in which to familiarize themselves with the story and get the best possible results.

Heartily indorsing the plan for quality production, President Louis W. Thompson and H. J. Roberts, general sales manager, are arranging release schedules so that this innovation in comedy-making can be carried out to the fullest extent.

Four Companies at Work.

Four companies are now making the 1,400-foot comedies used in Comedyart releases. Extensive remodeling of the Balboa studio at Long Beach, Col., has been effected in order to facilitate the making of the Special Pictures short-reel fun features.

Milburn Moranti heads one producing unit; Charles Diltz, a former Rolin director, a second unit; George Cooper, formerly with Taylor Holmes Productions and Vitagraph comedies, the third, while the fourth producing unit is being personally directed by Director General Lascalle.

Among the better known comedians being featured by Special Pictures are Joe Bonner, former Vitagraph player and well-known English stage comedian; Max Asher, former associate of Kolb and Dill and other comedy stars; Sandy Roth, formerly with the Ziegfeld Follies and Gus Edwards' Reviews on the Orpheum time, and Tex Hewson, the "cowboy mirth-maker." Hazel Powell, Alma Lucille and Peggy Weightman are among the beauties who act as feminine foils.

Competent Assisting Staff.

Mr. Lascalle has reorganized his producing staff, to include George Larson, chief cinematographer; Joe Moranti, technical director; Charles Gorton, transportation and location superintendent; Lucille McGowan, modiste, and G. Gillette, studio auditor.

"Friends and Enemies" is the title of the latest Comedyart release.

Sales Manager Roberts and President Thompson are planning an early trip to New York to arrange for new foreign expeditions to furnish new scenic portions of the Comedyart releases.

Keep Footgear Out of Exits, E. B. Kinsila Tells Japanese

WHEN the movie patron enters a theatre he or she should not leave their footgear in the lobby or at the base of the stairways but should deposit it carefully in a recess at one side to keep the exit clear in case of fire. This was one bit of advice given the Japanese recently by Edward B. Kinsila, a well known New York City theatre architect and author of "Modern Theatre Construction," published by the Chalmers Publishing Company. Mr. Kinsila spoke at a luncheon given in his honor in Tokio. He was astonished to learn that the Japanese government has not officially recognized the profession of architecture. It was his second visit to Japan. He was in that country in 1890 while making a trip around the world. Motion pictures were unknown then. At this luncheon Mr. Kinsila devoted most of his time to discussing the comparatively new art.

In a letter to Moving Picture World Mr. Kinsila gives interesting facts regarding the movies in Japan. The manner of showing motion pictures in that country is quite different from that of the western world. In Japan the audience gathers its knowledge of the play from the declamation of the tale by the professional reader engaged for the task. Managers and public alike are at the mercy of the reader for the proper interpretation of the play. This fact limits the size of the auditorium to one within the sound of the human voice. Therefore, say the Japanese, theatres of the great size of the Capitol Theatre, New York City, cannot be erected.

Mr. Kinsila's friends will rejoice to learn that his health is greatly improved and that he is having a most enjoyable time. He says at present a panic is threatening the empire, but that it has been temporarily averted by the Bank of Japan making loans to several municipalities.

Farewell Party to Film Girls

Misses Ida Edie Schulhoff and Florence Westheim, members of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, were tendered a farewell party by their many business associates and friends on Friday, June 4. Both young women have been affiliated with the Inter-Ocean's varied activities almost since its inception and have booked passage on the good ship Matrimony and scheduled for lifelong journey on the sea of happiness.

Miss Schulhoff resigned her post as secretary to the president of the Inter-Ocean to wed Dr. J. J. Schulhofer, well known in metropolitan medical circles, and Miss Westheim leaves the secretaryship to Eugene H. Kaufman, accessory manager of the company, to form a life's partnership with D. D. Eichner. At the farewell party Miss Schulhoff was presented with a beautiful lamp shade, and Miss Westheim was the recipient of a magnificent cut-glass pitcher set in a sterling silver frame.

Apfel Becomes Producer

The Oscar Apfel Productions, organized by and named after the former leading director of the old World Film Corporation, is soon to come into being as an independent producing organization. Mr. Apfel is now busily engaged in going over distributing arrangements with various prominent firms, and he promises a definite statement of his releasing agreements within a few weeks.

Hand, Fingers and Life of Cartoonist Insured That Backer May Not Loose

JOSEPH L. FRIEDMAN, to protect his investment in the Gump Cartoons has insured the right hand of Sidney Smith, cartoonist of the Chicago Tribune and creator of "Andy" and "Min." The amount the policy calls for is $75,000.

Insurance men of Chicago say that the policy entered into is one of the most peculiar ever issued. In case of complete disability to Mr. Smith's right hand, the full amount of the policy will be paid. Each finger is separately insured in varying amounts.

In addition to the hand insurance a large life policy has been taken out to cover any possibility of accident to Mr. Smith which would mean the slowing up of the production of the Gump Cartoon.

Producers Polish Their Golden Harps and Haloes, Opinion of Carl Laemmle

WHEN will the independent exhibitor wake up to the fact that the flowery phrases and promissory pap being fed him by certain producers is bunk—and nothing but bunk?" This question was asked by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, on the eve of his departure for Cleveland and a few days before the big show at Cleveland began.

"There has been much polishing—of golden harps and haloes—lately by certain groups of producers," he said. "Hymns of happiness and producer-exhibitor harmony have been directed at Cleveland from all sides. Where does all this buncombe get the exhibitor? How long is he going to turn a delighted ear to gilded promises and close his eyes to the chance of demanding sane and substantial business agreements?

"The time is ripe for independent exhibitors to make the producers lay their cards on the table. If the exhibitor takes this opportunity of demanding a showdown, of demanding facts and figures instead of vague promises, I predict the most wholesome and progressive readjustment the film industry has ever known.

Puts Universal on Record.

"Various producers have been coming out with voluminous and wordy statements in the last few weeks of what they have done and of what they are doing for the independent exhibitor. It is not what they have done that counts so much, although a great deal of their activities in the past have been no more tangible or concrete accomplishments in behalf of the exhibitor than mere words.

"What really amounts to anything from the exhibitor's point of view is: What will they do in the future to help the independent exhibitor? Why don't they come out flatfooted and say what they will do to help the exhibitor?

"Universal is not ashamed to say what it has done for the exhibitor in the past. Neither am I afraid of putting myself on record as to what Universal means to do for the exhibitor in the future. I have said it before and I will repeat it. Universal, among other things, stands ready to give financial support to the independent exhibitor in his fight to tear from his throat the fingers of monopoly that seek to throttle him.

Statements Make Him Laugh.

"It makes me laugh to read some of the statements in the trade papers—statements by so-called 'pioneers' in the film business who affect to point with modest pride to how they espoused the cause of the exhibitor from the start. As a matter of fact, every exhibitor knows that Universal was organized solely to fight against monopoly in the film business and to free the independents from the stranglehold of the Patents Company octopus.

"Where were all these 'friends' of the exhibitor who are now beaming with philanthropic generalities, when the exhibitor had to pay the trust-like combination $2 a week just for the privilege of running picture machines, for instance?

"As I remember, Universal was the only outspoken champion of the independent at that time, just as it always has been. The rights of the independent in the film business had inception by the formation of the Universal organization—the banding together of certain independent producers who took the initial step to help the exhibitor free himself.

"The independent exhibitor today faces a struggle just as threatening as that which menaced him ten years ago. If the film business is not to become eventually a regulated, subsidized industry, bending its knee at the beck and call of 'big interests,' the independent exhibitor must organize for a long and desperate fight.

"And the exhibitor needs assistance. He needs friends. He needs allies. The time has come for him to turn a deaf ear to honeyed words. What he must have is concrete help. He must know exactly where he stands with respect to producing and distributing organizations, and nothing short of exact and definite offers of moral and material support will do him any good.

"That is why Universal is taking its present stand—on both feet—beside the exhibitor. It is no time for equivocation. When I place myself in the ranks of the independents, I mean for it to be understood clearly that Universal will go to any extent to lend confidence and material aid to the exhibitor.

Would Sacrifice His Theatres.

"Who else will come out whole-heartedly and unqualifiedly for the exhibitor? What other producer will make an offer of financial assistance? Now is the time for the exhibitor to remove the blinders from his eyes and call for his true friends to stand by.

"Universal stands ready to make sacrifices in order to prove its good faith to its allies, the independent exhibitors. I am willing, if it is thought necessary, to give up the control of the few houses that Universal now holds in certain key cities. I do not believe in running with the hare and riding with the hounds, and I am holding these houses because the self-same theatre-owning producers who are now at the throats of the independent exhibitors tried to bar my pictures from the key cities.

"That is not all for which the exhibitor can count on Universal. Among other things, he can count on me for a just and fair booking policy. He will not have blocks of mediocre pictures forced upon him. He can pick what he chooses and choose what he buys. It is with that idea in mind that I have inaugurated a new series of forty-eight pictures for the coming year—eight pictures by each of six different stars. The exhibitor will have the option of buying pictures made by the stars his patrons like the best.

What Universal Offers.

"Universal can supply the exhibitor with a high-class star picture every week, with comedies, westerns, serials, news weeklies and special pictures of super-merit. 'The Right to Happiness,' 'Blind Husbands,' 'Marked Men,' 'Overland Red' and many others will be remembered when present screen events are history.

"As an earnest of what we will offer to the exhibitors in the near future, Universal is about to release four super-productions: 'The Devil's Pass Key,' Erich von Stroheim's latest masterpiece; 'Under Crimson Skies,' 'The Breath of the Gods,' which will be a revelation in setting and artistic atmosphere, and 'Ambition,' an elaborate Dorothy Phillips-Allen Holubar picture."

Famous Singer Gives Advice

John McCormack, famous Irish tenor and grand opera singer, turned technical director for a day last week, at Goldwyn's Culver City studios, when he conferred with Director Frank Lloyd on the presentation of grand opera scenes for "The Great Lover," Leo Ditrichstein's famous play that is being picturized with an all-star cast.

Clerical Error Holds Up Film Transportation Bill

RETURNED by President Wilson with a veto because in making an amendment the new matter had been inserted in the wrong place, it was necessary for Congress again to take up and pass the bill including objectionable motion picture films among articles not to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

The change was made by both houses without debate or delay and the measure was returned to the White House before Congress adjourned, Presidential approval being given to the measure in the message returning it for correction.

The law now provides a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, for the transportation or offering for transportation of objectionable films, "into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign country, or from one state, territory, or district of the United States or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any other state, territory or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, through a foreign country, to any place in or subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a foreign country."

Tucker-Mayflower Litigation Settled; Director Titling "Ladies Must Live"

BENJAMIN A. PRAGER, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, last week received George Loane Tucker's signed contract, definitely and satisfactorily closing the Tucker-Mayflower litigation which has been pending for almost a year. Mr. Tucker expressed himself as gratified that an amicable settlement has been reached, a sentiment echoed by the entire industry.

Immediately upon signing the new contract, Mr. Tucker resumed the cutting and titling of "Ladies Must Live," his second independent production to be presented by Mayflower. Actual filming of the Tucker production was completed some time ago at the Brunton studios. According to the terms of the contract, the producer of the artistic film success, "The Miracle Man," will make four more supecials to be presented by Mayflower.

Mayflower Official Comments.

In commenting upon the settlement, Mr. Praeger stated that Mayflower will place at the director's disposal the resources of its organization and lend him all possible support and co-operation. "It is Mayflower's aim to help Mr. Tucker in every way possible to achieve in his forthcoming productions the same high standard of artistry that made 'The Miracle Man' a great film. We believe that he can more than duplicate this achievement and we will leave no stone unturned in our efforts to foster his success.

"In characterizing Mr. Tucker as one of the screen's master directors we are merely reflecting the opinion of the industry, the press and the public. We welcome Mr. Tucker's return to the studio, for he has and will continue to contribute much to the artistic development of the photoplay."

Betty Compson Heads Cast.

The cast of "Ladies Must Live" includes many of the screen's foremost players. The principal feminine role is played by Betty Compson, who attained stardom overnight by virtue of her performance in "The Miracle Man." As the painted grizette of New York's underworld who found her soul in the crucible of faith, Miss Compson drew the attention of the film world by the skill and artistry of her performance. In "Ladies Must Live" the talented artist is entrusted with a role said to be equally rich in opportunities for dramatic expression.

Broadwell Productions Plans Its First Two-Reel Feature

THE Broadwell Productions, Inc., have finished casting for the first production of the Nick Carter Series and will produce as the first two-reel feature, "The $100,000 Kiss."

Tom Carrigan, the popular actor, will portray the part of Nick Carter, with Colin Chase as Chick, the famous detective's assistant, and Mae Gaston in the role of Patsy. These three characters are known to two generations of readers. A capable supporting cast consists of Cecil Owen, Irene Blackwell, Edwin Sturgis and others.

The Broadway Productions, Inc., is a Boston corporation organized with a capitalization of $300,000 for the purpose of producing the Nick Carter Series, New England historical and modern features, and also country life short subjects.

Carpentier's "Wonder Man" Plays to Big Business at Its Hotel Astor Showings

A TREMENDOUS impetus has been given to motion pictures of the better kind by the record-breaking showings for one week, in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Astor, of "The Wonder Man," the Robertson-Cole superspecial in which Georges Carpentier, French war hero and boxing champion, is the star. The showings, under the auspices of the American Legion of New York County, extended through a period of one week, from one Saturday evening to the next, with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

The attendance averaged 1,875 at each performance, according to the official figures. The maximum seating capacity of the Grand Ball Room is 1,800. Crowds were turned from the Grand Ball Room nightly, and all of the seats were filled at the matinees.

On Thursday evening, June 3, the Hoi Scholastikoi, an educational society which was formed in 1732, bought out the Grand Ball Room for its one hundred and eighty-eighth annual meeting, and almost 2,000 university and public school instructors gave the production their unqualified indorsement.

Says Children Should See Picture.

During the dinner Assemblyman Martin G. McCue, one of the speakers of the evening, praised the picture and said it should be shown to every school child in the country as an example of what a young man can accomplish by living a clean life and hitting straight from the shoulder when necessary. Frank D. Wilsey, who presided at the dinner, said the picture was refreshingly wholesome and exciting.

When the American Legion of New York County decided to have the Grand Ball Room showings under its auspices, showmen predicted that followers of motion pictures could not be induced to attend paid exhibitions in a big hotel.

But their judgment proved wrong. In the first place, when the Grand Ball Room showings were decided on a big campaign of advertising and publicity was mapped out by the New York County Legion and Robertson-Cole. Twenty-four sheet stands were put up all over the city, and there was a profusion of ones, threes and sixes. One-sheets were placed on the billboards of subway and elevated stations. Oil paintings of Carpentier and scenes from the production were displayed in the windows of the large stores in the city, and thousands of window cards were sent out. Door hangers were distributed to the various posts of the Legion in New York and Legion members took care of these, as well as the window cards.

Big Newspaper Advertising.

Another big preliminary move was to send engraved announcements to 3,000 of the most prominent people in the city. Decorated booths were installed in the Waldorf-Astoria, the McAlpin, the Astor and other big hotels, and women interested in the Legion sold tickets there. Besides the ticket-selling angle these booths had big values as lobby displays in the big hotels.

Next came a big newspaper advertising campaign. Big ads were displayed in the amusement columns of all the New York dailies, beginning one week before the opening and running every day thereafter.

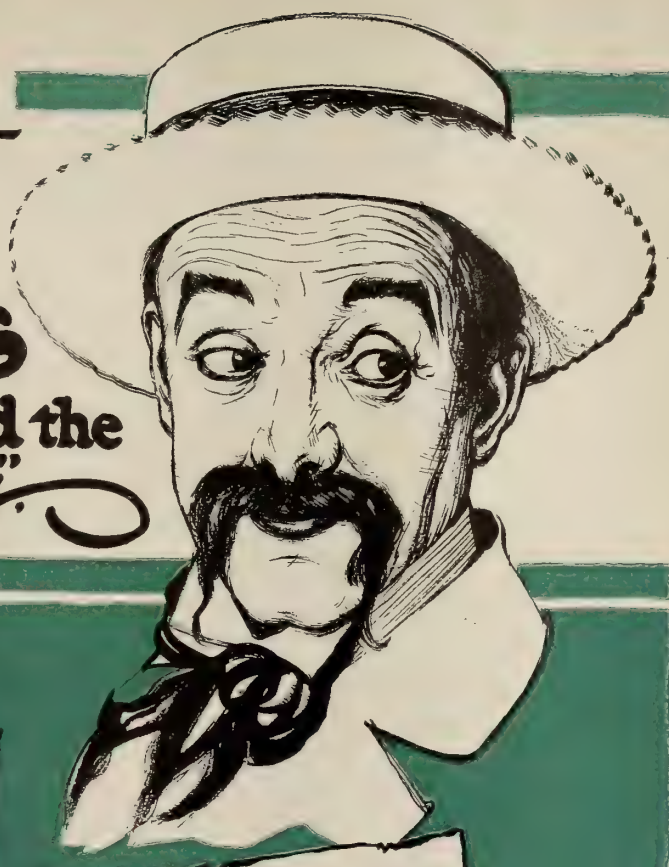
ROLIN ONE REEL COMEDIES

with "Snub" Pollard and the funny little darky, "Sammy"



"Cut Your Cards," (Snub Pollard Comedy Released by Pathe. One Reel.) An amusing card game is the piece de resistance of this comedy. Snub and a pal are dodging the landlady when they fall headlong into a "quiet game" being held by various gentlemen of color, Hibernians and Jews. The new arrivals are warned that the game is on the level and to prove it each player produces a weapon. Revolvers, raisors, lead pipes and axes are some of the implements carried as means of protection by the gentlemen. Snub carefully manages to sneak the hand which a burly chap is betting his entire fortune upon, and, of course, the scene ends in one of those wild riots without which no slap-stick comedy is complete. The picture contains fun of a hilarious sort and no lack of action. Snub Pollard with his soulful and innocent expression puts a lot of fun into the card game, and where feminine pulchritude is needed he is ably assisted by a pretty brunette who revels in the name of Marie Mosquini.

"Speed to Spare," (Snub Pollard Comedy in One Reel. Released Through Pathe.) Snub Pollard is seen as an elevator boy in this extremely amusing short subject. Most of the comedy arises from the sprightly manner in which Snub dashes into his elevator when trouble approaches, and dodges all sorts of people by landing at the floors just vacated by his pursuers. Eventually he captures a gang of desperados by allowing them to chase him and then steering them into a jail. Snub is assisted in the merriment by the little colored chap who provides so many laughs in these features. The picture is highly amusing, is lively every foot of the way and is sure of putting an audience in the best of humor.

TRADE REVIEW

"Trotting Through Turkey"—Pathe

Few single reel comedies have been produced on as elaborate a scale as this one. The settings and draperies throughout hold the eye, the photography is unusually good and the entire affair a very satisfactory offering. It opens with a scene in the Palace of a Turkish sultan, where a giant wrestler manhandles his hapless opponents. Snub Pollard, starred in the piece, and his little colored companion appear upon the scene to shoot stuff for a news weekly, teach the members of the harem how to shimmie and incur the Sultan's displeasure. Snub is pitted against the giant grappler and with the aid of the peppery fluid is returned the victor. That scheme in itself is not especially humorous, due to the many forms in which it has been employed, but the reel has much that is of value, is splendidly staged and ranks with Pollard's better ones.

"Drink Hearty"—Pathe

Prohibition has been used as a source of humor in more than one comedy, but the barn gin-mill in this one has been filmed so as to result in giggles and much of the material used is clever. Snub Pollard is the star and works earnestly. The mustached comedian looks funny enough and does not shirk work. In this he has been given satisfactory stuff and the result is an acceptable reel—another of his good ones.

Georges Carpentier in "The Wonder Man" A Cleanup if He Is Properly Exploited

By EPES W. SARGENT

CALCULATED at line rates for reading notices, it is probable that ten million dollars would not cover the newspaper space given Georges Carpentier in the papers of the United States during the past five or six years. Some managements are going to book him in the Robertson-Cole production of "The Wonder Man" and discover to their surprise that unless they add a few of their own dollars to the sum total he will not be the clean-up they anticipate.

Other, and wiser, managers will realize that they must spend a little money to make this national advertising their own, and these will gain large returns upon their investment.

It is the purpose of this story to give emphasis to the necessity for this investment.

Make Him Your Own.

No actor, pugilist or actor-pugilist has ever gained a greater volume of space in a given time than has Carpentier, particularly in the past year. He is as well known as Pershing, or Foch, or Clemenceau, and far better known than the present President of France.

Under such circumstances it would appear that all that was necessary would be to advertise the fact that you have him as an attraction at your house. This is very true, but you must advertise him. You must link all of this wide publicity to your particular house for specified days. You cannot do it with a couple of one sheets and a slide. You must capitalize this wide publicity and connect it to your house. You must fill each individual in your town with the desire to see this most talked-of person.

Start Early; Work Late.

It is not sufficient that people know that Carpentier will play your house. Your position is not unlike that of the engineer who sits in the cab of the locomotive ready to take out the flyer. He has the steam pressure; he has a locomotive which is the refinement of mechanical art, and yet unless he throws over the lever in the quadrant he gets action only from the pop valve. Advertising is your lever. Exploitation is your quadrant. A full head of steam is provided, but you must manipulate it.

The press book supplied by the company is complete. It lists an amplitude of cuts and offers you about all of the press material your local papers will consume. This material is in such form that you can cut instead of copying. Your labor has been reduced to a minimum, but you must do some of the work if you want to collect.

Follow the Plan Book.

Turn first of all to page eleven of the plan book. There you will find a chronological guide to exploitation. Here a practical press worker tells you just what to do and the order in which things should be done. All you have to do is to follow the plan book, suiting the outlay to your purse.

For example, two sets of teasers are given. Five of these are merely the suggestions for type advertisements, which can be made in any size and style from a single inch to a double three or four. If you cannot afford cuts and large spaces, use these.

If you can spend more money, use the cut teaser set. Perhaps you can afford the cuts but cannot afford the newspaper space. In this event put them on throwaways and distribute them over the same routes for five successive days, ending a day or two before the showing. If you use them in the newspaper, start earlier, to make room for a couple of strong flashes before the showing. If you cannot do one, you can surely do the other.

Book for a Run.

If you take the film for a day, you cannot afford to spend the money you can allow for a three-day or a week run. Try and get runs for the longer time, since by spending more money you can gain greater revenue. If you lack the nerve to gamble, book for a couple of days with an option of a return date in a few weeks, but it is better to clean up the first time and perhaps you can then get a return anyhow.

Hook-Ups Are Suggested.

The suggestion for a hook-up page is good, though in many sections the shortage of white paper will prevent your obtaining a double or even a single newspaper page. If this is so, get out your own hook-up page as a throwaway. Get the merchants to come in with you on a combination sheet. Then each merchant will display the sheet in his window and will be in line for other window work in the way of stills and cut-out displays.

Try the Measurements.

Page 17 gives you the measurements of the star. During the run of the first Kellerman picture her measurements were printed in black as a tape measure. It is sufficient to get just the measurements, starting with the mark at 13 inches for the forearm and running up to forty inches for the chest or 5 feet 11 inches for the height.

Work the competition and try and secure the man who most nearly approximates the measurements as an attraction for the run. Let him appear in dress suit and then fighting trunks during the showing of the picture and make the appearance a local event.

There are many twists to be given this idea, and all of them will arouse local interest.

And the Societies.

You can surely work on the society hook-ups, with the Legion, the French club or class and the ministers. This is always good for newspaper work as local news, particularly if you get the names of the crowd. A story with names is always worth more to an editor than a story which merely says that the American Legion or the French Students' Club will visit the house. The latter is an item of news, but the former is a circulation getter as well. You have something to sell the editor. Sell him names, if you can.

Try Limericks Too.

The Limerick contest is a good stunt. If you have a daily paper, try for that. If there is only a weekly, work your screen. Start the stunt in the newspaper a couple of weeks before the showing, and then announce that the screen will show the winners.

But work the contest right. Don't offer one stingy prize. Have a grand prize for the best limerick and a daily prize of smaller value for each day your house is open or the paper is issued. Keep the interest up every day instead of having one big day at the end of the contest. Let the audience do the judging.

The Prologue.

The plan book also suggests a prologue. The suggestion is made that a creeper title be used. As the company does not supply this title, and the footage will be considerable, it would be more practical to work the tableau as suggested, but to have some one with a clear voice read or recite the Does Carpentier Win? Don't Ask Silly Questions!

Of course he does—wins the bout and the girl and the plaudits of the crowd and the good, hard American dollars, which are worth more than five francs each; and he'll win for you if you play him across the board, which is the most important win of all.

text. In many instances the employment of some local star will prove an advertising point of greater value than the film will yield.

Don't make the mistake of staging a boxing bout as a prelude. This will murder all chance of working on the society atmosphere. If you feel you must use the local boxers, work them at some prior performance. Take the last show the Saturday before the opening and use that for an athletic carnival, or work it away from the house, at some athletic club or hall, but don't try to mix fights and a society picture and expect to get full value for the society angle. Remember that nine-tenths of Carpentier's popularity is based upon the fact that he is a clean-cut- likeable young chap who can scrap and who is willing to scrap when occasion offers or necessity requires, but, like James J. Corbett, his social abilities win.

Get This and Remember.

Just write this on the tablets of your memory. About half of the men and all of the women are interested in Carpentier because he is not like the typical pugilist. That is why you can sell him to advantage. That is why he is offered in an alleged society drama instead of a ring story.

Don't spill the beans by mixing him up with the local mixed ale pugs unless you hate him enough to be willing to sacrifice your profits to give him a black eye.

Cutout Stuff.

If you are at all clever with the brush, get two of the one sheets showing the fat boy and the darkey scrapping. Paint out the arms on one and mount the arms from the other to get motion. Work this for a window display with a small motor. It will be worth the trouble you take.

Several of the poses of the star will yield good action cutouts, but do not animate them. Leave the fighting to the kiddies for the reasons given above.

Get these cutouts all over town. If you have a hook-up page with the local advertisers, try and get a cutout into each window. If you have no hook-up, try and get the hook-up anyhow. You can do a lot with that three sheet showing Carpentier holding Miss Binney in his arms. In her right hand she can be made to hold a candy box, a toilet preparation or a can of corn. It can be worked for any store. If you have any doubts, order a single three sheet in advance of your paper order and sell to the stores by sample, making up a cutout and showing each merchant how it can work with his particular line.

And Presswork.

And to end with the beginning, do your press work early, often and with enthusiasm. There are two smashing good cuts in three column width. One is for the main sheet and the other for the sporting section. If you cannot sell one or both of these to the local paper by offering the cut free, you are a bit slow. The chances are that your editor has already paid out real money for syndicate or boiler plate on the Frenchman, and he will appreciate something he does not have to pay for.

Carpentier is—or should be—easy to plant. You can plant him easier than you can Mary Pickford or Chaplin or any of the regular photoplay stars. He is live news. He is going to keep on being live news. Tell your editor you'll give him the cut if he will run it at once, and he can have it to use when Carpentier meets his ring engagements. Don't hire the cut and offer to loan it. Be a sport and give it to the editor. If he uses it, the space is worth more than what you have to pay for the cut, isn't it? Look at it in that light.

You may even use this stuff to get the hard-boiled editor in the habit of taking stuff for other plays as they come along.

Pictures Revealing American Boyhood Are Planned by Judge for Educational

MOTION pictures made from the stories by Judge Willis Brown, one of the best known authorities of today on the American boy, are hereafter to be released by Educational Films Corporation. The pictures will be in two reels and there will be at least one and probably two releases a month, the first being available at an early date. Twelve of the pictures are ready for laboratory work and production on others will be started in a short time.

Judge Will Be Director.

Judge Brown, who personally produces the pictures, has devoted the greater portion of his life to work among the boys, and embraces the rare qualities of knowing his subjects thoroughly, of being able to write and having the motion picture technique that enables him to produce quality films. As a matter fact, before he began producing these two-reel pictures of boy subjects he was well known in the motion picture field with his work on "The Girl Who Won Out," with Violet MacMillan; "The Saint's Adventure," featuring Henry B. Walthall, and "The Spirit of '17," in which Jack Pickford appeared.

Built "Boy City."

But Judge Brown has won greater attention by originating many important and unique methods of dealing with the juvenile problem. "Boy City" is his idea, the first one being established at Charlevoix, Mich. Every one who reads the magazines and newspapers knows the large amount of publicity that this attracted. He originated the first Parental Court in Gary, Ind., where he encouraged the youth to become better American citizens rather than merely administered punishment. In Salt Lake City he established a similar court. Much of his time has been devoted to writing and to lecturing on these subjects.

First of the "Judge Brown Stories," as they will be known, were made during the latter days of General Film Company's activities. While they did not get the wide circulation desired at that time, they attracted much attention.

Series of a Dozen.

Under the contract just signed Educational will control all of the Judge Brown pictures, and the ones that have been exhibited in some cities will be available to those who have not yet shown them. At the same time there will be a sufficient number of new productions to supply theatres with pictures that have not been exhibited before.

The new series includes "The Discoverer," "The Case of Bennie," "Kid Politics," "The Demand of Dugan," "Gumdrops and Overalls," "Jim's Sister," "Dog vs. Dog," "Frank's Endorser," "The Boy-Built City," "Shift-the-Gear Frank," "Danny Asks Why" and "The Love of Bob."

Professional Thieves Now Become Actors to Steal Studio Jewelry

HIGH-CLASS thieves have advanced now to where they add professional acting to their accomplishments and have been successful in their work among several motion picture studios around New York. Costly garments and expensive jewelry are no longer legendary among the film players and offer as tempting inducements to major crooks as do the homes of the wealthy.

Investigations show "extra men" who get their engagements through agencies are the innocent allies of the canny thieves. Through various systems of information they learn of young men who are to work at a certain studio to which they wish to gain entrance. They approach the young men, give some plausible excuse for wanting the work and pay them more than the regular wages for the privilege.

Two of these men presented themselves for work at the D. W. Griffith studio, to appear with several hundred others in one of the big scenes in "Way Down East." The first night they stole a motion picture camera with extra lenses, valued at $2,800. On the second night an expensive sable coat was stolen. The alarm was sounded before any of the extra people had left and their baggage was searched. The cape was not there.

All the extra people then were taken to the set and the full battery of lights turned on. Mr. Griffith addressed the gathering as though he were explaining his plans for their work the next day. The temperature rapidly rose under the lights. One man began to perspire profusely. He was asked to excuse himself and the fur was found under his coat. But while the high-priced fur was recovered, three neck furs valued at $2,100 were taken.

The losses from several studios have become so great that a nationally known detective firm has been retained for protection.

Realart's Sixth Star Picked by Jury of Varied Interests

REPORTS current in trade circles for some time that Realart had signed a sixth star were confirmed this week. General Manager J. S. Woody was in Cleveland attending the convention, but President Morris Kohn admitted that the sixth star had been selected. He would not say, however, that the contract had been actually signed.

Mr. Kohn stated that the new star had been selected for the company by a jury of twelve well-known literary, artistic and professional people in New York City, including a prominent exhibitor and representing almost every walk in life. The jury, it is understood, was empanelled recently and gave the company its decision this week.

Officials of the company had been considering a number of candidates for some time. By the process of elimination the total was reduced until any of those remaining would, in the eyes of the company's officials, have proved a desirable addition to the Realart galaxy of beauty and talent.

The choice, it was decided, should be put up to a jury of representative people on the theory that their verdict would be based principally on the candidate's appeal as a star personality. All the candidates considered by the jury had previously been examined and approved as to their present and probable box-office value.

The jury, according to Mr. Kohn, will be announced next week.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Bumble Bees and Babies Buzz and Bawl When Circuit Players Swing the Ax

By GIEBLER

IT has been a quiet week in Filmland, and from all indications it is going to be quieter for some folks. We are suffering from a shortage of gas. The press agents haven't walked out, or anything like that—I don't mean that kind of gas, I mean the kind of gas you can step on.

Car owners of our Fair City are about to be put on gasoline rations. If they don't save, conserve, economize, pinch, scrape and otherwise stop using such heavy feet when they drive their cars, the essential oil will be refused to all except for essential journeys, and unless somebody can figure out that a trip to Tia Juana is essential to the upkeep of something else besides the polka dotted pebbles and the ponies at that popular resort, there are going to be many sad hearts among us.

The Studio Publicists have elected a new president to replace Capt. Huntington, who resigned. Ham Beall is the new executive. I suppose a lot of folks would call him Harry Hammond Beall because of this important rise, but he's still the same old Ham to me.

Music to the Ears.

Speaking of press agents—the movement to elevate this ancient and honorable calling by giving it a tony name seems to be still going on. Somebody called Clark Irvine a "publiciteur" the other day.

Outside of the above there is little to disturb the even tenor of our way unless it is the hot weather. Being a native son now, I should explain that the hot weather in our Fair City is not like the hot weather in other towns.

It gets hot out here all right, but it's a nice dry heat, you know—like our rains. Read any dope on temperature about any town touting for the summer tourist traffic and you'll get what I'm trying to put over.

Eddie Sutherland, Tony Moreno, Bill Duncan, Jack Gilbert and Wallace MacDonald have set up a tent village on the roof of the L. A. Athletic Club, where they will sleep during the summer, thus preventing the temperature from getting their goats, and proving that an actor can get to the top sooner or later if he tries hard enough—and there are any tall buildings in town.

Rail Traffic Heavy.

The colony has been enriched by the arrival of Hugh Hoffman, who came out from New York to write the continuity of Eddie Polo's new serial, "Circus Life." Hugh blew in Sunday night on the Sunshine Limited, in company with Eddy Polo and Mrs. Eddy, Louis J. Gasnier, Rosemary Theby and Sessue Hayakawa.

M. C. Levee, vice-president and general manager of the Brunton studios, has come back with a lot of kind words about the East. Eric Van Stroheim has returned and will start the fire under a new production to be called "Foolish Wives," which he will stage at Catalina, where a reproduction of Monte Carlo will be built with the island scenery and mountains as a background.

Basil King, one of the most eminent of the many eminent authors at Goldwyn, took a short vacation and the east-bound cars this week. Just before seizing the rattler Mr. King paused long enough to speak in enthusiastic tones anent the sunny southland and to state the welcome news that he would return to us ere long.

As a matter of fact, Mr. King has gone East to help Mrs. King beat up the rugs and pack up the kitchen cabinet and the parlor furniture preparatory to their removal of our Fair City.

Once here the Kings will select a Street Called Straight somewhere in the City of Comrades called Filmland, and with a High Heart and the hopes of becoming permanent residents, set up their lares and penates under their own vine and Wild Olive tree.

The news has sifted in that Hurry Home Van Loan has dug up the return half of his ticket and is hurrying hitherwards with a hatful of contracts for plays and an especially urgent order in the story line to be executed for Hope Hampton.

Rehearsals for the all-star and all-talk performance of "Arizona," to be given for the benefit of the American Legion, are going ahead under full steam with Theodore Roberts as stage director.

Wallace MacDonald and Doris May have given romance a setback by denying the rumor of their marriage.

Miss Edmonde Seeks New Conquests.

Word comes out of Arizona to the effect that the Doug Fairbanks-Mary Pickford honeymoon excursion to the Hopi Indian reservation was a complete social success. Doug and Mary made a hit with the Hopis and were presented with enough blankets and clay pottery to last them a life time, and were made members of the tribe with an elaborate ceremony.

We have always regarded Doug and Mary as "good Indians" and this proves it. You can't fool the Hopis; they know honest-to-God folks when they see 'em.

I had the pleasure of meeting Frances Edmonde, a new star that will soon be twinkling in the milky way of the movies. Miss Edmonde is a young person of pleasing manner, more than considerable good looks and a moving picture company all of her own.

She has recently returned from Europe, where she made quite a hit in a vaudeville act featuring songs of her own composition. After winning plaudits in Paris and knockin' 'em dead in the music 'alls of London until it got to be old stuff, Miss Edmonde, like Alexander, looked around for new worlds to conquer, picked on the pictures for her next venture, organized a company and went to it.

Movie Cowboys Strike.

The first Frances Edmonde production, which is being filmed at the Garson Studio, will be called "Peggy Wise." The story was written by Elsier La Maie, who is also directing the film, and George Larkin is playing the leading part opposite Miss Edmonde.

A number of our movie cowboys have struck for a raise of two and a half bucks per diem—they were already getting seven-fifty. I suppose it's pretty hard work straddling a cayuse and shooting up movie sets all day long—it's probably worth ten berries. I hope the punchers and the producers get together; western films without cowboys would be sad things, and, on the other hand, if the producers should decide to do without the riders, it would be pretty tough on the boys.

The movie lots are about the only place where they can wear sheepskin pants, pack guns and act bad. The movie cowboy would be considerably out of place on the modern ranch, where the lads that punch the cows wear nifty mail-order suits and make the fall round-up in Fords.

Lesser-Gore Theatre Under Way.

I didn't pick up much production stuff this week. Wherever I went I found them either just getting ready to shoot a picture or just recovering from shooting one. I did manage to edge in on an interesting ceremony, however.

Sol Lesser and the Gore Brothers are going to build a big theatre in Hollywood. The site of the new theatre is at present occupied by an orange grove. The cutting down of the first tree to make ready for the foundation of the new building was made the occasion of impressive doings.

Since the Lesser-Gore combination controls the First National franchise in this territory, and First National films will be shown in the new theatre, it was very fitting and appropriate that First National stars assist in the ceremonies.

An announcement that the oranges on the trees would be picked and passed out to the public and that a number of stars would be present attracted a great crowd. Another announcement, that lunch would be served at the Hollywood Hotel after the ceremonies, attracted me.

It was all most impressive. Jack Callicott, manager of the Kinema Theatre, made a speech and pointed out the first tree that was to be felled.

While the Tree Shook.

Mildred Harris Chaplin struck the first blow, a resounding whack that shook the tree and disturbed a bumble bee looking for a late bloom. Anita Stewart then assumed the axe and administered a series of sharp, lady-like licks. There was considerable drama to Miss Stewart's work, but it had little effect on the tree.

George Beban came forward, adjusted his glasses, spit on his hands—Spang! The tree shook to its topmost branches! The crowd cheered—a small baby burst into tears. George dropped the axe and took the bambino in his arms to comfort it. I examined the tree—there were three distinct dents on the bole that bore mute testimony of the fierceness of the attack made upon it by the sturdy stars.

They started distributing the oranges, and while this was going on George Beban got Carter De Haven to help him, and the tree was actually cut down without allowing King Vidor, Jimmy Young or Katherine MacDonald, who were all there and longing for a chance, an opportunity of striking a single blow.

Poole Leaves the California

Robert H. Poole, managing director of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, since S. L. Rothapfel left for New York, has resigned to take the management of Harold Bell Wright's works. Mr. Poole's distinctive presentations at the California have won him a splendid reputation in the motion picture world.

"Bab's Candidate"

Barbara Marvin took an active interest in politics for just one reason—she loved a man who wanted to be elected to something.

Did she help the man she loved to get elected? She did not.

Bab selected the most absurd candidate imaginable, and elected him in clever fashion. She conducted the campaign to defeat her fiance because she believed politics was not his proper career, and subsequent events proved she was right.

"Bab's Candidate"

Advertising and Exploitation

Both New Stunts and Old Brought Coin for Toledo Showing of "The Deep Purple"

WHILE there is nothing new under the sun and things are not much better when the moon shines, working old ideas that are comparatively new to your locality will help to clean up. Recently the Temple Theatre, Toledo, aided and abetted by Ace Berry, of the Mayflower, put over "The Deep Purple" in fine shape and the only kick came from the box-office girl, who had to work overtime.

Hooking up with the Blade, a daily story was run; a detective story in the course of which some hint was given as to the location of a deep purple envelope containing cash or ticket prizes. The hint was obscure, yet sufficiently plain to permit a clever person to work it out.

They Eat It Up.

Most persons like detective stories and most of them think themselves clever. It was a fine chance to do a little sleuthing, and they went to it almost to a man—and woman. Several envelopes were planted each day, and each day there was a rush for the Blade and then a rush for the spots supposed to be indicated by the stories. Some false leads were given as well as straight tips, so as not to make it too easy.

Where it is desired to amplify this scheme, it would be possible to work in the local merchants for the prizes and induce them to advertise, too.

And it was a splendid circulation stunt for the Blade. It may be recalled that this was developed as a circulation scheme by the English weekly papers before 1914, and the craze reached such a height that considerable property damage was done before the authorities stopped the planting on private property.

The Blade newsboys were invited to a special morning showing of the film, and some 600 sellers and carriers were provided with tags which served as their tickets of admission. These were given out early and the boys were all over town advertising the show.

Later they were formed into a parade and marched through the streets to the theatre, but the most effective advertising was done while the boys were on their jobs.

And with a circus in town the Temple got a four-horse perambulator and tagged in after the parade, later parking on the circus lot and further advertising the attraction.

All of these stunts are old, though the tag stunt shows some new ideas, but combined they drove business in. Of course newspaper work and lithographs were used to supplement the stunt stuff, for stunt stuff alone seldom works to the limit, but the stunts made the advertising read.

Intensive Memphis Campaign Put Over DeMille Feature

THIRTY-FIVE thousand pieces of literature and a ten-day front page contest were a couple of things used by G. E. Brown to put over "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Strand, Memphis. He didn't just break the record. He played to more money by a third than any picture house in Memphis ever took before. Brown knows, because he is general press man for the S. A. Lynch Memphis string, controlling practically all the larger houses. It is estimated that one out of every four white persons in Memphis saw the picture.

He not only broke the record, but he cleaned the Lynch houses in Atlanta, Birmingham, New Orleans, Dallas and other southern points on their "Male and Female" and "Miracle Man" records.

He used pretty nearly everything, including car and auto cards, window cards, doorknobs, banners and heralds. He hooked the Chamber of Commerce to a local to run on the same program and they carried this local subject on their letter heads, 1,500 window cards, 2,000 street cards and 150 car cards.

And there was a letter contest on the ideal husband or wife with $25 for the top prize which brought in 1,100 letters. The stuff ran as full as four columns on the front page in a single day, and it ran ten days. Outside of that and a few little ideas on the side, Mr. Brown just loafed on the job.

Comps on Birthday List Help to Make Business

COLONEL FRED LEVY is owner of a Louisville theatre, holds the First National franchise for that section, and also owns a clothing store, the latter specializing in juvenile wear.

The clothing clerks have instructions to get data as to the birth date of all young patrons, and a day or two before the young man's next birthday he receives a letter enclosing a pass for two and offering congratulations on the anniversary.

It seldom happens that the pass is used without the purchase of additional tickets, and frequently the receipt of the pass suggests a theatre party as the form of celebration, representing the sale of many tickets.

Colonel Levy owns his own store and finds it easy to obtain the data, but it should not be difficult to hook in with outside stores by sending tickets ostensibly as the gift of the store or the store and theatre jointly.

It is one of those little stunts which can be built into an institution.

It May Be Carrying Coals to Newcastle, But They Eat Up Northwest Stories in the Great Northwest.

How the Strand Theatre, Tacoma, dressed up its lobby for the showing of "Back to God's Country" and "The River's End," both First National attractions. For the latter the doorman is dressed as a mounted policeman to help add to the realism of the display. The heads on the stumps are cutouts from lithographs.

Which of These Two Divers Do You Prefer?

Closed Schools for Film

WHEN the Shackleton South Pole picture, "The Bottom of the World," played Omaha, the management of the Moon Theatre persuaded the High School to close for the day that the pupils might see this really educational picture. This stunt was worked by Oscar Doob for "The Copperhead" and "Huckleberry Finn," but this is about the first time the schools have been closed for an educational, though Robertson-Cole, who have the release, have shown it in a number of the high schools of the New York system.

Hooked Navy Recruiters to "Below the Surface" for Week

BECAUSE the United States Navy knows the value of advertising, it seems to have become the one best bet with motion picture theatres, and some unusual stunts have been pulled in connection with the Army and Navy Recruiting services, but particularly with the Navy.

Used Deep Sea Diver.

But a better-than-usual hook-up was effected in Los Angeles recently by the Grauman staff when the Bosworth production of "Below the Surface" was getting its first screenings at the Imperial. For a solid week one of the Navy side cars patrolled the streets with a deep sea diver, as comfortable as his dress would permit him to be, in the car, and with a banner for the house.

Recruiters Saw the Point.

The Navy recruiting men are quick to see the value of the tie-up. They know that anything different from the straight appeal is going to help them as well as the other fellow and instead of making it difficult to combine they are looking for opportunities.

And here is a great lesson to theatre managers. Like the Navy, they should realize that their general line of advertising is more or less familiar. Anything new will command ten times the attention. Don't be afraid to give the other fellow his share of any hook-up. It will help the house as well.

He's on His Way to Keep a Date with Annette Kellerman.
How the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, got the Navy to help sell recruiting and Hobart Bosworth in "Below the Surface." It worked for a whole week for both parties.

It All Depends on the Sort of Wife You Have.
We could name a lot of exhibitors who would be willing to swap their other halves—at least temporarily—for this young woman who broke up a Salvation Army rally in Oakland.

False Teeth Bit Into Large Chunks of Telling Publicity

PUTTING over a picture with a lost and found ad—just one—is something else again. It was worked by Manager Brubeck, of the T. & D. Theatre, Stockton. After the first showing of Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure" the theatre announced that a pair of false teeth had been found and awaited an owner.

This was a plant for a news story which ran to the effect that the teeth were found on the floor by the cleaners and presumably had been laughed out of some careless person's mouth. It made a readable story, and it got over, even though people wondered who could be so careless as to drop a set of teeth without knowing it. Later the teeth were exhibited in the lobby alongside the newspaper account.

Who Wouldn't Change His Wife for This Sea-Vamp?

LOOKING for something different for "Why Change Your Wife?" P. E. Read, of Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, Cal., got the snappiest bathing suit he could find and stuffed it with an attractive girl. He intended her for the prologue, but she looked so good he put her in a sedan all dressed up with banners and sent her out to the aviation field, where the Salvation Army was holding a field day. No one got a stiff neck looking at the flying 'buses while the bather was around and about 25,000 people got a straight tip on the show. Later in the week she was used around town and cleaned up some more.

"Got There" with Ease.

She also served to help along the window displays with the Swanson creation featured, but her strong point was as a street attraction and she got there with both feet—clear to the knees and beyond.

If You Can't Get Coin, Go After Some Eggs

Cootie Fliver Caught the Christie Comedy Chasers

BORROWING the original "cootie flivver" used in the Christie comedy, "Petticoats and Pants," gave the Hollywood Theatre, Los Angeles, a good lobby feature. There was a bunch of kids around the ancient boat from the time school let out until supper time—and after.

The Christie Cootie Car.

This flivver was loaned by the Christie company, but there is nothing to prevent any aboriginal Ford being dragged out of obscurity to blaze in the lobby lights for this showing. Make a fuss over it and offer a couple of tickets to any one who will drive up in a car still older. It's a safe offer, and if you specify that the cars must arrive at least ten minutes before the evening show you can make a good ballyhoo at the cost of a few admissions.

Threw Eggs at Dempsey

Putting over the first episode of the Jack Dempsey serial, the Jackson Theatre, Heber Springs, Ark., made the admission price one egg for kids and two eggs for adults. Outside of the fact that some of the kids borrowed the eggs from setting hens the experiment was a huge success and it put the serial over to a larger first night than any previous production.

Ship by Truck Week Served to Boom "Down on the Farm"

DECLARING in on the national "Ship by Truck" week, the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, was represented in the parade by a float planned by Manager L. R. Towns and built by Harry Holt, of the theatre's sign department. We don't know whether Towns or Holt got the box of cigars which should have gone to the man using the cigar strip on the side of the cottage, but they each deserved a box. As shown in the cut, the display had for its basis a shack barn, but the tree in the back yard merges with the trees in the background, and this bit of realism is lost. The passengers were a live farm boy, a cutout Ben Turpin and Marie Prevost, a cow, calf, goat, duck, dog and some chickens, and no display attracted more attention along the line of the parade. It was a clean-cut stunt and worthy of more than passing notice.

Being Up-to-date Won Large Crowds Against the Handicap of Race Week

DIVIDED between a blessing and a handicap, J. B. Elliott used his head and forgot that there was such a thing as failure. Where some men would have curled up, he only worked the harder and perhaps made more than he might have done with no obstacles to face.

Mr. Elliott decided that "Male and Female" should clean up for race week at Lexington, Ky. Racing is an institution in the bluegrass country and he figured that the huge crowds in attendance would want somewhere to go in the evening and that they could look at "Male and Female" with less eye and mental strain than upon most pictures.

But the Lexington Opera House was not a regular picture theatre with an established clientele. It was a drama house, and it was not on a traveled thoroughfare where a ballyhoo would work.

Called in Assistance.

Manager Scott called in J. E. Firnkoess, of the Cincinnati office of Famous Players-Lasky, and the three of them went to work. The star stunt was to be a ten page supplement. They got it all up, the ads were contracted for and the cuts and special stories put into the form and then—blooey!

The paper shortage hit the office. A carload was lost, strayed or stolen and the paper could not get out its own supplements, let alone the theatrical special. It would not even give the full page promised for the main section. It had to go down to 300 lines.

Elliott, Scott and Firnkoess got together and chanted "Are We Disheartened? NO!" and peeled their coats off.

There Were Other Ways.

If the paper could not help there were other ways. They got hold of some yellow stock and printed up fake telegrams. Every hotel guest got one of these. More lithographs were telegraphed for, and dodgers and heralds were employed to supplement the telegrams.

They got this distributed matter all over the city.

Then someone noticed the rushing trade in tips. All over the town men were selling "Bunco Bill's Best Three Selections," "Hairless Harry's Handy Handicaps" and about a million more tips from the touts.

To see was to get a hunch, and presently the city was flooded with cheap manila envelopes printed up in red:

BEST BET OF THE DAY.

The envelopes were sealed and inside was a slip, cut to fit, reading that "You can't lose" with an advertisement for the play.

Perhaps some of them were sold—along with the purchasers—but mostly, and originally, they were handed out, and were snapped up eagerly.

As a result of all this hustling, "Male and Female" really was the best bet of the week. The matinee business was not so good, but the nights! Man! Those nights!

There were a lot of people who did not get to see the picture, but that was largely because the Opera House could not hold the entire town and its visitors. More might have seen it had the police and fire departments been willing, but all who could be crowded in were there, and what promised to be a failure turned out to be a cleanup, because a bunch of hustlers refused to be discouraged.

SEND IN YOUR STUNT. IT WILL HELP OTHERS.

"Ship by Truck" Applies Even to Advertising.

Birmingham held a "Ship by Truck" parade and the Strand Theatre was represented by a float which advertised "Down on the Farm" with a real country boy, cutouts of Turpin and Marie Prevost, and a heap of live stock and stuff.

If You Use Americans; Use the New Stickers

Now Navy Helps Put Over "The Virgin of Stamboul"

ONLY an optimist would suggest that the acceptance by the United States of the Armenian Mandate would give recruits a chance to see "The Virgin of Stamboul" in her native lair, but that's the way the Strand, Cleveland, managed to get in with the Navy.

Captain Stanley H. Lewis, recruiting officer for the Cleveland district, saw the chance for good copy and arranged to have his forces distribute several thousand cards, the text of which is so good that we give it to help others:

"If you think you possess the requisites of courage, physique, resourcefulness, coolness in the hour of danger, as exemplified by 'Captain Pemberton' in this production, you are of the calibre required in the United States Navy.

"If the United States assumes the mandatory over Armenia, it means that American battleships will be sent to Turkey to further massacres by the Turks. Don't you want to go? Think it over.

"Do you wish to meet and talk with the strange folk of foreign lands? To hear the call of the muezzin at dusk from the minaret of the mosque? The temple bells of Mandalay—the soft surges washing the tropic beach—the lure of far lands and of spicy isles of the sea—the tang of the salt spray as the spindrift sprinkles the fo'c'sle—and the jolly, roistering liberty parties where Jack, ashore, exchanges gay repartee in 'pidgin' English with the silk-clad, turbaned, bearded merchants, or the laughing-eyed girls of the mysterious Orient—its a Man's life, 'round the world and back again! 'The Virgin of Stamboul' will show you a few of the wondrous sights you will see as a member of the Uncle Sam's Navy."

Free Admission Coupon Got Thirteen Hundred Children

OFFERING a coupon good for a free admission, plus war tax, enabled G. E. Brown, publicity director of the Memphis Enterprises, to put over the serial, "The Lost City," to a literally howling start.

The coupon was printed in the local papers and was good only for the first of the two days of showing the first episode. The courtesy was limited to children under thirteen, but there were a hundred times thirteen to pay their war tax and crowd into the house.

The second day the business kept up and the value of the scheme was proven in the weeks following, for so far the two "Lost City" days show a marked increase over the other days of the week. The same kids insist upon coming back, and they bring the grownups with them.

It surely does pay to start a serial off with a bang.

American Specializes in Gummed Feature Stickers

STICKERS worked so well for the salesmen of the American Film Company that these are now being supplied in quantities to exhibitors who may desire them. Until the idea becomes too common through wide copying, the sticker is a useful exhibitor aid and should be freely used for the Flying A specials.

The sticker for "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" has already been noted. Companion pieces are a cutout book in gold, lettered in black for "The House of Toys," and a circular cutout for "The Honey Bee" done in yellow on a blue-black ground.

These are ideal for use on program envelopes, to seal the self-addressing folders instead of paper clips or notary seals, to affix to programs, posters, special mailing cards or stuck up around town. In the latter case care should be exercised not to stick them in places where their presence will be objectionable to the owner of the property. They can be affixed to the glass windshields of autos where the consent of the owner is obtained. They can be attached to local time tables stuck on small circulation newspapers as "ears," or used in a variety of other ways.

Stickers are not new, but their use for film exploitation has been singularly limited.

Ball Started Them Rolling to See What It Was About

USING a man in Oriental dress with a crystal ball was a stunt adopted by the Bijou, Jackson, Mich., to get them interested in the Robertson-Cole production, "The Fortune Teller." The man looked like a cross between a Turk and a Mystic Shriner and stalked about the streets gazing into the ball with as wrapt an expression as street obstacles would permit.

He carried no advertising, but when anyone showed interest he slipped out a card reading: "Who am I? Come to the Bijou Theatre and find out."

Other seers were engaged to give a demonstration inside the house, and between them they made good business. Newspaper stories of the stunt helped to gain interest.

Three Thousand Kids and Most Three Thousand Dogs

OFFERING a free matinee of the first episode of the Jack Dempsey serial, "Daredevil Jack," brought out 3,000 kiddies to the American, Butte. Most of the youngsters brought their dogs along and were allowed to take them into the house. But when the organ struck up and the dogs tried to join in the chorus, the organist quit in despair, and the rest of the show was to the accompaniment of the shouts of the kiddies.

These Cutout Pictures Hold Record for Size and Effect

CUTOUT figures have been urged as money getters, but few managements have accepted the advice as seriously as the Gayso Theatre, Kansas City, which has established a record for size it will require a long time to beat. The pair of cutouts cost $125 in money, but they brought so much business to the theatre that the investment was highly profitable.

The size of the sign may be judged by comparison with the women who stand beside the figure of Maggie. And they did not pick out a couple of dwarfs to pose, at that. The Jiggs series has been a clean-up wherever shown. It is merely a matter of bringing them to the attention of the public, and few can overlook these monsters. It should be possible for other exhibitors in this territory to rent these paintings since there will be a series of the Jiggs pictures. In this way pretentious advertising can be planned at a small cost.

Kipling Says the Female of the Species Is Deadly.

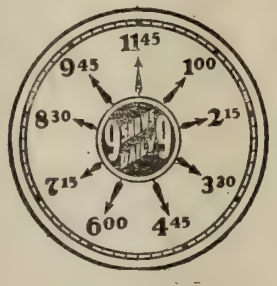
We'll say so. Think of poor Jiggs with a mean tempered helpmeet wielding a wicked four-foot rolling pin! The Gayso, Kansas City, has the record for tall cutouts.

Hook-ups Are Easy if You Work Them Right

Clock Dials Used to Tell Times and Number of Shows

HERE is a little idea which might be adopted by practically every exhibitor in the country. It was originated by G. E. Brown, director of publicity and advertising of the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., of Memphis, Tenn., and Mr. Brown has found through observation at the various theatres for which he handles the publicity that it not only is appreciated by the patrons, but is a decided asset for the theatre.

The circle, which represents in a general way the face of a clock, is made up in three different styles. One indicates the time of starting for performances which run for an hour and fifteen minutes. This permits of nine shows at any of the Memphis theatres.



The Coin Catching Clock.

Another indicates that the theatre is presenting eight shows daily, the arrows pointing to the hours of performance. The third clock dial shows six shows daily, the performances in this instance running for an hour and forty-five minutes.

By not making the clocks pertain distinctly to any one theatre, Mr. Brown is able to use the indicator in any of his advertisements with equal effectiveness. Hundreds of messages of appreciation on the part of patrons and prompt attendance at the various theatres, with the attendant appreciation of the shows, are the direct results of the idea.

It has become the rule in Memphis now, except in overflow crowds, which are not uncommon, for patrons to see the entire show, and every manager knows how much better his pictures go when the patron is there when the title is flashed on the screen.

Try Individual Hook-Up With the Cigar Stores

ON this page are shown three of several painted cards used in the stores of the United Cigar Stores Company in nineteen western cities. There were twenty-six stores in San Francisco alone, and throughout the territory two of these cards were used in each store, one in the show window and the other inside the store. There were a dozen cards in the set, but these give a general idea of the layout. Two of them employ scene stills.

The cigar company finds that it attracts attention to the window and the cigar boomed. The houses playing the Universal-Jewel attraction find the advertising good.

Why not try the chain or individual stores in your section? If the idea is good enough for the largest retail tobacco company in the world, it is good enough for the man who runs the crossroads general store. Try for it. If you offer attractive cards you can make it stick.

Classified Ads Largely Helped Promote the Run of "Miss Hobbs" in Los Angeles

CLASSIFIED Advertising can often help put over a picture when larger spaces will not work as well because they follow a more usual style of display. Sid Grauman played Wanda Hawley in her first Realart release, "Miss Hobbs," and to get over the new star, he worked several extra stunts.

About the best of these was a series of unusual ads in the "classified" section of the paper. To get a proper showing in this solid set matter, an extra payment was made to have the ads white spaced. Most classified sections provide a special rate for this extra display, and yet even at that price it seldom costs as much as straight theatrical advertising.

Scattered the Stuff.

Under the personal heading he ran:

Dear Joe—If you still think I'm wrong, go to Grauman's and see "Miss Hobbs." The photoplay will teach you the meaning of love. I hope it brings you back to me. Mary.

The "Male wanted" brought out a purely humorous appeal in the shape of this:

Young man over nine feet tall and weighing more than 400 pounds to do tatting in spare hours. Phone "Miss Hobbs: at 60594."

In similar vein the female column carried an appeal for a college bred girl over 21 years of age and weighing less than 90 pounds to do blacksmith work.

Where He Splurged.

But it was the lost and found department which got most of the announcements, because the lost and found displays are read by many who never look at the situations wanted. Knowing this, the lost column got the strongest play.

One announcement called for the return of a hippopotamus, answering to the name of Clarisse, lost on a street car, and another called for a small pocket book containing a head of lettuce and a loaf of bread.

These got a laugh and helped to centre attention on the title. Sometimes a more serious vein, hinging on some situation in the play.

Play It Right.

Lem Stewart, of the Southern Enterprises, was the first to make a specialty of classified advertisements, and he has made it pay well. Most of his towns are smaller than Los Angeles, and the classified spaces are more closely read, but it is evident that even in the larger places the classified advertisement can be put over, and worked either as a teaser or as a follow-up campaign.

Unless there are few advertisements, they should be specially displayed, either through the use of white space or full face type, and the personal and lost and found departments are the best bets.

Try the stunt some time and see how it works for you.

Enthusiastic on Keenan Film

The manager of the Lyric Theatre, Uniontown, Pa., was so enthusiastic over Frank Keenan in "Brothers Divided" that he offered to refund the admission price to anyone who could say it was not one of the best pictures they had ever seen. He announced this belief in 24 point bold in a three eighteens, and then went on "If you like Honey Dew and Spring Flowers—Blue Skies and Soft Breezes—The Carol of Birds and the Sunshine of Happiness—and Laughing, Crooning Babies" you will go to see the film. He certainly carried conviction, but that is the only way. When you have a picture you have faith in get behind it and push hard.

Save Up Your Coupons and Get the Set.

Three of the twelve styles of window cards which the Universal, San Francisco, exploitation man got into the stores of the United Cigar Stores Company in nineteen Pacific Coast cities. There were two signs to the store and from two to twenty-six stores to the town.

"Silver Hordes" Bring in the Nice Thin Dimes

Suggests School Teachers for Press Agent Persons

PETER ANTONOPLOS, who manages the Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, suggests that in the present day of underpaid educators it might be possible to engage school teachers as press agents "on the side." He himself has tried out a teacher, who gave such excellent results with "A Virtuous Vamp" that he has been tried out successfully on other releases and is working now on "The River's End."

Mr. Antonoplos argues that the teacher is a person of superior education; generally college bred and presumably full of good ideas. They are, in the main, so sadly underpaid that they will be glad to try press work to augment their small salaries.

The idea is interesting and seems to have worked well in Mr. Antonoplos' case, but it would be as well to say that street car drivers or grocer's clerks should make good press agents.

It takes something more than literary skill to make a press writer, and most teachers are apt to be dry and pedantic. Now and then a live wire can be found. The idea is at least worth a trial if you find the right sort of teacher.

Fictitious Family Row to Exploit "Don't Ever Marry"

FAMILY rows are not novelty, but married men enjoy seeing the other fellow get his share, and a few weeks ago the sight of a private car, containing a bride and groom, drawn up at the curb with the bride giving her husband a tongue lashing, never failed to attract Salt Lake citizens who happened to be in the vicinity. About the time some one seriously considered calling a cop, the chauffeur would hoist a sign reading, "Don't Ever Marry," and the car would roll on to a fresh pitch.

This is rather a de luxe handling of the idea, but a scrap between a supposed husband and wife can be staged by any house and will draw like a tractor.

The stunt was evolved by George Mayne, of the Swanson circuit, for the Gem Theatre.

Buried Ten "Silver Hordes," Then Sold Out on Tickets

STEVE FARRAR, of Harrisburg, Ill., is the latest to take up the buried treasure stunt for "The Silver Horde," and Harry S. Lorsch, of the Goldwyn Company, went out one dark night and buried ten tin cans, each containing five tickets for the show and some silver. Then Steve came out with a three eight-and-a-halfs announcing that there were ten silver hoards buried in as many vacant lots, and to keep the diggers right on the job and off private grounds, he ran a big type note calling attention to the fact that these hoards were all buried in empty lots.

He did not use the clue idea, but came out flat-footed and gave each location, as "Locust and Jackson streets," or "Locust street, rear of Gaskin's undertaking parlors." Each of the ten locations were as clearly announced.

Simple Scheme Worked Well.

The same day he got rather better than haif a column in the daily paper and three follow stories of the finding of the cans.

Simple as his scheme sounds, the lots were rather large and the planting had been carefully done, so that though the lots were dug over and over, it was several days before the last can was found, and in the meantime all of the kiddies and a large proportion of the adult population were out on the lots making a ballyhoo for the rest of the town. One little girl dug on each of the ten locations and was about to give up when she made a last try and got one of the cans. Of course that helped the press story and started the rest digging afresh until the last of the ten had been found and recorded.

Donated His Auditorium to a Rotary Club Convention

AFTER he had planned a special campaign with cutouts and brush work for "The River's End," Ben Lowry, manager of the Hippodrome, Webb City, Mo., found himself up in the air through the sudden desertion of his artist. There was no time to secure another painter or start another campaign, and Mr. Levy looked around for something else.

He found that the Rotary Clubs of four states were to hold a dictrict convention, preliminary to the international meeting in June, and he offered his house for their deliberations. It entailed closing the theatre for a day, but it put the Hippodrome on the map for the Rotarians, and he did an extra business that cutouts might not have brought, and meantime has the local Rotary Club at his back next time he wants to start something.

Sure, You Can Use the Army If the Navy Is Not at Hand

ALTHOUGH the Navy is the more progressive branch of the service, the Army will work in on special stunts where the Navy is not conducting a recruiting campaign, and the Army seems to reach many points the Navy does not touch.

Down in Lorain, Ohio, the management of the Opera House collaborated with the recruiting sergeant in a one-sheet which read: "To see 'The Deep Purple,' go to the Lorain Opera House. To travel, learn, earn, go to the U. S. A. Recruiting Station, Post Office Building."

Got Choice Locations.

These sheets were posted in places where the local bill poster dares not stick even in his dreams, and backing that up the station's autos and side cars all carried deep purple banners, appropriately lettered.

The deal was engineered by Ace Berry, field exploitation man for the Mayflower.

Local Models Saved $100, Brought in Large Returns

EVERYWOMAN is playing out in the sticks now, where the money counts, and when Frank A. Cassidy, Famous Players-Lasky exploitation man from Chicago, planned a style show for the Fond du Lac showing, he found that it would cost $200 to bring models from Chicago.

That didn't worry him. He got in touch with a society woman who was at the head of a drive for the Near East and offered to contribute $100 if she would supply six models for each night. She agreed, and the list was made up from the younger social lights, a different set of girls posing each night. They were programmed, and their appearances not only brought their friends but the rest of the town, and they drew far more than imported models.

Avoiding War Atmosphere Booming "The Copperhead"

WAR pictures, even though they are stories of the Civil War, are not easy to handle these days. The single word "war" calls up visions of past performances, and when Samuel Sivitz, of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, found "The Copperhead" on his list, his first idea was to get away from the war angle without sacrificing the value of the idea. He knew that there was little real war in the story; that it was heart interest with a war background; but the trouble was to make the entire audience see it. Possibly taking a hint from the Grauman display of some weeks ago, he used Lincoln for the attractor. This three tens gives the silhouette of Lincoln, with a better drawing of the players than usual and some particularly good hand lettering. Mr. Sivitz's artist does not always come out strongly on the lettering, but in this he took pains to get the lettering clear, and the result was striking. Backing this up, he had paintings made for the lobby of the Regent which gave the war atmosphere and yet made it clear which war it was, and then backed it up by calling it "Lincoln Week." As a result he put the story over to the best advantage and with the smallest cost. Where others might have used larger spaces, he used brains. And he linked the play and star in such a fashion that the appeal was strongest, yet he used very few words of copy. This is the best thing he has sent in in some time.

Deceptive Advertising Has a Strong Comeback—Don't

A NEW ENGLAND house manager sends in a story of how he outdid another house showing a better known player in a production of a standard title. He seems to take a pride in the accomplishment, though we believe that he will be less inflated over the stunt six weeks from now. His method was simply to drop all mention of the star from his advertising, leaving it to be inferred that his version was the same as that used by the other theatre. He employed smaller spaces and where possible got straight up against the other display in which the star was prominently mentioned. The inference was that he had the same attraction. He did the business, but we believe that a large percentage of his patrons, who went expecting to see a certain star, were disappointed when they found another version and another star. He got their money, but he may have trouble getting more money from the same people.

Two Full Pages Used to Get Double Features Advertised

EVIDENTLY someone has been busy down in Hamilton, Ohio, and we would not put it above some Pathe publicity man, for they had two Pathe-handled features on the bill at the Palace and they took two pages in the local papers. But the oddity is that one page advertised only "Other Men's Shoes" and the second dealt entirely with Harold Lloyd in "Haunted Spooks." We don't know of a better employment of a page than helping to put Lloyd over in his new series, for they clean up, but the use of two pages without cross reference is unusual. The "Other Men's Shoes" carried nine shoe store advertisements, totaling about five-sixths of the page—and yet it was a Palace page all the way through, and still gave each of those nine dealers a better chance at the reader than had he used the run of the paper. The hook-up page—unless it is made too common—is the best mutual advertising scheme imaginable. We don't know anything better. Do you?

Statements Too Exaggerated Block Later Announcements

COMMENCING with the statement that "If you live 100 years you may never again have an opportunity to enjoy a play so surpassingly interesting," an upstate house heads off all future plays while this advertisement is remembered. A Pennsylvania house follows suit with "A More Wonderful Picture Will Never Be Made." This is working from a poor angle. It blocks future statements. It is not true, but such extravagant praise will react against future bookings

Makes Letter Box an Aid in Creating Friendships

MOST of the letter boxes run in theatre programs are devoted to the players, and not a few of them are lifted bodily from the motion picture magazines. The Palace, Hamilton, Ohio, conducts a brief letter department in its house program, but it makes it purely local. Questions are answered when they relate to the players, but an effort seems to be made to encourage house chat and inquiries as to forthcoming attractions.

There is nothing more advantageous to house advertising than a properly conducted letter box, but it must be a house venture and not merely a lift from the magazines, because it is too much trouble to look up the replies. Running such a department properly is a real friendship and will work strongly for the house. We know, for we were the first "Answers Man" on the Motion Picture Magazine and coined that title.

Nothing will develop a greater loyalty to the house than a well conducted letter

Prize Criticisms Help to Boom

Building up the drive on the first Harold Lloyd big comedy at the Strand, Minneapolis, C. W. Stombaugh offered ten and five dollar prizes for the best criticisms of Lloyd's work. The criticism stunt is always good when the production can stand criticism, and nothing is better for getting over new stars, since it centres attention upon their merits.

for a four and too smal for a fives, but it gives a good idea of the variety of Miss Pickford's characterizations, and the text amplifies the suggestion with the familiar "Ten different Mary Pickfords." One good line shows at the bottom, reading: "Do you remember how hard it was to get a seat for 'Daddy Long Legs'—So you can't come too early." Almost as good a line at the top is "Character stuff. That's where Mary fits. She has some wonderful kids working with her, too. Wonderful kids."

You will note that there is little all-cap stuff in this space; just two small banks in a face which has no lower case. Apart from that Mr. Givan makes his stuff all easy to read, knowing that this is what sells. Sussex is not a large town, but Mr. Givan works in big town style. He uses the old Montgomery stunt for the British-produced "Life of Nelson," offering a free admission to anyone who feels that he cannot afford the price of a ticket. He took an entire page for the Easter week display, which included the Nelson film and Bessie Barriscale and Pauline Frederick. He also included the pre-Easter attraction in a formal but sound arrangement. Only one show was given Easter Monday, this being followed by a complimentary concert, which is throwing away part of one good day to make friends for a far longer period. This takes nerve, but it pays.

stant use, but for a just once it will give quarter page distinction to a much smaller space.

The use of straight Roman for most of the text plays up the initial letters and give them a chance, and probably a majority of readers will stop to puzzle it out and then read on to see how well it has been done. By that time the message is gotten over, and if the text is all it should be, the prospect has been sold. Any unusual layout which is easy to read is good for one time, but this does not apply to freakish styles which cannot be quickly read once the interest is attracted. This is as simple as a news story, and therein lies its greater value.

Paper Shortage Threatens to Undo Stanley Chambers

STANLEY CHAMBERS of the Palace and Regent theatres, Wichita, writes that the paper shortage and the consequent curtailment of the space allotted to advertisers is going to make it necessary for him to resort to brunette advertisements to get the attention his houses demand. Mr. Chambers was one of the best handlers of white space in the picture game, and we shall be sorry to see him go to funeral stuff. For that matter, we are not convinced that it should be necessary.

The first cut shows Mr. Chambers' old style. It is a three seven and a halfs, with about half of the space white, yet we do not believe that anything Mr. Chambers can do with black ink in twenty-two inches will stand out better on the page. One of the best examples of white space work we have ever seen was a Kodak advertisement about three inches long in a single column space. It is not the size of the advertisement, but the attention it gains, which counts.

The second example is a four tens, almost double the space, yet we are pretty certain that Mr. Chambers did not gain double the prominence for this announcement. At the same time this is not precisely what we should call a black advertisement. Mr. Chambers has not backslid as much as he thinks. He uses more ink on his spaces, but he still mortises to get in type display or hand lettering in good imitation of type. He is too good an advertiser to be wholly spoiled by a paper shortage.

A Four Tens Which Is Less Conspicuous.

We do not think that we shall ever find him sending in solid reverses and committing the other crimes the unintelligent are guilty of. The paper shortage is a serious matter.

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Warner Describes Full-Dress Comedies Starring Actor Met Wholly by Chance

ABE WARNER, of Warner Brothers, arrived in Chicago from New York Friday, June 4, and left the same evening for Los Angeles, where he will remain about three weeks looking after Warner Brothers' producing interests.

During a brief interview, Mr. Warner made it known that when in Los Angeles about seven weeks ago he chanced to meet Monty Banks, who was engaged in playing comedy parts for various producers there. He was so deeply impressed by the personality of Mr. Banks, both as a man and a comedian, that he prolonged his stay for six weeks. During that time he produced two two-reel comedies with Mr. Banks as the star. He gave a showing of these comedies recently to representatives of the Federated Film Exchanges of America with the result that he closed a contract with them for eighteen of the Monty Banks comedies for a year.

"These comedies are altogether away from the slapstick variety," said Mr. Warner. "They may be rightly called 'full dress' comedies, treating of domestic tribulations in a clean and humorous way. They are expensive to produce and all care is being taken to make them the most unique of their type."

First Is "His Naughty Night."

The first of these comedies bears the title, "His Naughty Night." In this comedy a cabaret figures prominently. Among those present is a prominent judge, who receives a black eye during a little misunderstanding with another man present. The winner of the fistic argument is impersonated by Monty and when he appears in court the next day before the judge whose eye he had punched, and recognition becomes mutual, the mirthfulness of the scene can be imagined.

The director of this comedy was J. R. Warner, one of the six Warner brothers. The second of the Monty Banks somedy series is "A Rare Bird." Release of these comedies will be made through Federated Film Exchanges at the rate of one every three weeks.

In addition to the foregoing series, the Warner Brothers are now producing twelve Al St. John two-reel comedies. The Monty Banks comedies will form a comedy asset for Federated, while the Al St. John comedies will be sold in the open market—First National having already secured 75 per cent. of the territory.

Mr. Warner stated that his firm has disposed of all United States and Canadian territory for "The Lost City" serial. "The Tiger Brand," the new serial produced by Warner Brothers and directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton, will follow "The Lost City."

Mr. Warner will return to New York before June 26, when he is scheduled to sail for England. He will remain in England for about five weeks, establishing European connections. He will probably also visit France and Germany before making the home trip.

To Build Large Theatre.

The Ascher Brothers announce that a lease of valuable property in the heart of the "Loop" district, at 16 to 30 West Washington street, just west of State street, has been secured for a period of 101 years at an annual rental of $83,787. On this property an office building and a vaudeville and moving picture theatre will be built, evidently similar in plan to the State-Lake Theatre and building on State and Lake streets.

It has been given out that the building and theatre involve an expenditure of $3,175,750. The theatre will seat 3,000 persons.

Thomas Meighan Film Opens Season at Orchestra Hall

ORCHESTRA HALL, under the direction of Wessels and Voegeli, opened its summer movie season on May 31 with a pre-release showing of "The Prince Chap," which stars Thomas Meighan. Each week will bring a new Paramount-Artcraft feature to the screen as in previous seasons and the same impeccable standard of presentations for which the Hall is noted will be maintained.

The feature, whatever it may be, is always the supreme element of entertainment on Orchrestra Hall programs. Everything else is a harmonious but subordinate factor. For the week of "The Prince Chap" there was a special musical arrangement by Walter Blaufuss. An orchestra of eighteen, including a number of musicians from the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, was most ably conducted by Walter Davidson. Their numbers had been most fittingly chosen, in view of the character of the picture, and they were played with finesse.

The order of the complete program, which was given twice every afternoon and twice every evening, was as follows: Orchestral overture, Burton-Holmes travelogue, International News, orchestral prelude to the feature, "The Prince Chap," a soprano solo and the Paramount Magazine.

The prelude was particularly pleasing. A semi-popular orchestral selection, including a violin solo that had much of the wistfulness and romantic strain that dominates the mood of the picture, ushered in "The Prince Chap." It acted as a charm and lulled the audience into a state of ideal receptivity. Lights went low, the "headliner" made its appearance and the musicians followed its enthralling scenes with the same degree of sympathy that they had previously indicated.

For the week of June 6, "Paris Green," with Charles Ray, will be the feature. Every attraction booked is put under the microscopic eye of John F. Gillespie, manager. He has a careful regard for the tastes of patrons of Orchestra Hall, who have been educated to expect the best. Their comments following "The Prince Chap" program were decidedly flattering.

Where Are You, Mr. Burglar?

Herbert Kaufman's Wisdom on Randolph Screen Weekly

SELZNICK'S first issue of the wise fables written by the well-known Herbert Kaufman was shown in Chicago for the first time the week of May 30 at the Randolph Theatre. Hereafter one of these will be shown every week, in addition to the regular program of feature, comic and news.

The first of this promising series of one-reelers was entitled "Content." Its lesson is that even the poorest man in the world has something too precious for him to part with.

Short Reel Programs Now in Evidence in California

D. J. CHATKIN, representing Marion H. Kohn Productions of San Francisco and Los Angeles, spent Friday and Saturday of last week in the city, on his way to the West Coast from the recent convention of Federated Film Exchanges of America in New York City. He announced that Federated had closed with his organization for its entire output, namely, twenty-six two-reel comedies and twenty-one one-reel comedies for the year.

Mr. Chatkin stated that short-reel programs are much in vogue at present in San Francisco and Los Angeles in a number of theatres. These programs are usually comprised of a two-reel comedy, a two-reel drama, a weekly, a cartoon comedy, a magazine reel and a half-reel Literary Digest or a Will Rogers Illiterate Digest. He stated that these short-reel programs are now being used two or three times a week instead of features in outlying towns, and once or twice a week in quite a number of theatres in San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Pathe's Temporary Office.

Manager Aschmann, of Pathe's Chicago office in the Consumers' Building, states that alterations are progressing rapidly on the new exchange quarters at 418 S. Wabash avenue, which are expected to be ready for occupancy about August 1. The surface area of the new exchange office will be 10,000 square feet.

Work on the new general film exchange building at Kinzie and North Clark street will begin July 1, it has been announced.

Ascher Chooses Tom Bourke.

Tom Bourke, a well-known Chicago newspaper man, has been appointed general publicity representative by the Ascher Brothers. Mr. Bourke assumed his new duties on Monday, May 31, and has taken charge of publicity for the opening of Ascher Brothers' new houses in Dayton, Peoria and Cincinnati. These are named, respectively, the New Auditorium, the Peoria and the Cincinnati. The two last named seat, respectively, 2,500 and 3,500 persons.

Saxe Bros. Buy Milwaukee Savoy.

Saxe Brothers of Milwaukee have just purchased the Savoy, a neighborhood theatre in that city which was built by Aaron Trinz in 1915. It is a beautiful modern house, and, in addition to a good orchestra, has a fine organ that cost $12,000.

It is going the rounds that the Saxe Brothers contemplate the purchase of a number of other neighborhood theatres of modern construction.

P. A. Engler Visits Chicago.

P. A. Engler, of the E. & H. Film Company of Atlanta, spent three days in the city last week. He came to buy state right pictures for southern territory and closed with E. C. Eckels, general manager of Independent Films Association, for Neal Hart's output for the current year, which includes eight five-reel features.

Mr. Engler reported very good business in his territory, with a good outlook. He will open the Gay Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., June 28. This is a new house, seating 1,200 persons. It cost $60,000.

Logan Square Sold.

Lubliner & Trinz have purchased the unexpired leasehold (with an option of five more years included) of the Logan Square Theatre from Harold H. Hill and F. O. Nielsen, who recently acquired that leasehold from Harry W. Thompson. The Logan Square is only two blocks from the Paramount Theatre, owned by Lubliner & Trinz, so that they are the only logical managers of that house from the business viewpoint. Vaudeville and pictures are in demand at the Logan Square, so that policy will likely be followed by the new management.

Rothacker to Sail July 8.

Watterson R. Rothacker returned from his New York trip in time to spend a few days in Chicago before leaving for the Cleveland convention. At its close he will visit his industrial branch office in St. Louis.

He will sail from New York on July 8 for London, where he will arrange for the building of his film laboratory there.

Irish Film Revised.

B. Herbert Milligan, treasurer of the Capital Film Company, recently purchased the American and foreign rights to "For the Freedom of Ireland," which was purchased by Capital Film Company, some time ago, from Creation Films Company. Mr. Milligan was recently elected president of the last-named organization and he will make arrangements for the release of the picture in the near future.

"For the Freedom of Ireland," which was given a private showing in Chicago last fall, has been thoroughly revised by Director Roy Sheldon.

Screen Invites Poor People to Revolt, Charges Canadian, Attacking Tax Repeal

A PRONOUNCED attack was made upon moving pictures and moving picture theatres on the floor of the Canadian Parliament at Ottawa by P. F. Casgrain, one of the veteran members of the Canadian House of Commons, during the debate on the national budget on May 28. His statements regarding the moving picture business were made because of the action of Sir Henry Drayton, minister of finance, in providing for the repeal of the 15 cents a reel a day tax which the exhibitors have had to pay for the past few years.

His charges against moving pictures might have passed with little notice but for the fact that Mr. Casgrain brought out the information that there is not a single picture theatre in the whole of his constituency, which is officially known as Charlevoix-Montmorency, in the heart of the French-Canadian section of the Province of Quebec. This angle gave the newspapers of the whole country a bit of interesting news for the day, but it also led to considerable editorial comment in defense of the theatres by a number of newspaper publishers.

"Hiding Places for Undesirables."

Mr. Casgrain attempted to condemn moving pictures and theatres by declaring that the theatres were places where only undesirable people sought to hide themselves. He also declared: "Pictures that are shown are an invitation to the people of the poorer classes to revolt, and they bring disorder into the country. Thank God, there is not a moving picture show in any town or village in my constituency, and I hope that there will not be any for a long time."

The constituency which Mr. Casgrain represents is on the north shore of the St. Lawrence River, east of Quebec City. The population is mainly rural.

"How hard prejudices die!" declared the Montreal Herald editorially in reference to Mr. Casgrain's words. This paper also declared that Montreal film houses easily attracted a patronage of 50,000 people daily and surely all these persons were not hiding themselves from the hands of the law.

Assessment Is Repealed.

The Ottawa Journal, which is the leading newspaper in the Canadian capital, took up the subject editorially by stating that "every once in a while some one rises up and condemns the moving pictures and demands all kinds of censorship of them. . . . There can be only one censorship—public opinion. The public will not continue to accept what is entirely distasteful to it. When the objection to certain kinds of pictures becomes strong enough, the producers and the theatre people will find it unprofitable to exhibit them. In this way the public will do its own censoring."

Despite the lone protest of Mr. Casgrain against the abolishment of the reel tax, Sir Henry Drayton's amendment to repeal the assessment was carried when the matter was put to a vote on June 2, along with other tariff changes—which comprised tax increases in practically every instance.

Pathe Predicts Great Things for Blackton's "Passers-By"

BASED on the reports of Pathe reviewers, branch managers and scores of exhibitors who have seen the production, Pathe Exchanges, Inc., expects the latest J. Stuart Blackton picture, "Passers-By," to surpass in distribution and popularity anything ever produced by Mr. Blackton, and, in fact, any production ever released under the Pathe program. This statement is made after a careful analysis of the advance situation and with full knowledge of the strength of the production.

In making the forecast, the wide distribution of "Oh Boy," "The Thirteenth Chair," "The World Aflame," "Other Men's Shoes" and "Rio Grande" and several recent big successes of Blanche Sweet have been taken into consideration. "Passers-By" is classed by many of those who have seen it as the greatest achievement of Blackton.

A notable cast has been assembled. Herbert Rawlinson is a great drawing card. William J. Ferguson is one of the best known actors on the American stage and has been identified with the best productions of the last forty years. Tom Lewis and Dick Lee are two other well known men of the stage who are in the cast. Ellen Cassity and Leila Valentine complete the list of leading characters.

Bergman Adapts Story for Bebe Daniels' Realart Debut

HELMAR WALTON BERGMAN, who has been a successful scenario writer for many years and adapted fifteen O. Henry stories to the screen some time ago, has been added to Realart's scenario staff. He will work at the company's Hollywood studios.

Mr. Bergman recently completed the first Bebe Daniels starring vehicle for Realart, "You Never Can Tell," from two Saturday Evening Post stories by Grace Lovell Bryan.

Bergman was born in Sundsvall, Sweden. When he was three years old, however, his parents moved to the United States and settled at Manistee, Mich.

After several years of circus life, burlesque and vaudeville, he spent two years at the University of Michigan and then returned to the stage.

In 1910 he took an engagement with the old Kalem company in Florida. There he did a little of everything, from sceneshifting to acting as an assistant director and writing original stories.

He later joined Vitagraph. When with that company he adapted "An Enemy to the King," in which E. H. Sothern played, also prepared scenarios for "Aladdin from Broadway," "Womanhood" and fifteen O. Henry stories. During the war he served the country as an aviator.

Dougherty Goes to West Coast

During all the years he has followed filmcraft Lee Dougherty has never been to the Pacific Coast. He has now decided to go, the move being necessary on account of "Doc's" health. After a week in Baltimore, his home town, Dougherty will go direct to Los Angeles, where he expects to engage in laboratory work. Since the early days of the Biograph Lee Dougherty has been part of the "film game" and his experience fits him for work in practically any branch of production, developing or exploitation.

Author Aids Film Editor.

Mary Roberts Rinehart, one of Goldwyn's Eminent Authors Group, has arrived at the Culver City studios to assist in editing the film version of her story, "Empire Builders," renamed "It's a Great Life." Mrs. Rinehart will write the subtitles for her picture, which promises something far out of the ordinary in the way of screen comedy.

LOS ANGELES
NEWS LETTER
BY A. H. GIEBLER

Robertson Cole to Build Studio on Melrose Avenue

A LARGE, new, modern and finely equipped studio is to be put up by Robertson-Cole Productions, according to a statement made recently by Louis J. Gasnier, a member of the company who has just returned from New York. The new studio is to be erected on Melrose avenue near the Brunton plant, and will accommodate the Robertson-Cole stars, who are at present Dustin Farnum, Pauline Frederick, Sessue Hayakawa, Lew Cody, Mae Marsh, Bessie Barriscale, Edith Storey and Otis Skinner.

The studio is to be used on the co-operative plan and will be ready for occupancy in about three months, the contract having been let for its construction.

Otis Skinner is to arrive in Los Angeles on June 22, according to announcement, and will commence work immediately on a film version of "Kismet," which Louis Gasnier will direct himself. Robertson-Cole holds an option on Mr. Skinner's services for another picture, which will probably be an Oriental subject.

Universal Begins New Serial.

A new serial to be filmed from the story, "The Diamond Master," by the late Jacques Futrelle, is to be begun at Universal City within the next few days. Eileen Sedgwick will play the featured role, and James B. Warner will play the opposite lead. George Pyper is writing the continuity and Edward Kull will direct.

M. C. Levee Returns.

M. C. Levee, vice-president and business manager of Brunton Studios, has returned to Los Angeles after an extended stay in New York, where he closed contracts with a number of producers who intend to make their headquarters at the Brunton plant in Hollywood.

Luncheon for Exhibitors.

Maurice Wolf, resident manager of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation of Los Angeles, was host at some twenty theatre owners recently. They visited the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, and Vice-President Abraham Lehr presided at a luncheon in their honor.

Victory for Wenzel.

Arthur Wenzel, for the past fourteen months manager of the Superba Theatre, has resigned his post at that house to assume the managership of the Victory Theatre, farther south on Broadway, his new duties to begin in about two weeks.

Pantages Books "Marge O'Doone."

The new Pantages vaudeville theatre, on Seventh and Hill streets, which will be opened to the public some time in the latter part of June or the early part of July, has booked "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," a Vitagraph production from the James Oliver Curwood novel, as one of the first attractions of the new house.

Washburns Apply for Passports.

Bryant Washburn and his wife, Mabel Washburn, have applied for passports to visit England, France and Belgium, leaving here the latter part of July, and returning in September. The trip is for recreation and to secure motion pictures, according to Mr. Washburn.

Ethel Clayton to Visit London.

Ethel Clayton has begun work on her last picture, "Rozanne Ozanne," for Paramount-Artcraft, prior to her vacation, after which she will go to London to make at least two pictures for the company. Tom Forman is directing and Jack Holt is leading man.

Kellerman Saves Drowning Woman.

Annette Kellerman, star of a new sea picture recently produced for Sol Lesser, saved a woman from drowning at Santa Monica recently. The woman got caught in a rip tide, and Miss Kellerman, who was swimming near by, heard her cries for help and went to her assistance.

Designs Comedyart Gowns.

Lucille McGowan has been appointed designer of gowns for the feminine players in Comedyart productions, being produced at Balboa studios in Long Beach by Special Pictures Corporation.

Los Angeles Studio Shots

Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart arrived from the east this week to supervise the editing and titling of her latest film production, "Empire Builders," just completed at Goldwyn.

Lt. Ormer Locklear will begin filming "The Skywayman," his first feature for Fox, within a few days under the direction of James P. Hogan.

Herbert Blache has left for New York, where he will direct a number of Metro productions in the eastern studio of the company.

Alan Hale, of the old Biograph company, and recently of the stage, returns to pictures in support of Monroe Salisbury in "The Barbarian."

The administration offices of the King Vidor Productions are being moved this week to the new Vidor studio on Santa Monica Boulevard.

Lois Weber has completed her new production for Paramount, and has gone to San Francisco on a short vacation.

Rosemary Theby returned this week from New York and will soon begin work in a big film production.

Jimmy Aubrey, of Vitagraph Comedies, has recovered from his injuries sustained in a fall from a tree.

Joseph Franklin Poland has become a member of the scenario staff at the Thos. H. Ince studio.

While Passing by These Pictures Hesitate and Take a Few Glances at This Pathe Feature, "Passers By."

They must be the kind of folks that keep on going when they pass a blind fiddler who winks at the pretty girls—these here passers by. However, this is a tense, human-interest drama, with Herbert Rawlinson in the lead, seen here in all three views.

Mabel Normand Pictures Are Limited to Three a Season; "Slim Princess" Ready

MABEL NORMAND'S third and last picture for the current Goldwyn season will be "The Slim Princess," an adaptation of George Ade's stage success, directed by Victor Schertzinger. According to Goldwyn's releasing system, definite release dates are not assigned to productions; instead a number are made available for exhibitors at the same time. "The Slim Princess" is among those scheduled for the summer months.

With only three pictures made during the season, Miss Normand has established a precedent that may have an influence on Goldwyn's future policy in handling the comedienne. Starting with "Jinx," one of the best matinee pictures ever produced, following with "Pinto," the story of the western cowgirl who breaks into New York society, and concluding with "The Slim Princess," each of the Mabel Normand productions has been a genuine special.

Star Gains in Popularity.

Two things have been proven by the record of the Normand pictures during the current season: first, that the popularity of the star has placed her in the class of players whose productions are regarded as specials by exhibitors, because of their drawing power; second, that the life of a Mabel Normand picture doubles or triples that of the average attraction. "Jinx," released early last fall, is holding its own with productions that were issued several months later. "Pinto" still is climbing, although it has been on the market for a considerable period.

Turkish Palace in Settings.

In "The Slim Princess" the Goldwyn comedienne has one of the most elaborate and carefully directed pictures ever made at the Culver City studios, it is said. The settings representing the Turkish palace in which the princess meets with surprising adventures are striking. But more important than the Oriental atmosphere which Director Schertzinger created is the rapid-fire comedy arising out of the situations.

$2,050,000 Suit Settled

The three suits for damages amounting to $2,050,000, brought by Eugene A. Westcott and Cora I. Westcott, his wife, against the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the World Film Corporation have been settled out of court.

These suits were brought in Rochester, N. Y., after an investigator was alleged to have unlawfully entered the home of the plaintiff in search of stolen film. He later disappeared and has not been located.

Edgar Lewis to Make Series of Five Big Features for Pathe Under New Agreement

FOUR or five big Edgar Lewis productions are assured for Pathe distribution during the coming year, under a new contract just signed by the producer and Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

This is exclusive of "Sherry" which has just been released, and "Lahoma" which Mr. Lewis has just completed for release in the early Fall.

The new Lewis contract calls for the production of "four or five super-feature photoplays to be produced during the year commencing on or about May 15." These plays are to be produced from stories of the sterling box office merit of "Other Men's Shoes," adapted from the novel by Andrew Soutar, a world famous correspondent and novelist; "Sherry," taken from the novel by George Barr McCutcheon, and "Lahoma," produced from the famous book by John Breckenridge Ellis through the courtesy of Bobbs-Merrill Company of Indianapolis.

"Other Men's Shoes," probably the biggest box office winner Mr. Lewis has ever produced, not excepting "The Barrier" and others of his successes, has proved pre-eminent in the list of Pathe triumphs. "Sherry," although released only on May 30, gives every promise of maintaining the record set by "Other Men's Shoes."

Story of Oklahoma's Early Days.

A copy of "Lahoma" has been reviewed by Pathe, and from all reports outstrips either "Other Men's Shoes" or "Sherry" in the matter of action and human interest. It is a story of the days when Oklahoma was thrown open by the United States Government for settlement by the hardy citizens who braved treacherous desert and murderous Indians to gain wealth in the historic land rush.

Mr. Lewis will continue his policy of featuring the story, rather than a star, a policy he has maintained ever since he gained prominence in the directorial art. That his belief in the story is founded on a thorough knowledge of the demands of the public, has been manifested by the success with which every one of his attractions has been crowned. Mr. Lewis does believe in the player to the extent of always casting his plays with the most suitable type of characters.

The director is about to begin the first of his series under the new agreement with Mr. Brunet. The story has been selected and Mr. Lewis has made all arrangements for the shooting of it. Announcement of his selection will be made after work has actually been started on the play

Robertson-Cole Definitely Outlines Policy in Pamphlet Given Exhibitors in Cleveland

IN a printed statement issued over the signature of A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, that company went on record at the Cleveland convention as defining its set and determined policy and outlined in the clearest manner its stand on the big question before the assembled exhibitors.

The Robertson-Cole statement was issued in pamphlet form under the title of "A Declaration of Policy." The salient points of the booklet are:

"Robertson-Cole will not build, purchase or otherwise acquire motion picture theatres in any city in the United States, nor will we engage in the exhibition of motion pictures for profit unless the exhibitor forces us to do so.

"Robertson-Cole demands the right to open and fair competition on the basis of merit and will only feel forced to acquire theatres where and when allied interests exercising a monopoly have eliminated competition.

"Robertson-Cole stands free of all entangling alliances and affiliations, and we fully appreciate the ideal position in which our independence places us, Robertson-Cole does not intend to jeopardize that position.

"Robertson-Cole has but one objective and is concentrating every ounce of energy upon it. We have no conflicting interests within our organization, and no connections outside of our organization that would divert our attention and influence the conduct of our business of distribution.

"Robertson-Cole believes in competition. Without competition there is no incentive to progress and there should be progress in every branch of the industry.

"Robertson-Cole believes the exhibitor should be encouraged to progress in building, improving and fortifying the prestige of the motion picture theatre, and we are firmly convinced that to discourage the progressive spirit of exhibitors by an invasion of their field is dangerous to the long life of the industry.

"Mr. Robertson and Mr. Cole have decided that the distribution of motion pictures is a class of business that they, as a successful commercial company aside from their film interests, with connections in every civilized country in the world, can handle to the mutual advantage of producer and exhibitor. They organized the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation to handle this business on a fair and equitable margin of profit, and it is on this basis and in the capacity of merchants that they will continue to be connected with the business.

"Robertson-Cole does not use deposit money received from exhibitors in the furtherance of its business enterprises. We have unlimited financial resources and do not need exhibitors' money to carry on our business.

"Robertson-Cole places all deposit money in separate trust accounts, and a clause which we have written in our contracts absolutely prevents our using these funds until we have delivered the film that they guarantee.

"Robertson-Cole intends to invest whatever may be necessary to maintain a foremost position in the industry, and to safeguard this investment we propose to do everything possible to secure the confidence of our customers."

Lang Resigns from Power Company

Arthur J. Lang has resigned from the export department of the Nicholas Power Company after long years of efficient service to become Latin-American representative of Namusa, a corporation of exporters possessing a national organization. He will leave for South America within a fortnight.

Lavner Leaves Hodkinson

H. S. Lavner, for more than two years manager of publicity and exploitation for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has resigned. He has not announced his future plans. No successor to him has been appointed as yet.

Karla Schramm.

Playing in "The Son of Tarzan," a jungle serial, being made by the National Film Corporation.

Reelcraft Finishes Two Matty Roubert Pictures

The announcement of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation of the forthcoming series of two reel feature productions in which Matty Roubert, the twelve year old "Leading Man" is to be featured, has brought no small amount of comment to the Reelcraft.

State right buyers, exchange owners and exhibitors are said to have taken time to write their views and welcome of the coming series.

The first two features have been completed as far as camera work is concerned, and the cutting of the negatives is progressing under the direct supervision of the director, William L. Roubert. "Circus Day" and "She's a Vamp" are the titles selected.

The making of "Circus Day" required the services of an entire circus, and picturizes the human side of circus life beneath the "Big Top." The story deals mostly with the love of youngsters for the annual visit of the one ring circus to the old home town. "She's a Vamp" tells the story of a Newsboy's flirtation with a ten year old daughter of wealth who turns out to be a "vamp" in the childhood triangle. These pictures will be but two reels each.

Victor Kremer to Enter Production Field Has Sold Nearly All Rights on Reissues

Following the closing out of practically the entire territory on the series of reissues which he is distributing, Victor Kremer announces that he will henceforth turn his attention to other channels and will within a short time make his debut as a producer and distributer of independent big feature attractions.

Mr. Kremer has been very successful in marketing a number of series of reissued attractions, including the Essaney-Chaplins, Snakeville series, Broncho Billy westerns, as well as several feature productions featuring Bryant Washburn, H. B. Walthal, Taylor Holmes and Shorty Hamilton. The latest feature handled by Mr. Kremer was the comedy success "Skinner's Dress Suit," on which he is now closing out the last few remaining territories.

Big Promises Made for Premiere of Jans Film

Jans Pictures, Inc., announce that much interest is being manifested in the forthcoming trade presentation of "Madonnas and Men" at the Forty-fourth street Theatre, New York, Sunday evening, June 13. The officials of the company believe that this picture will prove an unusually big box-office attraction, and that it will prove a real sensation.

Requests for seats have been received not only from local picture interests but from many exchangemen, exhibitors and other motion picture people out of town. Among the striking features of the film will be the costumes of Evan Burrows Fontaine, which are said to be startling. In addition, several of the principals and chrous of the Palais Royal Revue and twelve beautiful girls in an episode concerning the early Christian martyrs appear in striking scenes. The feature will be presented with an augmented orchestra.

Canyon Reports Rapid Progress on Franklyn Farnum Five-Reel Features

INQUIRIES are coming in on "Vanishing Trails," the William N. Selig serial now being state-righted by the Canyon Pictures Corporation, according to an announcement from that company. Realizing the merits of this serial and knowing the popularity of Franklyn Farnum, together with the success enjoyed by the preceding Selig serial, "The Lost City," showmen have made arrangements to book the new issue regardless of the hot weather.

Canyon Pictures also announces rapid progress on the production on the Franklyn Farnum five-reel features. The first picture is based on a story by William E. Wing, who is at present working on a second story. The pictures are being produced under the personal supervision of Colonel Selig and will be state-righted by Canyon.

Christie Players Shown in Many Outside Films

Christie Comedy players are seen in the new releases in many different activities, besides appearing in their own comedy films.

The Motion Picture Magazine Screen Supplement has photographed a scene at the Christie studios showing members of the Bankers' Association taking part with Al Christie, Bobby Vernon and Dorothy Devore in a comedy and a scene of the Christie girls putting on a fashion revue at Venice, Cal. This was also photographed by the other news weeklies.

Miss Helen Darling is seen in the news weeklies winning first prize in the annual Surf Review at the beach city.

Fay Tincher Featured.

Screen Snap Shots shows scenes of Fay Tincher, Christie star, at the studio and at home. It will also show a back-stage view of putting on a special Christie comedy with the Follies girls.

The Pathe weekly has another view of the Christie studios with Dr. Neal Dodd, who is launching the Motion Picture Church in Hollywood, addressing the players.

The Gaumont news reel recently carried views of three Christie Comedy girls opening the new and novel golfing green on the roof of a fashionable hotel at Pasadena, Cal., where the girls were on location at the time.

Among Those Present.

Charles F. Schwerin, treasurer and general sales manager of Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., attended the convention in Cleveland, O., where he negotiated territory for the company's initial release, "Up in Mary's Attic."

Among Busy Film Exchangemen

Minneapolis

Salesman Shifting About.

H. Walsney, for three years a salesman for the Minneapolis branch of Vitagraph, has joined the forces of the local Republic exchange, and will travel in southern Minnesota and South Dakota.

Mannie Gottlieb, sales manager for the Midland Film Company of Minneapolis, has returned from a three weeks' tour of South Dakota in the interests of his firm.

Two new film salesmen have been added to the Minneapolis Hodkinson branch. They are H. J. Porges and Julius Hoagland.

John B. De Lorenzo, veteran motion picture man of the Northwest, is now special representative in Wisconsin for the Mid-West Film Co.

Auditor Completes Job.

E. L. Merkley, auditor for the Robertson-Cole central office, has completed an audit of the books of the Minneapolis branch. He is enthusiastic over the showing of the company in the Minneapolis territory.

MacMillan With Pathe.

C. H. MacMillan, who has been connected with the World and Republic exchanges during his two year stay in Minneapolis, has become affiliated with the Minneapolis Pathe branch.

Addition of Frank Woskie to the sales force of Robertson-Cole has been announced by Manager Frank Hantzke of the Minneapolis office.

Goes to First National.

Tom Kress, Minneapolis manager for Special Pictures Corporation, has moved in with First National, where his distribution will now be taken care of.

Fielder With Selznick.

E. C. Fielder, former field representative of the New York office of Selznick, has succeeded Harry Rathner as manager of the Minneapolis branch of that exchange.

Exploitation in Town.

Plans for co-operation with Northeast exhibitors are being made by Harry A. Lorch, divisional exploitation manager for Goldwyn, who is in Minneapolis in conference with officials of the organization here.

Notes of Film Men.

Billy B. Watson, exploitation manager for Minneapolis Robertson-Cole, has resigned his position to manage an up-state theatre.

Phil Reisman, manager of Minneapolis Hodkinson, has resigned to accept a position as special salesman for Famous Players-Lasky. His successor has not yet been appointed.

Edward Newquist, former booker for Triangle, is now traveling for Hallmark pictures in Iowa.

Louis Guhl is now on the road for Metro in Wisconsin. Mr. Guhl was formerly assistant manager of the Chicago office of Goldwyn.

Pittsburgh

Gaiety reigned supreme and the troubles of a film distributor were cast aside the evening of June 1 at the Fort Pitt Hotel, where the Pittsburgh F. I. L. M. Club held its annual installation of officers. It was a glorious evening, and the film exchange managers of the city gathered with their wives and best girls to honor the outgoing officers and to welcome the new officers of the ensuing year.

Leo F. Levison, manager of the local Select-Republic office, who has been president of the Club for the past four years, was presented with a most beautiful and wonderful gold watch, with appropriate engraving, that speaks volumes for the esteem in which Mr. Levison is held by the film exchange managers of this city. John Davis, who completed a successful term as treasurer, was presented with a gold fountain pen in recognition of his efforts in behalf of the cluub during his term of office.

The incoming officers, Herman Stern, of the Universal exchange as president, and Nat Barach, of the Goldwyn exchange, as treasurer, were greeted with a royal outburst of applause and cheers. Much credit for the successful manner in which the evening was enjoyed should go to Olive Harden, for her untiring efforts in planning and arranging the dinner and securing the entertainers that participated in the evening's enjoyment.

Connie Lehr and Marguerite Clark, the two stars of Herman Stern's troupe of singers and dancers appearing with the Universal's "The Virgin of Stamboul," proved themselves capable entertainers and the exchange managers and their guests seemed unable to get enough of their singing and dancing. Elmer Setzler, manager of the local office of Leo Feist, brought up his staff of singers and piano players, and assisted in permitting music and song to flow gently through the coridors of the hotel.

J. Howard Lichtenstein, Pittsburgh's independent exploitation expert, was a late arrival. The reception accorded him upon his entrance into the banquet room, proved his popularity with the local exchange managers.

Pittsburgh Personals.

W. R. Johnson, assistant manager of the Pittsburgh Pathe branch, is out in the air again, after a three-months' stay at the hospital, suffering from sleeping sickness.

Harry C. Simeral, of the Co-Partner Attractions, accompanied by his wife, drove his car to Gettysburg, Pa., for a holiday.

C. A. Lynch and Doc Smith, Pathe salesmen, drove to New York for a few days' stay in the latter part of May.

Stanley Feldman is now on the road with the Co-Partner Attractions, Inc., Pittsburgh.

Buffalo

Drops Exploitation Man.

"Jack" Kelly, former member of the Times editorial staff, has left the Robertson-Cole, where for several weeks, he held the position of exploitation manager. It is understood that the company has temporarily discontinued all exploitation men in local exchanges.

Puts Pep in Production.

C. D. Blessing, of the Carroll Theatre, Rome, N. Y., put some real pep into his presentation of "In Old Kentucky," according to P. H. Smith of the First National office, who says that Mr. Blessing "imported" the big tread mill race scene from New York and Minnie Clary, the grand opera prima donna, from Buffalo who sang the "Kentucky" song.

Mr. Smith reports much interest throughout the territory in the new First National franchise plan.

Attend District Convention.

M. A. Chase, acting manager, and John Sitterly, assistant manager of the Universal office, attended the district convention of Universal heads in Cleveland the week of June 7. Frank S. Hopkins, manager, is regaining his health in the mountains.

Taylor Tracing Trail.

"Buck" Taylor, Pioneer general manager, is planning a two-month tour through the Adirondacks with Mrs. Taylor, commencing June 27. C. A. will drag his own hotel with him, he having recently purchased an elaborately equipped trailer with all conveniences except a barroom. "Buck" reports the Lyric will show Mary Anderson in "Bubbles," the Pioneer feature, week of June 20.

Some Big Stuff Coming.

J. H. Greenwald, manager of the Fox office, upon his return from the New York convention, reports that his company has some sensational productions up its sleeve which it will soon announce, together with a new star.

Lutz in the Saddle.

Harry Lutz, the new Realart manager, who recently came here from Pittsburgh, is now in the saddle and Henry E. Wilkinson has gone to the Pittsburgh branch. Lee Marcus, former assistant to Mr. Wilkinson, is in New York in the Selznick foreign department.

San Francisco

Bowles Joins Equity.

A. M. Bowles, who has been the San Francisco representative of the American Film Manufacturing Company for several years, has gone with the Equity Picture Corporation as manager of the local office, succeeding Charles Thall.

Simpson Back from Conference.

Ben F. Simpson has returned from the first annual Realart conference at New York, filled with enthusiasm and pep. He brings the good news that Ralph Quive, formerly of the local office, but now of Detroit, is rapidly recovering from his recent illness.

Pioneer Salesman Knocks 'Em Over.

Robert Hazel, traveling salesman for the Pioneer Film Corporation, has returned from a trip through Arizona and Southern California which manager Floyd St. John describes as being one of the greatest road trips of which he has ever heard, taking into account the business secured.

Crank Gets New Aides.

W. A. Crank, manager of the local Robertson-Cole organization, announces that he has secured the services of W. A. Mead and Irving P. Arnold, formerly of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and that they are now on the road handling R-C specials exclusively. H. L. Percy is to cover the territory selling short reel subjects and star series service.

Shake-Up at Selznick Office.

H. L. Knappen, manager of the Select office at San Francisco, has resigned and has accepted the position of manager for the First National at Buffalo. Haddon Stephens, who succeeded C. E. Mix here as manager for Republic, has also tendered his resignation, as has also C. S. Sprinks, the booker. L. B. Metzer, West Coast short reel divisional representative for Selznick, has also removed his name from the payroll.

Detroit

Publicity Man Vacationing.

Harry R. Guest, publicity manager for the Detroit Goldwyn exchange, has resigned and will take a three months' rest. He has already rented a summer home at Harrisville, Mich., and his family and typewriter will accompany him there in a few weeks.

Masterfilms Moves Offices.

Independent Masterfilms, Inc., have moved from the Film Building to No. 105 John R. street. William B. Seifert, local manager, reports excellent business on the short subjects. He handles Victore Kremer product almost exclusively.

Film Showing Gets Bookings.

The Standard Film Service gave a trade showing of "The Lost City" serial at the Broadway-Strand Theatre the evening of June 14 to a very large number of exhibitors, and as a result Manager Fishman, of the Standard office, is being besieged with bookings.

Former Detroiter in Des Moines.

Robert C. Cotton, formerly with the World in Detroit and recently with the Republic in Minneapolis, is now manager of the Pathe office in Des Moines.

Hodkinson's New Manager.

Hal Smith, former manager of the Ferry Field Theatre, Detroit, has been appointed manager of the Detroit office of W. W. Hodkinson. The appointment was made by Joe Bloom new supervisor for the Hodkinson. Mr. Smith is extremely popular with Michigan exhibitors, having sold film previous to assuming the management of the Ferry Field, one of Detroit's best residential theatres, three years ago. He also managed the Empire and Garden theatres in Detroit.

Philadelphia Pointers

Baseball Lot for Airdome.

THE Fleisher Baseball Association announces leasing the big lot at Twenty-fifth and Reed streets for open air motion picture shows. Elaborate plans are under way for turning the arena into a commodious picture resort.

"Marge O'Doone" Coming.

J. S. Hebrew, district manager of the Vitagraph, announces that "Marge O'Doone" will make its initial showing in this city at the Palace Theatre. It has also already been closed at all of Keith's centers. "Marge O'Doone" has broken all house records at the Penn Theatre, Chester, as reported by Mr. Proffitt, the manager. He also stated that he has received more complimentary remarks from the patrons regarding this feature than any other ever shown in his theatre.

Salesmen's Association Elect.

Earle Sweigert, who has been identified in the film industry for many years and who is representing the Paramount-Artcraft as salesman, was elected president of the recently formed Philadelphia Salesmen's Association. Other officers elected were G. Kitchen, vice-president, of the Goldwyn, and Frank Loftus, secretary and treasurer, of the Robertson-Cole. Meetings are now being held every Saturday at their temporary quarters, 1219 Vine street. Any film salesman in this territory is eligible. Sixty salesmen were present at the last meeting.

Richardson Gives a Lecture.

Frank Richardson, of The Moving Picture World, an expert on projection, gave a lecture at the Garrick Theatre last week on the subject of his life time study. It was attended by motion picture operators, managers of the Stanley Company theatres, representatives of the fire marshall and the Fire Department of the City. Mr. Richardson illustrated his talk by steropticon views of charts of projection machines, lenses, etc., and he pointed out the way to save on light, and at the same time give motion-picture audiences increased satisfaction without eye strain.

Personals.

Mrs. McMann, owner of two theatres in Germantown, has gone to Europe for an extended tour and has left Miss Grinnell in entire charge during her absence.

Max Milder has been appointed manager of the combined Republic and Selznick exchange. Mr. Milder has already made for himself an excellent record as manager of the Selznick, where he has been for several years past.

Preparing for Film Production.

N. G. FLYNN sailed from New York on May 6. During his sixty-day stay in Europe Mr. Flynn will make arrangements for exhibition abroad of the pictures produced by Richards & Flynn. Richards & Flynn will begin the production of their pictures in Culver City on August 6.

Lease Twelfth Street Theatre.

Richards & Flynn have sold their First National franchise and have leased the new Twelfth Street Theatre for twenty years to the Associated Exhibitors of St. Louis. The theatre will open under the new management on June 12th.

Will Soon State Plans.

J. N. MacMeekin returned safely from New York on Wednesday and reports that he will be able to state his plans for the coming year about the middle of June. Mr. MacMeekin left Kansas City Tuesday night for a ten-day trip through Tulsa, Oklahoma City and Muskogee.

Notes and Personals.

M. H. Ranke, of the Orpheum Theatre in St. Joseph, visited Famous Players and Universal Exchanges while in Kansas City this week.

L. D. Lewis is opening his new theatre in Linwood, Kansas, on June 9. Mr. Lewis was at the Universal Exchange arranging for his service.

G. G. McGinnis is opening a new theatre in Weston, Mo., on June 10.

S. L. Holdeman is due in Kansas City from his conference in New York.

F. L. Collins has been transferred from Kansas City to the advertising department of the Famous Players Corporation in St. Louis.

Salesmen Are Active.

L. R. Scamahorn, of Los Angeles, has joined the sales force of Famous Players in this city.

E. H. McClintock, of Alamo Theatre at Garden City, Mo., was in Kansas City this week.

Famous Players Corporation moved Friday night from 2024 Broadway to the New Film Exchange Building. Famous Players are occupying the entire twelfth floor and the front part of the eleventh.

H. H. Murdock, salesman, formerly with Metro, started June 1 as feature salesman with Pathe to take the place of I. Barskey, who is now manager of Peacock Productions in St. Louis. Mr. Murdock's teritory is Missouri.

Theatre Man Takes a Rest.

A. J. MOELLER has resigned from the management of the DeLuxe Theatre, Detroit, and will take a two months' vacation. He has left for California. Mr. Moeller prior to managing the DeLuxe was manager of the Regent, Saginaw, and formerly operated his own theatre in Howell. He plans to return to Detroit about the middle of August. C. H. Darrell, manager of the Alhambra, will look after the DeLuxe. Both are John H. Kunsky theatres.

Another House for Gleichman.

While no definite announcement can be made this week, Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway-Strand Theatre, will undoubtedly have another big first run house next season for the Paramount specials. The present year, with Paramount pictures, has been the most successful the Broadway has ever had and Mr. Gleichman is extremely enthusiastic.

Adding Theatre to Chain.

Bon Dunham, of Dunham & Stuch, Allegan, Mich., is building a new theatre at Otsego that will seat about 750. It will be ready to open during the next month or so.

Dick Lynch Active Manager.

Morris Lynch, one of the oldest and best-known exhibitors in the country, who has been personally operating the Catherine Theatre, Detroit, which he and his two brothers own, has retired for the present. He is spending the summer at his country home near Harbor Beach, Mich., located directly on Lake Erie and his winters will be divided between Florida and California. He owned the third moving picture house in Detroit (the old Mirth) on Jefferson avenue. His brother, Dick Lynch, will now look after the Catherine.

Broadway-Strand—60 Cents, Top.

The Broadway-Strand Theatre, Detroit, is now the highest priced photoplay house in Detroit, charging 60 cents for main floor seats at night, while all the others only charge 50 cents. The Broadway price will prevail for the summer and next season Mr. Gleichman plans to charge considerably more.

New Theatre in Alma, Mich.

Alma, Mich., has a new theatre, The Strand, costing $175,000 and owned by L. J. Murphy, of Detroit. The house seats about 1,200 and will play pictures and vaudeville two days a week.

Greensburg Movie Magnate Expands.

MICHAEL MANOS, movie magnate of Greensburg, Pa., has made elaborate plans for the extension of his plant, and by the time all improvements are made he will have an investment of approximately three-quarters of a million dollars. Work is progressing rapidly on the new Rialto Theatre, adjoining the Strand, and present indications are that it will be completed and ready for opening about the middle of September.

The two theatres occupy an entire block, 246x176 feet in size. The buildings will also be used for 64 offices and 16 apartments.

The new theatre, which will be named the Rialto, will have a capacity of 884. It will be used exclusively for pictures, while the Strand, after the improvements are made, will be used as a combination house, running vaudeville three days and pictures three days.

Mr. Manos also conducts the Grand theatre in Greensburg, about one square distant from the other two theatres. This house has a capacity of 475, and is a good money-maker.

Mr. Manos is also owner of the Photoplay Theatre in Jeannette, Pa., which he has leased to Kostes Liddes. The lease expires April 1 of next year, at which time it is planned to erect a large and modern theatre of 1,300 capacity.

New House for East Pittsburgh.

East Pittsburgh, Pa., is to have a new and up-to-date picture theatre. Sedler & Hufnagel, prominent business men of the town, broke ground recently for a 1,000-seat house to be built in Electric avenue, the main thoroughfare of the town.

The building will be 60x120 feet, built on the bleacher style, similar to the Regent, in East Liberty, and will have a capacity of 1,000. It is expected to have the building completed and ready for opening about the first of September.

There are now three theatres in East Pittsburgh, owned by the Frederick Amusement Co.—the Frederick, Loyal and Lyric. The first-named is a large, modern house, while the others are small. All are said to be doing excellent business and the general opinion prevails that another large house will create more business and that there will be audiences for all.

Two Theatres Go Dark.

The Keystone Theatre at Madison, Pa., has closed shop. The mines are worked out in that section, and the town is practically deserted. Jess Williams says he will find another location and will be haunting the film exchanges again before long.

The Orpheum Theatre at Rudgeway has been closed on account of the DeSeve family being quarantined with scarlet fever.

During the week ending June 5 the Pioneer version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," starring Sheldon Lewis, played to S. R. O. business at the Columbia Theatre, Pittsburgh.

"Big Tim" House Management.

H. E. Stahler, formerly a salesman at the Pittsburgh Pathe exchange, is doing fine work at the Opera House, New Castle, Pa., where he is now manager. He is running some big feature subjects and is putting them on in regular big town style.

Colored girl ushers who serve ice water to patrons during the shows is one of the many innovations. An eight-piece orchestra furnishes music.

The decorations of the theatre are in royal blue and old gold, tasty draperies, dimmers in the lighting system and many other ideas which have become incorporated since Stahler became manager, are having a rejuvenation effect on the box office receipts.

Mrs. Stahler comes in for a large share of the credit, however. She is constantly on the alert for something novel and unique to introduce into the theatre.

Theatre Notes and Personals.

The Gem Theatre, Morgantown, W. Va., owned by the Morgan Photo & Amusement Co., is being remodeled and enlarged. A stage is being installed, with the object of giving road shows and vaudeville entertainments at various times.

Barney & Gorris, of McKeesport, Pa., have placed their order for a complete projection equipment to be installed in their new theatre, now in course of construction, with the Pittsburgh U. T. E.

J. Howard Lichtenstein, exploitation expert in the Pittsburgh section, has opened his own offices so that he may be able to handle the many theatre publicity and exploitation accounts he now had under his direction.

The Evaline Theatre, Pittsburgh, a small neighborhood house, has been redecorated in an elaborate manner, and now presents a very beautiful appearance.

"The Lost City" serial, handled here by the Hatch Film Co., is such a success that it has been found necessary to purchase a fourth print on each episode in order to supply the demand.

Showman's Sudden End.

Walter Hommel, of the Hommel Brothers, who operate the Arcade Theatre at Brownsville, Pa., dropped dead recently.

Change in Theatre Management.

Fielding K. O'Kelly has resigned his position as manager of the Lyric Theatre, Uniontown. It is reported that he intends to go into business for himself in Morgantown, W. Va. Mr. Bierer succeeds him as manager of the Lyric.

Progress on Two Theatres.

Tom Wright's new house in Brownsville is progressing very nicely. The steel frame work is about completed to the roof, and will be ready for the tile and brick work in a few days. Tom says he expects to have it opened before Thanksgiving.

Charles Richelieu, who formerly owned the Fairyland Theatre at Fairchance, Pa., but now of Bedford, Pa., has his new theatre well under way. In two months Charlie says he will be selling admission tickets.

Golden Gate Gleanings

Virginia Opening a Gala Event.

THE opening of the Virginia Theatre at Vallejo, Cal., near San Francisco, on May 25, was made especially noteworthy by the attendance of several hundred exhibitors and film exchange men from the Bay district. The visitors made the trip to the navy yard city by auto and enlivened proceedings by parading in circus fashion.

After touring the streets they were taken on a trip of inspection through the Mare Island Navy Yard and then were treated to a repast that will long be remembered. Eugene H. Roth, of San Francisco, acted as toastmaster. The compliments that P. J. Hanlon received on the beauties of his theatre and the entertainment offered were many and sincere.

A buffet supper was also offered before the visitors departed for home. The opening attraction at the Virginia was "The Soul of Rafael."

Bosworth Makes Personal Appearance.

Hobart Bosworth, who recently spent some time filming pictures on the San Francisco water front, made several personal appearances at the Imperial Theatre where his latest offering, "Below the Surface," is being shown. He expected to remain here about a month to complete his work, but ideal weather prevailed, and it was finished within two weeks. An unusually effective stage setting, showing a lighthouse scene, was presented at the Imperial in conjunction with the picture.

Off For New York.

Herbert Rothschild, head of the concern controlling the California and Imperial theatres, has left for New York in connection with plans for the erection of the Granada Theatre and the rebuilding of the Portola. He was accompanied by Alfred Henry Jacobs, the architect.

"Test" Picture Contest at the Sun.

A screen contest is being held at the Sun Theatre and several hundred girls are competing for the honor of being selected to enter the company of Mildred Harris Chaplin at Los Angeles. Moving pictures of aspirants are being made in the lobby of the theatre and these will be shown later on the screen in conjunction with "The Inferior Sex," featuring this star.

The contest is being conducted under the direction of Jack Laver, director for Mildred Harris Chaplin, and Pliny Goodfriend, her cameraman. Mrs. Chaplin will be here in person before the contest closes.

Publicity Man Weds.

Nick Ayer, director of publicity for the California, Portola and Imperial theatres, and who formerly held a similar position with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. here, was married June 1 to Helen Claire Hock. The couple is spending the honeymoon among the Los Angeles studios.

Amusement Company Formed.

The Cinema Amusement Company has opened offices at 163 Leavenworth street and is offering to furnish moving picture entertainment for all occasions. Moving pictures will also be made to order.

T. & D. Has Bargain Hour.

The management of the T. & D. Theatre, Oakland, has inagurated a bargain hour and the house is now opened at eleven o'clock, instead of at noon. For one hour the admission price is half that charged for matinees and evening.

Takes Lease on Jose Theatre.

Edward Maniar has purchased the lease on the Jose Theatre, San Jose, Cal., held by the late Joseph Blum for the unexpired period of four and a half years, securing this for fourteen thousand dollars.

Theatre News In Brief.

Jack Tobias, who conducts the Patterson Theatre at Patterson, Cal., is preparing to open a house at Gustine.

C. A. Resco plans to open a theatre at Campbell, Cal., on July 2.

The Neptune Palace will be opened at Neptune Beach, Alameda, Cal., on July 1 under the direction of Frank Mehley. This theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,000.

C. F. Unger, of Selma, Cal., was a recent visitor at San Francisco, purchasing equipment for an airdome to be opened there.

Walter Preddey, San Francisco, recently furnished new projection equipment for the Liberty Theatre at St. Helena, Cal.

E. J. Miller is erecting an 800-seat moving picture house at Williams, Cal. He is an old-time exhibitor there.

Empress and Rex's New Owners.

Edmund Damon has taken over the Empress Theatre at Twenty-eight and Church streets, and the Rex Theatre on Sixteenth street, San Francisco.

A. C. H. Chamberlain, of Madera, Cal., was recently in San Francisco, coming up in his new Cadillac car. He is erecting a new house in that city.

The new California Theatre at Turlock, Cal., will be opened as soon as the organ arrives. It will be conducted under the management of Charles Thall, formerly in charge of the San Francisco office of the Equity Pictures Corporation.

A balcony is to be added to the Novelty Theatre, Martinez, Cal., at an estimated cost of $12,000.

Buffalo Bulletins

Buffalo Dines State Exhibitors.

THE Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association was the host to a party of thirty-five New York State exhibitors at a dinner in the Hotel Iroquois, Sunday evening, June 6. The party was headed by Sydney Cohen, Sam Berman and Charles O'Reilley. Speeches were made at the feed by Ira M. Mosher, president of the local organizations and Mr. Cohen. Following the dinner the exhibitors visited Shea's Hippodrome, the Strand and Palace and then boarded the boat for the Cleveland convention. In the Buffalo delegation was Harold B. Franklin, Shea's Hippodrome; E. O. Weinberg, Strand; Ira M. Mosher Palace; J. H. Michael, Regent; M. Slotkin, Lyric and Olympic; George Hall, Capitol;

George Hanny, Maxine; Charles Hayman, Niagara Falls; Joseph A. Schuchert. Mr. Franklin was accompanied by Pliny McNaughton, president of the Shea Amusement Company, who in Cleveland attended a meeting of the board of directors of the Associated Exhibitors.

Two Big Houses Start.

Work has started on two new big Buffalo theatres, the Shea Metropolitan and the Loew house. According to an announcement by Harold B. Franklin, the Metropolitan will open in August, 1921. Albert E. Jones, secretary of the Buffalo Loew Theatre company, emphatically denies a statement in the Buffalo Express that should the court decide against the company in an action involving a small piece of property at present held by the Golde Clothes Shop, the theatre will be held up for five years.

Mr. Jones declares that the property is not essential to the theatre and that the company is going right ahead with the new house. In an effort to end the lease held by the Golde shop at 511-513 Main street, which does not expire until 1926, the Loew company has brought an action in city court. In 1915 the Moeller estate gave the Golde shop a ten year lease beginning in 1916.

There was a clause in the lease which provided that should the title pass from the owners that, upon receipt of three months' notice and the payment of a specified sum for liquidated damages (the amount at this time being $15,000) the Golde Shop would surrender the lease. The property was sold in April, 1916, to the Marema company and in July, 1919, the title was passed to Emanuel Boasberg, who in January, 1920, sold the property to the Loew company. The entire proceeding hinges upon the legal interpretation of the clause in the lease regarding the three months' notice. Judge Karl A. McCormick has reserved decision.

Movie Masher Pays for "Fun."

Roy Hafner, 84 Newfield street, was convicted of disorderly conduct by Judge Peter Maul in city court and fined $10. Hafner was arrested in the Happy Hour Theatre on Main street on complaint of Agnes King, 139 East Genesee street, who claimed that Hafner had annoyed her while she sat next to him in the theatre.

Teck Opens With Pictures.

The W. W. Hodkinson corporation has leased the Shubert-Teck Theatre for four weeks, during which time some of the big features produced by the company will be shown. Louise Glaum in "Sex," opened the engagement on Sunday, June 6. James Griffin Fater, of the Hodkinson company, is in Buffalo at the Hotel Statler and is managing the presentations.

To Film Passion Play.

Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Premier theatres, has been engaged by the Rev. M. J. Ahern, president of Canisius College to film the Passion Play which will be staged next month by the college on the campus at Main and Jefferson streets. These pictures will be shown in the principal cities of the country and are expected to bring visitors to the city for the spectacle which opens July 5. Mr. Winegar leaves next week for the coast with the local Shriners to make a film history of the trip. During his absence Art Young, formerly with Gardiner Pictures, Inc., and now with Fred Zimmerman, will act as manager of the Central Park.

New Theatre at Perry.

L. E. Closser, who recently purchased the G. W. Harris grocery business in Perry, N. Y., has purchased the building occupied by Ray Jones and J. L. Schaumberg and will remodel it into a motion picture theatre.

Denies Theatre Rumor.

E. M. Statler, head of the Hotel Statler, denies reports that he intends to erect a chain of theatres. The rumor had gained currency in theatrical circles. "I don't know where they get that, but I do know it is not true," said Mr. Statler. "There is to be a theatre in the new Statler Hotel in Buffalo, but that is one and that is all."

To Renovate Olean Theatre.

A. W. Root, former manager of the Palace Theatre, Olean, N. Y., who resigned two weeks ago to take over the management of the Havens Theatre in the same town for the new owners, Dipson and Marcus, has closed the theatre for a week, during which time it will be re-decorated and renovated from top to bottom. The new summer policy will be continuous feature films running from 1 to 11 P. M. Much interest is being manifest in the renaming of the Havens and every one in Olean is given a chance to earn $100 in gold which is the prize.

Michael Resigns at Victoria.

J. H. Michael has resigned as manager of the Victoria Theatre at West Ferry and Grant streets, taking effect Sunday, June 6. Mr. Michael is interested in the Regent Theatre at Main and Utica. He is chairman of the executive committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League.

Boulevard—"The Right of Way."

Opens Mammoth Airdome.

CINCINNATI movie fans during the past week have been treated to one of the biggest surprises they have had in many years—a real open air moving picture show, within easy reach of the whole community. In the past few years there have been airdomes operated in various sections of the city, catering, of course, to only the immediate neighborhood.

This latest addition to the screen theatres in the Queen City is ideally located at Fourteenth and Vine streets, right in the center of what was once called "Over the Rhine." It is within easy walking distance of the center of the town and within easy access of all parts of the city.

The management claims it is the largest airdome in Ohio, having a seating capacity of 4,000. The airdome is under the management of Tom Hefferman.

Feature pictures and comedies are show each night, along with four acts of vaudeville, cabaret singers and a jazz band as added attractions. Two shows are given each night. The admission is 11 and 17 cents.

In the event of rain, rain checks are issued, redeemable at any show during the present season. The program is changed twice a week. Judging from the crowds that have attended the performances during the first week, the management is in for a very prosperous season.

How Can You See Through a Hat?

A careful investigation made during the past week in the larger of the motion picture houses shows that the majority of the managers are permitting the law that prohibits the wearing of hats by women in picture houses to be violated.

In some instances as high as fifty per cent. of the women movie fans failed to take off their hats. At one theatre it was learned women may wear their hats if there is no objection.

Showmanship in Figuring Ahead.

The management of the Strand has taken school children into consideration in planning for the engagement of "Huckleberry Finn." I. Libson, manager, selected the week of June 13 for the showing as the school season will be near an end and there will be little home sudy. He is scheduling his shows so there will be a matinee starting about the time pupils will be out of classrooms and downtown.

"Get Offa Me Neck—Hurriedly,"

Show Films in Ball Park.

ORIOLE PARK, where the ball games are played in Baltimore, is being used as an open air moving picture theatre by Jack Dunn, manager of the Baltimore Orioles. A screen has been set up on the field near the grand stand, which is used for the patrons.

Moving Picture Aids Recruiting.

Moving pictures which showed the men of the 313th and 315 Regiments while they were in France, when they left for France and when they returned to this country (loaned for the occasion by the Baltimore Sun) were exhibited at a meeting held in the armory at Westminster, Md., night of June 1, in order to get volunteers for the Maryland National Guard now being formed.

Showman Makes "Shriner" Trip.

H. B. Cook, proprietor of the Aurora Theatre, left Baltimore June 8, to attend the convention of Mystic Shriners which is to be held in Portland, Ore., during the latter part of the month. Mr. Cook was one of a party of 220 Shriners that went from this city. He will visit the Hollywood studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation while on the West coast, having a letter from Oscar Morgan, of that company in New York, asking that courtesy of the grounds be extended Mr. Cook and party.

Pelsweig for Three Weeks.

Simon Pelsweig is in Baltimore and will remain for three weeks representing the Globe Film Company, of Philadelphia, Pa., he is booking the Clune production, "The Eyes of the World."

J. Laurence Schanberger Married.

J. Laurence Schanberger, manager of the Maryland Theatre, was married to Marguerite G. McCloskey, of Philadelphia, in that city on June 2, in the church of the Immaculate Conception. Mr. Schanberger is the son of Frederick C. Schanberger, president of the James L. Kernan Company, operating the Maryland Theatre.

Radin Head Returns for Short Stay

Matthias Radin, head of Radin Pictures, who has been on the road during the last three weeks visiting important exchange centres, returned to New York last week long enough to clear up several important matters and then went back to Chicago to continue his tour which it is expected will take him as far West as Seattle, stopping at practically all of the larger cities on the way out.

Mr. Radin announced he had completed arrangements with Co-Partners Attractions, of Pittsburgh, for the distribution of the five-part Johnny Dooley comedy, "Skinny Skinners," also "Through Eyes of Men," "Human Passions," and the burlesque news reels, "The Weekly Indigestion," for West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania.

Richards and Flynn to Make Westerns Featuring Jack Gardner, Vaudevillian

WILLIAM FLYNN, of Richards and Flynn, Kansas City, has announced the formation of a producing company to make a series of twelve western plays featuring Jack Gardner.

Although absent from the screen for some time, Jack Gardner has a big following among the motion picture public, created during his association with Essanay where he starred in a number of special productions which were among the most successful published by George K. Spoor. "The Gift of Gab" will be remembered as one of these.

Gardner has had a wide experience on the stage, having played important parts in various types of theatrical entertainment. He has been a headliner in vaudeville during the present season and has appeared in the principal cities. His vaudeville engagements terminate for the season about August 1 in Los Angeles. At that time the new producing company will be prepared to begin immediate production on the first picture of the series.

Material in Readiness.

No announcement has been made as to the vehicles which will be employed for Gardner's return to the screen, but it is understood that each of the twelve pictures will be based upon a well-known play or novel, and that considerable material of this kind already has been purchased by William Flynn.

Richards and Flynn are among the best known exhibitors and exchangemen in the country, being the First National franchise holders in Kansas City and operators of an important chain of theatres in that section. Their exchange is an important link in the First National distributing organization and handles, in addition, a number of important productions issued on the state rights basis.

Preliminary work in organizing the producing unit has commenced. According to present plans, an independent studio in Los Angeles will be leased and preparations will be carried forward rapidly in order that everything may be in readiness to commence camera work upon Gardner's arrival in Los Angeles.

Executive direction of the work will be handled by Mr. Flynn in Kansas City. Mr. Flynn states that several distributing channels are under consideration, but as yet no proposition has been accepted.

One-Legged Picture "Pirate" Draws Fire of Eminent Judge Who Knows His Cork Toddlers

AT a private showing of "Treasure Island" in the Paramount Little Theatre, Cincinnati, a discussion originated as to whether Long John Silver, grim pirate of the story, was minus his right or left leg. According to Clifford Spees, former manufacturer of artificial legs for the Allied Governments, Long John hobbled around on his left leg.

Ernst Glantzberg, President of Typhoon, to Marry Miss Estes on Evening of June 10

THE wedding of Miss Pinckney Lee Estes, daughter of Mrs. John Wade Estes of Columbia, S. C., and Ernst Glantzberg is to take place on Thursday evening, June 10, at 8.30 o'clock, at the residence of the groom, 281 Lexington avenue, New York City. The ceremony will be performed by Dr. James Strong Moffatt, lifelong pastor of the bride and president of Erskine College in South Carilona. The groom is president of the Typhoon Fan Company, New York City.

Brother Will Escort Bride.

The bride will be given in marriage by her brother, Capt. James D. Estes, while the best man will be Frederick Glantzberg, son of the groom.

Those in attendance on the bride will be Miss Ethel Donoghue, of Hartford, Conn., member of the graduating class of the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania, with Arthur Littleton, president of the graduating class of the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania; Miss Elizabeth Glantzberg, Stockholm, Sweden, sister of the groom, with Admiral Gerhard Dyrssen, governor of the Province of Varmland, Sweden, formerly secretary of the Swedish Navy; Countess Aina Hamilton, with Count Malcolm R. Hamilton, captain of the First Royal Life Guards, Stockholm, Sweden; Miss Rose Lerner, attorney at law, Trenton, N. J., with Carl Keiser, Pottstown, Pa., intercollegiate champion wrestler; Miss Mary Glowacki, Nanticoke, Pa., with Louis Servais, Detroit, one of the members of the University of Pennsylvania at the Olympic games at Antwerp this year; Miss Violet Abbot, Philadelphia, with Harry Selz, professor of chemistry at the University of Pennsylvania; Gertrude Christian, Halmesburg, Pa., with Edgar Potts, member of the graduating class of the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania.

Will Wear Cap and Gown.

Miss Estes, secretary of the graduating class of the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania, will be married in her cap and gown with the purple hood of the legal profession, and following her honeymoon, which will be spent in Sweden, will take up the practice of law in New York.

Many Distinguished Guests.

Among the guests will be Dr. and Mrs. William E. Mikell, dean of the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania; Professor and Mrs. David W. Amram, of the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania; Capt. James D. Estes, brother of the bride, and former member of Company F., 38th Infantry, one of the United States regiments that was cited three times by the French for bravery in holding the bridge head at Chateau Thierry during the second battle of the Marne; Olaf Lamm, royal consul general of Sweden at New York, and Mrs. W. W. Burke, Columbia, S. C.

The Chautauqua Man Addressed An Audience of One While the Mayor and Movie Man Chuckled

THE village constable leaned negligently against the chained pump. Somewhere in the dim distance a dog howled mournfully behind barn doors. The corner drug store, the ice cream parlor, the gasoline station were shut. Curtains were drawn on the windows of homes. No breeze stirred the listless leaves. The buzz of flies in the street was deafening.

Until—the sound of hammering shocked the noon air. The constable jumped nervously and rubbed his eyes. Then he trailed the sound and handed a slip of paper to a man working on an automobile. The man grimaced and quit work. The constable returned to the town pump and tested the chains enveloping it. All was silence—but not peace.

In a home nearby a Chautauqua promoter was telling his wife all about it. His language was expressive. There should have been a Chautauqua that day and there was none. Next door the owner of the gasoline filling station was going on all twelve cylinders, with his wife trying to throttle him down. There should have been automobiles kicking up the dust that day and there were none. There should have been a merry throng buying gasoline and there was none.

Only two men were optimists. One of them, H. T. Caho, proprietor of the town's picture house, whistled as he read the latest issue of Moving Picture World. The other man pushed the papers around on his desk with his feet and smoked a long black cigar with relish. Occasionally he chuckled. He was the mayor, F. G. Putnam.

The town was West Jefferson, Ohio; the day was Sunday, May 30.

And here is the cause of it all. Mr. Caho gave two Sunday evening shows a few weeks ago. Some church-going citizens prepared speeches and went to the mayor about it. The Blue Laws should be enforced, they said. His Honor was agreeable; he did his duty; he enforced the Blue Laws—all of them.

And here is the result of it all. The first man to be haled before His Honor for violation of the Sunday law was one of the protesting delegation. This man, a carpenter, representing the Baptist church, stood accused of hiring a man to work on his automobile on Sunday. There were others who appeared a second time before the mayor—unwillingly.

Mr. Caho still does a healthy business three times a week. It is possible he may have a Sunday evening business soon, as the Chautauqua promoter has about given up trying to convince the mayor that Chautauquas are not in the same classification as movie shows.

Universal Withdraws Action

Announcement is made by atorney for Ramms, Inc., and its president, Charles Abrams, that the actions instituted against the company and its head by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, for replevin, injunction and damages, have been withdrawn. The question was over the title to certain films.

Herbert Kaufman Weeklies Going Big.

General Manager Sam E. Morris, of Select Pictures Corporation, announces that the Herbert Kaufman Weeklies, presented by Lewis J. Selznick, are meeting with hearty approval in all sections of the country. He declared that messages refer to these short features as "distinctly original" and "entirely novel."

"Never in the history of the motion picture have exhibitors realized the worth of short features as they have the Herbert Kaufman Weeklies as program strengtheners," said Mr. Morris. "To begin with they are a distinct novelty to the industry, and the fact that Mr. Selznick has thrown Mr. Kaufman's brilliance so vividly and impressively on the screen has made them stand out in a class by themselves."

The Herbert Kaufman Weeklies released to date are "A Good Fellow," "Content," "Pity the Poor," "Society Bad-Men" and "The Dictionary of Success."

Hallmark Offers Fairbanks' "Americano" on June List

FRANK G. HALL, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, has placed on the list of special star productions for June 15 release, Douglas Fairbanks in "The Americano," Anita Loos and John Emerson's screen version of Eugene P. Lyle's novel "Blaze Derringer."

Alma Rubens is Mr. Fairbanks' leading woman. Others in support are Spotteswood Aitken, Carl Stockdale, Charlie Stevens, Lillian Langdon and Tom Wilson.

"The Americano" is one of the star's biggest successes, having played to the best house recorded at New York's Rialto Theatre. In the territories through which Hallmark is booking the Fairbanks picture, a special campaign has been waged and reports from General Sales Manager Montgomery indicate that record bookings will result.

The story is laid in South America and its action centres around one of this country's sporadic revolutions with Doug as the central figure. It has been said that this picture holds the distinction of presenting Fairbanks in more thrilling moments than any production in which he has appeared.

With "The Lamb" it ranks as the star's best work before the camera.

Louise Glaum's Big Success on Hallmark's List for June

LOUISE GLAUM in "Love or Justice," one of her best early successes, is on the list of June releases announced by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, for the territory exclusively controlled on a special series of re-edited star productions.

"Love or Justice" is a Thomas H. Ince production from a story by Lambert Hillyer, directed by Walter Edwards.

Miss Glaum is supported by Jack Richardson, Charles Gunn, J. Barney Sherry, Doecas Matthews and Charles E. French. Miss Glaum portrays the role of Nan Bishop, the uncrowned queen of New York's underworld. The big moments in this Ince production are represented by a duplication of a New York tenderloin cabaret, a court-room scene and what has been pronounced by critics, Miss Glaum's most famous vampire characterization.

In the territories in which Hallmark is releasing the Glaum special, General Sales Manager Montgomery reports 100 per cent bookings in first runs.

Martha Mansfield To Play Opposite O'Brien.

Prior to his departure recently for the Selznick west coast studio, Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, announced that he had selected Martha Mansfield to appear opposite Eugene O'Brien in his next picture, "The Nobleman."

"The Nobleman" was written by H. H. Van Loan. Mary Murillo adapted the story for the screen. The direction will be in the hands of George Archainbaud.

Breaks Record in Third Week.

The Stanley Theatre broke all known records in the history of the house last week when it held over the production, "Why Change Your Wife?" for its third successive week. The Stanley played to capacity at every performance.

Exploitation and Entertainment Values Are Both Seen in "The Isle of Destiny"

UNUSUAL exploitation possibilities as well as strong entertainment values are features of Character Pictures Corporation's special production that has just been completed. Realizing the importance of exploitation, special consideration was given to all elements entering into the making of the production that would tend to give it the best of exploitation possibilities.

Being out of the ordinary and laid in a picturesque locale, the story offered the producers opportunities to get something attractive and different into the production. Some of the most interesting scenes allowing for exploitation are those laid in the heart of the Florida jungles, which are so thick that the company was forced to cut their way through to the desired locations. These scenes were taken far off the beaten track. A tropical banana grove is one background and for several days the company worked on one of the largest plantations in the world to get the atmosphere of the Philippines.

Much of the story of "The Isle of Destiny" is laid on a desert island of the South Seas, and the company journeyed to Oriental Island, Florida, to insure the proper realism. The scenes taken there should lend themselves well to exploitation, as the beach on Oriental Island is considered to be one of the most picturesque in the world. The sand is perfectly white, and the company after tests, discovered that it could be photographed to pass as snow. This beach has never been viewed on the screen before, it is said.

Cannibals play an important part in the picture and much time was consumed to get the correct cannibal atmosphere. One of the freak "shots" is a scene in which it is estimated that at one time 50,000 fiddler crabs are in evidence.

In trying to get scenes and locations that were different the company had great difficulties and only secured them at the expense of much time and money. Most of the scenes were taken far away from all lines of transportation and communication and all props and equipment had to be carried by hand.

"The Isle of Destiny" will be given a trade showing in a few days.

Complete Final Scenes for Two Selznick Pictures This Week

THE close of this week will mark the completion of the final scenes of Louise Huff's initial Selznick production, "The Dangerous Paradise," under the direction of William P. S. Earle, and Elaine Hammerstein's picture, "The Point of View." The story is from the pen of Edmund Goulding, a well known dramatist.

Included in the cast supporting Miss Huff are Ida Darling, Templar Saxe, Jack Raymond and Harry Benham.

It is stated that the production has given Miss Huff splendid opportunities for the injecting of her personality in a production that the screen public will acclaim with approval.

Elaine Hammerstein in "The Point of View," directed by Alan Crosland, is credited with a role distinctly different from anything she has ever essayed under the Selznick banner. Appearing in support of Miss Hammerstein are Arthur Houseman, the well-known heavy who played the heavy role in Eugene O'Brien's latest.

Swiss Official Thought Simulated Ice Scenes Real

THE most fascinating snow scenes I ever saw on the screen," remarked M. Emile Thiers, head of the Swiss Trade Mission that arrived in New York recently after witnessing a private view of "The Silent Barrier," first of the novels by Sir Louis Tracy to be filmed by Gibraltar Pictures for W. W. Hodkinson distribution.

"I was amazed at the mountain scenes of 'The Silent Barrier,' because after seeing it I supposed the snow scenes were made in the Engadine and that the lake I saw glistening with ice and snow was St. Moritz. I've been there a score of times, am familiar with the appearance of the surroundings, costumes and sporting paraphernalia that characterize the resort.

"If genius be the capacity for taking infinite pains, the producers of this story for the screen are gifted with genius, for I was able to discover no detail that had been misjudged or overlooked."

The Swiss scenes were actually made at Lake Placid in the Adirondacks, and the mountain snow scenes in which Sheldon Lewis, Gladys Hulette, Corinne Barker, Florence Dixon, Fuller Mellish appear were made on Cobble Mountain and Whiteface Mountain, the latter nearly 5,000 feet high. Director William Worthington obtained the costume designs, models of sleds and other paraphernalia direct from St. Moritz.

Campeau Added to Dawn's Sixth Picture.

The cast of Allan Dwan's sixth independent production to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation through First National has been augumented by the addition of Frank Campeau, one of the best known character actors on the screen. Mr. Campeau has been assigned the leading heavy, a type of characterization in which he has proved himself to be without equal.

The Dwan production in which Campeau is cast has been tentatively titled "Twisted Thoughts." It is an original story written by Dwan, and is based on a powerful theme.

Scene 1: The Worst of Enemies. Scene 2: The Best of Friends, with Enemy in Sight.

We might have reversed these pictures and called it the approach and the getaway. But maybe it's wifey coming in at the right in "Friends and Enemies," a new Comedyart picture, released by Special Pictures Corporation.

"I Will Keep Out of Producing Field," Sol Lesser Promises Brother Showman

SOL LESSER has issued a statement defining his position on the demand of exhibitors that producers do not invade the exhibiting field and vice versa. Mr. Lesser asserts that he is an exhibitor first, last and all the time, and in the future will confine his activities exclusively to exhibiting.

For some time Mr. Lesser has been in an anomalous position, inasmuch as he is a franchise holder of First National in Southern California and Arizona, and at the same time is producer of Annette Kellerman in "What Women Love" and George Beeban in "One Man in a Million." First National officials have indorsed the exhibitors' war on the exhibitor-producer and there has been much speculation as to what Mr. Lesser intended to do.

In explaining his position Mr. Lesser claims that he was a producer and had under way the Kellerman and Beban productions long before he became a First National franchise owner. It was imperative that he go through with the productions, once started, but he intends to make no more productions now that these two are finished.

Mr. Lesser's financial interests are much heavier in the exhibiting field than in the production end. At the present time, in association with Gore Brothers, he owns the Kinema Theatre at Los Angeles, the new downtown theatre at Hollywood, the Apollo and Windsor theatres in Hollywood and a new $3,500,000 theatre now under construction at Los Angeles.

In conclusion Mr. Lesser's statement says that producers have no more right in the exhibiting field than the wholesaler has to enter the retail end in commercial lines.

Exhibitor Independence Depends Upon Independent Producing, Says Hodkinson

ONLY by the exercise of real authority and ability can the exhibitors today protect their independence, and yet their independence is absolutely necessary to the healthy development of the great art of motion pictures. The convention in Cleveland shows that the men who own theatres are at last aroused to the situation that threatens the individual operation of their theatres." This was the comment of W. W. Hodkinson on the events of the week in Cleveland.

"The greatly improved quality of independent productions," he continued, "is the first sign that things are turning in favor of the exhibitor. Every year he is assured a greater variety and a finer grade of photoplay features. His greatest problem is to keep in touch with this market which the independent producers provide and to be able to select the pictures he requires.

"I believe that the exhibitor should not be required to take the risks of the producer, as he often does today. The producer should pay for his own mistakes. The producer in turn will make better profits from more careful methods of production.

"A year ago I predicted new consolidations, particularly on the part of the smaller producer-distributor concerns, if they were to compete with the larger concerns. These organizations, I said, may or may not place fictitious values on their assets and stock and so put a burden on the production of pictures which the exhibitor will be asked to shoulder. Today there are four big combinations that threaten to crush the life out of the independent exhibitor.

"Inflation and over-capitalization are a menace to the stability and prosperity of the motion picture industry. I know as a fact where production units are turning out a volume of business with one-fourth of the money that is represented on the books of certain other concerns whose interests extend not only over production, but also the distribution and the exhibition of pictures. Part of this high cost of production is due, of course, to the long debauches of bidding against each other for stars, directors and books."

Films Republican Convention

For the first time in history motion pictures were made of a political convention when the Republicans gathered in Chicago. The great Coliseum, where the meetings are held, was lighted by giant electric lamps, arranged for by the Republican National Committee for the purpose of making news weekly pictures of the proceedings. This event will be recorded in detail in the forthcoming issue of the International News, the news reel issued by the International Film Service through the Universal exchanges.

The precedent established by the present Republican National Convention will undoubtedly be followed by all national conventions of the future.

E. B. Hatrich, general news manager for the International, is in charge of the taking of the picture.

Stanton Finds No Shortage of Suitable Screen Material

FOR several years many of the producers have been descrying the lack of good story material. According to Richard Stanton, such a condition does not exist. Speaking of this, he says: "From time to time my fellow directors have complained to me of their inability to get worth-while scenarios. This I cannot understand, for although I have yet to produce a story other than by an American author, still there is available a great mine of foreign masterpieces that have never been utilized for the silver-sheet.

"I refer particularly to the colorful romances of Pierre Loti, the tragedies of Ivan Turgenief, Tolstoi and Gorky, and the farces of Marcel Prevost, Frank Wedekind and Anatol Schnitzler. The dramatic masterpieces of Spain and Italy have yet to be picturized, as well as the poetic drama of India, upon which the eyes of the Western world have been focused by the works of Tagore.

"I can't believe that the fertile imagination of our best authors will ever fall short of meeting the demand for more and better stories, but if such a thing should happen, why can we not broaden our cinema taste by producing the great romances of other climes? They are all founded upon the same broad appeal, which is universal in its expression of love, pathos or comedy.

Frank Losee Added to Cast of Farrar's "The Riddle: Woman"

WITH the engagement of Frank Losee for an important part in support of Geraldine Farrar in her first Associated Exhibitors production, "The Riddle: Woman," to be released by Pathe, Director Edward Jose made rapid progress during the last week in the filming of the stage play. The addition of Mr. Losee to the cast gives the production a trio of well-known players. Adele Blood and Montagu Love are other members of the triumverate, which, with Miss Farrar is expected to make "The Riddle: Woman" one of the truly great contributions to the silent drama.

Mr. Losee is a veteran of stage and screen whose work is known to motion picture enthusiasts throughout the land.

The Egyptian set upon which Mr. Jose is now engaged in filming the early scenes of the production is one of the most pretentious ever built for a motion picture.

Miss Farrar has entered upon her work with her characteristic vigor. The strength of the characterization she is drawing in the picture is probably greater than any she has ever portrayed for the screen.

Director Jose is finding the old Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle an ideal place for filming. The stage is sufficiently large to permit the erection of two sets at the same time, so there need be no delay while waiting for the building of interiors.

High Type of Courage Shown by Two Pathe Cameramen

TWO more instances of the devotion to duty of the cameramen for Pathe News have just been disclosed. Richard Scharff, covering the yacht race of the Resolute and Vanitie, was buried under falling mast of the Resolute while he stuck to a small boat winding the crank of his camera, and did not stop winding until the canvas buried him.

Two men were swept into the sea from the rigging of the yacht and, according to the New York Tribune, the men would have been drown but for the action of the cameraman in cutting his way through the sail with a penknife to reach the men struggling in the water under the canvas.

The other cameraman who distinguished himself was Hutt, of San Francisco, who took the pictures in Pathe News No. 41, showing the effect on the camera of a nose dive of several hundred feet toward the earth and of many other dangerous "stunts." His worth brought forth praise from the office of the Director of Air Service of the United States Army, who desire a print for their files.

Independent Reaps Deserved Harvest of Business-Like Policies, Says Arrow Man

THE independent exhibitor, exchangeman and distributer are now individuals of prominence in the picture art and the independent field was never in a better state of progressiveness and stability," said W. E. Shallengberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, just before he left New York for the Cleveland convention.

"I have a twofold purpose in attending the exhibitors' convention in Cleveland. One is to watch the actual convention proceedings and the other one, the major reason, to meet all the independent exhibitors and exchangemen that attend. This convention comes at a time when the independent man is reaping the deserved harvest of his straightforward businesslike policies.

"The independent organizations have been coming closer together for the purpose of bettering their conditions. They have co-operated, thrown aside petty jealousies and personal ambitions and worked to a common end.

Was a Cleveland Visitor.

"In Cleveland I shall meet the independent men who are progressing. I want to get their views and assist them in any way I can. P. B. Dana, Arrow's sales manager, and S. Rubenstein, of the Arrow staff, will accompany me. Together we hope to further the cause of the independent organizations.

"As proof of the stability of the independent field I point to the men in the independent organizations. They are among the most capable in the entire industry. They are level-headed individuals imbued with the desire to provide real screen drama of high character.

"At least twenty to thirty buyers visit our office here each week, seeking the highest class of attractions, pictures that contain clean dramatic action or wholesome humor. The independent organizations have built on solid foundations. They are indeed just what their situation in the industry implies—independent. They are so much so that they can demand the best.

Independent Outlook Favorable.

"Still another example of the stability of the independents is the formation of a group of independent exchanges for the purpose of interchanging ideas, collective buying and furthering co-operation with the exhibitors. The outlook of the independents for a successful future is now a certainty."

Mr. Shallenberger, Mr. Dana and Mr. Rubenstein expect to go to Chicago after the Cleveland convention, where they will hold a special session with other independent executives.

Hannibal N. Clermont Brings "Mountain Madness" to Films

LARGE financial interests are concerned in the direction of the Clermont Photoplay Corporation, according to Hannibal N. Clermont, who was in New York recently. Business men who are making their first venture in pictures have joined Mr. Clermont in his undertaking.

Just before going to the Cleveland convention, as a step homeward to Hollywood, Cal., where his studios are located, Mr. Clermont paid a visit to Moving Picture World and explained some of his plans.

Men of large affairs are represented on the board of directors, with Mr. Clermont, president. The first vice-president is Edson D. Clarage, formerly of the Columbia Tool Steel Co.; second vice-president, W. D. Ball, formerly of Carthage Paper Mills, and third vice-president, Charles R. Hadley, of the Charles R. Hadley Co., a Los Angeles corporation.

The first offering from Clermont is "Mountain Madness," as produced by Lloyd Carleton Productions, with Lloyd B. Carleton directing. This is an Anna Alice Chapin story that will be distributed through Republic.

"Beyond the Cross Roads," a Bradley King story, is now under way at the Clermont studios, Gower and Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood. These studios, although lately built, have proved inadequate to the demands and will forthwith be enlarged.

Seelye Resigns from National

Lewis J. Selznick and C. R. Seelye have both announced that Mr. Seelye had resigned as general manager of National Picture Theatres, Inc. Both Mr. Selznick and Mr. Seelye stated that National would continue with the same policy and the same organization as heretofore.

International Film Service Moves All Departments to Its New Studio Building

IN order to bring about closer co-ordination between the production and business departments, International Film Service Company, Inc., has moved its executive offices and all other departments to its main studio on Second avenue at 127th street, New York. This action has been found necessary, according to Vice-President Henry M. Hobart, because of the rapid expansion of the company. In the past year International has made remarkable strides forward and its plans for the future call for increased activity on a large scale.

"Success can be had only by co-operation and co-ordination of effort," said Mr. Hobart, "and the reason for centering our entire personnel under one roof is because we feel that in that way we will obtain better understanding between the different departments of the organization which will have, naturally, a favorable effect upon our production. Under the new system each department can keep in close touch with the other departments without waste of time and effort. Our plans for the coming year are very ambitious and we believe that by concentrating our various departments at the studio we strengthen our organization.

International Film Service has occupied the entire sixteenth floor at 729 Seventh avenue for the past three years. These quarters have contained the executive department, the auditor's department, the sales department, the contract department, the publicity and advertising department, the cartoon department where the animated cartoons were made, and the news reel department. Under the new plan all these departments are moved up to the studio with the exception of the news reel department, which takes up headquarters at 238 William street, in the heart of newspaper row, so as to be in closer touch with the news of the day.

Johnny Mack to Direct All Exploitation on Equity Films

JOSEPH I. SCHNITZER, general manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, announces the appointment of A. Johnny Mack in the capacity of director of exploitation for all Clara Kimball Young productions and Equity Specials.

Mr. Mack, formerly president and general manager of the Hill Theatre, Newark, is a showman of many years' standing, and his experience dates back to childhood days when he amused himself in and around circuses and outdoor amusement companies, where he received his first inkling of exploitation and his natural aptitude for it. Since that time he has been "through the mill" with shows of many descriptions and in all the big cities of the United States.

Mr. Mack is one of the youngest men in the exploitation end of the game and his success is attributed to one dominating factor—optimism. His reputation of putting pictures over with a "bang" is well known throughout the trade, and his live-wire, clean-cut methods of exploitation have met with unanimous approval. His first opportunity at keeping the Equity ball rolling will be the exploitation of Clara Kimball Young's "For the Soul of Rafael," which will be seen in New York soon.

Pathe to Release August 15, "Pirate Gold," Seitz Serial

WITH the designation of August 15 as the date of its release, Pathe announces "Pirate Gold," starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot, as one of its most important serial offerings of the year.

This new serial, in ten episodes, is the second offering in which George B. Seitz is star, and owing to the popularity he gained in "Bound and Gagged" the picture is regarded as an especially notable one. It is the first response Pathe has been able to make to the demand by exhibitors reported from every branch office for information as to when the next serial starring Mr. Seitz would be available.

In "Bound and Gagged" this director and star introduced into serial form a new style and his employment of the situation of suspense in place of the mere physical action and thrill stunts of the conventional serial was haled as a welcome novelty. The whimsical note he struck in his characterization and the comedy touches of the play were also roundly applauded by the fans, and enabled Seitz to build up in one serial a following which, according to Pathe officials, is equal to that of any of their stars.

General Demand for Charles Ray Shown by Bookings on George M. Cohan Comedy

FIRST reports from all parts of the country on Charles Ray and his forthcoming First National Productions show interesting results as to the increased demand for this star since his affiliation with Arthur S. Kane and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. According to John C. Ragland, general manager of Kane Pictures, there has been a "landslide" in favor of this popular actor. His initial offering, "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," adapted from the famous George M. Cohan drama, is finding full favor among exhibitors in all parts of the country.

Large first run houses are prominent among the many early bookings already made for Ray's initial offering. The George M. Cohan comedy-drama is scheduled for the opening week's run in Chicago at Barbee's Loop Theatre. In Salt Lake City the American Theatre of the extensive Swanson Theatre Circuit has already arranged for the first run on Ray's forthcoming production.

Sign Many Illinois Theatres.

At East St. Louis the film is booked at Joe Erber's house for a week's run; at the Hippodrome, Alton, Ill., the Cohan play will be seen on the screen for a similar period. Week runs at the Apollo and Madison theatres in Peoria have been arranged by Dee Robinson, proprietor, while bookings are also on the calendar for the Gaiety of Springfield, Harry Thornton, manager; the Orpheum of Quincy, Horffler and McConnell, proprietors; the Bio Theatre of Moline, the Lincoln Square of Decatur and the Princess of Joliet, Ill.

The big Olympic Theatre of Watertown, N. Y., and the Regent Theatre owned by the Regorson Corporation of Rochester, are among large upper New York State houses to make arrangements for the Ray pictures. Among others in the state are A. A. Elliott's Playhouse of Hudson, N. Y., and the Rudolph of Tannersville. In the West the A. H. Blank Enterprises are first in line with bookings at the Grand Opera House of Dubuque, Iowa. Theodore Charles, of Vincennes, Ind., has contracted for the Ray films at his big Moon Theatre.

Smaller Houses Book.

More modest sized houses from small towns in New Mexico across the continent to the Carolinas are making early reservations. The Coronado of Las Vegas, N. M., the Liberty of Salem, Ore., the Star of Klamath Falls, Ore., the Orpheum of Twin Falls, Idaho, the Baugh of Shoshone, Idaho, and the Ogden of Ogden, Utah, are among some of the far western bookings.

In Iowa the first returns show the Strand of Marshalltown, Bijou of Mason City, Gem of Oelwein, Lyric of Oskaloosa, Wisner of Eldora, Princess of Ames, Strand of Creston, Empress of Cedar Falls and the Princess of Boone. Among those in Colorado are the Grand of Pueblo, Isis of Boulder, Majestic of Grand Junction, Rex of Greeley and others. In Indiana are the Art of Gary, Isis of Kokomo, Wonderland of Clinton, Starland of Anderson, Gaiety of Bluffton and the Perfect of Huntington. Nebraska has bookings among others at Shickley, Edgar and Benkelman; in the Liberty at Trenton, Valley at Palisade, Crystal at Wauneta and the Imperial at Imperial. North Carolina is represented among early reports as follows: the Athens of New Bern, Broadway of High Point and the Palace of Rocky Mount.

Prepare Elaborate Campaign Books on Two Selznick Films

IN the two press books, one on Olive Thomas' current Selznick production, "The Flapper," and the other on Elaine Hammerstein's latest picture, "Whispers," issued by the Selznick Pictures Corporation, exhibitors can find many valuable and interesting bits as program brighteners and exploitation material.

That this exhibitors' campaign book should prove of incalculable aid in interesting audiences in the Selznick picture, "The Flapper," is evidenced by taking but one glance at its contents. Olive Thomas, herself, has written a short pithy version of her definition of a "flapper," program readers in abundance also deal with that callow age, a mail campaign, current reviews, advance notices, in short all the essentials that go to make up for both the success of the picture and the brightening of an exhibitor's program.

Throughout the campaign book on "Whispers" there is found considerable live material for both program and newspaper display advertising that is bound to attract the eye of all motion picture patrons. Exploitation suggestions that are simple, yet effective and not too costly, production cuts, music cues, poster displays, snappy feature display ads and many interesting program readers that make good reading, and other suggestions with which an exhibitor can attract crowds to his theatre, are found in the campaign books.

Metro Finds California Snow to Work in During Midsummer

WHILE Southern California basks in sunshine and the East is beginning to assume its summer aspects, real snow scenes were photographed by Rex Ingram, director of "Hearts Are Trumps," the third of the five Drury Lane melodramas to be produced by Metro at Huntington Lake, seventy-five miles up the mountain back of Fresno, Cal.

According to a communication received from Director Ingram at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, more than six feet of snow were encountered in the mountain fastnesses directly back of the famous center of the raisin district.

Members of the party, twenty-seven in all, were obliged to wear heavy winter clothing not for the sake of adding realism to the picture, but for protection against the severe weather which prevailed in the lofty altitudes of the Sierras, where the scenes were made.

In direct contrast to the wintry conditions at Huntington Lake, Alice Lake, who is being featured in "The Misfit Wife" and the personnel of her company, enjoyed themselves immensely during the filming of bathing scenes, which were taken at Venice, Southern California's popular beach resort, at the very time the snow scenes were being photographed.

Big Business Continues on "Riders of the Dawn"

RIDERS OF THE DAWN," Benjamin B. Hampton's production of Zane Grey's novel, "The Desert of Wheat," is announced by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to be creating a booking record for a western type of picture greater than that achieved by Mr. Hampton's previous successes, "The Westerners," "Desert Gold" and "The Sagebrusher."

The demand for "Riders of the Dawn" is in accordance with the prediction of Hodkinson executives when they announced it as the finest picture yet made from a Zane Grey story. Most of the elements responsible for the success of "Desert Gold" and "The Westerners" are found in "Riders of the Dawn."

The past week "Riders of the Dawn" was booked for an indefinite engagement at Talley's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, beginning June 21, to be backed by a powerful promotion campaign. Abe Goodside, owner of the new Capitol Theatre, Springfield, Mass., has contracted for the Hampton production and will give it a week's immediate presentation. Mr. Goodside has also booked the Zane Grey picture for a week's run at his Empire Theatre, Portland, Me. "Riders of the Dawn" will also begin a week's run at M. L. Markowitz's Strand Theatre, San Francisco. There are only a few of the current first run bookings.

"Sex" a Record Attraction at Two New York Loew Houses

J. PARKER READ, JR.'S, Louise Glaum production, "Sex," proved, it is said, to be a big attraction at Marcus Loew houses in Greater New York the past week, smashing attendance marks at the New York and the Metropolitan, Brooklyn.

The Loew exploitation force inaugurated an unusual promotion campaign. For ten days in advance of the showings billboard space on the principal thoroughfares and in the subway and elevated stations of both boroughs were used for special teaser ads. These were also used on front and rear of Brooklyn trolleys. In addition large quantities of regular production accessories were used. This the sixth week after its release finds "Sex" smashing house records in every section of the country, says a Hodkinson official. Testimonials from exhibitors continue to arrive at the Hodkinson home office. "Sex" played a four-day engagement at the Masonic Theatre, New Bern, N. C., and Manager Joseph H. Nelson says: "We played the picture at advanced prices and must confess that it is one of the biggest money-getters we have ever shown. It's a picture that will make any kind of audience sit up and take notice, and the theatre manager who passes it up is allowing cobwebs to gather around his box office."

Westover Story for Buck Jones.

Since writing "The Scuttlers," a story of adventure on the sea, in which William Farnum has the stellar role, Clyde C. Westover, a recent addition to the William Fox scenario staff at Hollywood, has written a strong western story, in which Buck Jones, the sensational Fox star, has been given the title role—"Sunset Sprague." Mr. Westover began work on "Sunset Sprague" immediately on completion of "The Scuttlers," and in thirty days had the story written and the scenario completed.

Campaign Book and Production of Select Serial, "Branded Four," Progressing Fast

IN announcing last week the fact that Select Pictures would soon make known the release date of the initial episode of "The Branded Four," the serial picture with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber in the leading roles, Sam E. Morris, vice president of Select, sponsored the statement this week that with the mention of the first episode there will be ready an exhibitors' campaign book replete with originality and startling exploitation innovations.

Mr. Morris also stated that work on "The Branded Four" is progressing rapidly and that in its progress there are revealed many thrilling and human touches that will strike at the heart of life's emotions. That this serial picture is distinctly different in theme and treatment was vouchsafed by Mr. Morris when he declared that the structure is built around four babies on whose backs are inscribed numerical figures.

"We are bending every effort to make this serial picture unique in presentation from both the production and exhibitors campaign book angles," said Mr. Morris. "Ben Wilson, whose name is linked with many serial and feature pictures, reveals some striking phases of his acting ability in the many high spots in the production.

"Neva Gerber, who plays the leading feminine role opposite Mr. Wilson, goes through a series of highly entertaining and dramatic incidents. She brings to light those rare pulsating moments that tug and grip audiences and relieves these by performing realistically many thrilling scenes. With the aids that we will offer exhibitors following the announcement of the initial episode of 'The Branded Four,' I can guarantee the box office success of the serial. We are spending an unusual amount of money to get desired effects, and the results that we obtained have justified the expenditure. Once again I repeat my word of advice to all exhibitors: Watch for the initial release date of 'The Branded Four'."

Two Elaborate Sets Built for Forthcoming Selznicks

AN indication of the elaborateness of two forthcoming Selznick productions is furnished in the announcement that on one end of the huge stage at the Selznick Fort Lee studio there has been erected a "set" showing the interior of a modern church in all its symbolic and religious atmosphere.

This set is being used for William Faversham's second Selznick production, a Hobart Henley picture.

In the cast supporting Faversham are Lucy Cotton, who plays the leading feminine role, Pedro DeCordoba, also portraying an important work, and Henry Warwick, Lulu Warrenton, Evelyn Sherman, Bobby Agnew and Frank Evans.

On the other end of the stage at the Fort Lee studio is said to be a set of a frontier bar room being used in "Red Foam," a Ralph Ince special production. This bar room throws to the foreground some of the vital moments in the picture, and its atmosphere is said to vitalize the powerful trend of the story, written by William H. Hamby.

Hallmark Announces King's "Discarded Woman" for June

THE DISCARDED WOMAN," a Burton King production in six reels, is announced as the June 15 release on the Hallmark Pictures Corporation's program by Frank G. Hall, its president. The picture is in six reels and was produced under the personal direction of Mr. King whose last special production was "The Lost Battalion."

Grace Darling and Rod La Rocque are the featured players with a supporting cast including E. J. Radcliffe, W. D. Corbett, Madelene Clare and James Cooley. Miss Darling recently completed the starring role in a Robert W. Chambers novel and Mr. La Rocque is one of the screen's best known leading men, his latest appearance being opposite Mary Miles Minter in the screen version of Israel Sangwill's novel, "Nurse Majorie."

"The Discarded Woman" is the story of an unhappy marriage and of a wife who would deceive her husband to safeguard the home but sacrificed all rather than betray him.

The locale takes in the East and West giving rise to strong dramatic moments and action. The Western dance hall and the Eastern high life are presented wth a "true-to-life" faithfulness that make the picture, according to pre-reviewers, ideal entertainment. This King production is Hallmark's early summer special and will be followed in July by the second of King's, a screen version of an original story by Willard Mack.

Malatesta Supports Ethel Clayton.

Fred M. Malatesta, the noted Italian actor, who has become popular for his splendid interpretation of many delightful heavy roles in various big productions, has been engaged to play the part of Syke Ravenal in Ethel Clayton's new starring adaptation for Paramount of Cynthia Stockley's story, "Rosanne Ozanne." The part is the suave, gracious, immaculately dressed sort of a villain for which Mr. Malatesta has shown himself remarkably fitted.

The production is being directed by Tom Forman, and others in the cast are Jack Holt, Fontaine La Rue, Mabel Van Buren, Grace Morse and C. H. Geldart. Mary H. O'Connor wrote the scenario.

Sunlight Niagara Scatters Crowds Worrying Director

AN ingenious way of driving curiosity seekers off location when they insisted on getting within range of the camera was devised recently by Director Edwin Mortimer and Alice Lake, star of Metro's "The Misfit Wife," while it was being filmed outdoors near Pasadena, Cal.

For one of the scenes it was necessary to shoot across a small canyon, and as the action took place near a bridge, a crowd soon gathered. Several times the company was prepared to start work when some inquisitive busybody would get into the picture.

After a few such experiences the director, star and property men held a conference. Soon afterwards four powerful glass reflectors were flashing the sun directly into the eyes of the sightseers and the scene was taken while they backed away, their hands held over their faces. The crowd gave up in despair after that and the company pursued its work in peace.

Press Books Issued for Paramount-Burton Holmes

IN order that the exhibitor may have the material with which to give his message to the public in an attractive form, a press book has been issued to cover the June and July releases of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures. This press book plays up a story of each of the releases for those months, with a complete narrative of each release, describing in detail the big scenes and incidents pictured by each subject, for use in theatre programs.

"Grampa, What Makes Stars Twinkle?"
When they get $5,000 a week—that is, for working in "The Desert of Wheat," a Hodkinson picture.

A representative scene is shown from each release, typical of the general subject matter, that a visual idea may be had of the character of the release and of its general subject matter. The high lights of each release are described on one-line sentences for use in newspaper advertising and a brief synopsis of each release will be printed, for use in newspaper advertising.

Work continues in the filming of Douglas MacLean's first starring vehicle for Paramount, "Yanconna Yillies," at the Thomas H. Ince studios, or rather, in the surrounding country, for this is an outdoor picture and MacLean and the company spend most of their time on location.

"Yanconna Yillies" is said to be brimming over with laughs. It presents the "back to the farm" idea from a different and modern angle, but there is genuine farm stuff in it, and the farm which is serving as the background leaves nothing to the imagination. There are cows and chickens, and hay stacks, and that air of remoteness which one associates with rural quiet.

Gladys George essays the principal feminine role. The picture is directed by Jack Nelson and photographed by Bert Cann.

Announces Second Chester Comedy.

"An Overall Hero" is announced by Educational Film Corporation as the second of the Chester Comedies. Work on the productional has just been completed at the C. L. Chester studios in Los Angeles and the prints are now on their way to New York. Both "Alexander," the marvellous chimpanzee and Arthur Nowell, the eighteen months old baby, who has leading parts in the first Chester Comedy, "Four Times Foiled," are again featured. A considerable portion of the story turns on a horse race, and it is promised that it will be found as full of action as the initial release.

"Torchy Cokes Through" has been selected as the name of the second "Torchy" comedy.

"The Girl Who Dared" Is Released.

"The Girl Who Dared," starring Edythe Sterling, was released on May 31 by the Republic Distributing Corporation. In the cast supporting Miss Sterling are Jack Carlyle, Steve Clements, Yakima Canutt and Gordon Sackville. The story was written by Alvin J. Neitz and directed by Cliff Smith.

Many Theatres Shelve Films to Show Faversham Picture

AFTER the initial presentation of William Faversham in his first Selznick picture, "The Man Who Lost Himself," at the New York Strand Theatre, New York newspaper critics praised the production, according to Sam E. Morris, vice-president and general manager of Select Pictures.

"This manifestation," said Mr. Morris, "was augmented by an approval of critics throughout the country. Despite the warm weather in New York crowds filled the Strand Theatre to capacity.

"The Strand Theatre broke a long standing rule in booking 'The Man Who Lost Himself. And this shows if a good box office attraction comes along exhibitors will push their pre-arranged schedule to the background. That is what has been done also at Grauman's, Los Angeles; Stillman, Cleveland; Palace, Washington; the Poli and other big New York Circuits, the Regent, Gordon and Piccadilly, of Rochester, and the Temple, Toledo.

"In San Francisco Mr. Roth had at first decided to show the production at his Tivoli Theatre, but when he realized the power of the picture he switched it to the Imperial, a much larger house, for a two weeks' run."

Alice Joyce's Next Special Picture Will Be "The Prey"

THE PREY," described as a sensational society drama of tangled lives, is the next special production in which Albert E. Smith will present Alice Joyce. The story was selected by Mr. Smith many months ago as containing excellent material for the most effective display of Alice Joyce's talent and charm, and in writing the scenario Caulder Johnstone provided Miss Joyce with many unusual opportunities outlined in the original story by Joseph Le Brandt.

George L. Sargent directed the production, several weeks having previously been spent in casting it. Harry Benham appears as leading man, and L. Rogers Lytton, one of the most polished "heavies" on the screen, has a role in which he perpetrates his villainy in his usual convincing manner.

Robertson-Cole Announces "Li Ting Lang" as Sessue Hayakawa's Next Production

THE name of the big drama starring Sessue Hayakawa, which has been occupying the attentions of Haworth and Robertson-Cole for several months, will be "Li Ting Lang," a contraction of the original title of the story "Li Ting Lang, Chinese Gentleman," published in the Green Book Magazine a short time ago.

It was definitely decided last week to preserve the working title, as it is so typically Chinese that it carries with it all the mystery of the Orient. The picture was completed just before Mr. Hayakawa made his recent trip East and it will be released within a short time.

As the original title indicates, Sessue Hayakawa is seen in this picture in a Chinese role, but one that is quite different from any of the other Chinese roles he has played.

As Li Ting Lang, he plays a Chinese prince educated in the United States, and the scenes are set in both America and China. The role is quite sympathetic whether looked at from the Oriental or the Occidental angle. For once, at least, the East and the West are agreed. "Li Ting Lang," according to the Robertson-Cole executives who have seen the picture, should prove the best bet ever offered with Hayakawa as the star.

As Li Ting Lang, Hayakawa demonstrates that by the absorption of American ideals a Chinese can become a regular he-man—a man who can love, who can fight, who can sacrifice. The early scenes of the picture are set in America, where Li Ting Lang is familiarly known to his white college chums as "Old Ting-a-ling." He is really of royal blood. He is in love with a white girl whose hand is also sought by an American youth. Through a series of compelling drama incidents Li Ting Long returns to China and the girl, believing him dead, marries her other suitor.

Then the scenes and the characters swing to China during the revolution. Li Ting Lang is now a general of the revolutionary forces, despite his royal birth. He is placed in the position of defending the girl against a gang of plotters and there is a big fight.

Without going into further details it can be said that Hayakawa has never before had such an opportunity to display his splendid screen artistry and histrionic ability. The story, which was written by Howard P. Rockey and adapted for the screen by E. Richard Schayer, abounds in an unusual wealth of colorful atmosphere.

A splendid cast supports Mr. Hayakawa, including Doris Pawn, Marc Robbins, Frances Raymond, Alan Forrest and C. E. Mason.

"World and His Wife" to Be Next Cosmopolitan Release

THE next Cosmopolitan Production scheduled for general release is "The World and His Wife," a picturization of the famous play of the same name by Charles Frederic Nirdlinger. July 25 is the date set for its premiere showing in the different theatres of the country.

Frances Marion, who made the picture scenario, has consistently followed the play's construction and characterization, adding greatly to its strength, of course, by the greater possibilities the screen offers.

Gossip, that most insidious of evils in the present day social system—and the one which causes more unhappiness to a greater number of people than any other—is the theme upon which this story is based.

With Alma Rubens as the featured player it numbers among its members such well-known names as Montagu Love, Pedro de Cordova, Charles Gerard, Gaston Glass, Byron Russell, Margaret Dale, Mrs. Allan Walker and a host of others.

Most of the scenes are laid in Spain and Director Robert G. Vignola has managed to infuse wonderful Spanish atmosphere into the picture, both from a character and a scenic standpoint.

A massive and wonderfully artistic courtyard scene and an old Spanish tavern are among the many unusual sets that are bound to cause much comment. In the home of Don Julian, where much of the action takes place, some very rare antique furniture is used. The draperies used in these sets are also priceless works of art. Massiveness and magnificence characterize the picture throughout.

In the wedding scene the entire "Land of Joy" company of twenty-two Spanish dancers took part, and for this action a magnificent set comprising a whole mansion with sunken gardens, marble pool and other rich man's extravagance was constructed.

Vitagraph Gives Title of New Antonio Moreno Serial

THE VEILED MYSTERY" is to be the title of the newest Vitagraph serial, according to an announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of that company. Antonio Moreno, whose work in "The Invisible Hand" and other serial productions has made him a favorite all over the country, is the star. Pauline Curley will again be seen as his leading woman.

The leads of this episode play and the authors, it is claimed, are the only contact points between this serial and any other ever put out by Vitagraph or any other company.

The first episode, which has already been seen by Vitagraph's executives in the East and pronounced of big caliber, shows Moreno in the pool of the Los Angeles Athletic Club —where he keeps in trim for serial taxations on his energy—in the midst of an exciting game of water polo. A telegram calls him from the excitement of the aquatic sport to his home, where developments have taken such a turn as to whisk him into the very storm center of mystery and adventure.

It is a very different Antonio Moreno whom one sees in the second episode, and so on throughout all of them, Moreno having his best chance so far to do some real dramatic acting as well as sensational stunts.

The direction has been placed in the hands of Webster Cullison, who is sacrificing production speed to realism and minuteness of detail.

Many New York Dailies Review Carpentier Film Second Time

ANOTHER precedent was smashed by "The Wonder Man," the Robertson-Cole super-special starring Georges Carpentier, when it opened at the Strand Theatre, New York City, Sunday, June 6, and received from most of the metropolitan newspapers additional reviews. This was notwithstanding the fact that eight days previously columns of space had been devoted to the picture following its premiere in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor.

Possibly the dramatic editors worked on the theory that the reviews of the Hotel Astor showing were in the nature of prereviews because of its presentation under the direct auspices of Robertson-Cole and the American Legion of New York County. No matter what the underlying cause, the fact remains that the day after "The Wonder Man" opened at the Strand the New York newspapers again gave space to the picture and reiterated the many complimentary things they had published following the premiere performance.

Evidently the presentation of the picture in its proper setting—that of the motion picture theatre—improved the picture in the estimation of some of the critics, who went their previous review one better upon seeing the picture at the Strand.

Mack Sennett's Plans for Active Year Include Office Space in New York City

MACK SENNETT'S policies as outlined by his personal representative, E. M. Asher, who has just returned to New York, contemplate a year of extraordinary activity. New associations will be established and new ventures hazarded on the sea of motion picturedom.

Mr. Sennett's first necessity in New York, says his representative, will be to find suitable and ample office space. Mr. Asher will seek to secure such headquarters with the Producers' Association, of which Mr. Sennett is treasurer, and the members of which, besides Mr. Sennett, include Thomas H. Ince, Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan and George Loane Tucker.

On account of the immediately forthcoming distribution of Sennett's latest five-reel comedy, "Married Life," Mr. Asher's present duties relate to its release through First National. The release date is set for June 15, and the picture has been delivered in New York. Mr. Asher says it will eclipse the popularity of "Down on the Farm," which proved a record breaker for Sennett.

Ninety days following the release of "Married Life" will see the beginning of the distribution of the second five-reel comedy for which the First National has contracted, says Mr. Asher. This will bring Mr. Sennett's activities up to the time of the beginning of operations by the Associated Producers, which thereafter will distribute Sennett Comedies.

Feature Farces Coming.

These activities of Mr. Sennett will include the production of two-reel feature farces, five-reel comedies and five-reel comedy dramas. Mr. Sennett resents the rumor that he is to discontinue the production of two-reel comedy features. "It is as though certain producers wish he would," says Mr. Asher, "but they are doomed to disappointment. Mr. Sennett has no idea of abandoning a field of screen expression in which he has won a unique fame."

"Sennett's forces in all departments numbers close to 500," says Mr. Asher, "and the studios in Los Angeles are alive with activity and abounding in optimism inspired by the success that has attended everything that has come from the producing genius of the 'Comedy King.'"

Big Pictures Mean Summer Prosperity, Believes Pathe Director of Exchanges

WITH the approach of the summer period and the difficulties it presents to distributors and exhibitors alike, Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., strikes a reassuring note in a report he has just made to Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager, regarding the situation throughout the country. Mr. Pearson believes this will be the biggest summer in the history of the industry. His report did not imply that business will hold up as it has during the last few months, but did indicate it will not undergo the severe decrease that has marked it during recent summers.

"There is only one cure for poor summer business," said Mr. Pearson, "and that is high-class pictures. People demand amusement and entertainment in the hot months, just as in any other period of the year. Yet there are exhibitors who invite a decrease in business by supplying their patrons with cheaper programs. They apparently fail to realize the serious consequences this will have on their business when the summer is over.

Cool Theatre and Good Picture Attract.

"Average persons are compelled to remain in their city homes during the summer, and they are as comfortable, if not more so, in a well ventilated and cooled motion picture theatre. But if they do not have the proper attractions to draw them, naturally they will not patronize the show.

"Give them the class of pictures they are accustomed to see at other periods of the year and they will come out in sufficient numbers to warrant the staging of the more costly type of production. If one exhibitor does not give it to them, his competitor will, and the latter is the one who will benefit when fall comes around again.

"Pathe will not curtail the class of its production in the least during the summer. In fact, a number of the biggest pictures in Pathe's history will be released during this season. For instance, there will be J. Stuart Blackton's 'Passers-By.' This is to be released on June 20.

"Then, as an Independence Day issue, there will be William Desmond in 'A Broadway Cowboy,' which is in a class by itself for this type of picture. Harold Lloyd in his greatest comedy, 'High and Dry,' first of his second series of $100,000 two-reelers, is to be issued on July 11. This is a certain business getter in any kind of weather.

In our serial department we will release 'Pirate Gold,' second of the George B. Seitz series in which the producer is starred himself.

"The public wants big outdoor pictures for summer consumption. Consider, then, these offerings, which are of recent issue: 'My Husband's Other Wife,' a story of Broadway and the Kentucky hills; 'Other Men's Shoes,' Edgar Lewis's first big Pathe feature; 'The Deadlier Sex,' with its wonderful settings in the California mountains; 'Sherry,' another Edgar Lewis offering, which is built largely outdoors.

"Comedies, too, have their place in summer programs, and Pathe is offering exhibitors as fine a product as there is on the market: 'Bringing Up Father' comedies; the Rolins, starring 'Snub' Pollard, and the Mrs. Sidney Drew series starring John Cumberland."

Made Honor Guests at Cauldron Club

Paul Powell, who has been engaged to direct Mary Miles Minter next year, and Will M. Ritchey, supervising director of the Realart studios at Hollywood, were named honor guests of the Cauldron Club of Pasadena at that organization's May dinner meeting.

Hunter College Announces Summer Photoplay Courses

MEETING the demand of summer students for a course in photoplay construction, Hunter College, of the City of New York, announces a thirty hours' course in photoplay construction, to begin July 6. The course will be under the direction of Paul H. Sloane, B.S., a staff writer for the Fox company, who will give his pupils a thorough technical instruction based upon his actual studio experience rather than upon the theory of how photoplays should be constructed.

During the course each pupil will be required to produce one scenario of an adaptation and one original photoplay manuscript, in additions to studies in plotting and constructive criticism.

Sargent's "Technique" Is Textbook.

Sargent's Technique of the Photoplay has been adopted as the textbook.

Although the present demand centres upon play and book rights, an increasing number of students appear to demand courses in photoplay construction, apparently realizing that in the long run the studios must return to stories written directly for the film for best results.

Shirley Mason To Do "Merely Mary Ann"; Fox Secures Original Stage Settings

SHIRLEY MASON is to do "Merely Mary Ann" as a motion picture. The stage success in which Eleanor Robson won international renown during the period in which she appeared under the management of the old theatrical firm of Liebler & Company, is to be converted to the silent drama by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation.

Work has already been started on "Merely Mary Ann" at the Fox studios in Hollywood with the petite and talented Miss Mason in the title role. This part, known to most theatregoers of the country, should be suited to the little star whose success since she started with Fox, in "Her Elephant Man," "Molly and I" and "Love's Harvest," has brought her rapidly to the front. The director selected is Edward J. LeSaint. He also wrote the scenario.

Made from Zangwill Play.

"Merely Mary Ann," with that fine dramatic actress, Eleanor Robson, in the title role, is one of the best known of stage successes produced during the past decade. It was in this play that Miss Robson, under the personal direction of George C. Tyler, manager director of the Liebler firm, established herself most firmly in the hearts of theatregoers of this country and brought to the author of the play, Israel Zangwill, one of the greatest successes of the day.

It was from the stage manuscript by Mr. Zangwill, and from his original book of the same name as the play, that Mr. LeSaint made the scenario for the Shirley Mason picture. According to arrangements made by William Fox a good portion of the original stage settings used by the Liebler firm will be shipped in the West Coast for use in the film version. The remainder of the interior settings used in the screen production will be modeled after the design of the original stage backgrounds and properties.

Costumes from Stage Plates.

Costuming of the picture will be patterned after the originals made from photographs of the entire cast of principals who appeared with Miss Robson in the play. Raymond McKee, who was leading man with Miss Mason in her latest Fox release, "Love's Harvest," has been retained as lead in "Merely Mary Ann." He will play the part of Lancelot, which was enacted by H. B. Warner in the stage version. Another of the principals is Harry Spingler, a light comedian. Georgia Woodthrope will have the role of Mrs. Leadbatter, and Babe London, a child actress, has the part of Rose Leadbatter.

George Seitz to Produce Feature in Spain; June Caprice and Marguerite Courtot in Cast

GEORGE B. SEITZ, well known as a producer, director and star of Pathe serials, is going to Spain to produce the first feature picture he has attempted in his long career in motion picture work.

Following arrangements made with Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., June Caprice, long one of the best known women stars in picturedom, will be co-starred with Mr. Seitz, Marguerite Courtot, who has appeared with Mr. Seitz in serials he has produced for Pathe, will have a leading part in the production. Harry Semels, interpreter of heavy roles in several Pathe serials, is also to accompany the party.

The story selected for his first feature starring vehicle is an adaptation from a play he wrote some time ago under the title "The Golden Senorita." In making the scenario, however, Mr. Seitz made over the title also and the picture version is to be called "Rogues and Romances." It is described as a love romance, strongly flavored with humor and sentiment and containing a strong dramatic issue which has to do with a spirited and colorful Carlist uprising.

The director-star is now producing a new serial for Pathe "Velvet Fingers," in which he is appearing with Marguerite Courtot. He expects to complete the fifteenth and final episode by the end of June.

On July 6 he will sail from New York with his company directly for Algeciras, a Spanish port town on the Bay of Gibraltar. The town is famous for its relics of the earliest days of Spanish history and was selected by Mr. Seitz because it is his belief that it is the ideal locality for the production of his story. In association with Mr. Brunet Mr. Seitz and his staff are now working out all details attending the undertaking that can be prepared in advance so that the actual filming of scenes for the play may commence immediately upon the arrival of the company.

Frank Redman and Harry P. Wood will accompany Mr. Seitz as members of his directorial and technical staff.

Rothapfel Books "Edgar"

One of the first bookings that S. L. Rothapfel made for the Capitol Theatre, New York, after he had assumed his new duties, was the third of Booth Tarkington's "Edgar Comedies," "Edgar's Jonah Day," which will occupy an important place on the bill during the week starting June 13. The preceding issues, "Edgar and Teacher's Pet" and "Edgar's Hamlet," when they were run at the Capitol a number of weeks ago, were applauded.

"Edgar's Johan Day" will be handled as a feature, despite the fact that it is only two reels instead of the customary five.

Clayton Hamilton Is Signed to Write Goldwyn Scenarios

CLAYTON HAMILTON, author, lecturer, editor and an authority on the drama, has signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to write original stories and continuities. He went to the Culver City studios recently and is now on his first picture.

Goldwyn's acquisition of Mr. Hamilton adds another foremost stage expert to the already imposing list of authors and playwrights who are devoting their energies to the adaptation of novels and plays for production by Goldwyn. Mr. Hamilton will be associated with J. G. Hawks, head of Goldwyn's scenario department, Thompson Buchanan and Charles Kenyon, both noted writers for the stage, and other equally prominent figures in the scenario department; also Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King, Gertrude Atherton and Leroy Scott, the Goldwyn Eminent Authors, who spend a considerable part of each year on the Coast co-operating on the picturization of their novels.

Shirley Mason Successes Revived

Shirley Mason's success as a star has led George Kleine to revive seven of the dramas in which she has appeared a year or two since. The names of these productions will be familiar to State Right buyers, exhibitors, and the picture loving public, "The Lady of the Photograph," "The Tell-Tale Step," "Cy Whittaker's Ward," "Light in Darkness," etc. These pictures are based on strong dramas and are well produced and acted.

The Photo Products Export Company of 220 West Forty-second street, New York, is the selling agent for the Shirley Mason dramas, as well as for twelve Flagg Comedies, "Girls You Know."

Doraldina
Who will appear in "The Passion Fruit" for Metro, where she will be able to demonstrate her skill in the hula and other fancy dances.

Doraldina Leaves for Metro West Studio to Make "Passion Fruit," Hawaiian Film

DORALDINA, the famous dancer whose engagement as one of its new stars was recently announced by Metro, has left New York for the Pacific Coast to begin work in about a fortnight on her first production under the Metro banner. This vehicle is to be a picturization of Carey Wilson's story, "The Passion Fruit." The locale of the subject is the Hawaiian Islands, and it will present Doraldina in the native atmosphere which she first popularized by her hula hula dance.

Doraldina first blazed into prominence as the creator of the hula hula, which introduced to the American public the native dances of Hawaii. Her success in the role of interpretess of the dances of the Pacific Islands was so great as instantly to install her as a prime favorite with the patrons of restaurants and theatres everywhere.

Her first appearance before New York audiences, after her return from Spain, where she had gone to study the Castilian dances, was in Reisenweber's Cabaret. Her success with the restaurant's patrons resulted in her name being exhibited in electric lights, followed by an offer from the Shuberts, who signed her to appear as a featured member of the musical play, "Step This Way," starring Lew Fields.

Thus established as a headliner on Broadway, Doraldina's next conquest was in motion pictures. George Fitzmaurice had been engaged by Pathe to produce Kipling's novel, "The Naulahka," and the subject required a "wild woman" for the feminine lead. Doraldina got the part and registered an emphatic hit in the role of the East Indian nautch dancer. Following her success in "The Naulahka," Doraldina formed her own motion picture company and started making screen productions of her own.

After her successful appearance in musical comedy and motion pictures, Doraldina was featured in Thomas Dixon's play, "The Red Dawn." Then she returned to the silversheet to remain until her recent engagement with Metro to star in a series of new productions, the first of which will be "The Passion Fruit."

Announcement of the cast will be made after the production has been started on the West Coast.

"Prisoners of Love," Betty Compson's First Picture Under Her Own Banner, Completed

FROM Betty Compson Productions, whose studios and offices are located at the Brunton Studios in Hollywood, comes the announcement that Miss Compson, whose meteoric rise to stardom was brought about through her unusually clever work in George Loane Tucker's production "The Miracle Man," has completed the first of a series of super-features which will be distributed through one of the largest releasing organizations.

The title of this production is "Prisoners of Love" and it is stated to be of a caliber in keeping with her work in "The Miracle Man." Arthur Rosson directed the picture, assisted by his brother Richard.

In the organization of the company a large number of members of the staff of Mr. Tucker joined the new company. The general manager is Alfred A. Grasso, who for eleven years was associated with Henry W. Savage in various executive capacities. His seventeen years' experience in the theatrical business was responsible for his selection for the scenario department of Goldwyn, where he became associated with Mr. Tucker.

Others who are associated with Betty Compson Productions in the capacities which they held with the Tucker organization are Ernest Palmer, chief ciemantographer; Jack Little, technical director; Chester Roberts, secretary to Miss Compson, together with one of the film cutters.

The present plans of the company provide for about four pictures a year, and the star will probably remain on the West Coast.

Willie Collier's Picture Is Set for Release on June 14

AT a recent private screening of the Select picture, "The Servant Question," starring William Collier, it was the unanimous opinion of the assemblage that the stage comedian scores a triumph in the production, according to an announcement this week. The picture will be released on June 4, following a Selznick picture, "The Desperate Hero," starring Owen Moore, scheduled for release on June 7.

Mr. Collier runs riot throughout the entire production, it is declared, and his mimicry coupled with his ability to extract unseen humor out of what seems a conventional situation makes the picture pleasing. As Larry Butler, a young man about town, he is said to render a capital characterization in the role as the pseudo-butler.

Supporting Mr. Collier are "Buster" Collier, his son; Rapley Holmes, a stage and screen artist; Armand Cortez and Virginia Lee. The story is said to revolve around the machinations of Count Amboy, leader of a trio of jewel thieves known as "The Diamond Nippers."

"Midlanders" Print Arrives; Callaghan Is Enthusiastic

BESSIE LOVE'S first production for Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., titled "The Midlanders," has arrived by special representative from Los Angeles and is hailed by its producer as being better than his expectations. His enthusiasm was not dampened by the fact that the delay in arrival of the print caused him to cancel reservations on steamer for England.

"Miss Love vindicates all the advance predictions we have made for her and demonstrates that with the high-standard accoutrements we have given her she has earned the right to stand among the really big personalities of the screen.

"We have not only produced a big picture, but we have proved the contention with which we started out that the highest thought to every single detail, story, direction and production can only result in a product of the highest type. The choice of a big novel, Charles Tenney Jackson's 'Midlanders,' was especially fortuitous since it has proved itself splendidly adaptable to a superior screen production. Ida May Park and Joseph DeGrasse have got every ounce of dramatic possibility from this novel.

"As for Miss Love, she has proved a dramatic surprise even to those whose faith in her latent possibilities induced them to back her to the limit. She has given us a rich character portrayal—sweet, human and vividly appealing."

Franklin Becomes a Realart Director

Chester Franklin, well known for his direction of "kid" pictures, has been added to the Realart staff of directors recently and will work at the company's studios in Hollywood. During the war his services were engaged by the Government to make propaganda pictures for Army Health Service.

Selznick and Select Name Stories and Stars Offered Exhibitors During June

THE month of June brings to exhibitors two Selznick Pictures productions and two Select Pictures Corporation release, according to an announcement made by Charles R. Rogers, director of sales of Select and Republic. These, it is made known, are star productions and are in addition to the usual schedule of Selznick News Weekly, the Herbert Kaufman Weekly feature, Prizma Color Pictures and other subjects which enable the exhibitor to make up his entire program from first to last.

The star releases, in the order of their distribution as scheduled, are: Owen Moore in "The Desperate Hero," the first week in June; William Collier in the Select picture, "The Servant Question"; Eugene O'Brien in "The Figurehead," the last week of the month. Present plans indicate that another Owen Moore film, "Stop That Man," is to lead the July releases.

Gloria Hope Heads Cast.

Supporting Mr. Moore in "The Desperate Hero" are Gloria Hope, who plays the leading feminine role; Nell Craig, former Essanay star; Henry Miller, Jr., Emmett King, Arthur Hoyt, Charles Arling, Virginia Caldwell and Tom Ricketts. The story, written by Edgar Franklin, was adapted for the screen by Zelda Crosby. Wesley Ruggles directed.

In the cast supporting Mr. Collier in his feature are: "Buster" Collier, his son; Armand Cortez, Virginia Lee and Rapley Holmes, all well-known screen players.

Prominent in the cast supporting Mr. O'Brien in "The Figurehead" are Anna Q. Nillson, who plays the leading feminine role; Ora Carew, Edwin Stevens, Joseph Girard, Frances Parks, Kate Price and Maurice Luxford, amateur golf champion of New Zealand. John Lynch, scenario editor for Selznick Pictures, wrote the story and R. Cecil Smith adapted it for the screen. Robert Ellis directed.

Weeklies Listed for June.

Among the Herbert Kaufman Weeklies for June are: "The Dictionary of Success," "A Certain Rich Man" and "The Battler and the Bottler."

Cleo Madison Signed for Big Role

Cleo Madison has been signed by Metro to play the leading role in "Big Game," one of the new plays recently acquired by Metro. "Big Game" was written by Willard Robertson and Kilbourne Gordon and produced in New York during the season just closing. It is now being adapted for the screen by Miss Ruth N. Baldwin, at Metro's Coast studios in Hollywood, Cal.

Every Home Has Its Andy and Its Min, Says Sidney Smith, Creator of "Gumps"

By MARY KEELY

TURNING petty domestic tragedies into screen comics has been the special business of Sidney Smith in giving to the world of fun-finders "The Gumps." Family mishaps such as the lost collar button, the undarned hose and the saltless soup—'tis of such stuff this artist's dreams are made.

"Most of the funny things in life happen without our knowing that they are funny," he remarked the other day in his studio at the Chicago Tribune. "They seem gravely important at the time and we don't think of laughing until it's too late."

Before him was a freshly drawn portrait of the fair and lovely Andy in a most fetching attitude, that of watching a string bean grow. The sight was diverting. Even Sidney Smith's droll smile and pleasant conversation failed to command immediate attention. On the wall just back of him hung another likeness, a large colorful sketch of Andy bawling for Min.

"Andy has changed since he went into the movies," he said in hurt tones, "and not altogether for the better. He's a good deal meaner than he was on paper. It gave me quite a start at first. On the other hand, the films have done lots for Min. She's more coy than I ever dreamed. They're both much more human and that is the essential thing. It was my first intention to make these drawings come close to reality. I felt as if the home, any home, was a big field for comedy, and that very little burlesque was necessary to make everyday happenings seem amusing. Most everything is funny, only we don't know it.

"Early in my career as a cartoonist I discovered that my stuff was interesting to men only. It seems that the general impression is that comics are for the special amusement of the mightier sex. This didn't seem right to me. Pictures of married life and its cross angles, it seemed, should offer laughing material for both sexes. When hubby smokes his after dinner cigar and drops ashes all over the best linen, the resulting wrangle is something that is sure to win the sympathy of both sexes, in opposite ways."

Since the Gumps' screen debut about three months ago it has been generally noticeable that a greater proportion of feminine fans are amused by these series than by many other comics. In contriving something that will amuse women, he explained that Mrs. Sidney Smith has been of great assistance. Many of her suggestions in regard to feminine apparel and housekeeping have helped to put the punch in Min's activities.

Does One Scenario a Week.

Mr. Smith turns out one scenario a week in addition to his daily cartoons, which run in about sixty-five newspapers. Each of his scenarios, like the daily comics, tells a complete story. They do not run in serial form. By June 1 fifteen issues had been completed and were on the market. Celebrated Players Film Corporation in Chicago, of which J. L. Friedman is president, holds the world's rights for "The Gumps," according to the terms of a two-years' contract with Sidney Smith.

Petite Molly Malone Signs to Smile in Goldwyn Films

MOLLY MALONE, the petite, brown-eyed girl who was leading woman for Roscoe Arbuckle and in other productions, has just signed a long-term contract to play exclusively in Goldwyn Pictures. Miss Malone recently completed a part in "It's a Great Life," an adaptation of Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, "Empire Builders," produced by Goldwyn as an Eminent Authors picture, and is now supporting Tom Moore in "Stop Thief," a screen version of the Cohan and Harris stage farce.

Miss Malone was born in Denver, Col., in 1897, and at an early age became interested in acting. Her beauty and personality were appreciated by directors on the watch for appealing ingenues. After her first picture there never was doubt about her success on the screen. She has been with the Vitgraph, Lubin, Lasky and Universal companies, playing feminine leads. Miss Malone is regarded as a valuable addition to Goldwyn's acting forces on the West Coast.

Cleveland Convention

Organization—that is what you need. Of course, you can't do it on wind. You must have money. Just stop and think, men; you are running theatres; could not a 200-seat theatre afford to pay $1 more a month? Take the big fellow; what difference would it make to him if he paid $250 more a year and called in fire insurance, getting something more valuable than any fire insurance that ever existed? You would have a lot of money.

Why His Name Was Used on Film.

"My friends can lick me any time I am wrong. But when I am right I will fight. I will tell you what prompted me to put my name on the film. I book a great deal on the vaudeville circuits, large and small. I had to employ detectives to see that my name was not misused. I figured that if it was valuable to the others it might be valuable to the small fellows.

Ordered Two Sets of Titles.

"When it was brought to my attention, I said that if they don't like it I will take it off. I gave instructions for the making of two titles and not to force any man to use my name who doesn't want to. I always felt and want to say to you again—not because I want you to buy me through films—if you need me, you little fellows, call on me at any time at any price at which you have got to have a picture. I thank you." (Long applause.)

Favor Importations.

Resolutions then were passed legalizing the $5 registration fee and favoring the importation of all high-class foreign-made pictures. Formal protests against the 5 per cent. film rental tax and against censorship in all forms were referred to the proper committees.

The session adjourned at 5.30 p. m.

Through arrangement by First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio and E. M. Asher, personal representative for Mack Sennett, probably one of the biggest events of the Cleveland convention was a luncheon given at the Hotel Statler on Wednesday, June 9, which nearly 1,000 exhibitors and prominent members of the industry attended.

The feature of the occasion was the screening of Mack Sennett's latest five-reel comedy. Following "Married Life," Norma Talmadge's latest success, was shown.

Those in charge of the arrangements were Lieutenant Jim Anderson, Earl Hudson and Norbert Lusk, of First National; E. M. Asher, Maurie Meyers and Charles Muhleman.

Their report, which was unanimously adopted by the convention, included the following resolutions:

That no contributions be received by the convention from any firms engaged in the production or distribution of pictures or the supply of accessories.

That none but bona-fide independent theatre owners be admitted to the floor of the convention.

That no proxies of any kind be exercised, and that voting should be on the basis of one vote to every independent exhibitor attending.

That before being permitted the privilege of participating, all exhibitors should sign blanks which should have to be passed upon by the committee on credentials, a program for amusement, not to exceed in cost $1,000, that the registration fee for the convention be $5.

That the following subcommittee on registration be appointed: Glenn Harper, S. I. Berman, H. Q. Alexander, M. Van Praag, F. J. Herrington and Sam Bullock, secretary.

That the first order of business after permanent organization be the hearing and reception of the report of the Committee of Seventeen, that these questions be brought before the convention in the following order: Invasion by producing interests of exhibiting field, deposits, forced percentage booking, standardization of contracts, control of the screen, 5 per cent. Federal film tax, advertising, music tax, co-operative insurance, Loew-Metro, censorship, Sunday opening, N. A. M. P. I. poster ruling, co-operative booking.

Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors Hear Report of Committee of Seventeen

A MASS meeting of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America was called for Monday night, June 7, at the Hotel Cleveland. The summons was placed alongside of a large placard reading, "Frank Rembusch, Room 2020," and was made by means of a poster prominently hung in the Cleveland. It read as follows:

Exhibitors' Notice
Tonight
8:00 P. M.
Meeting
Assembly Room
All Exhibitors Welcome

The meeting, which was presided over by Frank J. Rembusch, resolved itself into an executive meeting of the Committee of Seventeen, as only a handful of exhibitors attended. Business was confined to formally adopting a report of the Chicago meeting and subsequent work by the committee, to be presented at the mass meeting at the Winton on the following day.

Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C., gave an informal speech on national Americanization work by means of motion pictures.

Mr. Crandall stressed the point that although exhibitors were willing and anxious to co-operate in Americanization work by any means in their power, they were not prepared to do so for the financial benefit of any person or persons. Several exhibitors who heard his talk heartily indorsed his statements.

Importance of Work Seen.

Mr. Crandall has been associated with former Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane and others in the work of Americanization. The importance of the service which exhibitors may render is shown by the resolution passed by both education committees of the Congress recognizing the work done by exhibitors, he said. He also stated that the nation's leaders now base their hopes on motion pictures instead of newspapers as a means of education in American ideals.

"These propaganda films are mostly two-reelers," said Mr. Crandall. "It goes without saying that there is no money in this kind of offering unless some prominent film star is featured in them.

Want No Surplus.

"Yet I and others have been charged $150 for two days' use of a propaganda film. Such a sum paid by us means a profit for some one somewhere.

"We are not going to stand for it. We are ready and willing to co-operate in every way with this most essential work of Americanization, but we are not going to permit our co-operation to line some person's nest.

"If some one does make a profit from the rental of these films then it is our fault and no one else's. It is up to us to investigate and determine a fair rental. We are the men who are financing the undertaking and it lies with us to see that the sums we disburse go in the right direction.

"We want no surplus accruing for the benefit of any person who is willing to make money out of Congress and the willingness of exhibitors to assist in a work vital to the nation."

"Remodeling Her Husband"

Paramount Presents Dorothy Gish in a Comedy of the Feminine Point of View in Marriage.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

REMODELING Her Husband" has bright subtitles and snappy Dorothy Gish. It is on the lines of those plaints in "Snappy Stories," wherein some woman who fully believes in her piercing insight into the nature of man, picks a cuff-shooing imbecile. In such stories the man never works—he is a broker, or banker, or some other kind of soft-voiced parasite—his business is to tell people stocks are what they really are not—and she expects this cerebral rubber stamp to have brains enough to appreciate her. When she has bitterly measured his inanity, she cannot repress her indignation—she rushes into print with a variation of Pope's essay on man. Now that "Remodeling Her Husband" is off the author's mind we may look for some less-conventional comedy—we are led to expect it from her delightful sense of humor as revealed in the subtitles.

Dorothy Gish admirably portrays the sheltered girl, the dear little creature who has never so much as lifted a finger to help others, who enters marriage with the serene self-deception that she can continue to escape responsibility. Her vanity at the ceremony is as charmingly consistent as the feminine attention to detail under the direction of fair Lillian. Written, acted and directed by women, "Remodeling Her Husband" is a costume display, is dainty, neat and pure of spirit. It is a case of "Oh, Girls!" almost an Adamless Eden, the supposed men merely a befogged lot of creatures, whose sole reason for existence is their contribution to the economic situation of womankind. The optimistic spirit of Dorothy and the sparkle of the author's lines, however, place "Remodeling Her Husband," as demonstrated at the Rialto, in the clean class of pleasing entertainment.

Janie Wakefield.....Dorothy Gish
Jack Valentine.....James Rennie
Mrs. Wakefield.....Marie Burke
Mr. Wakefield.....Downing Clarke
Mr. Valentine.....Frank Kingdon

Director, Lillian Gish.
Story by Dorothy Elizabeth Carter.
Length, 4,844 Feet.

The Story.

Janie Wakefield is the daughter of an enormously rich importer, but she is domestic in her tastes and has been raised in secluded home life. A child at heart, she puts away her dolls and playthings when the time comes to marry handsome Jack Valentine. She is principally interested in her wedding dress and the house decorations. After the ceremony she is a loving, trusting little pet, apparently spiritless until the moment of her first disillusion. She chances to see her flirtatious husband in a taxi with a former charmer. Even then she can only believe it is someone who resembles him. Later on, when she chances to see him led into an apartment across the hall by an adventurous young widow, poor Janie can scarce believe her eyes. Almost overwhelmed, she manages to get into the apartment without being seen and there catches Valentine yielding to the widow's blandishments. When he returns to Janie there is an all night session. In her infantile rage she tires herself out. In a weak moment toward dawn she forgives him. Once more she discovers the poor thing she has married making a date with a manicure. Then the worm turns. Janie leaves him for good.

She enters the office of her father and becomes so efficient that she is entrusted with an important part of the business. Months elapse before Valentine is inspired with enough manliness to seek his sweet young wife. She refuses to receive him at home. He can call at the office. He does so and becomes enraged that he is obliged to wait his turn to see her. Thus she keeps him at arm's length until his love is rekindled. His pleadings in person and by notes are in vain. Only when she fears he will destroy himself is she moved by pity to weaken and permit a reconciliation. Thus she remodels her husband.

"White Lies"

Five-Reel Fox Subject Features Gladys Brockwell in Screen Version of Charles Read Novel.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ALTHOUGH brought up-to-date and rendered modern in certain respects, this five-reel Fox production, "White Lies," from the novel by Charles Reade, swings along with a certain old-fashioned narrative gait. This is not to be construed as a criticism of the picture, so far as the interest is concerned, for it really works up to quite an amazing series of events. It is developed in a leisurely, natural manner, and such dramatic force as it has comes largely from the complicated plot situations.

Out of a tangled chain of events a very creditable screen story has been produced. It is the type of production that is sure to have strong appeal with the family theatre. The events are all pictured in and about the De Beaurepaire chateau.

Rose .....Violet Schram
Colonel Jean Raynal ....Charles K. French
Monsieur Perrin .....Howard Scott
Jacintha .....Lule Warrenton

From the novel by Charles Reade.
Scenario by Charles Wilson.
Direction by Edward J. Le Saint.

The Story.

Josephine and Rose, in "White Lies," are the daughters of the Baroness De Beaurepaire. The mother and sisters are about to be driven, through poverty, from their family estate, which has passed into the hands of Colonel Jean Raynal. Josephine is in love with a young soldier, Lieut. Camille Du Jordin, and Rose loves Surgeon Edouard Riviere.

A report is printed to the effect that Camille has proved a traitor to his country in time of war. The new owner of the estate, Colonel Raynal, appears and takes a fancy to Josephine. He proposes marriage after a time, and she accepts, though heartbroken over the supposed treachery of Camille. The marriage takes place and Colonel Raynal leaves immediately for the front. He is later reported killed. Camille then appears, carrying a decoration for bravery, with his name cleared. Josephine weds him and a year later her child is born.

At this time Colonel Raynal returns, to the consternation of everyone, as he was thought dead. He discovers the child and demands to know whose it is. Rose claims it to save her sister, and this causes a temporary estrangement with her own lover.

Colonel Raynal seeks Camille, to demand that he marry Rose. The facts come out and Colonel Raynal, seeing how the situation is, agrees to have his marriage with Josephine annulled.

"Miss Hobbs"

Realart's New Star, Wanda Hawley, Makes Her Debut in a Clever Picturization of Jerome K. Jerome's Play of a Feminine Faddist.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

ORIGINALITY of plot and an amusingly exaggerated treatment of it, makes "Miss Hobbs" distinctly different and diverting. It is somewhat of a departure from the ordinary feministic drama and is the story of a woman who tried to live a sort of freakish existence without the companionship of masculine inferiors—and failed. She surrounds herself with ornate luxuries, adopts unique habits and lectures her friends on the slavery of marriage. But with the coming of love, gradually her standards begin to droop and a normal attitude toward life asserts itself.

In carrying out the principal idea of Miss Hobbs' fads and fancies, the settings are remarkably successful. They are sensational and futuristic in design and composition and bespeak extensive time, effort and outlay of expense. Highly intelligent directing too has greatly assisted in making the scenes interesting. The method of introducing and merging scenes is an ingenious one. Each member of the cast has been skillfully trained and is unusually accomplished in the art of "registering." The opportunities for good comedy are many, and director and players make the best of these.

The reasons for starring Wanda Hawley are easily recognizable. She has grace, beauty and most of all, the ability to act. In the somewhat eccentric role of Miss Hobbs, she has been careful not to overdo. She has realized that the air of arch sangfroid which goes with the characterization is only a pose, and that underneath lies womanly appeal and charm. Harrison Ford has the leading masculine role and other important parts are well played by Jack Mulhall and Walter Hiers.

Play by Jerome K. Jerome.

Directed by Donald Crisp.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Not content with being a radical feminist herself, Miss Hobbs decides to convert two of her best friends, Beulah Hackett, who is married, and Millicent Farey, who is about to be married. Through Miss Hobbs' influence, Beulah adopts an extreme style of dressing and begins to eat only dates and crackers, much to her husband's disgust. She leaves him and goes to live with Miss Hobbs. Millicent too leaves her sweetheart and takes refuge with the freakish Miss Hobbs.

The two young men, outraged at this proceeding, plan a way of getting even. They induce Wolff Kingsearl to tame this young feminist by winning her heart. Wolff consents but soon realizes that he has undertaken something very difficult. He pretends to be ill, one day when Miss Hobbs calls, and professes that he has heart trouble. Miss Hobbs becomes concerned and believing that he has no one to take care of him proceeds to nurse him and take him out for rides. He succeeds in keeping from her the truth of his identity and persuades her to believe that he is Hackett's piano tuner. She learns the truth one day while she is in his summer cottage cooking for him. Wolff's mother appears and snubs Miss Hobbs when she learns who she is, and announces her son's engagement to a girl of wealth. About the same time Miss Hobbs discovers that Wolff has made a bet with his friends that he will kiss the unapproachable Miss Hobbs within a month. She is very indignant at this and writes him a curt note saying that she had believed him to be different from the rest of his despicable sex until she discovered his real nature. It is then up to Wolff to convince her that in making the bet, he had in mind that in one month's time he would ask her to marry him and that he had no unworthy intentions. She surprises them all then by kissing him so that he does not win his bet after all.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines: She Wanted to Be Extreme. She Went in for Crystal Gazing, Man-Hating and Dew Baths. They Called Her a Freak—All But One. He Loved Her and Discovered Her Other Self.

"I'll Bet a Dinner for Three That I Kiss Miss Hobbs in One Month," He Wrote in His Diary. She, the Unsusceptible, Read His Words and Hardened Her Heart. Did He Win His Bet? See "Miss Hobbs" and Find Out.

Exploitation Angles: Advertise the fact that Miss Hawley is a new star and a "find." Exploit the picture as a humorous treatment of ultra modern ideas and fads. Have a futuristic art poster made for lobby display. Collaborate with architects and get them to exhibit stills showing Miss Hobb's unique designs for house exteriors.

ALL DRESSED UP (Rolin-Pathe). An amusing central situation in this one-reel comic makes it an entertaining subject. This is the dinner party, to which Snub Pollard and his little black shadow, Sambo, come. Snub plays a hack driver, with aspirations to be a regular gentleman, and both he and Sambo are in elaborate full dress. A good number.

"Suds"

MARY PICKFORD'S latest United Artists' release, "Suds," which is a screen version of the English play, "Op-o-My Thumb," is an entertaining compound of broad comedy and quaint pathos. It tells the story of a misshapen little drudge who toils long hours in a French hand laundry in the slums of London and lightens her labors with the aid of a lively imagination which enables her to weave a wonderful romance about herself and a male customer whose one extra shirt has been intrusted to the tender care of the love-sick laundress.

The girl is unattractive to a pathetic degree, but she has a stout heart and is loved by the shy young chap who drives the laundry delivery wagon. The owner of the shirt is a handsome but haughty youth, and he spurns the adoration of his humble admirer. Kindness to the wornout old delivery wagon horse is the means of bringing happiness to the little drudge and the faithful driver.

Save for a few moments when she appears as the settled lady of the girl's imagination, Mary Pickford sacrifices every trace of her comliness to the requirements of the part, and gives a performance that is among her best examples of character action. The production is a fine one in every way. The story itself is not particularly strong, but is handled so well by everyone concerned that the picture is bound to please Pickford admirers.

"Married Life"

THIS five-reel Mack Sennett comedy released by the First National and featuring Ben Turpin is a matrimonial satire that opens with a fast and furious football game and ends with a battle in and out and over an airplane that is both thrilling and laugh compelling. The situations sandwiched in between are not always of the best Sennett brand, but the high spots are uncommonly clever and the full strength of the Sennett organization is used in casting the picture.

"Yes or No?"

THE list of leading men in support of Norma Talmadge in "Yes or No" shows that expense is not considered when this First National star makes a production. With Frederick Burton, Rockeliffe Fellows, Lowell Sherman and Gladen James in the same cast and Sister Natalie as an added attraction, Miss Norma still remains the undisputed centre of attraction and acts a dual role with her usual earnestness and charm.

The story is a complicated one and suffers from an over supply of characters, but is produced lavishly and acted with great cleverness. It has two heroines, one the wife of a wealthy stock broker, and the other married to a poor but ambitious mechanic. Both women are tempted to desert their husbands. The rich wife does so and gains only unhappiness and death. The poor woman remains true to her husband and helps him to win a fortune for them both.

The two stories run side by side, and most of the situations are rather conventional. But careful handling of the picture by the star and her support gives it excellent entertainment value.

"The Mollycoddle"

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS has surpassed all his previous efforts with "The Mollycoddle." It is a vastly entertaining story built on the lines of real dramatic art and contains just the proper balance of comedy, suspense and a skillfully devised climax. The Fairbanks stunts are utilized in a logical manner and are not thrown in with an overgenerous hand.

The picture permits him to do a clever bit of straight character acting in the early part and to prove that he is not forced to rely on his physical stunts to put his work over.

When the time comes for their use he goes at them with an abandon and telling effect that far outdoes anything in his past record. There are many novel situations in the plot, and the scenes among the Hopi Indians in Arizona, the avalanche, and land thugs, pursuit and capture of the villain are an astounding mixture of thrills and laughs.

"The Mollycoddle's" unusual features of extraordinary merit are in a class by themselves, and every right-minded man, woman and child will thoroughly enjoy the picture.

Thomas Meighan Attains Stardom in a Heart Story Exquisitely Pictured by Paramount-Artcraft.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

ROMANCE in its most tender phase makes "The Prince Chap" a picture that is irresistibly charming, both in its immediate appeal and in its after impressions. William DeMille has evidently made a sincere study of the original play by Edward Peple, and he has realized the inherent picturesqueness and sentiment of the story.

There may be more poetry than truth in much of the action, but so artistically has the picture been produced that any implausibilities that exist are pleasing rather than otherwise. The treatment is delicate; moments of sadness are relieved by passages of gentle humor; and the love scenes, those of disappointment and those of realization, have been finelyinterpreted by director and players.

The cast, headed by Thomas Meighan, includes a number of capable players. The star has naturalness, dignity and emotional resources that eminently fit him to his princely role. Ann Forrest as a human bundle of rags and imagination does excellent work. Two child actresses, Peaches Jackson and May Giracci, each play the role of Claudia at different stages of her life. They are very lovable and have proven remarkably responsive. Claudia, grown-up, is portrayed by Lila Lee with rare sympathy and charm. Among other talented members of the cast are Kathlyn Williams, Casson Ferguson, Theodore Kosloñ and Florence Hart.

The Story.

William Peyton, a talented sculptor, leaves America and his fiance, Alice, with a promise to return to her as soon as he has realized success in London. He and a group of fellow-artists live in humble London quarters and are bound together by mutual love and interest. Claudia, a tiny girl of four, comes into his possession upon the death of her mother, who has wrested from Peyton the promise that he will always take care of the child.

When word comes to Alice of this transaction she is influenced by her aunt to doubt Peyton's account and to believe that Claudia is his own child. Her uncomfortable suspicions bring her to England, on which trip she is accompanied by Helmer, a persistent suitor. She arrives at Peyton's home and is met by Claudia, who immediately recognizes the lady stranger as the "princess," the heroine of many a story that Peyton has told her. Claudia innocently informs Alice that her Peyton has sent her mother away to get well; having been told that her mother had gone far away, where she would never be sick again. Alice believes that her fears have been grounded, and when Peyton comes in she gives him his choice of her or Claudia. He refuses to give Claudia up. Alice leaves, and a little while later is married to Helmer.

After years have passed Peyton has succeeded. When Claudia is eighteen Peyton informs her that the time has come when they must have a housekeeper to take care of them. She does not undershtand why, and he explains that the world outside might misunderstand their relationship. This conversation leads up to the climax, which comes when he realizes that Claudia's love for him is not that of a child for its parent, but that of a woman for a man. Alice, now widowed, returns, but Peyton's love is centered on Claudia. He and Alice part as good comrades.

He Was a Very Poor Prince, But He Had a Great Heart. The Princess Was Very Rich and She Didn't Love Him Enough to Wait for Him. Time Passed and He Forgot—and Then Deserved Happiness Came.

Turn 'Round Then, Helene!
We read her lips. She said: "Scratch my back." Scene from a new Goldwyn picture.

A Delightful Fairy Tale of a Poor, Big Prince and a Poor, Little Orphan.

Exploitation Angles: Don't forget that this is Thomas Meighan's first starring vehicle. He has many admirers and should be generously advertised. Use Lila Lee's name, too. Get it over that this is a romance with a lasting flavor. It will send your patrons away with a feeling of contentment. Give a special children's matinee, as the title theme and the characters will be sure to please them. Call your theatre Fairyland for this occasion and say that one of the famous princes of story-book lore is the screen hero.

"Scratch My Back"

Goldwyn Releases a Delightful Light Comedy, with a Touch of the Romantic, by Rupert Hughes.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN an amusing struggle with photoplay construction, admitted with laughable frankness in the sub-titles, Rupert Hughes has made a hit with "Scratch My Back" which others will attempt in vain to imitate. He starts with the materials of a romantic comedy and one farcical incident. As he progresses in the maze of photoplay construction, he finds himself sadly hindered by outworn conventions. Instead of floundering into greater difficulties he explains matters to the audience in a heart-to-heart appeal on the screen. This is a daring expedient; one not to be repeated with much chance of success, but it gets over from novelty and because of the author's cleverness and ingenuity. When he finally manages to merge his two lines of interest the bright story moves on smoothly to an original and highly entertaining conclusion.

All this is not done without skilled handling on the part of Sidney Olcott. He provides a wealth of illustrative detail and nicely preserves the mood of the comedy through difficulties that seem to stagger the author. Unexpected twists and turns are used to parody the conventional plot, much to the amusement of those in the audience—and their name is legion—who are sated with theatric stupidity. There is in evidence a vast amount of skilled workmanship, contributory to general enjoyment of the production.

The gods be thanked, "Scratch My Back" is not a creaking vehicle for some tiresome star. It is admirably typed, Helen Chadwick, T. Roy Barnes and Caesar Gravine forming an irrestible trio of high-grade performers. They and the support fill out a sum of high values. As presented by Rothapfel at the Capitol Theatre, "Scratch My Back" is one of the brightest entertainments of the season.

Cast.

Val Romney .....T. Roy Barnes
Loton .....Lloyd T. Whitlock
Madeline .....Helene Chadwick
Jahoda .....Cesare Gravina

Director, Sidney Olcott.
Length, five reels.

The Story.

Val Romney thinks he can get what he wants when he wants it. He plays with a cat and gets what he doesn't want, a flea. He is thinking "Scratch my back" every moment at a social function, and no one does. This little episode is forever fixed in his mind. He attends the opera one evening and notes the beautiful bare back of a lady in front of him. Presently she reaches in vain to scratch an itching spot. Val has had some disastrous experiences as a gallant, but he nerves himself to the emergency. He cautiously scratches the place the lady cannot reach, and she draws a deep sigh of relief. Between the acts she writes a note to the man of resource and asks him to meet her at her house. He does so next day, and self introductions follow. She is in trouble. Earlier in life she had run away from convent school in France with the idea of becoming a famous dancer. She had money enough with her to study under a teacher named Jahoda, a gentleman of eleven nationalities and the virtues of none of them. The two had appeared in public together, but the experience had cured her. She had returned home and been forgiven. Now Jahoda was blackmailing her, threatening to expose her to her husband.

Val is disappointed to find that the lady, none other than Madeline Loton, wife of a diplomat, is a married woman, but she inspires his love of adventure. They meet secretly, arousing the jealousy of Loton, but they get to Jahoda together. Val's skill with his cane brings the blackmailer to terms. He gives up the posters showing himself and Madeline in a ballet dance, but he preserves his sense of injury. When Val and Madeline are confronted at the latter's home by the jealous husband and caught in their little lies, Jahoda appears to further expose them, but the husband has known all along about her past. All is forgiven. Jahoda is kicked out. Val is accorded no other consolation than having his back scratched at an itching moment by Madeline.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines: A Light Comedy-Drama That Is Full of Pep.

Oh, Boy, But Didn't He Have the Back-Scratching Fever—Every Back He Saw He Thought Needed Scratching—At the Opera an Exposed Back Tempted Him, So He Scratched—And That Was What Started His Happy Romance.

He Had an Idea That He Could Have Anything He Wanted—He Hadn't Figured, However, on the Active Flea That Jumped from the Cat to Him—He Didn't Want That—Then He Commenced to Scratch—He Couldn't Stop Scratching His Back.

Exploitation Angles: Work hard on the title. Treat it lightly and profusely. Put up a scratching post in your lobby with an invitation to the passer-by to scratch his back and come and see the play with a knowing "You know how hot it feels. Come and see how it worked out in one case." Make proper use of the fact that this was a stage success and that the author is Rupert Hughes, but make it plain that you are offering it as a really entertaining comedy and not merely as a curiosity.

"Circumstantial Evidence"

First of a Series of Twelve Detective Dramas Known as "Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries," Produced by William Steiner and Distributed Through Arrow.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

IN the difficult art of keeping the spectator guessing as to the identity of the murderer "Circumstantial Evidence" is a success. From the very outset it is misleading when several suspicious characters are introduced, and the uncertainty is maintained through a series of lively incidents until the end.

Tex is played by Glen White, whose forcefulness and unflinching countenance fit him for this role. Leo Delaney and Marie Treador are also good types. The prison and underworld scenes are well set and skillfully directed.

Cast.

Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries ..Glen White
Frank, the butler .....Leo Delaney
Edna Nelson .....Miss Jane McAlpin
Paul, Tex's friend.....Alfred Warman
Jack Nelson, husband of Edna..David Wall
Jim, Tex' cellmate .....Robert Taber
Mary, the maid .....Marie Treador

Story and direction by Tom Collins.
Length, five reels.

The Story.

Tex, a famous detective, is visited by a friend who questions him about the circumstances leading to his life of retirement. Tex then tells the story.

Several years before he had been invited to the home of Jack Nelson, an old friend. Edna Nelson, his wife, shows open admiration for Tex. While he is visiting a dispute arises between Nelson and his butler and the latter is discharged. His manner, as well as that of the parlor maid, is threatening. During the night Nelson is murdered. When the police arrive in the morning a knife is found on the floor. Edna seizes the knife, and Tex, fearing that she is about to kill herself for grief, throws the knife out of the window. The detectives are unable to find it and regard the incident as one which incriminates Tex. Thereupon he is arrested and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Two years later a fire breaks out in the prison and Tex' bravery in saving the warden's wife and child wins for him his liberty. He goes to Edna, but is repulsed by her and by all others who know of his connection with the former crime. He decides to look up to the butler, whom he believes to be guilty. He finds him in the underworld, but in bringing him to justice learns that some one other than he committed the murder. A telephone call from the Nelson home then comes and he hears that Edna is dying. He arrives at her side in time to hear her confession, and decides to devote his life to solving crime mysteries and saving innocent ones from being convicted on account of "circumstantial evidence."

Program and Exploitation Catchlines: "Circumstantial Evidence." How an Unselfish Act Brought Suspicion and Incrimination Upon an Innocent Man.

Exploitation Angles: A campaign for mystifying your patrons will get the best selling results. Send out literature with merely the question "Who killed Jack Nelson?" Later send out further information and keep this up until curiosity is stimulated.

"Some Wild Oats"

Social Hygienic Films of America, Inc., Present Sex Educational Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS is another screen production, in six reels, dealing with the subject of venereal disease. It was shown a full week at a Forty-second street theatre, New York, twice a day to men only and twice to women only. This arrangement would seem to be the best for showing such a production, as the treatment is quite sensational in places and will hardly do for a mixed assembly. The publicity given this film attracted a great deal of attention in front of the theatre, but the men's matinee Friday afternoon drew a very slim attendance.

There have been numerous predecessors for this sort of subject since the days of "Damaged Goods." This present subject has not the sincerity of treatment possessed by many others along the same line, and this, no doubt, in part accounts for the light attendance. Such film stories are too sordid in subject matter to be classed as entertainment, and while they have undoubtedly accomplished much of educational value in the past, it is not a type of production spectators care to see repeated. The story concerns the experiences of a country youth in New York City, who desires to get out and see the bright lights and wild women. A doctor who feels friendly toward him arranges an expedition so that he may have certain exciting experiences without coming to harm. The cast includes William Jefferson, H. Laffey, Wesley Hunt, Mary Marceau, Carl Fleming, Gertrude La Brandt and others.

After Her Folly

Vivian Rich takes a rest in "A World of Folly," which was made by Fox.

Exploitation Angles: Play this purely as propaganda and divide your audiences as suggested. Establish an age limit and hold to it closely. Don't make the mistake of trying to be sensational. Make dignity and earnestness your aim.

"Below the Surface"

Paramount Presents Hobart Bosworth in a Dramatic Story Supervised by Thomas H. Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

BELOW the Surface" depends largely upon intensiveness of treatment for its complete illusion of dramatic reality. Ince has woven about the spectator a spell of atmospheric illusion, most powerful in submarine scenes, which holds attention with utmost fixity. The figures of men and women are drawn in clear characterization, but the fascination is largely one of exciting incident too real to be associated with the idea of melodrama. So perfect is this handling of the subject matter that old uses of convention vanish in thin air—we are watching the onrush of events and the movement of psychic forces only. The story is tragic in tendency—it deals bitterly with the punishment of a beautiful and adventurous young girl who traded her sex attractions for ignoble results—and the mood is carefully preserved. "Below the Surface" might well be called a masterpiece of treatment.

Hobart Bosworth plays the role of an old diver who has gone deep enough in human experience to divine almost unfailingly the distinction between what is false and what is true in human nature. He has even realized that the duel of sex may be a duel to the death in the case of the son he seeks to save from the toils of a beautiful and heartless woman. He represents the incarnation of spiritual and mental experience. All that he does, however, and all that Lloyd Hughes does exceedingly well in the role of the son would be nullified to an extent without the superb performance of Grace Darmond as the adventuress. With the virile force of a fascinating personality, with a wealth of temperament that indicates the true artist, she holds attention so completely as to win sympathy for the unworthy character she interprets. As presented at the Rivoli Theatre, "Below the Surface" compelled rapt attention from first to last by fine quality of entertainment.

The Story.

Martin Flint had gone deep "Below the Surface" of the sea as a diver when his services are solicited by an adventurer named Arnold in company with Alice, a beautiful girl he introduces as his sister. Finding Flint averse to their scheme of pretending to find gold on a treasure ship, the Arnolds devote their attention to Luther, Flint's son. Infatuated, Luther is warned by his father in vain. As a last resort the old man taunts the adventuress to the point that she consents to marry Luther. She exacts from him that he will bring up gold from the wreck before they live together. After the ceremony Luther goes directly to his dangerous work. He is successful, bringing to the surface a handful of coin. When he reaches home in an exhausted condition he finds that his bride has fled. He collapses and becomes delirious. He is in a critical condition, calling for Edna, when Flint decides to go in search of her. He takes the boat for Boston and discovers her with Arnold and gay company in a lively cabaret. Before the frightened crowd he drags his "daughter" from the place. They are followed to the boat by Arnold, who manages to join Edna in her cabin. During the night the boat strikes a derelict and goes down. Flint is among the few survivors. He returns to his son and is gradually compelled to tell the truth about Edna. Luther refuses to believe. In desperate mood he goes in a diving suit to make sure. He finds the bodies of his wife and Arnold in a stateroom and faints. Flint dives to save his son and brings him with difficulty to the surface. At last Luther sees light. No longer self-deceived, he places his future in the hands of a gentle girl, who has long and faithfully loved him.

"Alias Miss Dodd"

Five-Reel Universal Production Features Edith Roberts in Whimsical Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A HUMOROUS and quite original plot is the outstanding feature of this five-reel production, but it is not close enough to real life to make a really strong feature. It is bright and clever, yet not sufficiently human to grip and hold the interest closely. It is a subject that will entertain an audience, because of its quaint, whimsical plot, but will perhaps not make any great impression upon the emotions. Such a subject usually makes a good follow-up for a tense, dramatic feature of the heavier type. The various complications are interesting, though handled without any great degree of suspense.

Edith Roberts plays capably the role of the bookbindery girl.

Johnnie Cook, who has appeared in sev-

The Story.

Jeanne, in "Alias Miss Dodd," is a pretty young girl employed in a book bindery. She is a great admirer of Joan d'Arc, and in her own romantic way imagines herself equally brave and fearless. One day a diary, written by Thomas Dodd, is handed to her for binding, and she reads a portion of it. She believes Thomas Dodd to be a heartless wretch, the father of a girl born to Sarah Ross, to whom he was never married.

Thinking it her duty to ferret out this crime, Jeanne pretends to be the missing daughter. Thomas Dodd, an amiable old bachelor, listens to her story and accepts her as his child. Jeanne falls in love with his nephew, Kent, but tries to induce Kent to marry a girl named Hazel Jenkins, whom she thinks he has wronged. Hazel, believing Kent is not to come into a certain inheritance, refuses to wed him, and turns her attentions to Thomas Dodd's brother, Jerry. Hazel has guessed that Jeanne is not Thomas Dodd's daughter, and believes the inheritance will go to his brother instead of to the nephew.

The appearance of Sarah Ross puts an end to Jeanne's suspicions, for Sarah denies ever having had a daughter. Jeanne then confesses her deception and accepts the love of Kent. Thomas Dodd admits his diary was mostly fiction and finally proposes to Sarah.

"The Great Accident"

Goldwyn Presents Tom Moore in Splendid Melodramatic Production of Popular Appeal.

Reviewed by Jacob Smith.

IN "The Great Accident" Tom Moore plays a somewhat different role than he has been in this season's Goldwyn productions, demonstrating his ability to play a variety of parts. "The Great Accident," by reason of its publication in one of the national magazines has already a large number of followers. They will find that the picture closely follows the original story and that the action is even more tense in the picture. Tom Moore plays his part splendidly. Being a story of politics, there is plenty of intrigue, and the action is fast. Mr. Moore's part is that of Winthrop Chase, who lives in a dry town, the scapegrace son of a wealthy and respected father. The story is along melodramatic lines, but it strikes a popular appeal with the public.

Tom Moore is splendidly supported by Ann Forest and others.

Direction, photography and settings are all up to the high standard which Goldwyn has adopted this year.

Those who admire Tom Moore will find their admiration increased when they see "The Great Accident," while to the casual photoplay patron both Mr. Moore and the production will be splendid entertainment.

The Story.

Winthrop Chase, Sr., is making a fight for the office of Mayor of Hardiston. James T. Hollow, backed by Congressman Amos Caretall, is his opponent. Winthrop Chase is for "cleaning up the town." His opponents represent the sordid element.

"Wint" Chase, Jr., is a wild, reckless, irresponsible young fellow who has been a thorn in his father's side. Hollow and his associates frame up a practical joke on Chase, Sr. They influence the voters to write "Jr." in on the ballot whereon the name of Winthrop Chase appears. When "Wint" learns of the practical joke played on him, he is amazed. His father is embittered by what he thinks is his son's humiliating trick on him. "Wint" leaves home.

The politicians imagine that with "Wint" as Mayor they will have things all their own way. But "Wint" suddenly shows his father's fighting spirit. He orders the town cleaned up and the law enforced to the letter, when Hetty Morfee, his former schoolmate, comes to grief through the conditions existing in the town. His sweetheart, Joan, is inspired by his wonderful fight for decency. He smashes the ring. They frame him up to ruin his character. Hetty, who has been used as a tool to disgrace him, makes a confession which clears his character. His enemies are put to rout. He and his father again renew their love for each other. Joan accepts him. His character has been redeemed through "The Great Accident."

"Love's Flame"

Fidelity Presents Thomas J. Carrigan and Vivienne Osborne in a New Style Romantic Comedy.

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent.

AFTER a surfeit of war stories, the Fidelity brings forward something new in the shape of a tale based upon the France of the post-war period and of an American aviator who meets and beats the remarkable code of laws governing marriage in France. For that matter the story might have been written of the France of ten or twenty years ago, but the present setting makes for added interest since the international marriage has been so widely discussed of late. The theme is somewhat light for its footage and moves almost too directly to its end, unmarked by serious complication, but the interest is well sustained and the surprise is held until well toward the climax. Of course we know that the hero always gets the girl; only the "how" can interest, and here the means is cleverly held back until the denouement. The story is commendably free from the flag waving and similar appeals to pseudo patriotism. It is purely a love story with war very much in the background; only a single scene being laid before the armistice.

Tom Carrigan sustained well a role which called for restraint and tact, and Miss Osborne as his fiancee shared the honors. Reginald Barlow, as the father, and J. P. Laffey, as the Mayor were excellent in character roles. The direction was intelligent and the French atmosphere was well sustained even in the outdoor scenes, which included many shots of more than usual charm. It should please a majority of patrons from all angles.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Capt. Clay, an American aviator, comes down with his plane in flames. He is so badly injured that the armistice has been declared before he is ready to remove from the chateau of the de Ronsards, where he has been cared for by the fair chatelaine. Ordered to report to his squadron for discharge, he declares his love for Adele de Ronsard and finds that his affection is returned.

There is an awkward moment when he discovers that there is a young child in the house, a moment made more awkward by the appearance of not one but two of Adele's former suitors. The first she supposed dead in a military prison before she accepted the second, St. Gaudens. They, too, hear the crying of the child and at once imagine the obvious explanation. Clay's strong appeal to their sense of honor and fairness, which is overheard by Adele, confirms her judgment. She returns the rings of her former admirers, to their evident relief, and gives her hand to Clay.

Then arises the problem of the parental consent, without which a marriage cannot be contracted. De Ronsard is of the old school. Even the great war has not shaken his ancient pride of race. Adele fears that his consent will never be gained, but Clay proves his American ingenuity. He cannot win the parent's consent, yet de Ronsard actually insists that the pair be married, and the de Ronsard estates are left to Claire's sister, who is in reality the mother of the little war baby.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Position Proven Right

AS far back as seven years ago this department insisted that there were great possibilities for the control of light tones in the chemicalization of carbons.

At that time, as our files show, the carbon manufacturers informed us, in very positive language, that the thing was impossible; that there was no known substance that would withstand the terrific heat of the arc; that any chemical that might be introduced would be dissipated by the heat before it reached the floor of the crater.

But we were unconvinced, because we had seen some remarkable results in the control of the tone of light from A C, which the projectionist, then "operator," declared was due to soaking the carbons in salt brine, but which we suspected was brine with something else added. But be the latter as it may, the result was there and could, as we saw it, be due to nothing else but some sort of chemicalization of the carbon.

Get Results Later.

Some years later those same manufacturers were able to get results from carbon chemicalization which they had declared impossible, and the results they attained were, on their own statement, wonderful. So much for history.

We have repeatedly expressed the opinion, in this department, that direct current light values could also be greatly beautified and controlled by chemicalization of the D C carbons. This we understand carbon manufacturers are working on now.

The Proof.

A few days ago we dropped in at the Empress Theatre, New London, Conn. The projectionist of the Empress, whose name we cannot at this moment recall, is a real projectionist. He was trying an experiment, using a National Special A C upper and Silver Tip lower on D. C. Did it affect the light tone? We'll tell the whole wide world it did. The resultant screen illumination was nothing short of startling. The spot at the aperture was blinding to look at. The light was dead white and the contrast of the blacks and whites something almost unbelievable.

Personally, we did not like it. We do like heavy contrast, but, oh, boy! that was too much. It was almost ghastly.

But it nevertheless did, to our mind, show the great possibilities for improvement in projection by control of light tone through chemicalization of D C carbons, or carbons to be used for D C projection, rather.

? ? ? ? ?

But many things enter when it comes to practical application, so that the problem presented is not an easy one from the carbon manufacturer's viewpoint. Just what the net result of what we viewed at the Empress would be if, for instance, a moonlight scene had been projected with that light, we cannot say. Yellows and reds would present still other complications, and whatever is done as to control of light tones must fit in with the ideas of producers as to film tinting; also, we might remark, the ideas of producers in the matter of tinting is highly variable and, almost without exception, more or less weird.

We have, for instance, tinting supposed to produce sunlight effect, but ranging all the way from too much yellow (sunlight is NOT yellow) to something like fifty times too much yellow. We have moonlight tinting ranging from very good to almost opaque, and all this immensely complicates the situation from the viewpoint of light tone control at the arc.

We Almost Suggest.

We would almost be willing to suggest that, in view of the possibilities for splendid achievement in the light tones by chemicalization, provided black and whites be used entirely, and in view of the awful results attained in film tinting (awful from the viewpoint of screen results, we mean) it might be well to abandon the latter and tint by means of color wheels and a schedule. Such a scheme would not be at all impossible and the saving in tinting expense would far more than compensate for the making of the tint schedule. The trouble would be with the projectionist in the beginning, but that need worry no one, since it would very soon take care of itself and would make for improvement by supplying the impelling motive for the projectionist to stay on the job.

It would work something like this: First, a series of standard colors would be selected and numbered. These standard, numbered tints would of necessity be a part of every projection equipment. Let us assume the following:

Sunlight	No. 1
Moonlight	No. 2
Lamplight,	No. 3
Fire scene	No. 4

These and such other colors are added to the projection machine, also a footage counter. The producer supplies a color schedule, which becomes a part and parcel of the release. Suppose it reads, in part, as follows, assuming the play to always start as black and white:

65	No. 1
430

et cetera.

Meaning that when the footage counter reads 65 the projectionist drops color No. 1 in front of the lens. At 123 he replaces No. 1 with No. 3. At 430 he removes all color, the footage from 430 to 720 being black and white. At 720 he drops in color No. 2, some simple plan for instantaneous change being provided.

Not a Complete Plan.

Now, gentlemen, this is NOT designed as a worked-out plan. On the contrary, it is merely a crude suggestion for a plan. THERE IS NOTHING IMPRACTICAL ABOUT IT.

You may say: "Yes, but removal of film would throw the whole scheme out." True, but that, too, could readily be taken care of in any one of several ways. What about the theatre which edits its own film, you ask. Easy. It would simply make its own color schedule from the re-edited film.

And, anyhow, God knows its operation could hardly be more uncertain and entirely punk than is the present hap and very much hazard tinting, which gives results ranging over almost the entire range of densities for what is supposed to be the same thing.

Notice to All.

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Don't "guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

NOTICE

The closing time on the prize contest has been extended to noon of July 1.

Don't Blame Us

C. E. Walden, Markdale, Ontario, says:

Received lens charts, but am in difficulty. My front condenser measures 6.5, while the rear one apparently is 5.75 inch focus, though it is cracked, which may cause the odd size. The extreme limit of my projector is 16.5 inches from center of condenser to film. The aerial image is 9.75 inches from the aperture. As I am unable to make these measurements fit in with the lens chart, I am asking your advice on the matter.

Am using fifty amperes A C and apparently a distance of 22.5 inches is required, which is impossible on my Power's Six-A.

You must be using meniscus bi-convex condenser, although you do not say so. You have not given us the working distance of your objective, hence we are unable to say what you ought to have, but the application of chart No. 2, in reverse, seems to fix it at about 4.5 E F, which would mean probably a working distance of about 3.5 inches.

Our Suggestion.

We would suggest that you use two six and a half inch plano convex lenses, spaced not to exceed one-sixteenth of an inch apart, with a little more than 19.5 inches from center of condenser combination to film.

Don't blame us if projectors are not made with sufficient adjustment distance. Let us say in justice, however, that the Power's is and has always been one of the best we have in this particular respect. Also the Powers company will, upon application, supply you with special table rods which will give you all the distance you require between condenser and film. The crack in the condenser will not alter its focal length. Cheap condenser lenses are apt to vary considerably in focal length, but you should have something considerably closer than that.

A New Invention

Leonard C. Pagenhardt, Projectionist, Westernport, Md., sends pictures of an invention he has perfected and patented and which he describes as follows:

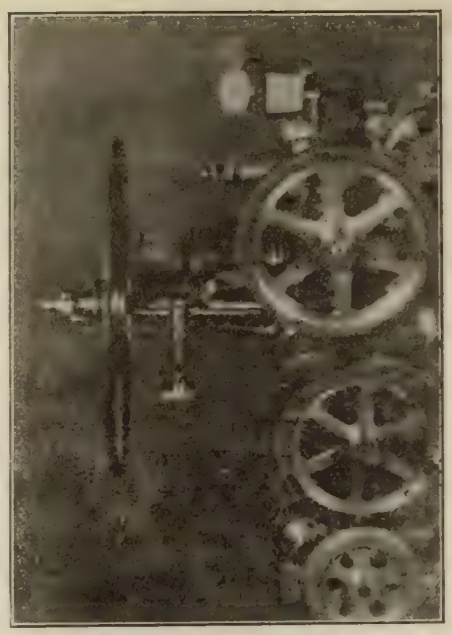
Friend Richardson: It has been a long time since I last wrote the department. Suppose you will remember when Wilson Hays and myself used to answer questions. We are still very much alive over in this neck of the woods, and I sure drain the department dry every week.

Am enclosing photo, taken by myself, showing a projector equipped with a device I have just had patented. It can be attached to any projector having an outside shutter arm or bracket, without making any change in the mechanism. It is not necessary to drill holes or to change any part, which is the great feature of the device. It is merely slipped into place and two screws tightened.

Sets Shutter.

Its purpose is to set the revolving shutter while the projector is in motion. The adjustment may be made, even to so little as 1/1000 of an inch. It is particularly valuable when working with a worn machine, in which there is much lost motion.

A feature of the device is that the shutter always remains in the same position axially, but may be adjusted forward or backward in the plane of rotation. It is very neat, has been thoroughly tested and does the work perfectly.



We have two Power Six B projectors, with Power Excelite equipment, and a 3 KW light plant. It sure does deliver the goods.

In closing I wish yourself and the department every success.

Device Seems Practical.

The device seems practical enough; also its workings are made fairly plain by the patent drawings. Personally I do not regard ability to set the revolving shutter as anything more than a convenience, because once set it remains set, or should, and when gears wear so badly that there is travel ghost and trouble through lost motion, the logical remedy is either repairs to the machine or else a retarding brake.

How It Works.

But some will disagree with this view, so we are giving the matter space.

As will be seen, the shutter is mounted on a sleeve which I have, in ink, marked A, in which are two spiral grooves which engage with pins B in the collar carrying the shutter itself.

This sleeve cannot rotate on the shutter shaft, but may be pulled endwise by means of screw D, which is operated by knurled knob E. The shutter is held from moving endwise by part C, but, by means of slot F, it is permitted to rotate.

It will thus be seen that when part A is moved ahead or back, the shutter remaining stationary insofar as concerns endwise movement, it, the shutter, will be rotated toward or against its direction of rotation.

It is a clever invention and will doubtless appeal to many projectionists. It might even interest projector manufacturers, though I am inclined to doubt it.

Understand that I hold nothing against the adoption of such a device. Its installation will certainly work no evil. I simply regard it as one of those things which are not really necessary. I would be glad to have the views of other men on this point. If I am in error we will be glad to have that fact pointed out.

Arcs in Series

S. H. Croxdale, projectionist, South West City, Missouri, orders a handbook and says:

Have the lens charts and must say that they are a very great help. Am using only thirty amperes, at 110 volts, and get a very brilliant picture. And now here is a question. Can I run two arcs at once on this current? Would be very willing to use more, but have my own set and thirty amperes is the limit. Have tried the following hook-up, but find the arc is very apt to go out unless watched very closely. Could you suggest any method for making the arcs more stable?

The brother sends along a sketch showing the arcs wired so that they may be used in series or singly, but in thesketch two rheostats are shown, with the remark that "when second arc is struck the thirty-five ampere rheostat is cut in to compensate for additional resistance introduced into circuit." His sketch apparently shows a thirty and a thirty-five ampere rheostat wired in series on the negative, but the sketch is wrong and what is shown is impossible.

Outfit Unsuitable.

No, friend Croxdale, I cannot suggest any method for making the arc more stable. Arcs burning in series are usually rather unstable, unless operated from a generator designed for that particular sort of work.

Your outfit is apparently unsuited to projection work, but more than that I would not care to say without full information as to exactly what it is. With the outfit you seem to have I would consider it the better practice to wire your arcs in parallel (multiple) and "steal" the current at change over. You, of course, mean that when the second arc is cut out the other rheostat is cut in to compensate for the resistance of the second arc.

In Montreal

While in Montreal attending the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers the editor had little time to get around, but did visit two or three theatres.

The motion picture theatres of Montreal, so far as we have examined them, do not, we are sorry to say, impress us as being either progressive or up to date. This applies both to auditorium appointments and projection.

They are for the most part unnecessarily dark, and that, while much better than unintelligent lighting, is not good.

The auditoriums might have considerable more illumination if it were rightly placed. In one we saw a grill or lattice work under a screen, with illumination behind it. This had, to our mind, two very bad effects. It detracted from the picture interest. Second, it served to constantly impress upon one's mind the fact that one was looking at a picture and not a real play.

Raw Work.

In one theatre we mounted to the projection room (we call it a "room" by courtesy; it really was little more than a glori-

Lyon & Healy Offer New Theatre Instruments

There is an instrument here suited to your particular needs. Read the following descriptions carefully:

PORTABLE PIANO PIPE ORGAN—Especially designed for theatres up to 300 seats. A two-manual combination Pipe Organ and Piano; can be played by hand or automatically from Hand-Played Rolls, reproduces perfectly. Requires no musician. A marvel in simplicity, durability and economy of operation.

MELODIST THEATRE ORGAN—A refined Pipe Organ—no trap or drum effects. Electro Pneumatically controlled from Lyon & Healy Player Piano of highest grade. Playable in all combinations, either manually from Piano keyboard or from 88-note Player Piano Rolls. Repertoire unlimited. Ideal reproduction of the Filmusic your Cue Sheets call for. Anyone with a little knowledge of music can play your "Big Features" with a Melodist.

FOTOPLAYER—The Instrumentation of a complete Orchestra; played manually or from two-tracker Player Piano, by one operator. The Pioneer Instrument for solving perfectly the problem of supplying at minimum cost, music exactly suited to every screen scene.

SYMPHONY ORGAN STYLE G—A complete Orchestral Pipe Organ of the Very Highest Order—made to "Fit your Pit." Designed for theatres up to three thousand seats. Cuts your music cost down to a minimum as it can be played automatically from hand played Solo Rolls for Relief as well as from two-manual console. Equipped with thirty-two tone Great Organ or Pedal Bass.

BENNETT ORCHESTRAL PIPE ORGANS at from $5,000 to $40,000. Bennett Organs are voiced to meet the acoustic problems of the particular Theatre in which they are installed. They represent the finished product of years of Organ Building. Their superior tone quality, simplicity and durability of construction, wealth of tone effect and facility of operation make them the Pipe Organ DeLuxe for accompanying the Silent Drama.

fied cubby-hole at the back of the top of the balcony).

When we came in sight a man was seated outside the projection room and fully six feet from its open door. When we turned up the balcony isle he arose and went inside. THAT MAN WAS THE PROJECTIONIST, and there was no other man, helper or otherwise, on the job. The "room" contained two Powers projectors. Its floor was just freshly painted, which might be urged by the projectionist in excuse for being fully ten or twelve feet from the projector which was running, with another projector between it and him, but such an excuse is beyond possibility of acceptance.

The Montreal union did us the honor to make us an honorary member. We appreciate the spirit which prompted the action, but must very seriously object to any of our brother members being allowed to pull such entirely raw stunts as this.

That the management does not supply a decent projection room is no excuse. If the room is not fit to stay in (which it was NOT), then the union should demand, and if necessary enforce, the installation of a proper room, since a small, crowded-up room, with no fresh air except such as may come in at an open window (which floods the room with daylight when matinees are on), or from the highest, hence the very hottest place in the balcony, makes for poor work, besides being dangerous, since if there is a fire most, if not all, of the smoke and gases will go right out into the auditorium.

At the Strand.

We called at the Strand and met George Ganetakos, one of the heads of the Independent Amusement, Limited, which operates ('nother kind of "operator") the Strand; also E. F. McMahon, secretary-treasurer, both live-wire gentlemen who are progressive, as is proved by the fact that in the new house they are about building they propose locating the projection room in the front of the balcony, so as to get a flat trajectory.

The Strand has two Simplex projectors. Its projection room, while far from ideal, has black walls and a high ceiling.

Judging the Montreal situation from what we have seen, there seems to be an opening for a Broadway Rialto, on perhaps a smaller scale. We did not examine into the plans of the Independent Amusement because of lack of time on the part of both Mr. Ganetakos and ourselves, but we would respectfully suggest to that gentleman that, unless he has already done so, he visit several cities the size of Montreal where up-to-date moving picture practices prevail and examine into the possibilities for something very much better than anything Montreal at present has in the way of a motion picture theatre.

What Is Possible.

It is quite possible at this stage of advancement in the art of motion picture photography and display to put on a really magnificent show at a very moderate price. We venture the assertion that a really well managed, strictly high class moving picture theatre in Montreal would be a gold mine. And Montreal is progressive enough, up to date enough and enterprising enough to have the very best there is and to support it well.

Department for Sale

Joseph S. Pare, 2310 Valentine avenue, New York City, saved all the projection departments from 1913 to 1918, when he stopped projecting and entered other business. They are removed from the paper, together with friend Sargent's departments, and are bound together in volume form with staples, two or more to the year, as follows:

1913, two volumns.
1914, three volumns.
1915, four volumns.
1916, one volumn from January to April.

The rest of 1916 is all there, but not arranged or bound. Most of 1917 is there, too, though he does not guarantee that every week will be found.

Mr. Pare does not expect to again enter the projection field, hence would like to dispose of these volumns and loose departments. Who wants them? Write friend Pare direct if you want them. He is willing to accept any reasonable offer.

Output Oversold

The Universal Motor Company, Oshkosh, Wis., reports to this department that their electric generating outfits for projection work are oversold to the extent that it will require six to eight weeks to make delivery.

This being the case, prospective purchasers will do well to get their orders in pronto to insure being well up to the front of the waiting list.

Exhibitor Cohen Found Mirroroid Screen So Good That He Now Manufactures It

THE United Mirroroid Manufacturing Company, 725 Seventh avenue, New York, capitalized for $50,000, has purchased the patents, machinery, stock and the good-will of the J. H. Genter Company, of Newburg, N. Y., manufacturers of the famous Mirroroid screen.

George Cohen.
Who discovered the merit of Mirroroid screens by using them.

A new factory building at 140 West Forty-sixth street, New York, has been purchased, and on five floors of these premises, with a total of 7,000 square feet, the Mirroroid screen will in future be manufactured.

The United Mirroroid Manufacturing Company will continue to manufacture the Mirroroid screen under the same formula that has made it so popular in the past, but will greatly improve the product by mounting it on a heavier fabric than formerly used.

With increased facilities at its command, the new concern guarantees immediate deliveries. In fact, it states that one hour after the receipt of an order the screen will be shipped to the purchaser.

George Cohen Is President.

The personnel of the new company is as follows: George Cohen, president; M. H. Cohen, vice-president; F. R. Herron, secretary and treasurer; H. A. Cohen, sales manager.

President Cohen has had fifteen years practical experience as an exhibitor. He was chairman of the grievance committee and is one of the executive committee of the New York Exhibitors' League, and proprietor of the following theatres: Rialto, Poughkeepsie; Cohen's Opera House, the Royal and the Garden theatres of Newburg, and also the Good Theatre of Beacon, N. Y. He is also actively engaged in marketing Tom Mix two-reelers in New York and is the proprietor of the Hotel Plaza in Newburg.

It was Mr. Cohen's experience as an exhibitor that lead him to appreciate the sterling qualities of the Mirroroid screen and to form a company which, from now on, will be actively engaged in manufacturing and marketing it. This is a testimonial to the Mirroroid's merits that is bound to be absolutely convincing.

The Mirroroid screen is, in every sense, a rollable glass canvas cloth, with a mercury foil glass amalgamation coating which will not turn black and is unaffected by moisture. This immunity to damage from dampness allows the screen to be washed with soap and water when necessary.

No Seam Visible.

A further advantage, not only from the projection point of view, but also from the point of promptness in making deliveries, is the fact that the seaming in the screen is absolutely invisible. This not only permits of perfect projection, but allows a screen of any desired dimensions to be instantly made up and shipped, which in these days of delay, linger and wait, is a factor to be appreciated.

The company is now organizing its own export department to care for the foreign trade, the demands of which have greatly increased during the past few months.

The Mirroroid screen is a particularly good sales proposition for reliable and energetic supply houses, and there is a good proposition awaiting those who will address the United Mirroroid Manufacturing Company, 725 Seventh avenue, New York City, in regard to same.

Francis Doublier Joins Palisade Laboratories

H. J. STREYCKMANS, general manager of the Palisade Laboratories, announces the acquisition of Francis Doublier as technical manager of the big plant in Palisade, N. J. Mr. Doublier is the oldest man in years of service connected with the motion picture industry, as he became identified with the Lumiere Company in Paris twenty-five years ago and was selected to exhibit to the crowned heads of Europe the new marvel of the age—motion pictures. In 1896 he personally directed the taking of the pictures of the coronation of the late Czar of Russia.

He came to America in 1902 to install and equip a plant for the Lumiere Co. for photographic plates, after which, in 1911-16 he was associated with the Solax Co. and a member of the board of directors of the Eclair Co. of America. The Paragon Laboratory was designed and equipped by Mr. Doublier in 1916, and he had personal charge of the construction. He comes to the Palisade from the Eclipse Laboratries, which has been doing the printing for the Metro Film Corporation.

Lucas of the South Does a Big Simplex Business

THAT the reputation of being "the largest supply house in the South" is well-earned is being demonstrated every day by Mr. Harry Lucas, president and general manager of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company of Atlanta, Ga., which company holds the exclusive selling franchise for the Simplex Projector throughout the South.

As an indication of the popularity of the Simplex product, as well as the Lucas business-getting proclivities, it is only necessary to point to the following recent Simplex installations that were made through the Lucas office:

Electric Theatre Co., Eunice, La., 1 Simplex; Ouachita Amusement Co., W. Monroe, La., 2 Simplexes; Strand Amusement Co., Tampa, Fla., 2 Simplexes; Marks-Rothenberg Co., Meridian, Miss., 2 Simplexes; F. E. Huggins, Hemingway, S. TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

Why Is It That So Many Theatres Find It Difficult to Attract People During the Summer?

The ready answer to this simple question is HEAT.

Long ago the summer problems of the exhibitor were solved by the installation of the and immediately his house was turned from one of the hot, stuffy kind into a delightfully cool retreat where on the hottest days people still go to cool off while enjoying the show. Typhoons installed now will take care of all your summer worries.

Put a Cushman Lighting Plant in Your Theatre and Watch the Currents Grow

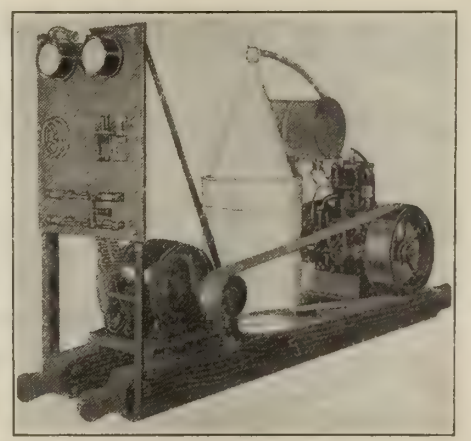
TO both the road showman and the exhibitor whose house is located where dependable electric service is unobtainable, an isolated lighting plant or motor generator set is of prime importance.

The Cushman Motor Works, Lincoln, Neb., manufactures a line of completely equipped motor generators well worth the attention of our readers.

These sets are equipped with four-cycle one and two cylinder motors, which may be operated on either kerosene or gasoline.

These motors are equipped with Schebler carburetors and with throttle governors, by which the speed is automatically regulated, although the engine may be speeded up or slowed down at the will of the operator by means of a simple timer with which it is equipped.

The positiveness of the water circulation



Plant No. 1.
Cushman isolated lighting plant complete with switchboard.

is insured by a direct driven circulating pump.

The Cushman engine is flexible and possesses an ample range of speed, and the manufacturers claim that the fuel consumption at each power is in direct proportion to the load on the motor.

Six Types of Outfits.

Complete lighting plants are supplied by the Cushman Motor Works in six distinct types.

Outfit No. 1 consists of a four horsepower, single cylinder motor equipped with magneto and starter coupling ignition and direct connected to a 2 KW-60 volt generator. The switchboard is complete, with all wiring and instruments thereon. There is a back-of-board rheostat control and endless belt. The capacity of this outfit is 33 amperes at 60 volts, sufficient for from fifty to eighty 20-watt Mazda lamps without arc, and from five to fifteen lamps used in connection with the arc. The weight of the outfit, on skids connected up, complete, is 600 pounds. The length over all is 84 inches, width 25 inches.

Outfit No. 3 consists of an eight horsepower, double cylinder motor. The generator is 4 KW-60 volts, with a capacity of 66 amperes at 60 volts, sufficient to operate from 150 to 175 20-watt Mazda lamps without the arc, or fifty such lights in combination with the arc. The outfit weighs 850 pounds and is 97 inches long and 28 inches wide.

With the above exceptions, it has a similar equipment to outfit No. 1.

No. 4 uses the same equipment as No. 3, except that the capacity of the generator is 36 amperes at 110 volts.

110 or 60 Volts.

Outfit No. 5 consists of a ten horsepower, double cylinder motor and a 5 KW-110 volt generator, with a capacity of 46 amperes at 110 volts, sufficient for 250 20-watt, 16 candle power Mazda lamps, without the arc. This plant, which has a front-of-board rheostat control, may also be obtained, if desired, with a 60 volt generator.

The estimates as to the number of lights that these plants handle is approximate and depends upon efficiency of installation, the size of lamps used, number of ventilating fans operated, and the amount of resistance encountered from varying length of lines from plant to arc, lights and fans.

Outfit No. 7 consists of a fifteen horse power, two cylinder motor, equipped with a double ignition system. A 7½ KW-110 volt generator, with a capacity of 66 amperes at 110 volts, sufficient to operate 350 to 400 16-candlepower, 20-watt Mazda lamps without arc. This plant is regularly furnished unmounted for installation on a concrete base. It may be mounted on steel skids, if desired.

Where extreme compactness and light weight must be obtained, an automobile radiator and fan-cooling system may be substituted for the regular water tank cooler, at an extra cost.

The standard plant is equipped with water tank equipment.

This Is Big Ten.

Outfit No. 10 consists of a twenty horsepower, two cylinder motor, with double ignition system. The generator is 10 KW-110 volts, with a capacity of 90 amperes at 110 volts, and will operate 500 16-candlepower 20-watt Mazda lamps, without arc. This plant is also regularly supplied unmounted for installation on concrete base, although it may be furnished on steel skids, at extra cost.

The switchboards furnished for these outfits are of nicely finished oil slate, mounted on angle iron legs. The equipment consists of voltmeter, ammeter, rheostat, pilot light, display light switch, independent of other circuits.

The double throw switch makes it possible to cut out the arc and throw in the house lights at one operation. This switchboard can be installed in and controlled from the operating room.

Things Are Doing in Des Moines

The Des Moines Film & Supply Company recently sold to the A. H. Blank Enterprises ten new Power's Six B machines, and in the last month have made the following installations:

Two new Power's Six B machines in the Family Theatre, Des Moines; one Power's Six B machine in the Star Theatre, Des Moines; one Power's Six B, with Mazda equipment, American Theatre, Prairie City, Iowa; two Power's Six B machines, Lincoln Theatre, Des Moines; two Power's Six B machines, Pastime Theatre, Arnolds Park, Iowa; one Power's Six B machine, Lyric Theatre, Sac City, Iowa; one Power's Six B machine, Opera House, Baxter, Iowa.

Business has been great in Des Moines and the company has made five installations of the Hertner Transverter, also numerous installations of the Minusa screen.

Eight Power's Cameragraphs Equip Fox Projection Room

THE accompanying illustration shows the projection room of the Fox Film Corporation, said to be the largest in the world devoted solely to motion picture machines, contains a battery of eight Power's projectors. This immense room, which is part of the splendid new Fox studios, is nearly 60 feet long and about 12 feet wide. As the room is so narrow in proportion to its length, it was impossible to secure in the photograph the full effect of the "squad" of Power's lined up ready for action, but the eight Power's machines are actually on duty. The room is equipped with all the modern ventilating and lighting devices which are a part of the carefully worked out plans of the entire Fox building.

This projection room is one of several in the Fox studio used for showing films, but the full projection installation is not yet in operation. It is expected that the laboratory projection equipment will be ready in the near future. Power's machines will be used exclusively and the projection is in charge of a corps of expert operators. Deon J. De Zitter is in charge of Mr. Fox's private projection room and the remaining projection equipment is looked after by J. Lefante, Theo. Ridder and Fred Boehringer.

Popular Canadian Projectionist Pays Visit to Simplex Factory

A RECENT interested visitor and guest at the Simplex plant was C. A. Dentelbeck, Supervisor of Projection, for the Paramount Theatre, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada.

Mr. Dentelbeck included the visit as a part of his itinerary on his way back to Canada from Cleveland, in which city he attended the recent convention of the I. A. T. S. E. of U. S. & C., at which convention he represented as a delegate Local No. 173 of Toronto, of which he is president.

Mr. Dentelbeck, on acount of his prominence in labor circles throughout Canada and also due to his standing as a projectionist, is looked upon by Canadian exhibitors as an ideal type of labor leader.

Dentelbeck Is an Old Timer.

Mr. Dentelbeck traces his apprenticeship in the industry back to 1909 when he operated a store show in Toronto and since that time has held almost every important office in the gift of his Union and watched his organization grow from thirty-five members up to one hundred and seventy-six, and the wage scale run from twelve to fifteen dollars in the earlier days to twenty-five to forty dollars at present. This scale being based on a six day week.

Mr. Dentelbeck's first connection with the Paramount Company was through the Allen Theatre where he had charge of the projection, and through his ability of producing pleasing screen results, he gradually assumed charge of the projection for the Paramount Company's circuit, in which are included the Allen, Family, Strand, Alhambra, Pantages, Teck, Garden and Regent, as well as the Strand-Kingston, Regent-Guelph, Pape and Danforth theatres. In Montreal, Winnipeg, Toronto and Vancouver, other theatres are being built by this popular company that uses many Simplex Projectors throughout its circuit.

Argus Is Fulco Distributor

The Argus Enterprises, Inc., of Cleveland, with branches in New York, Chicago, Boston, Denver, Omaha, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles, has been appointed exclusive distributor for the E. E. Fulton Company of Chicago for the states of Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona and Idaho.

A complete stock of Fulco products is carried in each of the branches, and shipments to Argus customers will be made direct, thus saving the time that would otherwise be consumed in making same from Chicago.

Kelley Company Gets Walter Wortham

The Kelley Theatre Supply Company, of Oklahoma City, has just closed two years of exclusive handling of repairs, moving picture equipment and theatre supplies.

Walter Wortham, whose record for efficiency as a repair man and electrician is more than enviable, has joined the forces of the company.

This insures the Kelley Company's customers prompt and efficient service not only in repair work, but in improved projection results.

Los Angeles M. P. Co. Makes Good

The Los Angeles Motion Picture Company, 215 East Washington street, Los Angeles, reports that their improved iris diaphragm is being snapped up by the Los Angeles cameramen as fast as the company can turn them out.

The company is also making some improved tripods, which are also meeting with local favor.

Albany Supply Company Busy

The Albany Theatre Supply Company, 4 Clinton avenue, Albany, N. Y., reports that it has equipped the New Community Theatre, Catskill, with Simplex machines. The Albany Theatre Supply Co. is now located in new quarters, and it is one of the neatest little supply houses in the state.

95% of the Machines used by the Studios and Laboratories of Los Angeles and vicinity are Power's Projectors

Gentlemen;-

We are using your projectors exclusively, ten in number, and they are giving us excellent results. Our work is very exacting, more so, in fact, than in any studio I know of. We must have perfect projection in order to judge photography and printing; poor projection would be worse than nothing. In addition, owing to the large number of companies at work, the machines are used constantly all day long, and a large part of the night---a severe strain that only mechanical perfection can meet.

The fact that we are using Power's Cameragraphs exclusively speaks for itself.

Yours very truly

But—

SOME people enjoy making money—others in spending it. The exhibitor will do neither unless he uses plenty of RITCHEY posters!

But—and it's a very important but—he won't get plenty of RITCHEY posters until he devotes plenty of energy toward securing them.

Anything that is worth having is worth working for. That the RITCHEY poster is worth having is beyond question. All motion picture experience proves that the poster is the most important factor as far as ticket sales are concerned. Actual experience proves that ticket selling is the most notable characteristic of the RITCHEY poster.

It does not do that as a result of mere chance. It does it because no single point is overlooked which would tend to give the RITCHEY poster an increased advertising value. They are always based on an intelligent study of crowd psychology. They are drawn, designed and colored by the greatest poster artists in the world. They are executed and printed by unsurpassable experts. These varied efforts are perfectly combined and co-ordinated under the direction of the greatest poster authority in America. The result is the RITCHEY poster! The exhibitors should bend their efforts towards getting them. The success of their efforts, combined with the success of ours, would result in a degree of prosperity for motion picture theatres hitherto unknown in the motion picture industry.

Thousands Of Profitable Theatres Have Been Made By These Able Producers

The seven producers who have bound themselves together in their own organization to market their own productions without middlemen have been—last year, this year and for many years—makers of the biggest and best in motion pictures. They have been the chief agencies in the making of those great pictures on which shrewd and skilled exhibitor-showmen have built great theatre institutions.

Exhibitors are prompt to uphold the tremendous mastery of Thomas H. Ince; the true, genuine values of his pictures; their great hold upon the public.

Exhibitors themselves are the first to emphasize the unparalleled uniqueness of Mack Sennett—that brilliant artist-business man who fans the laughter of the world into box-office profits

Exhibitors themselves hail Marshall Neilan, with his tremendous dynamic "punch" of young manhood; with his Irish tenderness and romance, catching and picturing on the screen the eternal heart of youth.

Exhibitors are first to remember and talk about the wistfulness of an old-time "Fifty-Fifty" and to praise the glowing romance and thrilling power of the present day Allan Dwan.

Exhibitors themselves have a place alone from all others for George Loane Tucker, maker of the mightiest of all productions—"The Miracle Man." The heart that was put into that unrivalled picture will be put into others of equal power and profit.

Exhibitors themselves tell you that in all the world of picture making there is one—and just one—Maurice Tourneur, with a rattling, imaginative, conception of action, colour, romance—of stories that stir the blood.

Exhibitors take pride in the rapidity of development of J. Parker Read, Jr., grown to power and position in a hard-to-conquer industry by his bold imagination and his flair for showmanship values on the screen.

These seven producers in the year from Sunday, September 12th, are releasing to you a minimum of thirty productions under the most flexible and likeable sales policy ever devised in this industry. Their productions will stand alone—you may buy those of any one, two or three producers, or you may have them all with the vast sense of protection and profit that they will afford you.

MERMAID COMEDIES

JACK WHITE has put the best of his experience with the Mack Sennett and Sunshine studios into this initial Mermaid Comedy. Rapid fire action and pretty girls are featured, with such clever comedians as Jimmie Adams, Frank Coleman and Lige Cromley.

It is built with a single purpose—a succession of laughs in attractive settings and without vulgarity. It's a REAL COMEDY. There'll be a Mermaid every four weeks.

And have you shown the first Chester Comedy—"Four Times Foiled"?

ADDRESS ONLY
THE DIRECTOR, NATIONAL PARK SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
NATIONAL PARK SERVICE
WASHINGTON

Los Angeles, California,
May 5, 1920.

To Superintendents of National Parks, and Custodians of National Monuments;

The bearer of this letter, Mr. Leland J. Burrud, or other representative of the Sunset-Burrud motion picture interests, will visit several of the national parks and national monuments during the year 1920, for the purpose of making motion pictures of scenes in these reservations.

I have seen pictures that have already been completed by this enterprise, and I consider its product equal to, if not surpassing, most of the scenic film that I have observed. I am much interested in having the superintendents and custodians aid Mr. Burrud and his representatives and assistants in any way compatible with the public business entrusted to them to perform, and the park and monument executives are authorized to cooperate in this scenic picture work as opportunity permits.

No charges will be made at the gates of the Parks for cars used by Mr. Burrud or his representatives and assistants in touring these reservations.

Stephen T. Mather
Director.

CC to each superintendent and custodian.

It is very evident from this letter that the Government is well aware of the surpassing high quality of Sunset-Burrud productions.

We can pile evidence upon evidence why you should be booking now---but all of it harks back to the original argument---quality. And we are sure this will win your support also. First release July 4th.

A PERSONAL MESSAGE
TO THE
AMERICAN PRODUCER

I HAVE just arrived in your hospitable country, preparatory to the formation of the Cinema Sales Corporation, an organization which will specialize in the distribution of American productions of quality in the United Kingdom. The new company will not in any way interfere with my affiliation with Hayward Productions, which organization, I am happy to announce, is meeting with wonderful success.

Mr. Henry Cundy, my business associate, has accompanied me on this trip, and we have both put up at the Hotel Astor in New York where we will be accessible to the American producer.

Our mission is to obtain the best American productions, and we are prepared to negotiate at once for the acquisition of such productions for distribution in the United Kingdom. In this connection, we are pleased to announce that we are working in association with Mr. Walter Hoff Seely, American representative of the Cinema Sales Corporation, whose offices are at 50 East Forty-second street.

Signed HARRY WARD.

An Announcement of Particular Importance

TO THE

Independent Producer, Director, Star or Author

By the

Pioneer Film Corporation

¶ The Pioneer Film Corporation with its unrivaled system of exchanges throughout the United States and Canada offers to the Independent American Producer an assured and profitable market for his productions.

¶ The individual star, whether legitimate or screen, the individual director, or author contemplating entering the independent field, who is seeking advice or financial assistance, will find the Pioneer willing to go into careful consideration of his proposition.

¶ In the past, the greatest difficulties confronting the independent producer, whether director, star or author, were either the lack of an assured and profitable outlet for his product, or the lack of proper co-operation and financial support.

¶ The Pioneer organization is more than anxious to encourage independent production by every means of assistance, financial or otherwise, to develop to the fullest extent the great possibilities which it believes lie in the hands of the individual star (man or woman), the individual director or author.

¶ The Pioneer has behind it a record of constant and consistent growth, and is today the largest and most successful independent motion picture distributing organization in the world.

¶ The coming season will be, from all indications, the biggest in the history of the industry. The public demand is for big pictures—big in story, big in production, big in stars.

¶ The Pioneer is interested in big pictures. The Pioneer plan of co-operation, exploitation and distribution is based upon the broad and square principle of "live and let live."

¶ Our hand is constantly on the pulse of public demand and we know exactly the type of picture that will find a profitable market.

¶ The Pioneer policy is one of co-operation with the Independent Producer—co-operation based upon expert technical skill and sound business procedure.

The producer, having finished pictures, which he has not disposed of, is especially invited to communicate with us. We are ready to negotiate for such completed productions, and wish to assure the producer, regardless of the price which he places upon his pictures, that we will make satisfactory arrangements with him, upon either an entire cash or co-operative basis.

That's what the Indianapolis Daily Times says in reviewing the premier showing of "A Splendid Hazard"—and further says:

"Success again! ANOTHER SCREEN TRIUMPH! Henry B. Walthall and Allan Dwan have scored a screen victory in putting over 'A Splendid Hazard'! ROMANCE AND ADVENTURE IN ITS PUREST FORM HAS BEEN WOVEN INTO A DREAM WITH A PUNCH NEVER EQUALLED.

"We thought Allan Dwan reached the top of the ladder in directing Clara Kimball Young in 'Cheating Cheaters,' but he has gone a step farther. We remember Henry Walthall in 'The Birth of a Nation,' but it remained for Dwan to bring out THE FINEST WORK so far revealed in Walthall's screen career.

"With that little touch which differentiates genius from ordinary acting Walthall is able to play on the sympathies of the spectators like a master. Walthall's acting in this romantic story is perfect acting, if there ever was perfect acting.

"Others in the cast add to the screen triumph. The photography is well nigh perfect, the direction is masterfully correct, resulting in a screen triumph.

"OPINION—Here is a romance in its most appealing and swaying form, and above all, it gives Walthall his big chance to show his true artistry."

The Indianapolis Star says:

"Henry B. Walthall easily stands out in a formidable array of talent as the most distinguished and interesting member, whose impersonation is most important. The photography is excellent and the settings characteristic of this intelligent and skilful director. There is a youthful romance in the story and PLENTY OF ACTION.

"Walthall is imposing. With the ease of an actor, born or made, he dominates every scene and makes this difficult role the finest work of his career."

The Indianapolis News says:

"The melodramatic story of Harold MacGrath has been pictured with lavish settings and an extraordinary cast. Henry B. Walthall is an actor with distinctive personality. The scenes in Corsica are especially fine, both in the desolate and rugged hills of the background and the electric thrill of Walthall's acting. The cast is chosen from the proven best of the profession."

THEATRE OWNERS NOTICE

A big and successful Theatre Organization which is at present contracting for more film than it can use in its own houses wishes to affiliate with one independent exhibitor in each of certain cities and towns who is in a position to handle strictly high class productions. We will expect such theatres to pay exactly the same percentage of rentals as we figure for our own theatres. Our reason for seeking the affiliation of a number of other theatre owners of standing is to increase our buying power and the stability of our organization and business generally. We will extend to them an equal share in all the advantages of our own strongly entrenched position. Our proposition will bear the fullest investigation—legal, financial and otherwise.

Our company holds a number of most attractive contracts with producers, which assure a continuous supply of releases from some of the strongest box-office stars and directors. Our company's buying power and financial position is such as to command a continuous supply of high grade attractions for the future. We stand ready to share—for mutual benefit—these advantages with a number of exhibitors whose standing and financial position as individual exhibitors in their localities will stand investigation.

We invite a theatre connection in any city or town in which we are not at the present time operating a theatre of our own. We will not affiliate with theatres which compete with each other. It must be distinctly understood that only bona fide exhibitors will be considered and it must be further distinctly understood that the productions upon which we can offer open days are those which we have first booked for our own theatres.

We wish to discontinue the competitive booking of our attractions and believe our plan of disposing of open time to theatres of standing on the same terms we ourselves pay will prove more satisfactory in the long run.

This is a straight-out exhibitor's proposition made by us to other exhibitors for our mutual benefit.

It is an opportunity to join your theatre with the most powerful chain of houses in the world on an arrangement for a long term, but which you can terminate after giving it a fair trial if it is not all we represent it to be.

Our theatres will protect yours. Your theatres will protect ours.

Your theatres are safeguarded because they will play only attractions which we first play in our houses and at the same prices. If they pay us they will pay you.

We will never enter your town and zone in competition with you and no competitor will dare do so once you have affiliated with us.

Until such time as sufficient houses have joined, we will continue to rent our attractions to theatres which have not joined us and those who do join us will share in the profits of the exchanges we now operate. Exhibitors who join us will also share, in proportion to their holdings, in the management of the Company through local boards of directors which in turn will elect the national Board of Directors which will manage our business.

This is undoubtedly the best proposition ever offered exhibitors who are in a position to avail themselves of it. It will do away with advance deposits. Any money put up by an exhibitor will be for stock in our company or advance payments for pictures and we will put up dollar for dollar with him. However, it is our intention to ourselves finance all purchases of productions. If an exhibitor is dissatisfied after the trial period, we will return to him the money he has paid for stock. It will secure their independence in the same measure that it does our own. It is just a practical basis—and the only practical one—upon which exhibitors can get together for mutual benefit.

It is not an effort to "sew up" an exhibitor to a producing-distributing concern. It is purely an effort to bring exhibitors together for their common good on a fair and equitable basis. A great many exhibitors have already joined us. Many will regret not having done so when some more far sighted exhibitor in their town has beaten them to it. We know we must be fair and just to all in order to survive. We want those who join us to make as much money out of the arrangement as we do. It must pay both of us to last. This is a simple explanation of our Franchise Plan. Write any First National office for complete details. Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

A Big Day for Exhibitor Organization

THE last day of the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was the biggest day in the history of exhibitor organization in the United States. For the first time in national gatherings of motion picture showmen there was evidence of the existence of sufficient faith in each other to justify the delegates in putting on the table cold cash in large amounts. In Chicago at the Patterson gathering a start had been made in the getting together of a real fund, but at that time it was deemed better to await the Cleveland sessions and the money had been returned.

The raising of $15,000 as a nucleus came near the end of a long and at times a stormy session. The convention had opened its meeting around 11 o'clock and no adjournment had been taken for luncheon. The delegates remained in spite of empty stomachs, perhaps the best proof after all that they were determined to accomplish things, that they were there to finish the job so well started the preceding two days. We say two days, but of course there must have been an amazing amount of work in the previous months. Men do not leave their business and travel hundreds and thousands of miles without having been convinced there was a reason for their going and that there was at least a fair chance of achieving something worth while after their arrival.

The unanimous election of the list of officers submitted by the nominating committee had large significance for those who had been closely following the proceedings. It meant above all unanimity among the leaders of the convention, and the leaders of the body on Thursday were not necessarily the same men as were indicated on the face of things Tuesday morning. It meant, too, that if there were present delegates who took exception to any of the selections they possessed the deep discretion to hold their peace rather than to attempt to upset the carefully planned work of the stated committees. In the latter instance the inactivity of objectors was a tribute to the fairness of the dominating authority, to the effort made so to constitute the various working groups that they should be representative of their communities. Proving the open-mindedness of the nominating committee was the naming of Messrs. Horstmann and Rembusch, officers of the old league, on the executive or controlling body.

The proffer by the executive committee of a salary to President Cohen of $25,000 a year shows that the members of the governing group appreciate the value of the office and the work to be performed by its incumbent. Mr. Cohen's declination of the remuneration was gracefully and convincingly expressed. His statement that he has received so many words of appreciation that he feels a great obligation and that it will require his utmost efforts to live up to the kind expectations of his friends has the right ring. So also has the suggestion that the new organization will need a great deal of care and, above all, funds.

When the Right Man Gets the Right Job

IF Canadians really knew their luck as well as Nebraskans know what Omaha is losing there would be great rejoicing across the border, among picture showmen, because of the fact that H. M. Thomas has been signed as director of theatres for the Famous Players-Lasky Canadian Corporation, Ltd. Mr. Thomas is a pacemaker among picture theatre managers.

His ideas of house management as expressed at the Strand and Rialto, in Omaha, will have larger expression in the supervision of about forty theatres throughout the Dominion. Every other house in Canada stands in the way of benefiting through the progressive ideas Mr. Thomas will take with him for development across the border. For it is a fact that every success scored in house management helps every other showman within the zone of influence.

It is for this reason we believe that Canadian filmdom will benefit through the energy and effort Mr. Thomas will expend in directing the theatres that will come under his control.

England Takes Photoplaying Seriously

THEY tell us that our English cousins take their fun seriously. As to the truth of the accusation no expression of opinion is necessary at this late day. But it seems to be a fact that Englishmen have awakened to the uses (and abuses) of the screen and are taking their photoplaying seriously.

The general public is buying stock in picture corporations, a practice in financing that heretofore has been applied to music hall development and to general utilities. Not until very lately have the stock issues in cinema corporations found favor with the public.

Opinions as to the cause may differ, but it seems logical to believe that conditions during the war, when American photoplays almost exclusively entertained in the cinemas, developed an interest among average Englishmen in an amusement they had considered but lightly.

Within recent months the activities in actual production of British films, on British soil with British photoplayers, has advanced amazingly. And a basic reason for this development is the fact that Britishers have become convinced that the American method is the best.

Technical staff, directors, lighting and studio equipment from America find open the way into British production plants by almost unanimous consent. The British Colonies —fruitful fields for distribution—are to have British-made photoplays, and the pictures will be made to compete with the American product.

Washington Fire Department Asks Return of Film Scraps

WITH a view to materially lessening the first hazard that results from having scraps of motion picture films lying around loose, District of Columbia fire department officials have asked for the co-operation of the motion picture exchange managers of Washington, D. C., in having all such scraps sent to them daily.

"It is getting to be quite a practice among motion picture exhibitors to cut out from the films such scenes or parts of the photoplay as do not appeal to them or which they think might be distasteful to their patrons," said Inspector Radcliffe. "Then when a film breaks and has to be patched, parts are cut and allowed to accumulate in the operating booth, constituting a fire menace.

"These parts and pieces are the property of the film companies and they should be returned to them when the films are sent back after being exhibited. The cut-outs and eliminations may be desired by some other exhibitor and if not put back in the place from which they were removed, they should at least be sent to the exchange from which the films were obtained that they might be there reinserted."

The Washington Exchange Managers' Association is sending a letter to each theatre man in the territory embodying these views. At the same time an effort will be made to discourage the practice of making eliminations and cut-outs by exhibitors when necessary.

Minister and Detective Both Urge Censorship of Pictures

PROPAGANDA in favor of a federal law for the censorship of motion pictures pervaded recent speeches of two well-known men at different conventions in two different middle western cities the first week in June.

In Cleveland, at a session of a convention of church association secretaries, preliminary to a meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, the Rev. Dr. Walter Laidlaw of New York talked on the "tremendous commercialization of the movies on Sunday" and drew attention to the formation in New York of a $5,000,000 film corporation for the manufacture of religious films.

He also urged the delegates to work for the passage of a bill pending in Congress, calling for the censorship of films under the interstate commerce laws, which would be used to prevent shipment from one state to another of films not passed by federal censors.

In Detroit, at the convention of International Police Chiefs Association, William A. Pinkerton, the detective, advocated a strict censorship of motion pictures as a means of diminishing crime. He declared a federal law should be passed to prohibit the illustration of criminal acts.

Film Exports Increase

Our foreign trade in moving picture films is increasing steadily, according to reports compiled by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, our shipments during April being 1,788,701 linear feet of unexposed film, valued at $66,341, and 18,303,882 feet of exposed film, with a value of $678,492.

Several new markets have been developed for unexposed film. Our most important customers during the month were Australia, which took 800,023 linear feet, valued at $23,838; England, with 380,876 feet, worth $22,086; Canada, with 348,360 feet, valued at $12,199, and European Turkey, with 140,000 feet, worth $1,500. Shipments to France totaled 7,364 feet, with a value of $754. Other exports were made to Mexico, Spain, Sweden, Scotland, British West Indies, Cuba, Peru, Japan, the Philippines and Egypt.

Several countries exported more than 1,000,000 feet of exposed film from the United States during April, among them France, England, Australia, Japan and Canada.

Jack Dempsey Did Not Evade Selective Draft, Jury Finds

JACK DEMPSEY, world's heavyweight champion and star of one of Pathe's biggest serials, "Daredevil Jack," was acquitted of the charge of evading the selective draft by a jury in the United States District Court in Los Angeles, June 15. The jury was out ten minutes and took one ballot.

"I'm the happiest boy in the world," said Dempsey a moment after the verdict had been announced. "It feels good to be out from under a charge like that. Now I can start square and not feel that people are thinking that I tried to get out of doing my duty."

Hiram Abrams Heads "Big Four"

Hiram Abrams has succeeded Oscar A. Price, resigned, as president of the United Artists Corporation. The action, which was unanimous, was expected. As general manager of "Big Four" Mr. Abrams has proved himself worthy of the new and larger position he is now called upon to fill. He assumed his new duties immediately after his election.

The World's News Brought to Your Desk by the World

A FEATURE of this week's issue of the Moving Picture World is the variety of foreign news it offers. These articles bear witness to the chain of correspondents which the Moving Picture World maintains in its consistent endeavor to give exhibitors the first news and the best news.

Very interesting and important are these articles. There is one telling how a few black sheep in the exhibitor family in Germany have caused the re-enforcement of censorship. There is a striking revelation of the opportunities for our pictures in China. There is a story from Paris about the film embargo and the opinions of French people on our films, and there are even notes from far-away India which tell how motion pictures are captivating those swarthy people. They, too, are having their troubles with censorship, a physican having charged the screen with causing an increase in suicides. An article from England gives the latest production news and some "odds and ends."

Subscribers of the Moving Picture World will find this an unusually interesting and instructive issue, one that should be filed away carefully for future reference when its news has been digested.

Abramson Calls Independents to Form Distributing Concern

IVAN ABRAMSON has called a meeting of independent exchange managers for the purpose of forming a co-operative film distributing corporation to exploit and produce bigger and better pictures. The incorporators are some of the early Independent exchangemen with a knowledge of the business second to none. The object of the organization is to encourage producers to make productions, as it gives them an assured market for high-class productions.

At a meeting of the independent exhibitors of America, it was plainly seen that the independent producer will be encouraged by them. Articles of incorporation are about to be filed and the corporation is assured of unlimited capital. A call for a meeting at the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, on July 7 has been made, when permanent organization will be perfected and the names of the incorporators and exchanges will be made public.

Eastman Gives $4,000,000 to Found College Medical School

GEORGE EASTMAN has "done another big thing." This time the "father of the motion picture industry" has given $4,000,000 in conjunction with $5,000,000 from the General Education Board to found a medical school and hospital at the University of Rochester. Included in the new school will be the Rochester Dental Dispensary, which Mr. Eastman founded at a cost of $1,500,000.

This latest gift on the part of Mr. Eastman, head of the Eastman Kodak Company, brings the total of his benefactions up to more than $31,000,000, the great bulk of which has been distributed in recent years. At the rate at which Mr. Eastman has been giving for the past two years, he has created surprise after surprise in rapid succession because of his generosity and the scope of the enterprises which he seeks to found and endow.

In Rochester it was once said that the newspapers used the phrase, "Mr. Eastman has done another big thing," so often that it was no longer even a surprise to know that Mr. Eastman had done another big thing, but that the surprise was always in the constructive idea behind his gift. The motion picture industry needs no reminder of his giving $4,000,000 for the founding of a National Academy of Motion Pictures in Rochester, which, it is expected, in time and with development will be of great benefit to the entire motion picture field.

Washington Exchange Managers Want Freight Embargo Lifted

WASHINGTON, D. C., exchange managers, through their local association, are endeavoring to have the embargo against the movement of freight to New York lifted, in order that they may dispose of the films that have been accumulating in the exchanges and for which there is no further use. Letter have been addressed to the United States Railroad Administration and to the local fire department.

The Railroad Administration and the Fire Department were furnished also with an approximate number of films that should be moved to New York. This number will reach 5,000 reels when all are accounted for, it is believed.

Producer-Exhibitor Must Prime Guns to Meet Threat of Exhibitors' Convention

Famous Players-Lasky Termed "Most Flagrant Offender"—First National Circuit Also Attacked and No Defense Permitted from Floor—Black to Have Convention of His Own—Important Resolutions Adopted

THE producer-exhibitor must look to his guns. The batteries of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the biggest and most powerful exhibitor organization ever formed, are about to turn on him. Born at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, June 10, amid a riot of enthusiasm, backed by the hard cash of the men who traveled thousands of miles to form it, and headed by Sydney S. Cohen of New York, this new force in the industry is prepared to demand a change of present conditions whereby certain manufacturers of pictures compete against their own customers.

Writing from the Cleveland ringside during the small hours of Thursday, June 10th, Moving Picture World predicted a victory for the "steam roller" which the theatre owners had developed themselves. Proceedings of that day, Thursday, when the convention sat through without recess from morning until evening, going through big business like a whirlwind, proved that the prediction was faultless.

Judging from the tone of resolutions passed by the convention against all producer-exhibitors, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is in the mood for answers and not vague promises. In the opinion of the convention a crisis is at hand which must be dealt with squarely. It looks as if the trade were due for a raft of promises and statements, but it also looks as if the theatre owners are going to insist on action and not on protestations of good faith.

Marcus Loew was the only producer-exhibitor given a hearing on the floor of the convention. Famous Players-Lasky and First National were attacked, but were not permitted to speak directly in their behalf. The point was made that Mr. Loew had been seated as a member of the organization and had a right to speak, whereas no other producer or distributor had been given that privilege. A resolution objecting to the exhibiting activities of Famous Players-Lasky was passed at the Thursday session.

Resolutions were also passed against any form of advertising in pictures, against advance deposits, percentage, the free use of program pictures by churches and schools and the present taxes on the use of music.

The Moving Picture World, although it carried last week the biggest story of all the trade papers on the doing at the convention, is giving herewith an account of the proceedings of Thursday, the last and by far the biggest day of the convention.

THURSDAY SESSION

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America has met the great initial test every new organization must face at the moment of its creation. For the first time in the history of picture theatre owners' conventions actual money in large amounts has been raised during the session, with donations being made in check or cash to the chairman.

The amount raised at the session Thursday, June 10, in this way, a fund to meet immediate expenses for the new organization, was $15,000.

Think of Small Exhibitor.

When E. T. Peter, chairman of the ways and means committee, reported a plan for raising funds based on the percentage system by which exchanges figure the rentals for films in their zones, he concluded his report by expressing the wish that the question be freely discussed on the floor.

The invitation was unnecessary. Man after man sprang to his feet with suggestions. Several large theatre owners volunteered to start the ball rolling with voluntary contributions. It was suggested that every man present donate $100 out of hand.

On further discussion it soon became evident that this would be too much of an embarrassment for the small theatre owner. It was suggested that every man present donate in the proportion of $5 to every 500 seats in his theatre, or fractions thereof.

Rocky Moments for Organization.

By this time feeling had been aroused to such an extent that little heed was paid to this suggestion. Chairman Lustig was called upon time and again to restore order with vigorous manipulation of the gavel. It seemed as if the fine showing made by the convention up to this moment had been deceptive, that when it came to a problem that meant personal sacrifice on the part of every member the right spirit was lacking.

Oldtimers who had been at many previous conventions shook their heads knowingly. They saw the movement coming to grief on the rocks of financial difficulties.

O'Reilly Delivers Again.

That such was not the case was suddenly proved by Charles L. O'Reilly of New York. Coming forward to the platform he was recognized by the chairman and with a few words brought the assemblage to earnest and favorable attention.

Sydney S. Cohen
Elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

His plan was so simple that some wondered why it had not been though of before. Mr. O'Reilly moved that all present should be taxed on the basis of $5 to every 500 seats owned, but that delegates from states already organized should, if possible, underwrite the amounts for which their states would be responsible on the percentage plan.

With a sudden sweep of unanimity and enthusiasm, the motion was passed.

Donations Come Fast.

Oklahoma came forward with $500; Michigan, $1,000; New York, $1,000; New Jersey, $365; Pennsylvania, $1,500; Ohio, which previously had offered a check for the entire amount for which they would be responsible under the percentage plan, came forward with $700. Then donations began to come so rapidly that it was difficult to keep track of them.

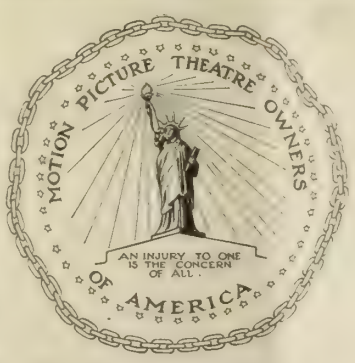
Oklahoma gave $500; Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York, $500; Texas, $300; Virginia, $500; Wisconsin, $100; Minnesota, $250; Kansas, $300; Illinois, $500; Indiana, unorganized, personal donation by Mr. Lucas, $100; Arkansas, unorganized, personal donation by James Boyd, $50; South Dakota, $100; District of Columbia, unorganized, personal donation by Maurice Davis, $250 (this meant $1 for every seat in Mr. Davis' theatre); Kentucky, unorganized, personal donation by Darling and Reese, $100; Louisiana, $100; Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, $500; West Virginia, unorganized, $100.

Resolutions

Summaries of the resolutions adopted follow:

Famous Players-Lasky—This corporation is found the most flagrant offender against the independent exhibitor movement. Every independent exhibitor is urged to protect himself, by all lawful means, from this corporation until it furnishes competent evdience that it has changed its plans of producer-distributor-exhibitor control of the industry.

Co-Operative Theatre Franchises—Officers and committees are isntructed to intigate co-operative theatre franchises as presented by First National Associated Theatres, National Theatres, Inter-State Feature Exchange and other similar organizations.



The Official Seal of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Independent Producer—Hearty support is pledged to independent producers and distributors and assistance in marketing their products is promised believing that competition means pictures of quality.

Censorship—Opposition is expressed to all forms of censorship. It has proved a failure in the four states where it has been tried. Public opinion can control every form of amusement.

Percentage—Firm opposition to every form of percentage booking is declared. It is considered a deliberate step of producing interests to gain possession of theatres and a threat of higher prices and poorer films.

Importations—Art being international, all films of merit and quality are welcomed, regardless of where they are made. Thus, healthy competition will be created and present admission prices maintained.

Deposit System—The deposit system is denounced and legislatures are urged to adopt a law similar to that recently adopted in New York State.

Film Rental Tax—Protest is made against the present federal film rental tax and its repeal is urged.

Business Relations—The forced deposit system, forced advance payment system and other systems of collecting funds more than seven days in advance of the play date, irrespective of the time of execution of the contract or playing date given, are denounced.

Posters—Opposition is expressed to all contracts with distributors for pictures that compel the exhibitor to use any certain amount of advertising matter.

Non-Theatrical Performances—Opposition is expressed to the practice of supplying regular feature films and comedies to non-theatrical institutions. Producers are asked to restrict the distribution to such institutions of films of a purely religious or educational nature.

Schools and Churches—It is called unfair competition to lease or give free of charge or rent on percentage to any school, church, community house or charitable organization. Before allowing their films to be exhibited in any such places, producers should consult with the theatre owner immediately concerned. This does not apply to strictly educational or religious subjects.

Contracts—Present contracts between the exhibitor and producer are deemed inequitable and a new and uniform contract is recommended. Distributors and producers are to be asked their attitude on this matter.

F. I. L. M. Clubs—Protest is made against the activities of F. I. L. M. clubs and similar organizations as bodies self-constituted arbitrarily to decide disputes. Action of the attorney general of the United States is asked.

Music—Protest is made against the additional collection from theatres for music after the publishers have been paid for each piece of music. Display of slides advertising music will be denied until the practice is discontinued.

Music Tax—Congress is urged to modify the copyright laws so as to do away with the unjust tax imposed for the sale of music in theatres.

Standard Contracts—Standard film service contracts are favored, providing they are signed and become binding at once upon all parties concerned in each respective distributing zone without further reference to the home offices or elsewhere.

Screen Resolution—Screens belong to the exhibitors and the public they serve. Producers who pledge the screens to any purpose whatever are condemned.

Americanism—Americanization work is enthusiastically approved and will be supported. A committee will inquire into the preparation of suitable scenarios and the making of Americanization pictures.

Message to Governor Smith—Profound gratitude is expressed for the action of Governor Smith, of New York State, in securing exhibitors' money now on deposit with producers against misuse and for signing the law putting the admission of children into picture houses of New York State into the hands of the parents.

A. S. Black Condemned—President Alfred S. Black, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., is condemned for his attack upon Messrs. Cohen, O'Reilly, Berman, Lustig and Herrington.

Eleventh-Hour Pamphlet Circulated by Black Is Called Insult to Convention

"THE last gasp of the octopus." So Sam Berman characterized a pamphlet issued by Alfred S. Black early Thursday morning, charging the implication of Messrs. Berman, Cohen, O'Reilly, Lustig and Herrington in an advertising reel scheme for personal benefit.

The pamphlet created a storm of resentment at the session of June 10. William A. Dillon of Ithaca said: "Let us fling back this insult to Black and demand that he either retract his statements or quit our organization."

Sydney Cohen, amid cheers, took the floor and answered Mr. Black's questions as asked in the pamphlet one by one. Mr. O'Reilly said: "They are going through in this thing with me to the end. I intend to claim my prerogative as an American citizen."

Frank Rembusch was given the floor for fifteen minutes, and although frequently interrupted, put in a plea that Black be given a hearing. Chairman Lustig pointed out that Mr. Black had been seated in the convention and had a perfect right to be present. Mr. Rembusch also defended himself on the charges that he had offended Senator Walker the afternoon before.

Fred Herrington and H. H. Lustig also answered Mr. Black's pamphlet as applied to them. Mr. Goldberg of Baltimore delivered a strong brief for the advertising reel as it had worked out in his city.

Willard C. Patterson put in: "If Mr. Black had the spirit of Patterson, he'd tear those doors down, come into this hall and demand that he be given a chance to defend himself."

The discussion culminated in a resolution which was adopted unanimously, condemning the Black pamphlet and expressing confidence in the men attacked.

"World" Is Thanked for Helping to Make Convention Possible; Beats All Rivals

SPEAKING from the chair at Cleveland as the newly elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Sydney S. Cohen said: 'I would be remiss in my duties if I did not thank George Blaisdell, of the Moving Picture World, for his work in helping this movement and in making the great attendance at this convention possible.

"The impartial way in which, before the Hotel Winton convention, he printed the announcements from all exhibitors associations, and the very helpful editorials and editorial comments, no doubt, aided considerably in promoting the feeling of harmony which exists today.

"I cannot speak too highly of the unbiased attitude of the World and I want to express my feeling of appreciation for its fair and square deal to everybody."

Telegraphs 10,000 Words

In the early morning hours of Thursday the Moving Picture World put on the wires in Cleveland 10,000 words of convention matter, all of which was printed in the issue of June 19. This amount not only establishes a record in the history of motion picture trade papers, but it is several times larger than any telegraphic report hitherto sent by any correspondents of a trade paper in this industry.

The Moving Picture World not only carried the largest and most complete story of the convention published in any trade paper, but was the only publication issued on Friday which carried the news of Thursday's elections. The list of all the officers was humming over the wires to our New York staff a few minutes after it was put through on the floor at the Winton.

The World was on the street Friday carrying a seven-page story of the greatest exhibitor convention the industry has known, giving in skeleton form the happenings up to 4.23 o'clock of the afternoon before.

Since the possibility of a get-together at Cleveland loomed on the horizon, the Moving Picture World has been the heaviest backer for exhibitor organization, carrying consistently five and six pages of pre-convention developments. Its story of last week was the climax, not only in its "scoop," but in the fact that its extent proved the World the largest believer in the exhibitor in this most important hour of his history.

Cohen Declines Salary Offer of $25,000 as National President of Theatre Owners

AFTER the adjournment of the national convention at Cleveland the executive committee held a special session at the Hotel Winton, in which it passed a resolution fixing the annual salary of National President Sydney S. Cohen at $25,000.

The resolution set forth that the discharge of the duties of the office of president entailed not only loss of time and money but required a high order of ability which should not be left without some fairly adequate compensation.

The newly elected president was informed of the intention of the committee. He said he appreciated very deeply the spirit which had prompted his fellow exhibitors to endow the office with such a substantial salary.

"All during this convention," Mr. Cohen continued, "I have received so much encouragement and so many words of appreciation for what little I have been able to accomplish that I feel a great obligation has been laid upon me and it will require my utmost efforts to live up to the kind expectations of my friends.

"I cannot see my way clear to accept the salary which the organization so generously has tendered me. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America has just been born. It will need a great deal of care, and above all things it will need funds. Under these circumstances I think it is my plain duty to decline the salary and to ask the committee to devote the money to organization purposes."

Black Announces Convention for July; Decries Results of Work at Cleveland

IN two letters to the Moving Picture World, President Alfred S. Black of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., addresses a statement to "the exhibitors of the United States, especially those not present at the Cleveland convention" and replies to a demand made upon him by the Exhibitors' Herald as to where he stands in connection with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

In regard to the latter matter, Mr. Black retaliates by asking "why you have seen fit at this eleventh hour to apparently play politics for certain interests." He says that the "producer-distributor-exhibitor movement in New England has been and is led by Nathan B. Gordon, who controls the New England First National franchise and one of the important officials in their national movement."

Declaring his interest in exhibitor organization along sound business lines and a lack of selfish motives, Mr. Black says: "My theatre organization has been and is now friendly to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Under the conditions just noted (referring to Mr. Gordon, his New England competitor), it would be poor business judgment to be otherwise, as long as possible.

"As to what booking arrangements I may have with Famous Players, or any other film company, that is my private business and no one has the right to inquire into same. My organization has not sold out to the Famous Players, nor does Famous Players control its activities."

In his statement to exhibitors, Mr. Black charges that his organization did not receive "fair play and equal recognition" at the mass meeting of the three leagues in Cleveland. He deplores "a self-appointed credential committee, without New England representation," for seeing "fit to question my eligibility as an independent exhibitor, thus placing our organization in a most embarrassing position and their own organization to a material advantage, after our having done everything possible to get together."

Mr. Black blames the challenge of his right to a place in the convention to the attack of the Exhibitors' Herald.

"Under these circumstances," he writes, "I positively refuse to appear before such a committee, and although advised late Wednesday that objection had been withdrawn to my participating in the convention, I also refused to participate in a convention whose plans had already been completed and which was so controlled that no voice in its deliberations was possible."

Mr. Black goes on to attack the "Cleveland Plan" of national advertising, saying he had made an exposure in circular form of this plan which resulted in its being refused adoption. He attacks the method of nomination, saying that the appointment of the committee as made by the chairman is a "method of twenty years ago and outgrown in the present new order of affairs throughout the world."

Mr. Black's organization will meet at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on July 28 and 29 and he invites "every exhibitor in the United States, who has a spirit of fair play in his breast, to be present in person or by proxy."

Chairman of the Committee of Twenty-seven, the convention's steering body.

Ithaca Theatres Combine.

William Dillon, of Ithaca, N. Y., was in New York the week of June 14. Mr. Dillon is one of the enthusiastic advocates and adherents of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Mr. Dillon has just brought about a combine of the Star, Crescent and Strand Theatres of Ithaca under the name of the Ithaca Theatres Company, Inc.

Convention Books Now Being Audited; Ask State Organizations to Aid Fund

IT was announced last week at the temporary headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in the Times Building, N. Y., that accountants have been engaged to audit all the books of the convention and make a report. This report will be printed in all the trade papers. It will contain the name of every exhibitor who, at Cleveland, made a contribution to the creation of a preliminary fund for the organization. All incoming contributions, which should be made through the respective state leagues, will also be printed in the trade papers.

It also was announced that the officers of the new national organization have sent letters to the various officials of the state organizations, inviting them to make up their share toward the fund of $100,000 which was pledged at the national convention. Under this arrangement the secretary and treasurer of the respective state organizations will have authority to make collections from their states toward the $100,000 organization fund. Checks should be made payable to E. T. Peter, treasurer, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The temporary headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will within the near future be made permanent and suitable quarters to house the administration officials are being engaged. As ordered by the executive committee, permanent headquarters will be opened in New York under the direction and supervision of the national president.

Just a Few Sidelights Picked Up

BILL WRIGHT, of the home office of the Vitagraph Company, was much in evidence at the Winton and Cleveland hotels. J. R. Johnson, Vitagraph's Cleveland branch manager, and a corps of aids, also were on the job of entertaining exhibitors at the suites maintained in each of the hotels figuring so prominently in the week's proceedings. Vitagraph souvenirs were dispensed freely. One of the more novel of these was a disk perhaps an inch and a half in diameter fastened on a safety pin with a string attached. When one obeyed the injunction to "Pull the string" the disk was reversed, exposing a picture of Larry Semon and a line reading, "Keep Smiling—Laugh with Larry." The lapel tag was popular.

Fred B. Warren, general manager of Associated Producers, arrived in Cleveland during the week. Asked if he enjoyed himself at the Coast, where he had gone immediately following his selection for his present post, he said everything was moving along finely and that production was being started. When it was suggested the country agreed with him he quickly retorted: "Too much so. I gained sixteen pounds in thirty-two days. That's about all I think I can stand." Mr. Warren was back at his favorite southeast corner of the Astor grill the week following the convention.

William L. Sherrill, of the Frohman Amusement Company, looked over the crowd at the Winton.

Jule Bernstein was one of the many New York exchangemen who traveled to the convention city.

William A Brady, president of the National Association, in the course of his annual address, which, by the way, was a most interesting and timely talk, declared among other things that the industry must take a stand against the advertising that was creeping into the pictures. He said that in the course of a visit to Atlantic City he had spent much time in the motion picture theatres and declared that in thirty subjects looked at, at least ten of them contained advertising.

United Artists and the artists that compose the corporation were strongly represented in the convention city by Paul Lazarus, Charles Moyer, Kenneth McGaffney and Carlyle Robinson. The quartet, all four of 'em, was much on the jump putting over the big midnight showings of "Suds" and "The Mollycoddle."

General Sales Manager Stimson, of the American Film Company, dropped into Cleveland from Chicago just to say "Howdy" to the bunch. He said it had not been his original intention to attempt anything in the way of business, but when he found several thousand dollars' worth coming his way he very promptly took it on. Mr. Stimson has not lost any of his enthusiasm for "The House of Toys," which fine picture he says is going strong wherever shown. If he had said otherwise this writer would have been disappointed, for in company with Mr. Stimson and Mr. Hutchinson it was his privilege to see an advance showing of the production in the American's projection room during the Chicago convention in April.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer, was in town during the show. "The convention, which was the greatest aseemblage of its kind ever held, was all business," said Mr. Hoffman. "The many sincere pledges and promises made between the exhibitors to stand together in their fight for equal rights has certainly made a very powerful impression upon the big producing-exhibiting concerns that have entered the exhibiting field."

Lee A. Ochs, who joined the New York State League during its recent session in Utica, was among those present at the convention. He went before the committee of twenty-seven on his application for membership in the national organization and was promptly admitted. Not only that, but he was invited to remain and watch the machine in operation. Before he left the committee room it is stated he praised the committee for its fairness and its efficiency.

J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres, was much in evidence about the lobbies of the two principal convention hotels. Standing in the Winton, he was approached by Sam Trigger, another of the oldtimers who found the lure of convention atmosphere too strong to be resisted. Sam had just batted out a compliment to Moving Picture World on the fairness of its reports in previous exhibitor gatherings that were not entirely free from factional feeling. Turning to the chief of United he remarked: "Mr. Berst, I have come to you many times for help for the exhibitors and you have never turned me down once."

"Yes, Sam," replied Mr. Berst in his most quiet manner, "you certainly have cost me a lot of money."

Sol Lesser and his associates and aids were prominent. Leon Netter, sporting a healthy mustache, was not slow to recognize an old friend minus that same outcropping. Maurie Meyers kept the name of Lesser and Kellerman before the crowd. The first shot was in the form of a near wire message which proved to be an "Annette Kellergram," featuring the player's new production. The second was in the shape of a six-ounce whisky flask, of which 300 were distributed filled with what proved on opening to be plain everyday Cleveland water. A label on the flask set forth that "This is not 'What Women Love,' but what Annette Kellerman loves. Yours for something stronger than water—Sol Lesser." The bottles were the occasion of several disappointments.

Joe Dannenberg, editor of Wid's, took as hearty an interest in the proceedings as is possible for a man on the eve of a month's vacation. Jack Alicoate, business manager of the same publication, and just returned from abroad, remarked upon the state of the weather as compared with St. Louis a year previously.

Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, was a busy man, between shaking hands and keeping things humming on his new proposition.

"Wid" Gunning, president of "Wid's," came on from California to look over the show.

Alfred S. Black, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, whose pamphlet aroused so much resentment at Thursday's session, was seen at the Cleveland on Tuesday by a World man. He admitted he was feeling a bit tired, but otherwise looked his old self.

Sam Morris, general manager of Selznick Enterprises; Charlie Rodgers, general sales manager of the same companies, and C. C. Pettijohn, assistant to Lewis J. Selznick, came on from New York to be present at the big show. The latter was a participant in an interesting colloquy at the National Association's convention. Mr. Brady was on the other end of the somewhat tense conversation. Each, however, assured the other of his regard and the differences of opinion were speedily composed.

William Brandt, president of the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, piloted a large party to Cleveland by the lake route. Some of the New Yorkers returned the same way. Mr. Brandt was accompanied by Mrs. Brandt. Louis F. Blumenthal, with Mrs. Blumenthal, was also of the party. Sidney Garrett was one of a small group which included the foregoing, met in Buffalo on Friday morning preparing for a trip to the Falls.

Joe Lee, now frequently referred to as "Professor," by reason of his association with Educational, overlooked no good business bets.

"Pop" Linton, of Utica, N. Y., an officer of the New York State League, just smiled when asked what he thought of the convention. "I'll leave it to you if it isn't all right," he declared a moment later.

Harry Kress, of Piqua (it sounds like Peekwuh when he pronounces it), was a busy man. Piqua, as everybody now knows, is in Ohio. Harry is a regular entertainer when off duty from committee work. He proved to a multitude that he had a lot of friends in Cleveland. Incidentally he "pointed with pride" to the fact that his home town contains but 15,000 population, to the further fact that the lack of size in

Zukor Promises Support to Any Plans Embracing All Exhibitor Branches

ADOLPH ZUKOR, very much the center of the storm during the conventions in Chicago and Cleveland, was seen in the Cleveland on the evening of Tuesday. "It seems that in order to be fair to me," said Mr. Zukor, "the delegates to the convention should seek to get expressions from others of the same character as they would like to get from me. We don't intend to make any haphazard promises which we cannot live up to. I want it understood that any co-ordinated policy that has for its object the good of the industry as a whole will at all times have my whole-hearted support.

"It seems to me that in order to accomplish anything worth while there should be a conference representing all factions of exhibitors, between theatre owners in the strict sense and theatre owners who also are producing and distributing, and the Famous Players-Lasky is not the only company in the latter category.

"You hear talk of the independent producer and of the encouragement that should be given him. There seems to be a disposition to overlook the fact that our organization distributes independent productions as well as those we make ourselves."

a municipality did not operate to the detriment in a convention of any man hailing from it. Harry came to Cleveland with a portfolio filled with carbon copies of messages bearing on a famous controversy, but it was not necessary to use the ammunition.

The writer was mighty glad to spot Joe Gilday one morning in the lobby of the Cleveland. Mr. Gilday in other times was the managing director of the Willis Woods of Kansas City. More recently he was exchange manager for Famous Players in Oklahoma City, where he remained for nine months, two months ago shifting back to the branch in his old stamping ground, Kansas City, and glad to be home again. Joe is a member of a tribe once known as the Order of the Fireman's Shirt, now disbanded or at least disorganized by reason of the restraints imposed by Old Man Prohibition.

Harry Scott, First National's representative in Detroit, dropped down to Cleveland for the convention. Among other First National men the World man recalls meeting up with were Brown, Goldberg and Clark.

Ernest H. Horstmann, treasurer of the old league, came on from Boston and was elected representative on the executive committee for the Boston zone. When it was recalled to Mr. Horstmann that a year ago in St. Louis he was a member of the Yankee Mint Julep Quartet (the other members being Alfred Black, Bill Wright and yours truly) the man from Massachusetts displayed no enthusiasm whatever. "I think, in view of the weather, I could stand the regulation one a day that we surrounded in St. Louis," he finally remarked.

Will C. Smith, general manager of Nicholas Power, Inc., was the representative of his company in the session of the National Association and in looking after Power interests.

Theodore Hays, general manager of the Finkelstein & Rubin theatres, came to Cleveland for the convention.

Al Lichtman was compelled to leave Cleveland on account of an urgent message regarding Mrs. Lichtman, who it was said had been taken to a hospital to undergo an operation. Much sympathy was expressed for Mr. Lichtman.

Earl Hudson, of First National's home office, came into Cleveland Tuesday morning and remained until the afternoon of Friday.

Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corporation, was in town throughout the convention.

Ivan Abramson, another of the indedependent producers, and a militant independent partisan, held many conferences with exhibitors.

Sam Bullock was asked how the boys were behaving, how they were standing the late committee sessions and getting up the next or the same morning. "Why," replied the Ohioan, "this morning at 4 o'clock after the committees finally adjourned, they were in the executive rooms singing like larks. And at 8 o'clock we were pulling the pirates out of bed."

Another member of the old guard who worked almost from sunrise to sunrise was E. T. Peter, of Texas, who afterward was elected treasurer of the organization. Mr. Peter, seen in New York after the convention, admitted the hours had been strenuous, but there was nothing in his appearance to indicate he had not been away on a month's vacation.

Henry Cole, of the Bronx exhibitors, was the efficient sergeant-at-arms of the convention. It was an all-around and husky job for a husky individual, and Henry filled the bill to the satisfaction of the crowd. Incidentally he was glad when the show came to a close.

"Doc" W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, accompanied by P. B. Dana, sales manager of the same company, remained throughout the show. Mr. Shallenberger afterward went on to Chicago.

Joseph L. Friedman, president of the newly formed exchangemen's national organization, came on from Chicago to keep in touch with events.

R. D. Craver, of North Carolina, was in attendance at the meetings of Associated Exhibitors. Incidentally he recalled a game of old-fashioned seven-up without monetary stakes in which the World man was distinctly the loser. The game was interrupted by the arrival of the train in Toronto, where Mr. and Mrs. Craver and Mr. and Mrs. Ferrandini, of Richmond, spent a few days after the Patterson convention in April.

Harry Warner, of Warner Brothers, kept in close touch with exhibitors and fellow exchangemen.

Ben H. Grimm, one time World man and now publicity manager for Associated Exhibitors, looked after the interests of his company.

Harry Reichenbach entertained the bunch with an animal story. It had to do with a lion and a hotel—the same Reichenbachian achievement for which several staid New York newspapers fell and fell hard.

Paul Mooney, representing Louis B. Mayer, came on from New York and kept in close touch with his customers and friends for the four days of the convention.

William ("Bill") Steiner, boosting the twelve five-reelers composing the "Tex" series, declared there were in Cleveland more old-timers than had attended all other motion picture conventions put together. And "Bill" knows what he's talking about when on the subject of conventions. He has seen 'em all, right from the first.

Charles F. Schwerin, general sales manager for Fine Art Pictures, was also on hand and put over a neat stunt in the cabarets with the "Up in Mary's Attic" song.

But what's the use? We could keep on writing for a couple of days about the different film men in Cleveland during the interesting sessions of the convention. If there were present seven hundred exhibitors, say, there must have been at least half of that number of men from other branches of the trade. There were producers big and little, and the same goes for every other branch—from Samuel Goldwyn, who came on to attend the meetings of the National Association, to that most interesting Hoosier who entertained the convention by telling among other things how he had drawn from the bank the last dollar of his deposit in order to get to Cleveland.

IN the March issue of the American Press was reproduced a questionnaire sent out by the chief of recruiting publicity for the U. S. Army to newspapers throughout the country. In the next issue of the American Press a composite answer was printed to this effect:

How much free publicity are you receiving in the daily mails from all sources? Boxes, barrels and carloads.

How much of it are you using? ½ of 1 per cent. by volume.

How much of it is put up in newspaper shape so as to require no editing or rewriting? 2.75 per cent. by weight.

How much of it has news value? Now and then we find a raisin in it.

Remarks . . . Some of the most palpable offenders are movies, presidential candidates, financial institutions and relief organizations paying high salaries to support space grafters.

The Army publicist adds:

"And so, with these few remarks, and after turning in our dark lanterns, our gum goloshes, our false face and our skeleton keys, we renounce membership in the Space Grabbers' Union and will endeavor to lead an honest, straightforward life hereafter."

The American Press Association, No. 225 West 39th St., publishes in the April issue this questionaire. The American Press fairly bristles with "good stuff" for directors of publicity, their bosses and their aids.

For Photoplay Editors and Theatre Programs

Wyndham Standing will be leading man for Viola Dana in her new Metro feature, "Blackmail."

Upon completion of "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," Charles Ray will film an original story written especially for him by Rob Wagner.

Marshall Neilan's new picture for First National is entitled "Go and Get It," and deals with a newspaper mystery. Agnes Ayres, Pat O'Malley, Noah Beery, J. Barney Sherry, Walter Long and Bull Montana are the principals in the cast.

Jack Pickford is about ready to begin work on the George Ade story, "Just Out of College," for Goldwyn under director Al Green.

Lila Lee will be leading lady for Wallace Reid in "The Charm School."

Sylvia Breamer plays the leading feminine role in "The Great Lover," a coming Goldyn production.

Forrest Stanley plays opposite Alice Lake in "Body and Soul," her new Metro picture now being filmed under the direction of Edmund Mortimer.

Jerome Storm, who directed Charles in fourteen film productions, has left the Ray organization to produce independently.

Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart has returned to her home in the East after having completed in Los Angeles the titling and editing of her new production, "The Empire Builders," recently filmed at Goldwyn.

Phil Rosen will direct May Allison in "Are All Men Alike?" and Wallace MacDonald will play opposite.

Ann May, recently of the Charles Ray Productions, is playing a leading role in the current Bryant Washburn feature, "Wanted: A Blemish."

John Sainpolis has been cast in the title part of "The Great Lover," the Leo Deitrichstein play now being filmed at Goldwyn by Frank Lloyd.

Tom Santschi, one of the stars in the first serial ever made, "The Adventures of Kathlyn," will soon be seen in another serial which deals with the adventures of a member of the Northwest Mounted Police.

Al Christie has begun on the first special Christie comedy in which Harry Gribbon, a new Christie acquisition, is appearing. Teddy Sampson and Helen Darling are in the cast.

Lillian Rich plays the leading feminine role in "Half a Chance," the Robert Thornby Special Production for Jesse D. Hampton.

"Beyond the Crossroads," Bradley King's story, is now being made by Lloyd B. Carleton Productions as the second special feature for Clermont Photoplays Corporation.

Herbert Standing, veteran film actor, is recovering from the injuries he received when he was struck by a street car a few weeks ago, and expects to be able to resume his picture work by the first of July.

Chester Franklin is directing Bebe Daniels in her first Realart feature, "You Never Can Tell," with William Von, Edward Martindale, Leo White and Clarence Burton in the cast.

David Butler is now working on his third independent production under the direction of his father, Fred Butler.

Hugh Thompson, Otto Hoffman and Doris Deane are playing with Mabel Normand in "Head Over Heels," her new Goldwyn feature.

Ann Forrest has taken the place of Gloria Swanson in the new Cecil De Mille production for Artcraft.

France Will Change Importation Ban to Prohibit Exposed Instead of Raw Film

Paris, May 29, 1920.

A PARADOXICAL situation exists at the moment in the French moving picture industry as a result of a piece of governmental legislation, designed to protect the industry in France, but actually seriously affecting the very life of the motion picture here. However, speedy help is at hand in the shape of an amendment.

Some weeks ago the importation of raw film into France was forbidden by law. Unfortunately, France itself is not in a position to furnish all the raw film required by the industry, and naturally the outcry from the producers was loud. It appears, however, that a mistake had been made. It was not raw film at all that the government had meant; on the contrary, the intention had been to limit the importation of exposed film, but governmental officers could not be expected to be experts in the use of trade terms.

To Allow Single Negative and Positive.

So now an amendment has become necessary and the amendment will be one that will have a considerable effect upon the trade in motion pictures between the United States and France. By it, all importation of foreign pictures into France is forbidden, with the temporary exception of a single negative and a single positive of each picture. It is intended to suspend even this concession when the French industry has picked up. So France's drive against the American moving picture has begun.

There is no doubt, however, that America's hold on the French motion picture market is at present a very firm one. Robert de Simone, editor-in-chief of Scenario, one of the leading French moving picture publications, is probably one of the best informed authorities on the present situation.

Weary of "Monotony."

"The great mass of the theatre-going public here prefers the American pictures," he said, when questioned on the situation by a correspondent of Moving Picture World. "It is true that the more educated public, found in the great cities—Paris, Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux, Nice, Toulon, etc.—begins to feel a little tired of the monotony and repertition in the American films.

"There is no doubt whatever that from the technical point of view, the photography and the mise en scene of the American films are immensely superior to all other productions, but from the French point of view the American scenario lacks originality and sentiment. To the Latin taste your screen stories are poor. They are childish, ingenuous, unsophisticated.

"The United States, it is true, is presenting one type of film not to be surpassed or equaled by any other country, the cowboy or wild west film. But we are beginning to tire of the everlasting monotony of such pictures. Even William Hart, adored for his artistry by our cinema-going public, begins to pall, for he strikes only one note."

Adopt French Literary Successes.

Mr. de Simone went on to speak of the effect of the war upon the industry in France.

"Naturally, we stood still in war time while you advanced with gigantic strides," he said. "From the technical point of view you are head and shoulders above us. But I cannot help feel that the American companies could produce pictures more to the taste of the educated French public if they would consider the possibilities that lie in the use of French scenarios or in the adaptation to the screen of French literary successes."

Discussing the new law forbidding the wholesale importation of foreign films into France, Mr. de Simone said that while the effect of the law would be wholesome in the long run, it would bring temporary discouragement in certain quarters.

"The object of the law is to encourage the film industry in France," he said. "All copies must be made in this country and the French industry will certainly be required to produce more than before. Unfortunately, however, the industry here is not yet in a position to supply the demand, and many small theatres will be forced to close because of the lack of films."

"I am not of the opinion," said Mr. de Simone, "that the new legislation will encourage a higher quality of production. Quantity to supply the demand will be the immediate aim. I believe that high quality can only be achieved by open competition with the foreign markets. The present condition of the French cinema industry is not bright. There are not quite a dozen French companies in the field and their path is a difficult one.

French Need Foreign Markets.

"You must remember that, owing to the enormous market in the United States, American companies are assured of sufficient receipts within their own country, and what they make in the foreign field is over and above their assured profits at home. On the other hand, French companies must find a market abroad for their products, for the market at home is not sufficient. The two markets in which the French industry is particularly interested are the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. de Simone acknowledged that the American and British publics did not like the French films.

"French production is naturally not up to the standard of American technique," he said. "Your audiences realize that the photography of our pictures is not equal to what is required in America. On the other hand, our scenarios are not pleasing to the American and British masses. The taste of your public, especially in the small towns and villages, is too crude to appreciate the delicacies and subtleties of our art.

The Latin Point of View.

"Our taste is the result of centuries of civilization; call it decadent, if you will; claim if you like that your crudeness is healthier than our advanced degree of refined taste; the fact remains that the infinite subtlety of the French creative mind is lost upon American and British audiences."

Among American films that Mr. de Simone particularly praised was Griffith's "Broken Blossoms." The picture has not been shown in public in Paris, but a private screening had been arranged for the editor of Scenario.

"It is superb," he said. "Griffith is the greatest producer in the world and 'Broken Blossoms' is his greatest picture. From the Latin point of view it is perfect."

Well, Well! These Two Friendly Enemies Were Being Arrested in Last Week's Pictures. Musta Got Out Somehow!

Three girlish scenes from "Friends and Enemies," a Comedyart picture being released by Special Pictures Corporation. Perhaps the policeman we saw in last week's issue was only a movie cop and really could not arrest them. Glad they're with us again 'cause they always bring a bevy of beauties.

KEEPING IN PERSONAL TOUCH

By SAM SPEDON

A. S. BLACK, of Boston, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, while in New York, June 11, on his return from the Cleveland convention, said:

"We will call a convention to be held in New York City on July 28 and 29."

Pete Carroll, Pathe branch manager, Spokane, Wash., is at the home office in New York this week on the "One-Man Weekly Convention" trip.

Pat Hartigan and Maurice Costello, formerly of Vitagraph, have just returned from Alberta, Canada, where they have been working in "The Wilderness of Fear," in which Mrs. De Wolf Hopper is playing the lead, for Selznick.

Harry Buxbaum, general sales manager, Famous Players-Lasky, says: "Exhibitors are enthusiastic over my suggestion to run big features during the summer months, with the result that never before has the F. P.-L. recorded a bigger business for the month of July than the one just before it."

Sylvia Cushman, formerly photoplay editor of the Boston Evening Record, has been engaged by J. H. Mayer, director of publicity, to write fan magazine stories for the Universal.

Joseph (London) Plunkett, who resumes the management of the Strand Theatre, New York, on June 20, will be tendered a dinner by his friends at Keens' Chop House on Friday evening, June 18.

Harry M. White, manager of the Philadelphia office of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, is a conspicuous figure on Vine street, located at the top of the first flight.

Edward Laemmle, nephew of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, has just returned from Borneo, where he has been in command of an expedition sent to get pictures of heretofore unphotographed tribes of head hunters. He arrived in New York June 15.

Sam Kantor, of the Regent Theatre, Norwalk, Conn.; H. Hamilton, of the Palace Square, Norwalk, Conn., and J. Sprague, of the Olympia, New Haven, Conn., returned from the Cleveland convention on Sunday, June 13. "Big doing and big times all the way. So say we all of us."

Harry Danto, sales manager, and W. G. Roosevelt, salesman, of Famous Players-Lasky New York office, are enjoying a two weeks' vacation somewhere far from the madding crowd. They will return July 1.

M. E. Maxwell and J. E. Hennessy are the enthusiastic supporters of the Philadelphia offices of the Realart pictures. They say: "When you've got the goods there's no trouble in selling them."

Stanley Hand, Boston's branch manager of the Selznick national distributing organization, was in New York on Monday, June 14, to keep in touch with the home office and get a glimpse at some of the new films.

Leon Netter, of Cleveland (Masterpiece Films), is in New York catching up with some of the big productions he heard about at the convention.

The Motion Picture Advertising Company of Philadelphia makes a specialty of board cut-outs and other advertising novelties that are fast becoming the rage in lobby display in Quakertown.

Frances Eldridge, a graduate from a Washington square dramatic school and recently playing leads for the Chapin Pictures Corporation, will soon be at the Famous Players-Lasky Long Island City studio. Miss Eldridge formerly played with Gail Kane and Olive Tell.

Carl Schwarz, of the Philadelphia office of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, has a front view overlooking Thirteenth and Vine streets, where he keeps his eye on the exhibitors as they pass. But none of them pass—he hails them from the window and has the door open when they come up.

F. O. Spurdle is one of the satellites of the Pathe office at Philadelphia.

Joe Mergener, branch manager for Pathe at Milwaukee, was in New York last week in the "One-Man Weekly Convention" at the home office. He has returned to the town made famous before the Eighteenth Amendment.

L. E. Ouimet, of the Specialty Import Company of Montreal, has been in New York on one of his commutation trips to the Pathe home office.

Ira Cohan, special representative of the Pathe feature department, has made a break for the road again, after a ten days' stay at the home office. He will make a tour of the United States by way of Baltimore and the South.

Joe Reddy, of the Pathe publicity department, returned safely from his Memorial Day trip to Virginia. Being a member of the American Legion Joe gave the Legion Salute in Salute, the town that now attracts him southward.

J. Irving Greene, of the exploitation department and responsible for the "Pathe Messenger," is receiving from exhibitors many approvals for his suggestions and helps he gives them. Irving is a very likely and capable youngster, acting under the leadership of Victor Shapiro, head of the department.

Lester Tobias, formerly traveling out of New York through Connecticut for the Realart exchange, will establish a residence and his family at New Haven, Conn., on and after June 21, traveling in the future out of the college town.

Screen Provides Necessary Recreation in China and Has Great Possibilities

Destined to Exert Greatest Influence for Good Country Has Ever Known—Chinese Titles Are Helping, But Chinese Humor Remains a Problem—Business Suffers in South—Hongkong Loses Its Victoria Theatre

Tientsin, May 7, 1920.

By F. MARSHALL SANDERSON

THAT the motion picture theatre is an asset to society out East these days none can deny. Maybe our days are filled with excitement in one way or another, whether it be gambling on exchange, racing, dancing, or other incidentals that make up the round of business and social life in China. Everybody seems to be working harder than they were this time last year, and it is only the sturdy people of steel nerves who don't feet a bit worn out now and again.

Hence our movie shows offer rest from it all, and in a country like China, where only occasionally other forms of entertainment are provided, and then only for a short season, it is natural that motion pictures will continue their progressive course as the people's educational entertainer.

While it is good to talk of the things that were, we find it really more pleasant and certainly more profitable to look ahead and plan for the big tomorrow in the industry. Judging the future of the business in China, not with the eye of a seer or visionary, but with the record of the past before us, there seems no room for doubt that the next ten years will see marvelous progress.

A Tremendous Future.

Exhibitors in all the larger treaty ports are making herculean efforts to improve their theatres and present the very best offerings obtainable. Not so very long ago pictures were presented that would now cause a Chinese coolie to demand his money back, and a coolie is not a difficult subject to please, as a rule. The old crudities and vulgarities are now things of the past and our exhibitors are alive to the natural educational qualities inherent within the scope of the pictures they screen. They are worthily excluding all those things which aroused the hypercritical.

We say, without hesitation, that the motion picture is to become the greatest and most popular form of amusement for China's millions. It is destined to exert the greatest influence for good that China has ever known. Its educational advantages are wonderful. It has unlimited possibilities, is provocative of moral uplift and its development in China needs not so much censorship as encouragement.

Only Practical Esperanto.

So far the development of the motion picture business has been gradual and permanent. It has had to learn by growth and mistakes only, groping its way into a pathless new country. Time has wrought wonders. It has passed the stage of experimentation and assumed the aspect of a national amusement. Those who at one time looked down with scorn upon the lowly motion picture in China have occasion to rejoice now that we are having a hand in giving to the people their most popular form of entertainment.

With such a cosmopolitan population as crowd into the various treaty ports and foreign settlements, the motion picture constitutes itself the only practical Esperanto that is understood by all regardless of intelligence or illiteracy. It is taking its wholesome lessons into all sections and preaches its sermons to those who know nothing of churches or creeds.

Chinese Titles Will Help.

There remains yet much to be learned. Probably one of the most difficult tasks is to find films that appeal to and amuse the Oriental races. The introduction of Chinese titles is going to make a big difference in the drawing power of the pictures, but much better translations must be made than those already exhibited here.

It is no easy matter to fathom the Chinese sense of humor, and very often the funniest films go flat, in contrast to which I am reminded of an incident that occurred in one of the movie houses quite recently. I was watching a pretty good picture and right in the midst of a death scene in a film that was highly dramatic, they suddenly began to explode with laughter. There was absolutely nothing to warrant it, but just that strange streak of Oriental humor, hard to define and still more difficult to understand.

Industrial Films Poor.

The industrial film is slowly making its way here, but not in such quantities as we read of in many of the trade papers. The few we have seen are decidedly poor, especially those presented in the form of one or two-reel dramas. The introduction of advertising was so flagrant and overdone as to cause a feeling of disgust, and the article advertised was of such a nature as to appeal only to the foreign population and was useless for Chinese business.

It is an open question if our exhibitors will be able to put this kind of stuff over. During the showing of the film above mentioned quite a third of the audience left the building. Industrial films showing how goods are manufactured are very popular indeed, and the Chinese are intensely interested, and if titles in Chinese were made the advertising possibilities would be enormous.

Hongkong Loses Victoria Theatre.

Reports from the south of China are not encouraging. Hongkong has now lost the Victoria Theatre, the largest picture house in the colony, the site having been sold and the building demolished. Mr Ray, the energetic proprietor of the Coronet, is doing his best to meet demands in the limited capacity of his house, and is sweating blood nearly to find a suitable location for a larger building. That is no easy task in Hongkong.

The Apollo, Shanghai, is showing some really high-class programs, and the large attendances to be seen here night after night are evidence that the management is meeting the public taste. The Victoria Theatre is still running the popular Paramount service, which has been considerably improved of late, the Burton-Holmes travel pictures being exceedingly popular. In addition, Mr. Ramos, the genial proprietor, is screening occasionally special features with good results.

No Continuous Shows.

The Isis Theatre, under its new management, is doing remarkably good business, and the enterprise of Mr. Tsung, who now controls this business, is reaping its reward. He has put in a great deal of dollar work, his advertising has been sensible and practical, the theatre has been made attractive, and the introduction of an orchestra was a wise move.

We have no continuous shows in China as you have in the States, except maybe during Chinese holidays. The usual procedure for Chinese shows is to have one performance from 7 to 9, another from 9.15 to 11.30. Possibly the day is not far distant when Shanghai will possess a motion picture theatre modern in every respect, and there is no doubt it will prove one of the best investments possible

Frank Hall Makes Hopp Hadley Production Manager of Hallmark Pictures Corporation

HOPP HADLEY, one of the best known executives in the motion picture industry and one who enjoys the close friendship of the prominent directors and eminent players in the art, has just been made production manager of Hallmark Pictures Corporation.

This move by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark, accompanies the announcement of the release of six big features and two comedies a month, which include important Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Norma Talmadge, Frank Keenan, Louise Glaum and Dorothy Dalton subjects recreated from among the successes of these stars and which are being presented in addition to the new special Hallmark productions, beginning with Burton King's "The Discarded Woman," now ready for the screen.

Mr. Hadley's wide experience in things theatrical started in 1898, when, still in his "teens," he exhibited a feature production of "The Passion Play," made in Oberammergau, using a circus tent for a theatre and making a week's run in each city visited.

After several years as an actor and company manager of theatrical attractions, when pictures were considered a fad and only the stage seemed to offer real opportunities, he tackled pictures seriously as scenario editor for the Majestic company and casting director for the Reliance studio, where, with James Kirkwood, Henry Walthall, Oscar Apfel, Edgar Lewis, George Terwilliger and others now well known in the screen world, he received his schooling in the technique of picture making.

He has since held practically every kind of executive position both in the producing and distributing ends of the business, with three busy years just completed as advertising manager for the Frank Hall enterprises.

With his characteristic striving for innovations in picture producing and strong advocacy of show methods that steer clear of the "well-beaten path," his new activities are bound to be watched with keen interest by all who have the fight for bigger and better pictures at heart.

McCulley Sells Fairbanks a Story

"The Curse of Capistrano" is the title of a new story just purchased for Douglas Fairbanks, according to an announcement made this week. The story was written by Johnston McCulley. This is Mr. McCulley's first story to be sold to Douglas Fairbanks.

The story itself tells of the old mission days in California and will call for a dual role. The plot is said to be replete with action suitable to Fairbanks.

Pettijohn Compliments Coolidge

As evidence of the hearty support of Selznick Pictures Corporation in the fight against censorship of films, C. C. Pettijohn, assistant to president Lewis J. Selznick of Select Pictures, recently dispatched a night letter to Governor Calvin W. Coolidge, of Massachusetts, who vetoed the motion picture censorship bill, complimenting him on his action. Mr. Pettijohn wrote to Governor Coolidge as follows:

"Just learned you had vetoed motion picture censorship bill. May I promise you on behalf of all Selznick Enterprises that we will give our united and unceasing efforts to keep the screen clean and free from all objectionable matter to the end that we may merit your decision and prove ourselves worthy of being entrusted with freedom of the screen instead of shackled by unnecessary legislation."

May Resume Building National Academy Now George Eastman Is Back from Japan

GEORGE EASTMAN has returned to his home in Rochester, N. Y., from a trip to the Land of the Rising Sun, upon which he embarked more than two months ago as a guest of the Welcome Association of Japan. Included in the party of which Mr. Eastman was a member were a number of the prominent business men in the United States, the objects of the jaunt being to establish closer relations of a commercial and social nature between the business men of Japan and those of America.

It was expected that upon Mr. Eastman's return to Rochester important announcements would be made concerning the future of the National Academy of Motion Pictures and the Eastman School of Music. Just before leaving Mr. Eastman ordered building operations on the academy suspended, and a like order applied to all building activities of the Eastman Kodak Company and other business and philanthropic enterprises in which Mr. Eastman is interested. The reason given was that the cost of labor and material has reached unwarranted high levels.

During the past two weeks there has been signs of activity of the part of the contractors who, before the suspension, had begun work on the foundations for the academy. Gangs of men are putting up shacks, installing building machinery and otherwise doing things that portend a general resumption of building. However, no announcement has been forthcoming from Mr. Eastman and no information of a definite nature can be obtained at present. It is believed that Mr. Eastman will make a formal announcement within two weeks of the building plans for the great academy which he is to build and endow at a cost of more than $3,500,000.

Construction Permits Issued.

Permits for the construction of two new factory buildings at Kodak Park have been issued to the Eastman company this month, the estimated cost of these buildings being more than $1,000,000. There are general signs of renewed activity and extensive enlarging of the plant there, too. Labor trouble between contractors and employes in Rochester appears to be in some measure adjusted also.

Mr. Eastman was cordially welcomed home.

Movie Magnate and Parliament Member Believes England Can Make Photoplays Suitable for World-Wide Exploitation

By WALTER K. HILL

FRANCE for wines, Germany for dyes, England for battleships and America for photoplays. Charles Frederick Higham, Member of Parliament, foremost advertising expert in Great Britain and managing director of the Alliance Film Producing Corporation of London, declares that in America is vested premiership in photoplay production.

For nearly an hour Mr. Higham chatted with trade newspapermen who had assembled in the Higham apartments in the Hotel Claridge on invitation of Leon J. Rubenstein. It seems that in the earlier days "Ruby" had met C. Goodman when Mr. Goodman was in America buying films —years ago—and when Mr. Higham decided to make a trip to the United States this spring he brought Mr. Goodman along.

Man of many attainments is Mr. Higham; exhibitor of films in Kent is Mr. Goodman. Nobody knows but what there was a cribbage championship lying between Higham and Goodman that could not be settled save on long sessions—but these matters were not discussed at the Claridge. Nevertheless and however, Goodman got in touch with "Ruby" and "Ruby" got in touch with the trade papers and——

Now Comes the Whys and Wherefores.

The Alliance Film Corporation was created by Mr. Higham as a result of his experience in the service of England as a propagandist during the war. He sits in Paraliement as representative of South Islington (London) and, with one exception, is the only representative of film interests in that ancient and honorable assemblage.

But being an "M. P." rests as lightly upon Mr. Higham as does the fact that he is the leading advertising expert in Great Britain. Just where he found so nice a Palm Beach suit for $35 as encased his active frame was a source of secret longing for information on the part of one fat man who listened while Mr. Higham ran along with the details of his adventures in filmdom.

He said not a harsh word about the competition Americans in England were setting upon in the film line; he parried some rather personal questions that were fired in his direction by some of the trade paper boys; answered nine phone calls, said "Pussyfoot" Johnson was a "dead one" in England, quited two men who called upon him and were draped upon the couch next to the M. P. and soothed into submission, told of his brother, who is a naturalized citizen of America in exile over on the Jersey shore, and said England had to make photoplays the "American way" or be distanced in the competition for trade in England's own colonies as well as on the Biritish Isles.

Rocked in the Cradle of Americanism.

"When I was fourteen years of age," said Mr. Higham, "my parents brought our family to New York and here I lived until I was thirty years old. I here learned the advertising business in every possible angle and detail I could acquire.

"Going back to England to establish myself in the advertising business, I was told by Selfridge (the American department store magnate) that I was so far ahead of the times that my methods would not apply to England. So I learned the advertising business all over again."

Here is a good place to say that Mr. Higham is now the leading expert in advertising and the largest handler of advertising in England. He sailed for America May 15 and starts home from Boston June 23, carrying with him C. Goodman, cribbage champion of the Atlantic Ocean and leaving behind Leon J. Rubenstein to mark his subsequent coming once more to our shores.

From Propagandist to Producer.

"When I was a propagandist for the Government during the war," said Mr. Higham, "I learned to my amazement that Australia, Canada, India and other English colonies were being almost exclusively entertained by American films. England's children overseas were being taught American ways, styles, manners, scenery, customs—and American slang in the titles.

"To me it was perfectly clear that unless we brought them English stories filmed by English players in English scenery, Piccadilly would mean no more to them than a road in Iceland. Brighton and Margate would be forgotten in the scenes taken at Coney Island and Coronado Beach. Kew Gardens, Epping Forest and the Strand would only be words printed in news or stories, and the lanes, moors, gardens and lakes of Old England would come to them only as traditions unless Englishmen realized how thoroughly America was covering a subject that for education, enlightenment and helpful propaganda purposes is the greatest medium civilization has ever developed."

Parenthetically it might better be said that only the sense of what Mr. Higham said is to be read into these lines. Far be it from the present purpose to attempt any literal quotation of his remarks—the "remembering" is too tough in hot weather.

The Organization of Alliance.

"Looking about in search of the reason why England was not making more films I discovered," continued Mr. Higham, "that all that was needed was money and technical skill—that money could buy. Because of the agreement that exhibitors will not engage in film production or producers becoming exhibitors the studio of the London Film Company was open to lease.

"We formed the Alliance Corporation with a million sterling capital ($5,000,000) and sold half of the stock to the public. Then we began production, and our first picture, with the alluring title, 'A Holiday Husband,' will soon be ready for release. We have arranged with First National to distribute our product over here, and have an offer from Walturdaw Ltd., to handle the output elsewhere throughout the world.

English Stories True to Life.

"Our corporation also owns control of the British Actors Film Association, an organization of actors and actresses who are financed to make photoplays from the artistic viewpoint of the professional player. The product of this concern is issued on a basis of guaranteed profit and the pictures they turn out are the best in England."

Mr. Higham went on to say that American methods of production would be ap-

Busy Days in America for an English M. P. Who Is Likewise "M. P." Magnate

HIS years, from 14 to 30, were spent in America. Possibly that was when Charles Frederick Higham absorbed the "pep" that has made him a leader in trade and politics when he returned to his native land.

Back in "the States" for a brief visit the Honorable Mr. Higham, movie magnate and member of the British House of Parliament, reeled off a few such unusual achievements as:

Reporting the Republican National Convention for the London Evening Standard;

Preaching in All Souls Unitarian Church, Indianapolis, on the subject: "What Is God Thinking About It?";

As Foreign Vice-President of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World represented Great Britain at the Indianapolis Convention, June 6-10;

Offered the freedom and co-operation of the Alliance Film Company's London studio and organization to President Woodrow Wilson for the production of the one great picture that would embody that great leader's ideas on advancement in civilization and international cohesion;

Closed a contract with James D. Williams for First National to distribute, in this country, Alliance film productions;

Talked to New York's financial leaders, bought a nifty Palm Beach suit and

DID NOT VISIT THE LOS ANGELES FILM COLONY.

Member of Parliament and managing director of Alliance Film Corporation of London.

plied to Alliance pictures. But there the similarity will end.

"We believe that English stories can best be portrayed in English scenes by English players. We are convinced that an English actor cannot play an American cowboy any more than an American actor can interject the true atmosphere of English life and manners into an English society drama. It simply can't be done—that's all," said he.

There was much of pride in the way Mr. Higham spoke of Woodrow Wilson. The years when his character was forming here in the United States must surely have lent a touch of political satisfaction to Higham, M. P. Much as we should like to say we, personally, don't blame the M. P. for admiring our President, this is a purely prosaic trade paper report of a general conversation and not an argument for the League of Nations.

Would Make "The Great Picture."

Mr. Higham, nevertheless, read part of a copy of a telegram that he had sent to the President of the United States offering the facilities of the Alliance producing plant to Mr. Wilson for the creation of a picture that should visualize the views the President has expressed in speech, letter and public document since the Hun first ripped open his imperialistic shirt and bared his breast to civilization's astounded view.

We did not see the signature to the telegram. But we hazard a mighty poor reputation in the statement that it was signed by the Member of Parliament and not the movie magnate. It suggested that there was still to be made "a great picture," a picture that should be propaganda against Bolshevism, against anarchy, against "the troops of Midian" referred to in Hymns Ancient and Modern as representing the outcropping of human sculduggery.

The Screen's Great Mission.

"The moving picture is the great enlightener; it is the medium through which a million readers of a book are multiplied by a million," said Mr. Higham. "Out of the war and its aftermath will come the 'one great picture' and Mr. Wilson is the man to create it. I may never get an answer to my telegram, but I hope I will, and I hope that Mr. Wilson will make this pictorial record of his life work and study that has latterly developed in his public and official expressions."

This scrivener would go on record with the expressed hope that when Mr. Higham comes again to America the editor of Moving Picture World and Leon J. Rubenstein will be instrumental in getting the present writer into another interview with the Member of Parliament from South Islington. By that time, perhaps, some of the Alliance productions will have arrived for American display—and if Mr. Higham is not a member of the House of Lords (where we hope he will ultimately land) we should like to question him on a few of the aspirations he made known the other day at the Claridge.

The Member from South Islington.

We have never even talked to a member of the Assembly, or an alderman, hence being brought suddenly into the fine, manly and engaging presence of a Member of Parliament is a rapid transition—and an experience that all the more makes this signator an admirer of Englishmen and the English manner and method. And we still hold open a mind that has been partially made up on the subject of successfully producing films for the American screen.

If it shall be done, who better might sense the right way of doing it than a man who was molded in Yankee ways and Yankee methods right at an age when the molding was good?

Beseler Lantern Slide Company Is Ready to Serve Picture Theatre Needs

THE Beseler Lantern Slide Company, Inc., of 131-133 East Twenty-third street, New York, is not only especially desirous to serve moving picture manufacturers and exhibitors but is splendidly equipped to do so in the most efficient manner. It is one of the quietest, and at the same time busiest concerns in the lantern slide industry, and for the thirty years which it has been in business has been adding constantly to its collection of subjects, which is probably the most interesting and remarkable of the kind in this country.

Richard Lindner, Ph.D., the newly appointed manager, is an enterprising man, keenly alive to the business necessities of the present day, courteous in his dealings with the public, and far-seeing in the interests of one of the most useful of industries.

On the shelves and in the card index of the company are recorded scenes from every country in the world. Travel, history, biography, biology, fine arts, medicine, industry, literature, astronomy, patriotic subjects, religion and immigration, are all covered in the Beseler records. If you require slides to illustrate a lecture on any of these subjects, you have only to confide your troubles to Miss Sarah Ellis, who has all the information concerning Beseler slides at her fingertips.

Large Slide Laboratory.

And, better than this, if you are having trouble to prepare your lecture you can buy it along with a set of slides at a reasonable figure at the Beseler studios which have under the same roof with their thousands of pictures and slides a laboratory where the actual work of slide making is carried on. The majority of the slides are hand-colored by artists who understand their business, and you are therefore assured of satisfaction when the picture is thrown on the screen.

The growing recognition of the value of visual instruction in the schools and colleges of the country, and the realization that the best results can be gained from a combination illustration of still and moving pictures perpetuates the use of the lantern slide for school purposes.

There is also a place on the theatre program for the slide, and a growing necessity for improved artistry in the making of such slides, which, although they are used principally for advertising purposes, must be kept in accord with the quality of the program. In other words, it is as necessary that an advertising slide be refined in tone and color as it is that clothes we wear do not glare beyond the point of good taste as regards quality and combination of color.

Motion Picture League Finds "Love's Harvest" Delightful

"LOVE'S HARVEST" is the second Shirley Mason starring production under the Fox banner from the pen of Pearl Doles Bell. "Her Elephant Man" was the first, and both have been praised by the trade press reviewers and those theatre managers who have already screened them.

This film has just been shown to the reviewing board of the National Motion Picture League, whose executive headquarters are at 381 Fourth avenue, New York. This organization is composed of representative citizens from the leading cities of the country. It gave to William Fox the most unstinted praise of Longfellow's "Evangeline" last season, and now has seen fit to endorse "Love's Harvest" over the signature of Clara E. Landin, secretary.

"Do You Want to Get Thin? The Remedy Is to Drink Milk, Eat Plenty of Sweets and Barrels of Potatoes."

Says the "putteed" gentleman to the slender harem dancer in Scene 1. Then he brings in Mabel Normand, the star of the play, and says: "See! She tried it." The corpulent one tries it and the result may be observed in Scene 3. Laughable bits from "The Slim Princess," made by Goldwyn.

General Sweeping Price Re-adjustments Will Not Affect Picture Production

By JOHN W. McKAY
General Manager, Mayflower

THE sweeping readjustment of prices to a normal basis now taking place—a natural aftermath of the war—is focusing the attention of exhibitors upon the question of production. The thought uppermost in the mind of the exhibitor is: will the cost of manufacturing pictures be cheapened, thus bringing about the re-establishment of rentals on a lower basis?

In many quarters, I note a marked tendency among exhibitors to regard the general price decline as the harbinger of decreased cost of production and, by the same token, lowered rentals. From a superficial viewpoint it would seem that the arguments upon which they base their premise are not lacking entirely in logic. But an analytical study of production—the cost of raw materials, equipment and labor—contradicts the belief that the production end of the industry will be materially affected by the general price slump.

Controlled Public Purse Strings.

Delving into the reason for the present downward trend of prices, particularly those on clothing and all non-essential articles, we find that during and immediately following the war, the nation, bloated with war prosperity, indulged in an orgy of extravagant spending. As a consequence, manufacturers and retailers found that it practically controlled the public purse strings and prices soared sky-high. Then, too, the nationwide prosperity brought about an unparalleled demand for every kind of merchandise, which outstripped supply and added another reason for the sky-rocketing of prices.

Recently the abnormal wave of wartime prosperity began to subside and the inflated buying power of the public sunk to a more rational level. With prices still high, Mr. and Mrs. Public were obliged to resume the national pastime of bargain hunting, spending their money with extreme caution and reserve. Thereupon demand dropped off, buying in many lines was almost at a complete standstill and prices hit the toboggan.

Same Level as Three Years Ago.

Now, contrast this fluctuation with price conditions affecting raw materials and labor involved in production. Unlike the ever-shifting ratio of supply and demand which unstabilized many other lines, the relation between supply and demand in articles used by picture producers is to-day, with a few exceptions, at the same level as it was three years ago.

"Costs Will Never Be Lower."

Producers today are consuming the same amount of electricity at the same cost as they have been for the past three years. The cost of properties and electrical appliances has not diminished. Taxes are still high. The cost of raw film, printing and developing has increased during the past two months to the extent of three-quarters of a cent a foot, while the wage scale affecting studio employes has not undergone a downward revision. The overhead cost of maintaining a studio has also increased rather than decreased during the past year.

Another important item entering into the cost of production—players' salaries—has remained stationery for the past three years. In fact, many high-class screen artists are to-day receiving more for their services than at any other time in the history of production. Furthermore, the cost of story material for the past three years has been ascending rapidly and has not yet reached its peak.

More Stable Than Some Other Industries.

Though laymen have been prone to regard the picture business as an uncertain and unstable proposition, during the past few years it has proved to be more stabilized insofar as production costs are concerned than the great majority of industries.

If anything, the cost of picture production is somewhat higher today than ever before. According to the present outlook, production costs will never be lower than they are at present, except in the event of an economic millenium, signs of which have not yet appeared on the horizon.

Markowitz Knows How It Feels to Be Mistaken for a Popular Screen Star

M. L. MARKOWITZ, president of the Crescent Theatres, Inc., and general manager of the Strand Theatre in San Francisco, was placed under arrest as he stepped from the train at Chicago on June 7, charged with being behind in paying his wife alimony for a number of years, the amount involved being something like $37,000.

While he was protesting his innocence to the detective, his brother, Samuel S. Markowitz, and A. N. Jackson, secretary and treasurer of the Crescent Theatres, Inc., came to his aid and on inquiring what the charge was had a good laugh.

Star Was Wanted.

When the detective showed him his papers, he found that the man wanted was a prominent film star.

After considerable banter on the part of Mr. Markowitz's associates and the crowd, M. L. Markowitz produced his Shriner card, but had a hard time convincing the detective that he was not the handsome matinee idol.

He gave the officer the slip temporarily, only to be caught at the La Salle station when he tried to board the train for New York.

Willing to Go Into Movies.

How Mr. Markowitz feels at being mistaken for the matinee idol he alone can explain; suffice to say at this time that he is willing to go into the movies as a headliner at the same weekly salary which is being paid to his double.

Clara Beranger Going to England

Clara Beranger, who has just signed another contract with the Famous Players Lasky Corporation to do scenarios and original stories for them, will start off her new year by taking a trip to the London studio of the Famous Players Company. She will do a big special over there and confer with some of the English writers who have been signed up by the Famous Players, but she will not remain there permanently. Her plans are to return to New York at the end of August and continue her work in the new Famous Players studio in the East.

Will Star Helen Jerome Eddy

Helen Jerome Eddy, who puts over an important role in "The House of Toys" with Seena Owen and Pell Trenton, will appear in the stellar role of Robert Browning's famous poem, "A Light Woman," to be produced by the American, under the direction of George L. Cox. Miss Eddy is an unusual type on the screen. She brings into her work a unique touch of humaneness which is as powerful as it is simple and unaffected.

To Film Another Hurst Novel

"Just Around the Corner," considered one of Fannie Hurst's greatest stories, is now being put into scenario form for Cosmopolitan Productions. Frank Borzage will direct. He expects to begin work in the very near future.

We Have With Us To-day

Harold Lloyd, Pathe Comedian, Who Is in the East On a Pleasure Trip

By HERBERT J. HOOSE

WE have with us today none other than Harold Lloyd, the energetic Pathe comedian, whose antics have been the cause of outbursts of laughter wherever his new series of two-reel comedies have been exhibited. Yes, you are correct when you say that he was here but a short time ago, but at that time the congenial young actor busied himself with business affairs only. Now he is here to have a general good time and is going to start things moving when he visits Coney Island.

After chatting for a few moments the conversation turned to the business of making comedies. The word business is used because that is exactly what Mr. Lloyd is making of his productions.

"Why, yes, I guess my way of bringing comedies to the screen is different from that of others," said Mr. Lloyd. "I really make a business of it. We spend about one month on each of the two-reel productions—as much time as some companies put in on a feature release. When we go out on location everything has been ciphered out beforehand and just so much time is spent there. It is by this manner of procedure that we save both time and money. Mr. Roach, my director, and I often may be seen with pad and pencil figuring out what a day more on a certain set or location will mean to us."

Spend Much Money on Sets.

"We spend a large amount of money and time on our sets alone and we are particular about getting the best that our property men can give us."

The player continued by saying that between Mr. Roach and himself they work on all scenes until they are entirely satisfactory. Everything must be right to the minutest detail before they will go on to the next scene. To prove that perfection is his aim he cited an instance where the company went to a location about seven miles from the studio at least six times before the two were satisfied.

"There is one thing we do that undoubtedly few other comedy companies have tried," continued the comedian. "After we are satisfied with a new picture, it is taken over to a theatre in Pasadena, where it is given a pre-view showing. No one knows that the film is going to be shown until the manager gets the prints and it is sprung on the audience without any advance notice. Attention is paid to the scenes that get big laughs and also the weaker parts are taken note of. Then we go back to the cutting room at the studio and make changes. Perhaps some scenes are lifted entirely and others are built up.

"In this way the entire production is made stronger. Sometimes we repeat the procedure of giving the film another preview and then the prints are sent out to the exchanges for regular showing when the release date is reached."

Try To Avoid Improbabilities.

Mr. Lloyd went on to explain that he is trying to produce comedies that involve human interest—parts that anyone in the audience could imagine themselves as taking—and have their activities restricted to things that could actually happen to them and not the improbable circumstances that many of the comedy characters of today get into. Many of the best comedy scenes have to be eliminated because the cutter, with whom Mr. Lloyd always collaborates, is restricted in using only a certain number of feet. However, these ideas are not given up, but are kept in a record book, and when the opportunity comes the idea is used in another picture.

"You know," he said with a smile, "I have a book that I call my 'Cuckoo Book,' and in it are contained many humorous situations which may be employed in the making of comedies. When we come to a point in the story where an idea is needed, all that we have to do is to glance through its pages, and nine times out of ten we are successful in getting what we desire."

Known as "Speedy" at Studio.

It might seem surprising, but since his return to the Coast Mr. Lloyd has completed four of his two-reel specials and others are in preparation. It is difficult to find out any of the young chap's personal traits because of his modesty. On the studio lot he is known by everyone as "Speedy." It is an admitted fact he conducts one of the most democratic studios in the West. When not working on a scene, Mr. Lloyd is always willing to listen to the suggestions of anyone associated with him in picture making, and as a result many excellent and original ideas are unearthed.

Accompanying the comedy star on his visit are Hal E. Roach, president of the Rolin Film Company, and Harley M. Walker, who writes the Lloyd subtitles. As a final word Mr. Lloyd said after he has had a short rest and enjoyed the hospitality of the East, he will return to his studio.

Harold Lloyd—Pathe Comedian as He Is and as He Works.
Now in the East on a vacation trip after having completed several comedies in advance of their release schedule. His latest is "High and Busy."

Edith Taliaferro to Star in Equity's "Keep to the Right"

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Equity Pictures that it has acquired from the Curtiss Pictures Corporation the domestic rights to the release and distribution of a six-reel feature that is "different," starring the celebrated Edith Taliaferro, and called "Keep to the Right." The scenario is by the well known American author, Robert Bronson Stockbridge, and the picture is directed by John G. Adolfi.

Although the scenario had been in the hands of the director for months, it was definitely decided not to begin work till the most suitable star could be obtained for the feminine lead, which is in line with Equity's quality standard. Edith Taliaferro, whose reputation on the legitimate stage has stamped her as one of the most fascinating actresses of the present day, was finally secured, with an all-star cast in keeping with her caliber.

The story is said to be a gripping romance, and in the course of its shifting scenes to take the spectator through two continents. Miss Taliaferro made her own choice of the supporting cast. It is composed of Gladden James, E. Cort Albertson, Frank Burbeck, Paul Panzer, Mrs. Elizabeth Garrison, Edith Stockton, and the clever juvenile character, Elizabeth Kennedy.

Roosevelt Sees Picture Making

On a motion picture lot for the first time in his life, Kermit Roosevelt, one day this week, was an interested spectator on location with Hemmer Superior Productions where Edward Hemmer is shooting exteriors for the first production of his company.

Young Mr. Roosevelt showed the same eager interest which characterized his famous father and nothing escaped his observation, from the manner in which the director rehearsed the actors to the expert work of the cameraman.

"Humoresque" in Third Week

The great success of "Humoresque," Cosmopolitan Productions' picturization of Fannie Hurst's mother-love story, now in the third week of its run at the Criterion Theatre, New York, has made itself felt in the ranks of the song writers. A song entitled "Humoresque" and dedicated to this picture, with lyric by Coleman Goetz and music by Joe Rosey, has recently been put on the market by J. H. Remick & Co.

Why Germany Re-established Its Censors and the Rules That Govern Their Labors

Berlin, May 21, 1920.

ONE of the first things following the outbreak of the German revolution was the abolishment of censorship of plays and films and the truth of the argument that the audience might be trusted to use their own judgment on the moral qualities of a play or film was thereby put to a practical test.

It is but fair to add that, on the whole, neither theatres nor movies took undue advantage of the newly acquired liberty at first, but as time went on a tendency to produce plays or films, the indecent nature of which was often bordering close on obscenity, was increasing. Most of these passed under the name of "artistic plays," but later on an especially offensive kind of films was produced, the so-called "Aufklaehrungsfilm," intended to convey a stirring impression of the frightful consequences of social diseases.

Few Black Sheep to Blame.

"The idea was good, but the execution was rotten," as the English have it, and there cannot be the slightest doubt that those products of "film art" were a blot on the bright shield of the film industry and were largely instrumental in discrediting movies in general.

Opposition among the decent elements of the people to those films catering to the lowest instincts was growing fast, and the cries for a re-establishment of censorship were steadily increasing. The industry as a whole was not favorably inclined towards a new censorship and tried to persuade the black sheep in their ranks to take heed of the public sentiment, but evidently in vain, for on May 12 a federal moving picture law was promulgated and put into effect at once.

Censor Private Shows.

Under this new law, films may only be shown in public performances or sold for such a purpose either at home or abroad when passed by a board of official film censors, and it is interesting to note that this applies as well to so-called private performances. The censorship does not cover films of a purely scientific or artistic character, provided they are displayed at public educational institutions or any other places recognized as such.

Every film has to be submitted for censorship before shown, and permission for performing will be refused if the film contains items liable to endanger public order and safety, offend religious sentiments, tend to produce a demoralizing or wicked effect or endanger the reputation of the German nation and the relations between Germany and foreign nations.

Provision for Scientific Films.

The board of censors is instructed not to prohibit films solely on the ground that they treat upon political, social, religious, ethical or philosophical subjects, nor will it be permissible to reject films for reasons which do not arise out of the contents of the respective film. In case of a film proving objectionable in part only, permission will be granted provided the parts objected to are cut out and handed over to the board, or when sufficient securities are furnished that the parts objected to will not be circulated.

Provision has been made, however, that all films of a scientific and artistic value and not fit for showing at public performances to an audience promiscuously composed, may be shown to specially selected parties. All films to the display of which juveniles of under eighteen years of age are admitted, must be submitted for special examination, and no permission will be granted for such films if they are considered to have an harmful effect upon the moral, intellectual or bodily development of juveniles or tend to cause excessive sensibility.

Local authorities, children's protection societies, juvenile welfare committees, school boards, etc., may apply to their respective district municipal authorites to render the exsting rules and regulations even more severe, should circumstances warrant such a step. In conclusion, it should be mentioned that children under six years of age are principally excluded from admittance to performances of any kind.

Hallmark's Foreign Distribution to Be Handled by Penn Import and Export

THROUGH a contract recently consummated, the Penn Import and Export Company will handle the entire foreign distribution of Hallmark Picture Corporation's product. The contract was signed last week by Frank G. Hall, representing Hallmark, and Adolph Penn for Penn Import, and covers all of the ambitious Hallmark projects for the next twelve months.

A number of subjects which have been released in the United States are ready for distribution in England, on the Continent and in the Far East. Among these are "The Phantom Honeymoon" and "Wits vs. Wits," with Marguerite Marsh; "The Heart of a Gypsy," with Florence Billings; "High Speed," with Gladys Hulette; "The Veiled Marriage," with Anna Lehr; "What Children Will Do," with Edith Stockton; "Parted Curtains," with Henry Walthall and Mary Alden, and "The Discarded Woman" and "The Common Sin," with Grace Darling.

Serials in Preparation.

Several serials are in preparation. The first to be released will be a western story starring Jack Hoxie and Marin Sais. A detective mystery serial starring Billy Rhodes and Trueman Van Dyke will follow shortly.

The Penn Import and Export Company was formed in the early part of 1919 by Adolph Penn and Marc Joffe. In 1919 Mr. Joffe went abroad to study the European conditions at first hand, and is at present still engaged in his quest for information about European conditions. It is expected that he will return to New York soon.

Mr. Penn has remained in charge of the American activities of the company, and about January, 1920, established his division of films under the direction of a man well versed in the export film business.

Foreign Offices.

In addition to the Hallmark products, Penn Import is handling South American sales on the "Lightning Bryce" serials. The company has its own offices scattered throughout the world, the principal ones being in London, Stockholm, Riga, Petrograd, Moscow, Petrovsk, Odessa, Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Karachi and Rangoon.

The film department is now operating under high pressure and in addition to handling films is ready to take on any accessory or allied products which can be handled by a film department.

These parties are given occasionally at the big Rothacker plant in Chicago. At this fun-fest, which was held on June 5, the employes enjoyed movies, dancing to the tune of a jazzy jazz band and everything that goes to make merry. Mr. Rothacker may be seen in the center of this group.

Richardson Continues His Projection Talks and Criticises Screen Results

By F. H. RICHARDSON.

ARRIVING in Easton, we found that we had been too enterprising and spry over in Wilkes-Barre and that friend right foot had decided to call a halt. For this reason we did not visit any of the theatres, but remained religiously at the hotel acting as nurse to one very painful ankle.

The management of the Third Street Theatre had very kindly given the use of the house for the purpose of the lecture, and after the show was over the projectionists of Easton gathered therein to absorb knowledge of the optics of projection.

Managers Absent at Easton Talk.

The managers were, however, conspicuous by their absence, although we are informed every one of them had promised to be present. This was to be regretted, because the message we were there to convey was of just as much interest and importance to the theatre manager as it was to the projectionist.

However, the fact that they were not there did not by any means deter us from proceeding, though that part which had to do with auditorium elimination picture distortion, etc., was designed particularly for the managers. It is, however, nevertheless of equal value to the projectionist. The Easton men listened carefully to a two-hour lecture, at the end of which we crawled into the hay and called it a day.

Invited by Kiwanis Club.

Arriving in Allentown we received a big batch of mail, among which was a letter from the Reading local informing us of the fact that the letter we had written that union announcing our coming had fallen into the hands of a stage-hand secretary, who, not realizing the importance of its contents, had only delivered it to the projectionists the day before. They asked if it would still be possible for us to include Reading. It was, and we immediately wired the Reading projectionists to that effect.

Our visit to Allentown had been at the invitation of the Kiwanis Club, a business organization similar to the well-known Rotary Club. The invitation had come through D. E. Knorr, manager Pregola Theatre, on behalf of J. K. Bowen, its owner, who is a member of the club. We were asked to attend a banquet at the Hotel Allen and address the Kiwanis Club on the motion picture.

There were something like 125 men and women (it being a special ladies' night) gathered in the banquet hall of the Hotel Allen—a thoroughly representative gathering of business people, who listened attentively and apparently with much interest while we explained to them some of the behind-the-veil secrets of the industry.

We did not visit any of the Allentown theatres, except the Pregola, where we were able to make several suggestions which we believe the management will find it to their advantage to adopt.

Projectionists at Station.

At the Reading station we ran into a flock of outstretched hands belonging to Winfield Steele, projectionist Lyric Theatre; Horace Good, one of the trustees of the local, and Fred H. Stock, business agent, who were accompanied by a gasoline cart belonging to Friend Steele. It is a wonder how many projectionists are getting the gasoline habit.

During the afternoon we called at the general office of Carr & Schad, Inc., of which H. J. Schad is president. The company operates the Colonial, Arcadia, Princess, Strand, San Toy and the Schuylkill Avenue theatres, all in Reading.

Mr. Schad has lately been promoted to the presidency, owing to the death of C. L. Carr. We had a long and pleasant interview with Mr. Schad, who impressed us as a man with advanced views and practical ideas. For one thing Mr. Schad believes in working with his employes, rather than merely bossing them around, a plan which we firmly believe well calculated to bring about good results.

One unique item in connection with this company is that one projectionist, a piano player, a singer of illustrated songs and a doorman who started with the company at the beginning of its career, thirteen years ago, are still in its employ, although in advanced positions. The projectionist in question is Thomas Harford, who now holds the position of chief projectionist. He does not do any actual projection work, but oversees the projection in all of the company's six houses.

Screen Results Somewhat Weak.

The screen results at the Colonial seem to us to be not just what they should be. We talked with friend Harford about the matter and, after ascertaining the conditions and laying the thing out on paper, advised Mr. Schad to order two three-combination lenses on trial. We believe it will give him a better definition as well as some more light. It will give him decidedly more light if in conjunction with the use of the lenses the slide carrier is removed.

There are comparatively few projectionists, we think, who quite realize what a great reduction of condenser area a slide carrier effects. That is one advantage the Motiograph possesses. You can instantly swing its slide carrier out of the way, thus giving the full condenser opening.

During the afternoon neighbor Harford bubbled us out to the new Strand Theatre, which is by way of an experiment, it being the first suburban or "neighborhood" theatre established in Reading up to this time. The Strand is playing to capacity two shows a day, matinee and evening, but at the rather low admission price of ten and fifteen cents—low for a house of that class.

Auditorium Is Artistic.

The Strand has a pretty auditorium. It seats practically all on one floor. From the projection viewpoint certain things in connection with the projection room are bad. The side lights on the front, curved walls are also not to be commended, and the immediate surroundings of the screen could be darkened in their tone with distinct benefit to the general result. These matters we have taken up directly with Mr. Schad.

The Reading men were cordial and courteous. In fact, every one has been extremely kind, which is deeply appreciated. It is no joke making these trips under the best conditions, and when one must do it while hobbling around on a pair of crutches it is decidedly not very pleasant. Only the kindness encountered on every hand has kept our courage up.

The lecture was in the Arcadia Theatre after the show was closed at night, of course. The Arcadia is a pretty and an exceedingly well proportioned theatre; also the floor slope is remarkably good. The auditorium is long for its width and is covered with an arched ceiling.

Bad Exit Signs.

At the right and left of the stage are two exit signs that are particularly bad because they are so utterly and entirely useless and inexcusable. These signs glare balefully back into the eyes of the audience, being white letters blocked out in light red. The letters should have been blocked out in B-L-A-C-K. Then shove about two sheets of ruby glass, which may be secured from any dealer in photographic supplies, into the casing between the light and letters. If you cannot get the glass, use two thicknesses of red gelatine. You will then have the word E-X-I-T in red letters, with nothing else showing, and that, my dear Mr. Manager, is precisely what you want.

At the right of the screen is a clock. The lighting of the face of this clock is well arranged, but a big improvement could be made by the following method: Secure some black paper from a photographer or stationery store. Cut it the size and shape of the clock face. Cut a center hole for the hand post and slip the paper from the hole to the outer edge so that it may be readily slipped under the hands of the clock.

Wilkes-Barre Managers and Projectionists Welcome F. H. Richardson

Paint Figures on Black Face.

Having done this, have a sign painter paint the figures on the black face in non-gloss white. Now with a little dap of glue here and there attach this false face to the clock. You now have a black face with white figures and you have not in any way injured the original face of the clock. Have your sign painter paint the hands of the clock non-gloss white and the job is done.

You thus have a black face with white letters and white hands. The audience can see the time of day better than it could before and there is no white glare of light there to offend the eye and come into competition with the picture on the screen.

The gathering at the lecture was 100 per cent. so far as it concerns the projectionists of Reading. Also there were quite a number of theatre managers present.

Only One Had Handbook.

The Reading projectionists and managers are a cordial, courteous bunch of men, but, like the men of many other cities, a good shaking up once in a while doesn't do them a bit of harm. There is altogether too much of a tendency to get into a rut, let well enough alone and continue abuses after the knowledge necessary for their abatement is available. We asked how many of the men owned a handbook and only one poor, lonesome hand shot up.

We have repeatedly pointed out that the man never lived who can make fast progress by depending entirely upon practical experience for his knowledge. Practical experience judiciously mixed with the study of technical books and departments is the best little elevator the projectionist can possibly find to raise him to higher levels.

Notwithstanding the various criticisms, which are made in all kindness, we most cordially thank the Reading men for all the kindness shown us while within the gates of their city.

Is Given Cordial Greeting.

From Reading to Harrisburg is only a short jump, and at ten next morning, having been carefully placed on the train by Fred Stock, business agent of the union, we dived through a shower of cinders and dust into the capital city of the Keystone State. It was Saturday and a very busy day, but notwithstanding that fact one of the boys was at the train to meet us, though, unfortunately, in some way we missed connections.

After getting settled in friend hotel we hobbled over to the Colonial Theatre, proud of at last being able to negotiate one whole block without the aid of a taxi. The greeting of O. B. Feldser, manager, was most cordial. The Colonial is a handsome 1,400-seat house, owned by Wilmer & Vincent, which company also owns the Orpheum, Majestic, Victoria and tw small neighborhood houses, recently acquired, all in Harrisburg. In fact, they own all the large theatres of the city except the Regent.

From the Optical Viewpoint.

Admission to the Colonial, Victoria and Regent is thirty-three cents for adults, except on special occasions when the Regent has a twenty-two cent day. The lighting of the Colonial auditorium is not at all bad, though it might possibly be made a bit better in so far as concerns the clock. Its blue-letter exit signs are by way of an innovation. From the optical viewpoint they are excellent, but the departure from the red standard is a matter for further consideration.

Projection Room Is Bad.

The projection room is in charge of Harry Smith, a man of ideas and a well-developed bump of inventive genius. The room itself is badly located, also it is uncomfortably small, and to add to the difficulties thus set up a big girder comes right down square in front, under which the projectionist must peer in order to see the screen. To still further aggravate conditions, the side of the girder next to projection room is painted a very light color, and since during matinees the side of the girder is flooded with daylight, we ventured the assertion that it would be impossible to form an accurate judgment as to the fineness of definition of the picture on the screen—a serious matter indeed.

It would not be at all impossible to drop the projection room down to the balcony floor, and certainly a sufficiently better result would be had on the screen to more than justify the loss of the few seats, it being necessary to lose them in order to do so.

Made Several Improvements.

Chief Projectionist Smith has invented several additions to his standard Powers equipment which we doubtless will be able to describe at length later in the projection department. At the left, attached to the projector frame and located about one foot from the floor, he has a small stereopticon lamphouse, with the lens supported in proper position, and a two-inch porthole in the wall just about at the floor line. This is the lower half of his dissolver, the upper half of which is the regular projector stereopticon, the dissolve being affected by a cleverly arranged shutter operated from the working of the projector.

An Automatic Change-Over.

He also has an automatic change-over of his own invention. This device automatically starts the idle projector and stops the one that is running when the time for change-over comes. At a predetermined time before the change-over it rings a bell just once, which is a signal to strike the idle arc. The spot is viewed by means of a small circular mirror attached to the cone of the lamphouse.

There are other very clever things, but space forbids more than a word of mention. The projection circuit conduit is above the lamphouse, instead of below, and instead of the asbestos leads entering the lamphouse, Brother Smith has attached heavy brass rods which extend up through the top of the lamphouse and join the asbestos cable. These rods work straight up and down through the holes.

The H. C. of D. (Doughnuts).

Martha Mansfield, playing opposite Eugene O'Brien in Selznick's "The Nobleman," sells a $100 doughnut for the benefit of Salvation Army.

Finish of Projection Room.

The condenser has been moved back into the Powers lamphouse and is entirely covered by an asbestos shield; also when the lamphouse door is opened an asbestos shutter drops down over the condenser, thus completely protecting it from sudden temperature changes. The lamphouses are piped directly to the room, and the lamp is installed in each of them, so arranged that when the lamphouse door is opened the lamp is automatically lighted.

The projection room interior is finished in silver and gold bronze, striped with black. The bank of house light dimmers is located on the shelf attached to the front wall just under the ceiling. The dimmers are banked on each side by rheostats. The room is immediately under the roof of the building and an eighteen-inch exhaust band provides ample ventilation. The observation ports are fourteen inches wide by twenty inches high, and with that size ports the light-colored walls of the room are not seriously objectionable. The Power Six B machines are both equipped with arc controllers.

Victoria Being Remodeled.

We dropped in at the Victoria Theatre, next door to the Colonial, for the purpose of saying hello to its manager. The Victoria is in process of remodeling, anyhow, so a description would have been of no particular value at this time.

During the evening the projectionists and some of the managers gathered in the union rooms over the Victoria Theatre, where, until the wee small hours, we discussed with them the optics of projection.

The men expressed themselves as highly pleased with the lecture. They treated us with every possible courtesy while in Harrisburg, issued a warm invitation for a return visit and next morning saw us safely aboard the train en route to Lancaster.

Arrived in Lancaster on Sunday.

Arriving at Lancaster we found Brothers S. E. Moore and John S. Workman, two members of the committee appointed by the Lancaster local to receive us, waiting, and soon we were made comfortable in the Brunswick Hotel. It was Sunday and in Pennsylvania the morals of the people are "conserved" (?) by closing the theatres, lest they (the people) be amused and thus their immortal souls more or less terribly endangered.

Of course, all the shows being closed there was nothing to do all that day except twiddle our thumbs. The local committee offered to stay and entertain us, but it was a beautiful day and they were young men and we just knew that they were very anxious to take Lizzie or Myrtle or Susie out to the park or sump'n, so we insisted on dismissing them and spent a quite afternoon, for which our "game" ankle gave us a unanimous vote of thanks.

One Man Was at Church.

In the evening all the Lancaster projectionists, except the one who was running the church show, gathered in the T. M. A. rooms and listened with very apparent interest to a two-hour talk on our favorite subject. Afterward they took us up to a little midnight dinner, expressed themselves as well pleased with the work we were doing and—we called it a day.

"Stick to Your Last," Frank E. Woods Tells "So-called Producing Companies"

FRANK E. WOODS, supervising director of Famous Players-Lasky's West Coast studios, who in his long connection with the motion picture industry has been an intimate witness of all the ups and downs of the producing business and consequently speaks with authority, has placed himself on record as opposed to the "indiscriminate formation of so-called producing companies without further warrant than the fact that they are build around some star, director or author of more or less prominence."

While he has no desire to discourage any individual who believes he has something worth-while to contribute to the development of the art, Mr. Woods believes that the production of pictures has emerged from its pioneer stage and that the most effective and lasting contributions can be made through one or another of the time-tested organizations now well established and which, taken collectively, are, he says, abundantly able to take care of the needs of the industry for some time to come.

Interesting and Amusing.

"It is interesting and in a sense amusing to note the efforts of various elements of the industry either to attempt the production of pictures individually or else insist upon an interest in the products of others by reason of their essentiality," he said.

"Stars in many instances have formed their own companies with various degrees of success; directors have undertaken to become producers; exhibitors have had a try at production; eminent authors have had their fingers in the pie; business managers have frequently endeavored to go it alone; continuity writers are organizing independently and are demanding an interest in the productions, and will possibly organize to produce for themselves. I recall at least one costumer who thought he could produce, and there are two or three instances of technical directors and press agents taking a fling at the business. It only remains for the film cutters and the stage managers to get busy and the cycle will be complete.

"Now, why all this? Each of these component parts of the great film producing industry maintains that it is of greater importance than the others, when, as a matter of fact, there is scarcely any difference. Certainly without any one of these elements it would be virtually impossible to produce or exhibit a picture. But individually and without the help of the others they are unable to accomplish anything like satisfactory results. It requires a union of all the forces, co-ordinating, working smoothly in a bath of oil, to produce the final achievement, i. e., perfect pictures for the screen.

What Does It Prove.

"What does it prove? That, indubitably, a complete and comprehensive organization is essential; that otherwise there is waste, false motion and lost effort. It takes three years of experience and a commingling of artistic instinct and business acumen to create an organization such as Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for example. It is patent, or should be, that only by such complete and efficient organization can worth-while results be achieved and the industry be made a practical one.

"If every unit would admit its own importance but realize that it is valueless without the co-operation of all the other units, there would be less time and money wasted on endeavers to form rival companies headed by one element or another. It should be evident that as the lobster grows a new claw when the old one is broken off, so the dismembered organization will merely repair its loss by defections and go merrily on. The new organization has to build up itself by starting with the claw and gaining an entire body with all the other members essential to its success. This takes time and is sometimes a fatal experiment.

"Better let the men who know the business do the organizing and, like the shoemaker, 'stick to your last.'"

Booth Tarkington to Write Photoplays for Goldwyn; Liked Handling of "Edgar"

BOOTH TARKINGTON will write feature photoplays which will be released by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Announcement of this has just been made by that corporation. The rights to these photoplays, which will be the first of their kind written for the screen by Mr. Tarkington, were secured from Tarkington Baker, the author's cousin, through Henry Hertzbrun, his attorney.

Many flattering offers for the rights were received by Mr. Baker before he recently went to India on a picture mission and left in doubt the fate of the projected photoplays. The decisive influence which caused Goldwyn to finally be selected to produce the pictures was the great financial and artistic success of the "Edgar" series of two-reel comedies which Mr. Tarkington wrote for production at the Culver City studios.

The "Edgar" stories, known officially as "The Adventures and Emotions of Edgar Pomeroy," have proven money-makers from the beginning, and officers of the Goldwyn company believe that they give every indication that Mr. Tarkington has mastered the art of writing original screen themes. Consequently, they believe that the longer stories about American life, which he will now compose for the films, will be among the biggest box office attractions which they will have to offer to exhibitors.

The universal acceptance of "Edgar" by critics and public alike has created a market for the Tarkington screen wares which exhibitors will sell with gratifying results, the officers say. In a manner, these short-reel comedies, which have been successful in themselves as stories and as lucrative assets, will now prove to have been missionary workers arousing the interest of the motion-picture audiences so that when the first of the longer photoplays, written about and for adults, are produced, they will already have a decided appeal and value both to the exhibitor and his patrons.

Start Bankruptcy Proceedings Against Savoy Comedies, Inc.

BANKRUPTCY proceedings were instituted in the United States District Court at New York on June 3 against the Savoy Comedies, Inc., also known as the Savoy Pictures Corporation and the Savoy Film Corporation, by Leon Dashew, representing the Rex Laboratories, Inc., on a claim of $1,200; Charles Abrams on a claim of $1,000, and William K. Hedwig on a claim of $600.

Judge Knox appointed Morris Frank receiver of the business under a bond of $1,500. The principal asset of the film company is said to be a negative film of comedy entitled "Sea Side Simps," which is valued at over $3,000, and cash in bank amounting to $600.

The liabilities are said to be $10,000, of which $2,600 is due to Neely Edwards, who had secured an attachment and was proceeding to sell the assets to satisfy his claim when the bankruptcy proceedings were instituted.

Fox Changes Name of Vehicle to Star Pretty Eileen Percy

WILLIAM FOX has selected a new title for the film version of F. Scott Fitzgerald's story, "Myra Meets His Family," which was published in the Saturday Evening Post. This story, adapted by Joseph F. Polland, is being filmed under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell in California with Eileen Percy as its star.

"The Husband Hunter" is the title adopted for this film, which is the second starring vehicle for Miss Percy. The story as it appeared in the Post has been but slightly changed, while additional values have been discovered in writing the continuity, making it an excellent comedy, according to reports at the New York offices of Fox.

Supporting the star are Emory Johnson as leading man, Jane Miller, Harry Dunkinson, Evans Kirk, Edward McWade and John Stepling.

To Launch Two All-Star Subjects

J. Parker Read Jr., producer of the Louise Glaum and the Hobart Bosworth photoplays, is making preparations to launch two all star productions, in addition to the five Glaum and the five Bosworth pictures scheduled for the current year.

Englishman Leaving United States Lauds American Exploitation and Presentation

HAVING concluded a six-weeks' study of American motion picture exploitation methods, Frederick Martin, advertising manager for the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., of London, sailed for home on June 12, accompanied by Mrs. Martin. Mr. Martin had made a complete tour of the country, spending several days in Hollywood at the Lasky studio. The leading picture theatres in New York City, Buffalo, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, and other cities were inspected by him to obtain information of value to British exhibitors.

"It is with very many regrets that I leave America, so cordial has been my reception everywhere and so many friends have I made during the trip," said Mr. Martin. "It is difficult for me to fully express my appreciation of your wonderful methods of purveying motion pictures. Your progressive exhibitors, with their atmospheric prologues, symphony orchestras and exceptional vocalists have produced a completely new type of entertainment and one feels certain that as the movement spreads it will gather in as permanent patrons all of that huge high-priced-seat section which has in the past been more or less apathetic toward the picture theatre.

Brains Set the Pace.

"A certain English exhibitor who visited this country a short time ago told me that the American people held the motion picture in higher regard than the English. He didn't give me any reason for this, but when one visits such shows as the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion it is not difficult to understand that such establishments, such programs and such presentation have compelled respect, and there is no earthly reason why the same effect should not be duplicated in England. It is because you are applying so much brains to the business that everything is traveling at such a pace here. You have got inside the head of the Mr. Average Man and found out just what he wanted. And your exhibitor lives with his theatre rather than from it.

"I have been much impressed by the skill with which programs are built here to give atmosphere to the main feature. I am not referring to the beautiful atmospheric prologues I have so much enjoyed, but to the selection of individual items which have a bearing on the locale of the feature.

"With such minds as are at work in this country it is impossible to say where the theatre business will be twelve months hence, but it is certain that, in circus parlance, it will be 'bigger, better than ever,' and I am certain that the men who are pioneering the new movement will have the satisfaction of seeing their ideas made the basis of the new style motion picture presentation in Great Britain."

To Handle Distribution of Hepworth Films in America

A VENTURE that is described by its sponsors as being among the first serious efforts to introduce first class British film productions to the American market has been inaugurated by Hepworth Picture Plays, Inc., of New York, which will be the distributing organization for Hepworth Picture Plays, Ltd., of London.

The directors of the American company are Reginald Warde, president Reginald Warde, Inc., and Far East Film Corporation; Captain Paul Kimberley, O. B. E., and Cecil Hepworth.

Reginald Warde, who will have charge of the distribution of the British product in the American market, has been identified with the film industry in this country for many years as a buyer of foreign rights of American productions.

In making the announcement of the new venture Mr. Warde stated that he only became interested in the venture after convincing himself that the Hepworth productions have an appeal to American exhibitors and audiences. He added that since the Armistice British producers have made great strides in the technique of production, and there will be no need for apologies when the latest Hepworth pictures are released.

Captain Kimberley has just brought over several productions, including "Alf's Button," with Leslie Henson, and Alma Taylor, "Anna the Adventuress," from the story by E. Phillips Oppenheim, and "The Forest on the Hill," from the story by Eden Phillpotts.

Cecil Hepworth, the head of the English producing company, has been directing and producing films for twenty-one years and is a pioneer of the industry in Great Britain.

Yokohama Police to Censor All Pictures Before They Are Shown in the Theatres

JAPAN is the latest country to put into effect a strict censorship of moving pictures, according to a report received recently by David P. Howells from Horace T. Clarke, his representative in the Orient, who is now in Japan.

"Moving pictures in Yokohama," writes Mr. Clarke, "are to be subjected to much closer scrutiny in the future and moving picture theatres will have to make several changes in their seating arrangements to conform to a recent edict of the Kanagawa police authorities.

Special Building for Censors.

"The question of censoring the motion picture has been under investigation by the Japanese police for some considerable time and they have reached the conclusion that on account of the great effect which the pictures have upon the Japanese people that it is necessary that a strict censorship be put into effect.

"A special building for censorship purposes is to be erected in the yard of the Kanagawa courthouse and is expected to be completed about July 1. After that date, the Yokohama police will view every picture and it will be necessary that it receive their approval before it can be shown in the theatres.

To Segregate Men and Women.

"Likewise on the first of July another radical change is to be put into effect that will change the seating arrangements of every theatre in the city. The police will require that all women be seated in a separate section of the theatre irrespective of their social status and irrespective of whether they are accompanied by male escorts or not. Notice has already been sent to the theatre owners, apprising them of this new ruling and ordering them to make the change in their seating arrangements."

Mr. Clarke also writes that the financial situation in Japan has been very much improved owing to the action of the Bank of Japan in coming to the aid of the stock exchanges and permitting them to reopen again.

Welcome New Officials

At a dinner given in New York on June 12 the employes of the Famous Players-Lasky eastern studios welcomed Arthur V. Smith, the new general manager of the eastern studios, and Roswell Dague, who is succeeding Gardner Hunting as eastern production editor. J. N. Naulty, who recently resigned as general manager, delivered a speech of welcome to Mr. Smith. Miss Rosie Quinn, of the Winter Garden, was a feature of the evening's entertainment, which was arranged by Samuel Blanchard Rose, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Forty-fourth street studio, assisted by Miss Margaret Healy.

"Passers By" Is an Excellent Screen Version of Popular Chambers' Play

By ROBERT C. McELRAVY

ANOTHER addition to the growing list of really big screen productions is made in the J. Stuart Blackton version of C. Haddon Chambers' famous play, "Passers By," released by Pathe. It is always a fortunate circumstance when an author hits upon a theme so simple and impressive as this, and has the luck to find a producer who enters so thoroughly into the spirit of the original idea. The combination in this instance has wrought wonders. It is a subject so filled with sympathy and humor that it grasps the spectator's soul by the boot straps and gives it a welcome lift out of the clay in which it is usually mired.

There is no preaching and no particular message concealed in this splendid production, yet it will spread pleasure and kindly impulses wherever shown. It gets a fine, true slant on human existence, all revealed through a cleverly selected assortment of types from real life. The characterizations are alive and in excellent contrast. Probably no playwright ever made a more effective use of contrast than did C. Haddon Chambers when he wrote this play, and this screen version has been exceptionally well cast.

Strong Play Upon Emotions.

It is astonishing what a play upon the emotions may be made by this simple balancing of the rich and the poor, the high and the low, the kind and the selfish, all without the usual melodramatic claptrap or heroics of any sort. The facts and conditions of life speak for themselves and all that seems necessary is to put upon the screen the actual opposing situations, faithfully and sincerely set forth, to get the desired effect. Where pathos becomes too intrusive in this subject a kindly humor appears which carries the same good sentiment without a too great drain upon the sympathies. The action is developed with understanding, surprising the spectator by flashes of generosity among those in high station, where selfishness is too often found. The common humanity of the cab driver, the affected superiority of the butler, the aimless drifting of the derelict, the strength of purpose often found in the weakest of women; the heartless indifference of the social snob, the loyalty of a genuine hero—these are all phases which enter into this intensely human drama.

"Passers By" is a story of London streets and London fog. The atmosphere and settings are all that could be desired to give perfect illusion to the piece. Some of the scenes were taken in London, as the looming towers of Westminster Abbey and the views of London bridge amply testify. Many of the effects were obtained in the studio and are an artistic credit as a whole. So far as the spectator is concerned it might all have been made in the city by the Thames.

Herbert Rawlinson plays the interesting role of the hero. His rooms look out upon the fog-drenched street, and through a generous impulse he decides to invite in a number of chance passers by. Out of this simple action grows the heart-searching power of the plot, for numbered among these oddly assorted guests is the woman he had loved and lost—the mother of the son whose unknown existence changes the whole couse of his life. Leila Valentine is sympathetic to a rare degree in this role. Her wanderings, after slipping away into the dark streets on the night of Lady Hurley's party, are briefly but effectively sketched into the story. Pauline Coffyn has the one rather thankless part in this subject, which she enacts with quiet force. Her portrayal of the cold, designing Lady Hurley, was the one thing necessary to keep alive the fact that "selfishness" is often something besides a mere word in the dictionary. Ellen Cassity, as the pretty, inexperienced niece, who proves herself a good sport at the close, fits very nicely into the cast. So likewise does Charles Blackton, in the child role of Little Peter.

Minor Characters Do Much.

But it is three minor characters which do much to carry the subject to its high rank. These are William J. Ferguson, Tom Lewis and Dick Lee. The supporting work of these players is exceptional. William J. Ferguson is not unknown to the screen, and his depiction of Pine, the haughty, but kind-hearted butler, is simply an addition to other good things he has done. His frequent appearances through this drama arouse pleasant expectations in the mind of the spectator which are usually gratified. Tom Lewis as "Nighty" is immense. Even one who has never been to dear Ole Lunnon and never saw a London cabby, realizes at once that Tom Lewis is "it." He beams benevolence and before his first kindly deed is completed he has won a permanent place in the affections. Dick Lee as Burns, the derelict, is likewise one who comes and remains in the consciousness. He is one of the most derelict old derelicts that ever got onto the screen at the beginning, but before the story is over he has gone through alterations and improvements that would do credit to a Bowery Mission and beauty parlor combined.

The Story.

Lady Hurley, in "Passers By," gives a dinner for the purpose of introducing her niece, Beatrice Dainton, to her step brother, Peter Waverton. During this dinner, Margaret Summers, a governness in the household, with whom Peter is in love, slips away into the dark of the London streets.

Margaret writes to Peter, but the letters are intercepted by the designing Lady Hurley. As a result, though Peter conducts a long search for her, six years elapse before they meet again. In the meantime, thinking Margaret dead, Peter turns to Beatrice and learns to love her.

One night, as he stands at his window looking into the foggy streets, Peter acts on a sudden impulse and tells his butler to invite in a number of passing people. One of these, a veiled woman, turns out to be Margaret. She has worked for years, as a seamstress, to support herself and the son, of which Peter is the father. In the midst of intensely human and dramatic scenes, in which Beatrice and her mother withdraw, Peter and Margaret are reunited. None are more pleased at this than Peter's chance friends, the passers by whom he invited in on kindly impulse.

Exploitation Angles: Go strong on this. Pick up the stars, including the sterling W. J. Ferguson, Tom Lewis and Herbert Rawlinson, but make them merely contributors to the play: one of the genuine hits of the speaking stage. Get ministers interested in the theme and if possible give a pre-showing to the leaders of thought and opinion in your town.

Three Telling Scenes from the New Pathe Special, Which Is Called "Passers By."

Herbert Rawlinson may be seen in these pictures entertaining the folks that have passed by. Guess any one would be willing to find out where he lives and be a passer-by if they would receive such hospitality.

Mary O'Connor Illuminates Studio System While Angling for New Ideas

By MARGARET I. MAC DONALD

IT is not exactly news that Mary O'Connor of the Famous Players-Lasky Company's West Coast senario and film editing department is in town. She has been in New York two weeks giving the "once over" to the moving picture theatres, trying to see the game from the other fellow's viewpoint. Thus, she reaps the benefit of the mistakes of others and picks up stray ideas that may prove inspirational.

Miss O'Connor has the proverbial love of speech attributed to the feminine. She has much to say; but, contrary to the traditional adherent of "the last word," when she talks she not only says something but knows whereof she speaks.

In an hour's conversation with her one can learn more about the inside angle on the making of a moving picture than can be gained from perusing all the newspapers and magazines in the country. You are brought to a full realization that the years have meant something more to the industry than merely grinding the camera or shouting through a megaphone.

Talks Little About Herself.

As one of the heads of both scenario and film editing departments, she exhibits a pride in the institution by which she is employed, and a sturdy faith in the quality and character of the product which she helps to turn out.

She talks little about herself and confines her remarks rather to those with whom she is associated in her daily work than to her own individual efforts and accomplishments, and speaks with modesty about a beautiful home in the West, and the larger values to be obtained in the West than in the East, for the same amount of money, when quizzed on her choice of location.

Tells of Work on "Intolerance."

She tells with pride of her associations with D. W. Griffith on the memorable picture, "Intolerance," of the remarkable feat in film editing which the cutting and assembling of this great feature represented, of the long hours into the night that were spent in giving the proper framing to each episode, and of the merging of the modern with the Babylonian period, for instance, without disturbing the original thread of argument, or creating an anti-climatic condition. And those who saw it must admit that the swinging of this stupenduous spectacle into correct psychological form was indeed a masterful bit of artistry.

And so it was that from the schools of the finer arts of the industry, Mary O'Connor finally found her way to the head of the Famous Players-Lasky picture shop, where, in conjunction with Frank Woods, the West Coast studio manager, she reviews each day the scenes which the directors have made on the day previous. Familiar with each story that is being picturized, she is able to note discrepancies which may have crept in.

Methods Have Changed.

Speaking of the change in methods which gradually take place, as the screen art climbs the ladder of progress, Miss O'Connor said: "Today we do things that we would not have dreamed of doing a few years ago. For instance, to change the characters suddenly from one scene to another, without an explanatory title, was unheard of. Yet in some of the best productions on the screen today, scenes change from one location to another and things happen in quick succession without the necessity for a subtitle, so deftly are these apparently carelessly thrown in events linked together.

There's Art in Everything.

"The choosing of stories for certain stars, the picking of a leading woman for the male star, or the masculine lead for the feminine star, the getting together of a cast which will help to get the most out of a story, all of these are elements which must be carefully considered in the weaving of the design for the picture.

"The watchful eye of the director with an imagination for the best locations is another important item, upsetting though it may be to have a sudden call over the telephone to hurry the players in automobiles to a certain location where a wonderful effect in lighting can be secured in a rain storm, or at the beginning or ending of that rarity in the Western clime, a thunder storm, just as an interior set for the scene is about completed. This, of course, means a quick shifting of the story by all hands; and you can imagine that experience on such occasions counts for a great deal."

Laboratory Is Large.

Four of the finest screen stages in existence, according to Miss O'Connor, are to be found at the Famous Players-Lasky Western studios. One of these is a dark stage, used for the taking of night scenes, two are artificially lighted, and one is a daylight stage, with muslin or gauze screens to regulate the illumination.

There is also to be found an extensive laboratory, where seventy-five prints of each picture is made and distributed to the various Famous Players-Lasky exchanges.

And in the system of things one print of each is sent East for purposes of review and publicity, "for," said Miss O'Connor, "when the picture story is exhibited before the Eastern publicity force they frequently unearth a publicity angle that we have failed to catch."

The system of communication between the Western and Eastern forces brings a written or telegraphic message every day.

Suggestions from Players.

"The system of production at the Famous Players-Lasky studios," according to Miss O'Connor, "has no cramped lines. For while the story as it comes from the hands of the scenario editor is supposed to be lived up to in general outline, the director is not restrained from acting on inspiration in the making of individual scenes. And as you know the class of players which we employ are not automatons, they also are encouraged to give what they can by way of suggestion and conception of the characters which they are called upon to portray."

Her Message to Writers.

Asked what message she had for the would-be writers of original scenarios, she said: "Personally speaking, I would never submit a scenario to any producing company unless I first had an order for it. Neither would I request an order for a scenario unless I had first familiarized myself with picture construction.

"Many persons who submit their work to us feel peeved because we cannot give them any encouragement. They forget that a scenario department is not a school, that the people professionally employed in such work are too busy to give more than the ordinary time required for reading and commenting on their work. Although in some cases, where we have believed that undeveloped talent lurked behind the work, we have sent for the writers and tried to get them, with a little coaching, to do something worth while.

Study Finished Productions.

"In the majority of instances, I am sorry to say, the result has not been encouraging. However, I would suggest to those who are really serious to study closely the finished production as the surest way of learning moving picture construction. One of the most amusing instances I have come across among would-be scenario writers was that in which the writer expressed himself as follows: 'If this scenario does not suit you perhaps sometime you might want some concrete work done. If so, I hope you will let me know as I am an expert in that line'."

The Woes of a Reader.

As a final wail from a long-suffering reader of manuscripts, Miss O'Connor said: "If people would only stop long enough to consider that what appears so easy in looking at a moving picture production is really the result of great labor and infinite pains, they would not trouble us with the strange and weird conglomorations which we have often been called upon to read under the misnomer of scenario."

Harold Lloyd in New York to Discuss Campaign Plans on Second Series of Comedies

HAROLD LLOYD arrived in New York on Friday, June 11, on a flying trip —not an aviation flight, however— to consult with Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Lloyd also is seeking a diversion from the arduous "business" of making people laugh, and with Lloyd it is a business. Accompanying the young comedian are Hal E. Roach, president of the Rolin Film Company, which produces the Harold Lloyd two-reel comedy specials, and Harley M. Walker, who writes the titles.

It was Lloyd's intention when he came to New York to remain for about a week. He left Los Angeles when the second of his new series of two reelers was virtually completed.

One of the purposes of the comedian's visit to New York was to help plan the campaign on his second series. Lloyd takes just as much interest in the business end to his fun-making as he does in the actual production of the pictures.

While on their way to New York, the Lloyd party stopped off at Cleveland, where the comedian was greeted by exhibitors attending the convention.

Leading British Dramatists Wrote Famous Players Vehicle

TWO distinguished British authors are interested in the screening of "The Great Day," the first production of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., at the new studios at Islington, London. They are George R. Sims and Louis N. Parker, who collaborated in writing the drama for Drury Lane from which the film is being made.

The story of "The Great Day" centers round a big Sheffield steel works in war time, and the endeavors of a foreign spy, first to discover a secret process invented by Frank Beresford, D. S. O., the hero, and subsequently to obtain information as to the trend of the Peace Conference during the sittings of the "Big Four" at Paris.

One of the thrills the story offers is in the furnace scene at the steel works; another is in an underground night refuge in Paris which is flooded by the rising of the Seine.

For Her Work in "Suds" Mary Pickford Gets First Seal of Merit Ever Awarded

THE Board of Merit of the Motion Picture Theatrical Association of the World awarded its first seal of merit for any motion picture yet produced to Mary Pickford, for her latest production, "Suds," which will be released by United Artists very shortly. Hiram Abrams, president of the "Big Four," was notified of the award last week and immediately sent a wireless message to Miss Pickford, who was in mid-ocean on her way to England with her husband, Douglas Fairbanks.

The presentation of the medal will be made to Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, Mary's mother, at a special presentation ceremony on Sunday evening, June 20, at the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York. The presentation will be made by Frank Bacon and an address will be made by Governor Alfred E. Smith, of New York.

High Praise from Frohman.

This exceptional honor for Miss Pickford's latest production marks this picture as wholesome, artistic, sincere entertainment, according to the Board of Merit, which is comprised of nearly fifty of the most representative persons in the East. Each made special comments upon the production and all agreed on its excellence.

Daniel Frohman, well known theatrical producer, commented on the production as follows: "Excellent. Capital. The theme of imagination is admirably illustrated in the mind of a simple, ingenuous girl, with humorous and pathetic effect. Mary has never done a more vivid piece of character work."

Albert St. Peter, of the United Americans, said that "the moral of the picture is excellent and the comedy is clean. Give it the seal of merit."

James M. Bruce, president of the New York Kindergarten Association, stated that in his mind the picture was excellent and certainly deserved the medal of merit.

Good for the Young.

Anning S. Prall, president of the New York Board of Education, said: "I was very much impressed by the picture and think it is a wonderfully wholesome production, the kind that school children should be sent to see. The characterization of the slavy girl is very interesting and it is undoubtedly the best production that Miss Pickford has ever made."

Mary H. Ford, writer and lecturer on "The Rahai Revelation" and on works of art, and the author of "The Oriental Rose," voted enthusiastically for the medal of merit for "Suds," saying the picture was excellent, true to life and high-class entertainment.

E. J. Parker, representing the Salvation Army, was greatly enthused over the picture and said that he knew of none other that could be given the medal of merit in preference to this excellent production.

Leo P. Bergley, representing the Knights of Columbus, said he considered the production very enlightening and entertaining and wanted it surely to get the medal.

A. Le Barbier, representing the Associated Catholic Charities, was very enthusiastic in his endorsement.

"I had no idea Miss Pickford could act so well, for it is the best picture she has ever presented," was the enthusiastic endorsement of Elmer Gates, of the Hotel Imperial.

The representative body of men and women on the Board of Merit comprise the following: Dr. Frank Crane, Hudson Maxim, Gutzon Borglum and Merton Sturges, representing Americanism; Anning S. Prall, Eugene C. Gibney, James M. Bruce and Mrs. F. C. Barlow, representing education; Dr. Walter Laidlaw, the Rev. John Talbot Smith, Dr. Alexander Lyons, Col. Edward J. Parker and the Rev. Alfred Duane Pell, representing religion.

Howard Chandler Christy, Adolph Bolm, Arthur Folsom, Willy Pogany, John Wenger and W. Frank Purdy, representing art; Dr. Orison Swett Marden, Dr. W. John Murray, B. Palmer Lewis, Eugene Del Mar and Campbell McCullough, representing metaphysics; Cosmo Hamilton, Ida M. Tarbell, Daniel Frohman, J. Hartley Manners and Lewis K. Anspacher, representing drama and literature, and Arthur Pryor, Cesare Sodero and Mrs. Julian Edwards, representing musical interpretation.

"Young Buffalo" has been a well known figure for years. He is presented in out-of-door dramas with a strong appeal, an excellent attraction in quality and length. The first is "Tex of the Timberlands," to be issued in July. The others will follow weekly, for five weeks.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Nobody Walked Away with Honors in "Arizona" for Everybody Stole the Great Show

By GIEBLER

THE biggest thing that happened this week, and from a social and an artistic standpoint the biggest thing that has happened this year in Filmland, was the opening performance of the three-day run of "Arizona," presented by word of mouth by an all-star cast of picture players for the benefit of the Hollywood Post of the American Legion.

The audience that looked at the show was as much all star as the cast that presented it.

A number of the socially elect of our fair city were also present, but in spite of the fact that many of them were close enough down front to shake hands with some of Max Fisher's band boys, they occupied back seats, figuratively speaking. It was a time when the social eclat did not make much of a clatter.

How the Stampedes Started.

"Arizona" has been played on many stages since its first night way back in nineteen hundred, but never with a cast such as played it on this night.

It is impossible to describe the performance. To say that Bessie Barriscale, Bill Desmond, Roscoe Arbuckle, Theodore Roberts and Charlie Murray ran away with the show would be the truth. They did run away with the show, but only as long as they held the stage—as soon as Dustin Farnum, Clyde Fillmore, Clara Kimball Young, Howard Hickman and the others in the cast got their cues, another stampere was started.

Everybody "Copped" the Show.

Every member of the cast was an old trouper, and every one of them got back into vocal harness and romped through their roles with the ease of the true artist who never forgets any part of his art. Everybody ran away with the show.

Theodore Roberts played Henry Canby, the ranch owner, with the same drollery, the same unctuous humor, that he put in the part when he created it twenty years ago. Dustin Farnum, as Lieutenant Denton, was just as good as he used to be in "The Littlest Rebel," "The Virginian" and other successes of dim and "dusty" past.

Howard Hickman, as Colonel Bonham, worked with a dignity and repression that made his part stand out very big and very fine. Roscoe Arbuckle was Dr. Fenlon, the army surgeon. Fatty played the big audience on his knee and dandled it up and down and played with it. The crowd was "his baby" every time he had the stage.

Clara Kimball Young was great. Her Estrella, the foolish and afterward repentant wife, was a most excellent piece of acting. Bessie Barriscale was Bonita, the tomboy sister of Estrella. As I said before, everyone stole the show, and Bessie was one of the best little burglars.

The House Falls for Charlie.

Bill Desmond, as Tony the vacquero, who had learned his English from the cowboys, made a big hit. He wooed Ruth Renick, as Lena, in a mixture of Mexican love words, mandolin playing and Americano cuss words that was one of the big hits.

Charlie Murray got away with the part of Sergeant Kellar, German accent and all, in fine shape. His make-up was great, and, like Fatty, the house was all his all the time he was on the stage.

Clyde Fillmore was Captain Hodgeman, the heavy. "Arizona" never had a worse one. In the last act when Dusty slapped him in the face, and Tony bumped him off with a six-shooter, there wasn't a wet eye in the house—that's how good Clyde was!

Hayakawa and the Wine Bottle.

Sessue Hayakawa was Sam, the Chink cook. Gus Thomas didn't write many lines for Sam in "Arizona," but you can't keep a good actor down. Sessue made up for the lack of lines with pantomime; he pulled some clever stuff with a wine bottle that got one of the biggest hands of the evening.

Brenda Fowler, as the schoolma'am who wouldn't let Roscoe Arbuckle make love to her until he got suspenders to uphold his trousers and his dignity as an officer, was clever all the way through. Ruth Renick as Lena was a most pathetic little figure, and her work made the difficult part stand out very big. Sylvia Ashton, as Mrs. Canby, the ranch owner's wife, who hadn't been anywhere in her new breastpin for three years, couldn't have been any better if she had come in from some Arizona ranch to take the part.

Jack Holt and Monte Blue, as two lieutenants of the Eleventh U. S. Cavalry, and Eddie Sutherland as a private, and Ted Duncan and Edward McWade as a couple of majors, did not have much to do, but they got their share of applause every time they stepped into action.

It was a great show. At the close of the first act it looked as though the Pasadena flower parade had wandered into the building.

What Booze and Law Books Did.

Shooting was pretty brisk on the lots this week. One afternoon I went out to Jesse Hampton's studio and watched Robert Thornby making scenes for a film from Frederick Isham's story, "Half a Chance."

Who Goes There?

Says Bessie Love, clad in 68 pounds of helmet, hauberk and other heavy hardware for the A. J. Callaghan feature, "Bonnie May."

Mahlon Hamilton plays Sailor Burke, the leading role in "Half a Chance," which ought to satisfy any audience looking for action, adventure and a good story. The hero gets drunk, licked in a prize fight and accused of murder, jumps overboard in the bay at Frisco with irons on his legs, is cast away on a desert island with no other companions but a case of booze and a set of law books.

He drinks up the booze, studies the law books, and comes back after ten years, trims the scrapper that licked him in the first reel, overwhelms his enemies, establishes his innocence and wins the girl. A regular knock-down and drag-out drama, but a corking good one.

Lillian Rich, who used to be on the English music hall stage before she came over here and went into the movies, plays the part of Jocelyn Wray, the girl in the story when she is grown up, and little Mary McAllister is Jocelyn as a child of ten.

Little Mary is a happy kid. She's got a new pearl on her necklace. The little girl's mother started a string of pearls for her when she first started working in the pictures. One pearl has been put on the string for each film she has worked in. "Half a Chance" is little Mary's fifty-second picture, and the fifty-second pearl has been added to the string.

May Do Separated Fights Together.

Sidney Ainsworth, Wilton Taylor, Thomas Maguire, Josephine Crowell, John Gough and William Lion West are the others in the cast. William Lion West takes the part of the pugilist that fights the two big battles with Mahlon Hamilton. They both told me that they had agreed to make the fights real, and I stuck around quite awhile hoping that Thornby might get through with the scenes he was making with Miss Rich and start the fight stuff.

But when I asked him about it he said that he was saving the scraps until the very last scene.

"You can't take any chances on that kind of stuff," said Bob. "Hamilton is supposed to be put out in the first fight, and West in the second, and it may happen that either one of them will take the count so completely that it would tie up the production. The fights are supposed to take place ten years apart in the story, but we'll probably stage them as close together as we can—maybe on the same day."

Thornby promised to let me know when the fights were to be pulled off, however, which was something; at any rate, I had to satisfy my bloodthirsty soul with it, and so I left and went over to John Jasper's community lot, invaded the Andrew J. Callahan unit and watched Bessie Love walk around in a set wearing 68 pounds of hardware as a costume.

Bessie is making "Bonnie May," a story by Louis Dodge, who used to write pieces for the St. Louis papers when the Neck was similarly engaged.

"Bonnie May" is a story about a child of the stage, and Bessie is the child. She has a habit of dressing herself up in anything that looks like a costume that she comes across, and when she finds a suit of armor she puts it on, and then has a terrible time because she cannot get it off again. Joseph De Grasse was directing the scene, and when the action was through Bessie, who is a very friendly little person, walked clear across the stage to shake hands with me, armor and all.

Making the Run from Rochester to Cleveland with a Party of Picture Men on the 11:14

By EDWARD WEITZEL

SOMETHING told me to break the jump to Cleveland at Rochester, and pick up what information I could about the state of the picture game in the city that is the birthplace of the kodak and the yards and yards of virgin film which George Eastman turns out every working day of the year. It was a happy hunch; it gave me the opportunity to meet the exhibitors of the town that boasts a bridge lined on both sides with business structures after the fashion of the ancient bridge of London, and to observe the manner in which the popular screen theatre handles a record-breaking Sunday night crowd of regular patrons.

The Regent was the first theatre visited and the official house manager, William R. Callahan, gave a good demonstration of how much tactful, hard work is required to keep a constantly moving but always packed lobby of people under proper control. It was a lesson in a branch of showmanship that illustrates how courtesy and consideration have taken the place of old methods of herding human beings into a place of amusement. The good nature of the waiting crowds was also noticeable; they evidently realized that every effort was being made to avoid unnecessary delay and discomfort in getting them into the theatre.

Man's New Duty to Women.

A humorous touch was added when a couple on leaving the Regent paused in front of a frame of stills, while the young woman powdered her nose. This act in itself is performed too frequently to cause any comment, but—her escort was carrying her puff. When the girl's complexion had been satisfactorily repaired, she calmly handed the puff to her companion, and he obediently put it back into his pocket, leaving telltale marks of powder on the side of his coat. Man has long been known as the slave of women, but is the new sign of his subjection to be the title of "puff-bearer"?

A brief call on Manager John J. Farren, of the Victoria; Fred Sarr at Fay's, and short stops with General Manager George E. Simpson at the Piccadilly and the Gordon found all four theatres doing capacity business. Rochester's moving picture theatres are well run and liberally patronized.

How the Porter Won.

The information that the Rochester delegation was to leave Monday morning for the convention on the 11:14 settled the hour of my own departure. When we boarded the train, Edgar L. Weill of the Strand Theatre, Syracuse; Nikitas Dipson, of Batavia and Orleans, and George A. Hickey, Buffalo manager of Goldwyn, were in the chair car. I would like to be able to state that only film talk was indulged in, but "I raise you five" was the most frequent remark from the party in the smoking compartment. Edgar Weills' plan of attack upon the porter for the use of a table and extra chairs was so humorously skilful that the colored gentleman actually bet against his own money without knowing it—and won.

Among the Rochester exhibitors was June Greenstone, who entertained me with an account of his experience as the manager of a screen theatre. Mr. Greenstone is a fine type of a practical level-headed businessman who takes over the management of a picture house with only his hard sense and sound principles to guide him. His theatre, the Empire, like all neighborhood houses, required only intelligent selection of its programs to insure success. A shareholder in the house, he has made a well paying investment for himself and his partners.

During the conversation, Mr. Greenstone told a story to indicate that a witty remark often saves a man from an embarrassing position. A kindly old chap being asked to donate to a worthy cause, and not being able to spare the money, explained he had always known poverty, and that his mother when he was a very young child had been forced to have a cart made out of a soap box and to hire a little girl at 5 cents a day to push him around while his mother went out to work.

"And," the old chap added, "I regret I cannot help you, but I've been pushed for money ever since.

Says Independent Producers Are Ready with Better Pictures Than Ever Before

W. W. HODKINSON predicts that the pictures made by independent producers and released through the Hodkinson organization will be of higher average quality this season than ever before.

Seventeen pictures were released through Hodkinson from April, 1919, to April, 1920, and many of these are winning a steadily widening market. The success of the Benjamin B. Hampton Productions, for instance, justifies the statement that he has never made a failure, from "The Westerners," "The Sagebrusher" and "Desert Gold" to "Riders of the Dawn."

For the eight months following, seventeen pictures are already scheduled for release, and the rumors are that numerous independent producers are in daily conference with W. W. Hodkinson in regard to the distribution of their product.

From every angle—story, cast, producer, amount of money expended and exploitation possibilities—each of these pictures ranks as quality product. The Kerrigan production "No. 99" and "The Green Flame" provide this popular star with two of the best stories in which he has ever acted, it is said.

W. W. Hodkinson gives as evidence of the quality of forthcoming pictures the fact that each one is made by separate producing units, each with a reason for existing. The producing units releasing through Hodkinson will include Benjamin B. Hampton, Irvin Willat, J. Parker Reed, Jr., Robert Brunton, Dial Film Company and Louis Tracy Productions, Inc.

In addition to these pictures, President Hodkinson is negotiating for more product of similar grade. The seventeen mentioned above is the minimum number of pictures available for first-run houses during the next six months.

Carmel Myers Signs to Make Eight Pictures for Universal

THE return of Carmel Myers to Universal City recently was the signal for a jollification on the part of Universal stars and players, anxious to welcome the little star "home" after her fling on the musical comedy stage. Formerly one of Universal's most popular screen actresses, Miss Myers deserted the moving pictures to appear in "The Magic Melody," a musical comedy success.

Although she achieved immediate popularity before the footlights, a year on the stage was enough for her. She signed a new contract with Universal and will produce eight pictures during the coming year. She will be starred.

Her first picture, which she already has begun, is "In Folly's Trail," from a magazine story by Katherine Leiser Robbins. Dorris Schroeder has put the story into screen form and Rollin Sturgeon, one of Universal's leading directors, is in charge of the production.

Universal has surrounded Miss Myers with a cast of notable players, prominent in which are Thomas Holding. George B. Williams, Arthur Clayton, William Bainbridge, Beth Ivans and Viola Lind.

"In Folly's Trail" is a story of that phase of New York life which lies between aristocracy and Bohemia, with an occasional excursion into neighboring territory—where art holds sway or where the bright lights exert their lure.

Hazza Opens Office in Halifax

Phil Hazza, general manager Amalgamated Exhibitors Circuit, Ltd., Montreal, who is handling the Canadian distribution of all Hallmark Pictures Corporation's product, writes J. L. Burke, business manager, Hallmark, that he returned recently from a trip through the Maritime Provinces for the purpose of establishing a central exchange for this territory. Mr. Hazza decided on Halifax as the logical centre as the majority of theatres are in Nova Scotia. E. H. Teel, formerly in charge of the Regal offices in the Provinces, has been placed in charge of the Amalgamated interests there.

Abrogate Agreement

The agreement entered into between the Cinema Press Association, Inc., and the National Asscition of the Motion Picture Industry has been abrogated by mutual consent and the latter is no longer interested in any way in the activities of the former, which has undertaken the publication of a "Who's Who in Motion Pictures."

Geraughty on Advisory Staff

Tom Geraughty, famous scenario writer for Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, is now acting in an advisory capacity on Realart's staff of scenario writers at the Hollywood studios.

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Screen Shares Honors with Newspapers in Supplying Daily Convention Reports

THE moving picture, for the first time in the history of national conventions, shared honors with the daily press in giving daily screen reports of the important happenings of the national Republican convention at the Coliseum, this city. Every evening throughout the week patrons of the Chicago movies were entertained by seeing on the screen well defined, clear pictures of the historic events which took place during the day.

These remarkable moving pictures were not confined to any single national weekly, as International, Selznick, Pathe, Fox and the Kinogram had equal opportunities for taking and screening them. Great rivalry, of course, prevailed among the representatives of these concerns in getting their developed product to the screen first. E. B. Hatrick, general manager of International's New York office, who came on for the occasion to supervise the work, was one of the liveliest executives in the race for honors.

Gene Cour's Great Work.

Great work was done by Gene Cour, Chicago representative of the Kinogram weekly, whose initiative and experience made it possible to have the pictures taken at all. Several weeks ago Mr. Cour was seized with the idea to secure moving pictures of the new Chicago water tunnel. The matter of devising lights powerful enough for the purpose was the great obstacle to be overcome. In his difficulty Mr. Cour thought of President R. C. Vilas of the Pyle National Company, this city, which manufactured the old-fashioned locomotive headlight, with diffused beams. These powerful headlights proved excellent for the purpose and in their use he was guided by the instructions of Mr. Vilas.

Thirty Headlights Used.

Some time before the present convention had assembled Mr. Cour was considering the problem of taking moving pictures of the historic gathering and again conferred with Mr. Vilas. In the Pyle National Company's shop, a large, spacious building, almost equal in size to the Coliseum, Mr. Cour made several photographic experiments that were very encouraging.

Mr. Cour finally arrived at the conclusion that by using thirty of the old-fashioned locomotive headlights, each of which has a beam of 1,200,000 candlepower, the immense convention hall could be lighted satisfactorily at only a fraction of the cost required for installing the style of lamps ordinarily used in taking pictures. The thirty headlights were placed in front of the galleries of the Coliseum, focused on the platform, and the necessary wiring was made, under instructions from Mr. Vilas, who merely charged for the installation of the headlights and the wiring.

Credit Given to Cour.

The National Republican Committee was next consulted for permission to take moving pictures of the convention and at once consented, it being understood that the privilege of taking the pictures was extended to all the weekly movies. Weekly competitors of Kinogram give due credit to Mr. Cour for his initiative in the matter.

Pathe Chicago Sales Force at High Point of Efficiency

W. A. ASCHMANN, Pathe's Chicago manager, has been giving special thought and attention to his sales department since his appointment last March. He believes thoroughly in salesmen of a high type, men who can be depended upon to carry out strictly the Pathe policy of fair and square dealing with exhibitors. He insists rigorously on the strict observance of this policy.

"As the home office in New York is giving us product of a high quality, it is my plain duty to see to it that the exhibitor gets service of the highest type," says Manager Aschmann. "The salesman, in order to be thoroughly efficient, must be just as interested as I am in seeing that the exhibitor gets exactly what he is promised by the Pathe organization. For this reason he must be very careful to carry out the policy of this office."

Mr. Aschmann is satisfied that he has completed a very efficient sales organization and is confident that every member of it is carrying out the policy of the Chicago office just as he would himself.

Mr. Aschmann holds a sales meeting of an hour's duration every Saturday. At these meetings not only are the new releases discussed, but Mr. Aschmann insists on suggestions by every salesman as to the happenings in his territory for the week past. By this means the entire sales force is benefited by the experiences and errors, if any errors have been made. Moreover, the younger salesmen are benefited by the experiences of the older and all are benefited by the suggestions made by Mr. Aschmann personally.

Manager Aschmann expressed himself to the writer as being confident that he now has a sales force every member of which is working fully 100 per cent. with the policy of the office and possessed of an enthusiasm that guarantees success.

Several changes have been made recently in the Chicago sales organization, which is now made up as follows:

Feature Sales Department—S. B. Waite, branch feature sales manager; salesmen, L. Y. Crump, P. C. Havill, A. G. Spencer, D. R. Davis and A. F. Hickox.

Short Subject Sales Department—R. Salkin, P. De Outo, Frank Harris, C. Keppler, J. S. Gillick, H. W. Ricker, M. Whitmoyer and T. G. Meyers.

F. P. Ishmael is now circuit sales manager. He was long connected with the World Film Corporation as assistant manager of the Chicago office.

"Lunatics and Politics" Making at Emerald Studio

"LUNATICS AND POLITICS," the fifth Alice Howell comedy to be produced in Chicago this season by Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, is now being made at the Emerald studio, this city. Miss Howell is particularly interested in and optimistic about the success of this latest two-reeler, which is a burlesque on feminism.

"It is exaggerated, but it isn't rough,"

These Are the Players and Director of "The Week End," for American.

she remarked the other day. "I'm trying to get away from the more violent comedy roles with which I have always been identified. It is not easy to do this, especially when one has established a reputation for rough-and-tumble comedy.

"It started about five years ago at the Mack Sennett studio. I was one of the mob in a police raid. Suddenly I threw myself into the thick of the fray. The other women drew back. We all had on evening gowns and the girls didn't want to spoil them. I had no scruples. I fell downstairs and literally wiped up the floor with my gown. Mack Sennett was impressed and decided to give me a chance. Ever since then I have been expected to inject a lot of slapstick into my performances."

The most recently released of Miss Howell's comedies is "Rubes and Romance," which has been out for about two weeks and is proving quite popular. They are distributed through Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, with main offices in New York City and branches in Chicago and other important cities throughout the country.

Chicago Daylight Saving

Beginning Sunday morning, June 13, Chicago clocks and other timepieces were set one hour ahead, in accordance with the city ordinance passed on Monday, June 7. This schedule will not apply to the arrival and departure of through trains at Chicago, but it will govern suburban trains. The Chicago Board of Trade has also adopted it.

The new schedule makes the difference in time between New York and Chicago only one hour instead of two, as formerly.

Rothacker Has Fun-Fest

Watterson R. Rothacker believes in happily varying business with pleasure at frequent intervals out at his big plant on the north side. The latest of these enjoyable fun-fests took place Saturday night, June 5, in the Rothacker studio, where a jazz band furnishd music to a delighted throng of Rothacker workers. During the intervals between dances reels from Mack Sennett's "Married Life" were run off.

George Gibson, the plant superintendent, had secured several good vaudeville acts from "Loop" theatres to serve as an interlude to the dancing. The acts were put on at 11 p. m. and continued while refreshments were served, after which dancing was enjoyed.

Fox Building Ready Soon

The Fox Film Corporation has secured a lease for fifteen years on the ground plot at 910-14 South Wabash avenue to erect a fireproof building for its Chicago exchange offices and vaults for the storage of its films. Work on the foundation has already started and the building will be completed about October 1.

Ascher Brothers Open Their First Local Suburban House

THE Forest Park Theatre, first of the new suburban, modern picture theatres to be built by Ascher Brothers, will be opened Saturday evening, June 19. The outlay on this theatre is named at $350,000, and the plans and their carrying out fully confirm that figure. The seating capacity is 1,500.

The Forest Park, in addition to a good local business, will draw patrons from Maywood, Riverside, Berwyn, Melrose Park and other suburban centers. Located at West Madison street and Desplaines avenue, in the heart of the Forest Park business district, the theatre is easily reached from various surrounding points.

This is the first suburban theatre venture made by Ascher Brothers and it is safe to say that it will be successful and the first of a chain of the suburban type. Manager Menzing of Ascher Brothers' Chateau Theatre will have charge. A modern orchestra will be installed, under the direction of one of the best leaders on the Ascher circuit, it is announced.

Carl Laemmle Visits Chicago and Talks of European Trip

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, spent the entire week of June 7 in the city. When seen for a moment he announced that a new feature, "Outside the Law," with Priscilla Dean as the star and Tod Browning as director, has been started at Universal City. It will be remembered that Mr. Browning directed "The Virgin of Stamboul." Eric Stroheim will also begin work on a new feature soon, Mr. Laemmle stated, but the name of the picture had quite escaped his memory.

Mr. Laemmle and his family party will leave for Europe on July 8. His itinerary after he crosses the ocean will include a stop of three days in London, five days in Paris, thence to his father's home in Laupheim, Germany, where he will spend a few days; thence to Carlsbad, where he will remain for a month. He will afterward visit Switzerland, Belgium, Italy and probably Monte Carlo. He will arrive in America about the end of October.

Chicago Concern to Open Its Million-Dollar Theatre Soon

THE first theatre of the chain of houses planned for Chicago by Chicago United Theatres, Inc., on which construction has been under way for the past year, will be ready for opening some time in July. The theatre is located at Sixty-third and Halsted streets, in one of Chicago's busiest sections outside of the "Loop." It has been named the Stratford and will seat 3,000 persons. The site and building represent an outlay of $1,000,000, it is said.

A complete Typhoon cooling and ventilating system has been installed and all the other modern improvements that serve to promote the comfort of patrons have been provided.

Bernard G. Ziv, who has been connected with the amusement department of the Chicago American for the past five years, was recently appointed director of publicity for Chicago United Theatres, Inc.

Rothacker and Quirk Room-mates

Watterson R. Rothacker and James Quirk, the latter the well-known editor of Photoplay Magazine, shared a suite at the the Hotel Cleveland during the big Cleveland convention. They were kept busy greeting hundreds of friends and acquaintances.

Gives Correct Release Date

Release date for "The Notorious Miss Lisle," starring Katherine MacDonald and which will be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has been set for August 2.

The recent announcement stating that this production would not be released until February 14, 1921, was an error.

The Scene in the Center Was Taken at Midnight. It Was Just a Gambol.

Show This Window Talk to Local Merchants

Used Part of "Shore Acres" as Prologue to Production

USING a part of a play as the prologue to that play was the unusual stunt worked by H. M. Rouda, of the Merrill Theatre Milwaukee. In presenting "Shore Acres" at his house, he used the storm scenes in the sixth reel for his prologue, with light and sound effects, and then inserted the film for the reguar showing of the picture.

A quartet followed the prologue with "Your Eyes Have Told Me So," using this as the theme of the picture and starting the fiming before the chorus was done, that the end of the chorus might cover the announcement titles at the opening. In the scene where the young people are washed ashore the bass sang "Asleep in the Deep," heightening the effect.

Quinn Parks His Cares by Using Street Exploitation

JIMQUIN, of the Rialto Theatre, El Paso, is strong for street stunts as well as newspaper hook-ups. Put it in brief and say that he goes after anything which will yield publicity. Two of his recent stunts are shown in picture. The water wagon is an adaptation of the cart used for "Water, Water Everywhere," by nuherous exhibitors. The solitary Texan on this Volstead vehicle is Bud Young, publicity stealer, who went along to make faces at the girls and set a good example to the men.

The other stunt is more notable. The U. S. Marine contingent did not have a float for the Americanization Day parade, so Jimquin had one built and sent him through the town properly equipped. A card on the front of the car with "Courtesy of the Rialto Theatre" was all he got out of it, but Jimquin figured that would be enough, and it was.

Another recent stunt was a special party for the convalescent soldiers in the Base Hospital at Fort Bliss. The soldiers and their nurses came in state and helped to make a noise to advertise "Excuse My Dust."

The secret of Quinn's success is that he works all angles. He does not work a street stunt or a newspaper gag or a lobby display and let it run. He works all three of them and anything else he can think of.

One Woman Merchant Credits Her Success to Her Motion Picture Window Shows

GENERALLY it is a fight to make the small store owner realize that giving a portion of his window space to an outside enterprise may help his own business, but Mrs. L. A. Clifford, of New Utrecht avenue, Brooklyn, frankly cerdits her success to the picture displays she arranges.

She understands what few can be made to see, that there are more persons interested in motion pictures than are interested in sheet music. She hooks up and not only makes sales, but has actually built up a mail order business.

Pictures Best Draw.

"Merchants generally appreciate the value of connecting their good with popularity," says Mrs. Clifford, "but a thing that they don't seem to comprehend is that motion pictures is the most popular thing that has ever occurred in this world. Clothing is worn every day, but for every person who can tell wool from cotton there are ten who can name six or eight motion picture stars and a number of the pictures in which they have appeared.

"People know the 'movies' and are more vitally interested in matters pertaining to their favorite stars or to pictures which they have pleased them than in any other subject. I mean by that that the public as a mass is more interested in the motion picture industry than in any other matter that exists. Any merchant can prove this assertion for himself by checking up the attendance at the motion picture theatres in his merchandising district and then trying to think of any other thing which will engage the attention of that many of his possible customers.

Window a Salesman.

"It is a generally accepted fact now that window is a store's best salesman, and the first object of a window display is to attract attention. Probably not one person in ten who passes my store daily is interested in anything I have for sale, but eight out of every ten of them have an interest in motion pictures. I could reach that one by a display of sheet music or of records or of piano rolls. My aim, however, is to reach everybody that I possibly can, and so I want to impress upon everyone that I have certain wares for sale. There isn't an individual but what has a realtive or friend but what is a purchaser of any commodity in common trade.

One Window for Program.

"This is the way I capitalize the popularity of motion pictures. The only decorations inside the store are large colored prints which I got from a motion picture exchange of Constance and Norma Talmadge, Charles and Mildred Harris Chaplin, Anita Stewart, Katherine MacDonald, Mary Pickford, Charles Ray and other stars who all have their followers.

"The backing of one window is held sacred to the weekly program cards of the three theatres in my district, and even on nights when the store is closed that window is kept lighted, for it furnishes a recognized amusement guide for the neighborhood, and it always has something in it that will bring customers in to me.

Solves Storekeeper's Problem.

"The other window I use for special displays and generally use the picture of a well-known star, or a cut-out from a well-known pictures with appropriate sign cards to connect it up with music of some description.

"I have been told that the exploitation my store gives pictures helps the attendance at the theatres in the district. If that is so I am satisfied, for as long as the theatres will keep running pictures that arouse the interest such as those which I have mentioned my problem of attractive and interesting window displays is solved."

Six Theatres Combine Ads.

Six theatres in St. Louis, the Arco, Lafayette, Gravios, Novelty, Maffitt and Montgomery, combined recently in joint advertising for "Sex," playing the Glaum subject day and date for two and cleaning up with the display they were able to make. The idea is not new, for Universal tried this something more than a year ago, but the results should lead to other experiments along the same lines where a sufficient number of prints are available.

Of Course a Submarine Is a Water-Wagon in a Sense, But Still—

Jimquin, of El Paso, advertised "Six Best Cellars" with a sprinkling cart, and when he found the navy recruiters had no float for the Americanization Day parade he pitched in and built a tank car for them, and all he asked was a tiny credit sign in front. Don't tell him it pays to advertise. He wrote the words of that song and has been singing it ever since.

Another Twist to the Postcard Teasers

How Louisville Hitched-up Marriage Month to Neilan's "Don't Ever Marry"

HOOKING up Marshall Neilan's First National release, "Don't Ever Marry," to June, the month of matrimony, put over the subject big for George J. Maurer, of the Strand, Louisville.

He started off with a hook-up with one of the local papers, which apparently undertook to save prospective brides and grooms from their terrible fate; offering to send all such couples to the Strand as its guests. It also extended the same invitation to the recently married, that they might realize what they had gotten into.

Treated in a lightly facetious vein, this stunt pulled strongly and for the entire town talking about the play to come to the Strand.

Rubbing It In.

Building up on this, Mr. Maurer used snappy cards in the waiting rooms of physicians, in the court rooms where divorce cases were heard, in the office where marriags licenses were made out and other places where they might do some good, including the offices of lawyers.

The information you're seeking, now figuratively speaking,
If you add one there'll be two to carry,
A father-in-law you'll add, just to keep you in bad,
Take our tip—"Don't Ever Marry."

She may be so shy—have that angel look in her eye;
Just a quaint little saint, little fairy;
But wait till you'r wed—and feel that flat-iron on the head;
Oh Boy! "Don't Ever Marry."

You'll need no guide, with a wife by your side;
She'll keep you straight, don't fear;
You'll be washing dishes, like all of the fishes;
"Don't Ever Marry"—you hear.

Her eyes may be blue, her hair a golden hue,
A wonder smile, a doll, a fairy,
But how will she look at the end of the book,
The answer—"Don't Ever Marry."

And Sashes, Too.

And as the run drew near, each house employee was provided with a sash, worn across the body, containing the same sage advice. The younger people wore these on the street, as well as in the theatre, forming walking advertisements.

All told, the campaign was about as exhaustive as it could be made, and yet, in spite of all Mr. Maurer's efforts, there was not reported any visible decrease in the number of marriage licenses issued.

The only result was an increase in the number of Strand tickets sold. This was all Mr. Maurer really cared about. He didn't give a whoop if they did go ahead and get married.

Gave Small-Town Twist to Jazz a Mailing Card Stunt

OUT in Puente, Cal., the High School gives a Goldwyn picture every Saturday night, and they work it just like a regular theatre. Recently the publicity man wanted something to help put over "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" and John W. Rankin, of the Goldwyn Los Angeles office, suggested the post card stunt.

The names of fifty women in Puente were secured, and a brief personal item about each one was obtained. Then the cards were written and mailed in Los Angeles, and it worried the women sick. Evidently the writer knew the recipient of the card, for the personal mention indicated that clearly, yet Mrs. Brown knew no "Mabel" or "Jane" or "Alice" in Los Angeles and she took the puzzlement to others, with the result that the cards got all over town and the entire population was all worked up over the picture.

This is about the last possible refinement in the card stunt, but it is worth the trouble if it is worked from a town where the personal dope can be obtained, and it has the advantage of cutting down the mailing list.

It will be remembered that the mailing card from out of town got its start from some of the Lynch houses in Georgia and Florida, and the idea has already spread to California.

Did you ever start a stunt that was worked all over the country?

This Is Not a Bunch of Louisville Neverweds.

They are just wearing the sashes to help along the Neilan play because it is the house attraction, and if they don't boom the play they won't get their money. Those girls don't look a bit like old maids, do they?

This Is an Ideal Hookup Booming "Treasure Island"

HOOKING up "Treasure Island" with the jewelry displays is a natural suggestion, but the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, worked a new angle on a straight display of jewels. It made a combination treasure chest and tableau display in the window of A. Isaacs, one of the leading San Francisco jewelers.

The Combination Treasure Chest and Tableau in the Window of A. Isaacs, San Francisco.

As can be seen, the main feature is a strong chest with huge brass hinges, the cover resting on top of the chest and carrying a lettered sign made to suggest a book cover with the title on the right and the house and date on the supposed back cover. Inside was a smaller chest resting on some rocks with cut out figures of Jim Hawkins and one of the pirates. Artificial plants built up the suggestion of scenery, and rings and other jewels gave color to the display.

Gersdorf Liked It

Phil Gersdorf liked the Tremont Temple pass so well when it was reproduced in these columns a couple of weeks ago that he went right out and had special passes printed up for Griffith's "The Idol Dancer" and plans to keep the scheme going. From Boston to Jacksonville is some jump, but the probabilities are that the idea will travel even further before it gets through. Shoot in one of your own good ideas and give it the advantage of travel. Gersdorf has more than paid for the ideas he has derived from others. Now you kick in.

Gave Midnight Matinee to Prove Value of Underline

FINDING a new use for the midnight matinee, Mr. Kashin, of the Holman, Montreal, gave a pre-showing of "The Girl of the Sea" following the last performance of the preceding bill.

The show was announced by means of newspaper advertisements and these advertisements—up to the capacity of the house—served as tickets of admission. The doors were closed as soon as the house was filled to the fire limits and the show run off.

In putting over the scheme, Mr. Kashin announced that he was so thoroughly convinced of the merits of the production that he thought the best advertising would be the word-of-mouth commendation of those who had already seen the show, and the event was announced as a "Free Show for Critics."

This is merely another form of preshowing, but in a city this stunt works better than showing to a selected list through invitation, provided that the picture is one which is capable of making a strong popular appeal.

Used Miniature Baree Den to Tell of Marge O'Doone

EMPLOYING a miniature wild animal den, in which was housed "Baree," the wolf dog of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," was the way the Bijou, Racine, put over this Vitagraph subject. The den was chaperoned through the streets by an Esquimau in fur parka, and it attracted such crowds that at times it blocked traffic and tied up the street car lines. The den looks as though it might have been borrowed from some dog and pony circus, but it does not have to be as elaborate in order to be noticed. Any home-made den, built on an express wagon will suffice. The chief idea is to give emphasis to the Alaskan locale, and for this an elaborate den is not as essential as would be the case with a circus play.

Goldberg Stunt in Omaha Brings Police After Rival House and Ballentyne Pays

QUITE the smallest theatre in the world was recently opened in Omaha by Harry Goldberg and closed by the police. Incidentally the police landed with both feet on Manager Ballentyne of the Moon because the theatre happened to be temporarily parked in front of the house—and Ballentyne stood the gaff like the good sport he is.

Goldberg, who runs the Sun Theatre, had "The Virgin of Stamboul" booked, and conceived the idea of mounting a small projector on a truck and sending it through the streets.

As shown in the illustration, there were peep-holes at the rear for eight spectators, and every five minutes a couple of hundred feet of the picture were run off, with a trailer for the truck people.

Audience of Eight.

"See What Sari Saw" was the slogan and the title of the reel, and, while only eight people could see the show at one time, there was nothing to prevent a hundred or so from wondering what it was all about and finding out.

To keep the thing as inconspicuous as possible, Goldberg painted it a bright yellow with red lettering. Outside of that it was as subdued as a negro parson going home from church on a dark night with his coat collar turned up.

The Police Got It.

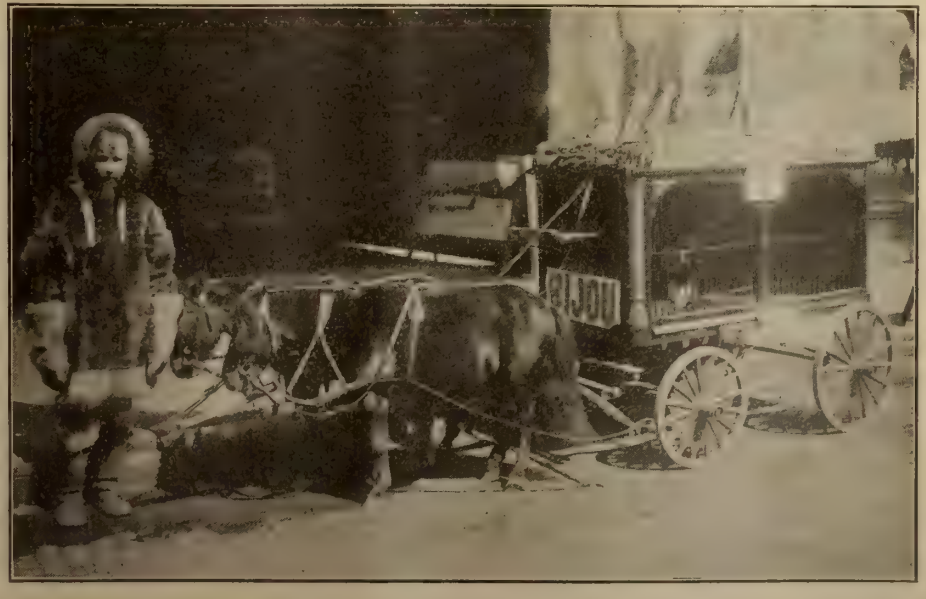
The third night of the theatre's existence it parked in front of the Moon, a rival house, and it wasn't doing a thing but tying up traffic. And just because it had no license the police pinched the outfit and told Ballentyne that just for that he would have to take his marquise decorations down.

Instead of telling that the orphan was not his, Ballentyne stood for the order and pulled in his own display, while over at the Sun the Virgin decorations ran full blast, with the lobby all dolled up with red and white striped fabric to suggest an Arabic tent and the box office draped to match.

After a while the true facts came out and the laugh was on the police, and the next time Ballentyne wants to cheat a little the bluecoats will look the other way to pay up for the blunder. So at the present writing all are pleased.

But if you want to open a truck theatre yourself, follow the plans and add a police permit to the outfit.

The Smallest Theatre in the World.



This Is Not an Illinois Dog-Catching Outfit.

The pup is supposed to be Baree, the canine hero of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," and this is the way the Bijou, Racine, Ill., put this Vitagraph subject over.

Has Two of the Trio, But Where Is Cash's Hootch?

LOWELL CASH sends in a couple of really good novelties for Arrow attractions. One is a pair of real dice mounted on a card lettered

You Can Gamble with These,
(the dice here)
but Arrow Attractions are Sure Winners.

The other side shows a list of late Arrow productions. The dice are not cheap, but if you want to reach a select list the novelty of the idea will repay their cost, and you can get small dice cheaply in quantities.

The second novelty is a package of ten cigarettes with the imprint of "Tex" on each and a reference to the danger of giving away your private brand of smokes as shown in "The Trail of a Cigarette." One of the William Steiner "Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries" series.

These are convention specials, rather above the average, but the ideas can be adapted to house advertising.

But with dice and smokes, where is the hootch which forms the third side of this popular triangle? Cash left none of that.

The Right Sort of House Organ Still Pays

Takes Full Pages and Uses Half for His Press Notices

SENDING in a full page, F. J. Dietlein, of the Princess, Opelousas, La., says it is "small-town advertising" and wishes that we would give more space and advice to the small-town man. Everything in this department is for the small town man as well as the big city manager. It is merely a matter of proportion. The big men hit up the little stunts to suit the size of their house. The small man cuts down the big fellow's job, but that is all. It is all good advertising and it will work, nine times out of ten, just as well in Opelousas as it will in Kansas City or San Francisco or Boston. We don't know, at that, that Mr. Dietlein stands in need of much advice. The page he sends in is all his, but instead of taking it for a display he uses a Bleich-style weekly program, some detached spaces and the rest press talk. In the right hand column, just below the cut, he uses a special heading for "Out of Town Folks," with the sub-head "Seen in the Princess Lobby." This covers half a dozen items about strangers who drop in more or less regularly from out of town. It is the most valuable space on the page, for it makes personal friends. Long ago S. Barret McCormick built up a Denver theatre at the then amazing prices of ten and fifteen cents, and he did it partly by standing in with the society editor and getting notes in the personal column. Mr. Dietlien is doing the same thing on a smaller scale and doing it just as well. We think it would pay him to take even more of his space to link well known town and out of town names to his theatre. Among the other things he sends in are a dance program of twenty numbers, the house program on the reverse side. The dance started immediately after the performance, which accounts for the tie-up. Another is a program apparently following the lines of the Theatre Louisiana, of Baton Rouge. It is clean and neat and in small compass gives about all that any house can need. Mr. Dietlein does not need as much help as he thinks he does. He is doing nicely as it is. All he need is to realize that every page of this department is for managers of all houses between 200 and 2,000 capacity, or larger or smaller, for that matter. Apparently he has gotten good from this department already.

A Full Page Worked as Part Advertising and Part Reader.

Working Two-Column Cuts in Three-Column Widths

STANLEY CHAMBERS, of the Palace and Regent, Wichita, who grew desperate over the paper situation lately and threatened to take the tar brush to the stuff and make 'em as black as they could be painted, seems to lack the nerve, for he sends in a big batch and there is not a blotchy ad in the lot. He makes a nice study of handing a two-column cut in a three-column space in these displays. on the right it is worked to the margins and on the left it is filled in with copy on the right to fill a three. Apparently he had the cut notched himself to let in the "Faster" line, which serves to bind the two parts of the wider display, but by cutting in this line the suggestion is created that the other short measure banks were kept that way on purpose. In one instance he had something to say about the revealed identity of a masked dancer which was worth the two-column announcement, so he put it on top of the cut, where it could spread. In the other he needed merely to keep on telling, so he went to a wider space which gives a better proportioned display. He offers a novelty in the form of a reproduction from the nearest key city paper for "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde." This is not always a good plan, for the public no longer cares much about critical opinion of the big cities, but Wichita cares more about Kansas City opinion than it does about New York's ideas, and Mr. Chambers knew that this would carry weight, so he made it the basis of a nicely balanced display, a little different from anything he had done lately and therefore of added interest.

Home Made Teasers Done from Plan Book Material

MOST of the advertisements for "Down on the Farm" have been taken from the plan book, for there was a wealth of really available material. Outside of the special stunts, the plan book covered everything, giving copy for displays or copy to serve as the basis for home-written copy. Even these scatter advertisements for the Garrick Theatre, Los Angeles, were done from the plan book sketches, but they were made into a new two twos with black ground. Most of the lines do not show in the newspaper work, but the three essential lines were there; the picture had been heavily advertised by the Kinema and that was all they felt they needed. The Garrick took it at popular prices immediately following the first run and got all of the benefit of previous advertising. This is a point so many overlook. They feel that to use second run will spoil sales, whereas you can always clean up for a week or two on a higher priced run. We imagine that the Garrick paid a better percentage on the investment than did the first run house. That "Down on the Farm" stuff, like "Pollyanna," was a great tribute to Charles E. Moyer's methods. He hit it just right both times.

House Organ Not Only Pulls, But Pays Expenses and More

ALTHOUGH most theatres have cut out or at least have curtailed their weekly programs, the Adams, Waterloo, Ia., keeps up its sixteen-page issue and more than meets the rising costs with its income from outside advertising. And this is not because it sells space to the exclusion of its own news and displays, but because it makes the contents so readable that merchants know that the paper is in demand and so are willing to pay to be represented. Instead of grabbing a trade paper and using the first small items to present themselves, the editor really makes an intelligent selection and turns out a readable sheet. Paper costs have hit house programs hard, but it is still possible to work this st int

Lick Your Printer: Don't Let Him Lick You

Chain Houses Run Too Much to Hand Lettered Displays

HAND lettering, not always well handled, seems to be the stumbling block to the Paramount chain of theatres in St. Louis. They frequently come close to something good, but through the fault of their artist they lose out. With most of the attractions showing at two or even more houses, here is plenty of space at command in which much of value could be done, but the artist does not always put it over. The first example is for Nazimova in "The Heart of a Child." Now, Nazimova sells on name, and the name should be played across the board. Here in a four five and a halfs the name is lettered in half space and blanketed at the top with the signature and below with a bank of all capital hand lettering. The other half of the width is given to the title and is similarly blanketed. The name is marred by a lot of white blotches in the lettering. It makes it less easy to read and vastly less distinctive. If you look closely you will see that these blotches are tiny hearts. That is a neat little idea, but what is the use of a neat little idea when the hearts won't sell even a fractional part of a single ticket and a clear, legible star name will? No one is looking in the advertising section for cute ideas in lettering. They are looking for entertainment, and a bold "Nazimova" will sell about forty times as many tickets as a hundred thousand hearts. The name should have been carried clear across the space, or better, the cut of the dancer should have been drawn over to the right and the name run across to it, for the dancer forms a good attraction, and will help. This sample may be artistic, but it is poor advertising. The same effort at alleged art effects spoils what might have been a hundred per cent. display. This is a five five and a halfs for Alice Lake in

A Good White Spaced Ad Spoiled by the Lettering.

Shore Acres. Here the layout man makes good use of white space, but the artist upsets his work by some inexcusably ornate lettering. It is a crime to do lettering like this when a neat, legible block letter would have looked as well and would have sold better. The artist has come closest to a real display, but he slipped up at the last moment and spoiled it all by making the star name and title look like Venetian grill work. We do not think that it pays to take space and make such poor use of it. These are unusually poor examples of work from St. Louis. Possibly they have put on a new artist who has not yet caught the trick, but he should be taken down cellar and given a lecture with a club if he persists in spoiling white paper at this stage of the game.

Plans an Entire Campaign with Only a Pair of Cuts

THESE two displays from a Chicago paper show part of a Chicago campaign built upon two cuts, a single and double column of the same design. These are both fifty line displays, one a single and the other a double column space. The Saturday display was only 150 lines double and used the two column size of the same cut. They are taken from the display for the Randolph, a Jones, Linick & Schaeffer house. Chicago houses do not advertise largely and 300 lines of advertising in a single space is much above the average, but with this cut for an attractor the space showed to advantage because it left so much room for the type. It does not always happen that a plan book cut can be used to such advantage, but this design was happily chosen and it worked in all sizes. Using the same cut daily identifies the space and drives home the title through iteration. First National has done much more artistic work, but it has seldom turned out a more thoroughly practical cut, though they work successfully to give the exhibitor just what he needs. This just happens to be above the usual good average, and the Chicago advertisers were quick to see its value as a trade-mark for this attraction. Even the usual arguments against reverse and hand lettering do not hold here. The very oddity of the lettering is a part of the design.

Don't Grow Discouraged If Your Ads Don't Look Right

SENDING in a bunch of stuff, a well-known manager adds: "I wouldn't blame you for throwing a lot of this into the waste basket. From the way I feel when I see a lot of my copy in type, I think that is where much of it belongs." That's hardly the way to feel about it, though it certainly is discouraging to sweat blood over a piece of copy and then find that the printer has slaughtered it through a use of wrong type or that the artist does not get your idea over or has substituted something of his own. It's discouraging, but the way to feel is that you will get a better result the next time or break a leg. Get after the compositor and try to have a better understanding with him.

Slip him a couple of tickets and tell him to look you up when he comes down. Then coax him into the office and show him his botch and what other towns and other printers are doing. Get him interested. If he is not a downright Bolshevist he'll take a pride in his work and try and do better next time. After a while you'll get just what you want, particularly if you take the time to take it to the office yourself and insist upon talking it over with the man who is actually going to set up the ad.

Artists are more difficult, as a rule. They are stubborn brutes and think that the layman does not know about their art. Maybe he doesn't, but the man who is spending anywhere from twenty cents an inch to fifty cents a line knows a lot more about advertising than the average artist will ever learn. And the more able the artist the more stubborn he is apt to be. If you use art work, it is often better to get some promising beginner and train him up to your own ways. It can be done and it works well. But don't let the appearance of the published advertisement discourage you. Let it lead you to greater effort and eventually you'll win.

Got a Front Page Cartoon from a Local Feature Title

THIS cutting from the Omaha Bee shows how a local run for "Why Change Your Wife?" was the incentive to the paper's cartoonist. Very often some coming title will suggest an apt cartoon and if you think of it, slip over and hand the suggestion to the cartoonist. Tell him in advance so that he can use the cartoon while the picture is showing. Now and then you can put one over and possibly you can obtain the original sketch for a lobby showing and so build up on the idea. It's a fine way to get onto the front page without paying for it, and such a hook-up gives you a real standing. Try for it. They cannot do worse than tell you no.

Among Busy Film Exchangemen

Pittsburgh

Realart Managers Swap Jobs.

Harry E. Lotz, Realart manager in Pittsburgh, and Henry E. Wilkinson, Buffalo, have exchanged posts, effective since May 31. Mr. Wilkinson joined Realart last fall, immediately after being released from the Naval Reserve, in which he served for the duration of the war as an aviator.

McAleer Takes Over Exchange.

John McAleer has taken over the Circle Film Attractions, Pittsburgh, which he has been managing for Mr. Nadler, of New York City.

Entertained by Fairbanks.

Carlos Moore, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the United Artists exchange, accompanied by his wife, were entertained in New York recently by Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks.

Film Salesman Touring.

M. J. Chernoff, special representative at the Pittsburgh Goldwyn office, is spending some time at the Cleveland and Detroit offices, where he will try to show them how he does it.

Kansas City

Pathe's Business Increasing.

The already well established business of the Pathe Exchange is continuing to increase and multiply in spite of the summer season. There is no let-up. According to Harry Taylor, manager of Pathe in Kansas City, they are taking on more features and special releases all the time.

Film Salesmen's News.

H. McLaughlin has severed his connections with Select Pictures Corporation, Kansas City, and is now working for Robertson-Cole in Oklahoma City.

J. J. McCarthy, head salesman for Metro, who is now in Wichita selling news stuff, will return to Kansas City on Thursday.

Manager Now of Select-Republic.

Jack Weil has resigned his duties as manager for the Republic Pictures Corporations and G. C. Reed has assumed the responsibilities of Mr. Weil in addition to his office as manager of the Select Exchange. This combination gives Select and Republic the same working force and consequently they will work more in unison than ever before.

Gary Returns to Goldwyn.

R. C. Garry, publicity man for Robertson-Cole in Kansas City, is going back whence he came—to Goldwyn. Mr. Gary thinks that he will probably land at Atlanta, Georgia or New Orleans.

Moves Down from Omaha.

H. Calbert, brother of Curly Calbert, with the Universal Exchange, Omaha, will start Monday as salesman with the Metro Pictures Corporation, in Kansas City.

T. E. Larson in New York.

T. E. Larson, general manager of the Peacock Productions, left the early part of the week for New York and is now looking over the market for future productions.

Proud As a Peacock.

According to B. C. Cook, manager of Peacock, Kansas City, they have the best salesman going in Morris Fink. Mr. Fink on his first week out hit twenty-one towns and came back with a contract from every town but one. Mr. Fink's plan of campaign is to long distance his exhibitor before arriving in town, have him meet Mr. Fink at the train, write him out a check, and then the salesman catches the next train out of town.

New York Loses—K. C. Gains.

Mrs. B. C. Cook and son Morton arrived in Kansas City from New York last week to make Mr. Cook, manager of Peacock Productions, the happiest man in the world.

Equity Film's "Catch On."

Clara Kimball Young's second Equity production, "The Forbidden Woman," owing to its success the first week at the Doric was held over a second week and with continued success. Manager Curtis of the Doric Theatre immediately booked "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" another Peacock special, to open for a first run in Kansas City on June 27.

"Cleaning Up" Missouri.

Bud Barskey, manager of the Peacock office in St. Louis was in Kansas City this week. B. C. Cook lent him two salesmen to clean up the balance of the Missouri territory for Equity Productions including an all star stage of fifty-two, featuring Alice Brady, Robert Warwick, George Beban, and Ethel Clayton.

See "Wonder Man" Privately.

A private screening of Georges Carpentier in "The Wonder Man" was held June 7 at the Liberty Theatre. It was the unanimous opinion of the two hundred film men, exhibitors, managers, as well as society people who witnessed the screening that the picture was a winner. Carpentier will be in Kansas City in person at Electric Park on June 15.

"Marge O'Doone" a Success.

C. A. Maddux, assistant manager of the Vitagraph Exchange, reports that they have had wonderful success, especially in Oklahoma and Arkansas, on their super-production, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," which is now running at our Doric Theatre.

Buffalo

P. H. Smith Resigns.

The big surprise of the week among Buffalo exchanges was the sudden news of the resignation of P. H. Smith as manager of the local First National office, taking effect June 14. Mr. Smith went to New York on a proposition and is expected to announce his plans for the future soon. No other changes in the local personnel are expected. Mr. Smith's successor has not been announced as yet.

Realart Signs Elmwood.

Manager Harry E. Lotz of the Realart office announces the signing of a contract with manager Bruce Fowler of the Elmwood Theatre for the second run in Buffalo of the Realart star series. Mr. Lotz has been touring through the territory the past week and brought home a machine load of contracts. Henry E. Wilkinson, former Buffalo Realart chief, who is now at the Pittsburgh office, was in town for a few days, visiting old friends.

Gives Up Teck to U. of B.

The W. W. Hodkinson corporation, which has leased the Shubert-Teck for a series of big production presentations, co-operated with the University of Buffalo in giving over the theatre for the annual commencement exercises, Friday morning, June 11, which delayed the first performance on that day several hours. The company will present "Desert Gold," "The Sagebrusher," "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," "False Faces," and "Sex," during the season. James Griffin Fay and L. F. Guimont are in town putting on the pictures.

First National Chiefs Here.

W. T. Wilson, sales auditor, and R. H. Clark, First National chief, visited the local F. N. office the week of June 7 and General Manager James D. Williams was in Buffalo Saturday, June 12 for a conference with Shea Amusement Company officials on the new First National franchise proposition. Sol Haris was with Mr. Williams.

Buffalo Picture Going Big.

It is reported that the new feature "The Sport of Kings," recently produced by the Buffalo Motion Picture Company, with offices in the Ellicott square building, is making excellent headway throughout the country. The picture stars Matt Moore and May Tully and was presented in the Strand, Washington, last week. A third production has just been completed but no title selected. "The Price of Innocence," was the company's first feature.

Metro Business Booming.

So many exhibitors are visiting the local Metro exchange in the Warner building that Manager H. W. Kahn has been forced to put in a new set of chairs, because managers object to standing an hour or so trying to get an interview with the chief.

Exchange Managers to Meet.

According to J. H. Greenwald, Fox manager, the Buffalo Exchange Managers' association will soon call a special meeting to elect a successor to Henry E. Wilkinson, recently resigned as secretary and a new chairman of the Grievance committee.

Select Office Moves.

The Select and Republic exchanges are now installed in the new Warner Building, where the Metro, Universal and Vitagraph also have their headquarters.

Atlanta's Allotment

$35,000 Theatre Company Chartered.

L. D. JOEL, Julian Steinau and L. D. Peltz have organized the Garing Theatre Company in Atlanta and made application for a charter under the state laws. The company is incorporated at $35,000 and states in its application that it proposes to lease, construct, operate and equip moving picture theatres, and to establish a booking agency. The principal offices are to be located in Atlanta, and the company will probably confine its activities to that section.

Educational Opens Exchange.

The Educational Film Exchange, of Atlanta, has been organized and incorporated in Atlanta, Ga., by Earle W Hammons and George A. Skinner, both of New York City, and A. C. Bromberg, of Atlanta. The capital stock is $10,000. The company states that it will operate a general film exchange.

New Manager for Atlanta Rialto.

Harold B. Clark, formerly assistant manager of the Imperial Theatre at Jacksonville, Fla., has been appointed manager of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, owned by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises. He will take up his new duties at once.

New House in Athens, Ga.

Contract has been let by Mrs. Frances Sheshane for the construction of a new theatre at Athens, Ga., where the University of Georgia is located. It will cost about $35,000 and have a seating capacity of 1,000.

Los Angeles Studio Shots

Little Bennie Alexander is doubling for Harry Carey at U City this week. Bennie takes the part of the hero of "Fighting Job" at the age of seven.

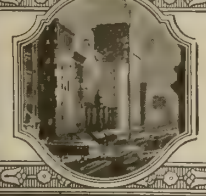
John McCormack, famous Irish tenor, spent a day at Goldwyn studios during his recent visit to Los Angeles, and gave expert technical advice to Director Frank Lloyd in regard to the grand opera scenes in "The Great Lover."

Wallace Beery and Kathryn Adams have been added to the cast of "813" which is now being filmed at Christie's.

Christy Cabanne has completed the new Bessie Barriscale feature and has gone to New York to join a new film concern.

Eugene Pallette has completed his part in the Metro picture, 'Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," and has gone to New York.

Charles Rosher, Mary Pickford's cameraman, has been loaned to Marshall Neilan during Little Mary's absence.



LOS ANGELES
NEWS LETTER
BY A. H. GIEBLER

Representatives of Thirty Producers Form Co-operative Buying Company

THE Cinema Mercantile Corporation, a company formed recently by representatives of more than thirty of the leading motion picture producing companies on the West Coast, have drawn up and sent articles of incorporation to the Secretary of State at Sacramento. The new corporation has been formed for the purpose of buying supplies to be used in the production of films and distributing them to members of the co-operative company. The new company is capitalized at $500,000 and incorporation articles set forth the following purposes for which the company has been formed:

"1. To purchase, own, improve, sell, lease and deal in real property of every description; to buy, sell, own, hold and deal in personal property of all kinds.

"2. To buy, sell and deal in merchandise of all kinds.

"3. To do and perform all other acts and things necessary or incidental to purposes hereinabove set forth."

List of Incorporators.

The list of incorporators is made up of fifteen officials of California motion picture companies, as follows:

Abraham Lehr, vice-president of Goldwyn; Joseph W. Engel, treasurer and general manager of Metro; C. H. Christie, president of Christie Film Company; Robert Brunton, president Brunton Studios, Inc.; William S. Smith, vice-president of Vitagraph; Sol M. Wurtzel, general manager of Fox; Frank A. Garbutt, vice-president and general manager Lasky and Morosco Studios; R. R. Nehls, vice-president of American, of Santa Barbara; H. R. Hough, general manager Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc.; Mack Sennett, president of Mack Sennett Film Corporation; Carl L. Laemmle, president of Universal; Thomas H. Ince, president T. H. Ince Studios, Inc.; Hal E. Roach, president Rolin Film Corporation; Louis B. Mayer, president, Louis B. Mayer Productions, and W. J. Reynolds, secretary Motion Picture Producers' Association.

At a meeting held at the Athletic Club on the night of June 8, the following officers of the new Cinema Mercantile Corporation were elected:

Frank A. Garbutt, president; Joseph Engel, vice-president; Abraham Lehr, second vice-president; Sol Wurtzel, third vice-president; W. J. Reynolds, secretary and treasurer.

The resolutions of the company contains this paragraph:

"It is not the intention of the motion picture industry to go outside Los Angeles for any of their requirements unless compelled to do so. Where prices and grades are equal, our home merchants will be given preference, but where we are required to pay more money for the same articles of home production than we can secure elsewhere we will, of necessity, have to buy elsewhere in order to protect our own interests."

Consolidation and co-ordination of the buying power of the entire motion picture industry is the prime purpose of the organization, according to W. J. Reynolds, secretary of the new company. Wholesale prices will be made to every member. Lumber, compo board, wall paper, chemicals, oils and paints, furniture, electrical equipment will be bought in cargo and carload lots direct from the mills and manufacturers. Lumber yards in Hollywood and Culver City, with track facilities for distribution, are to be operated, and a factory for the making of "period" furniture will be built.

Grauman and California Give Summer Sunday Morn' Shows

DURING the summer of 1919 Sid Grauman conceived the idea of giving symphony concerts at his big house on Third street and Broadway on Sunday morning, and the popularity those concerts attained warranted the giving of them again this summer. On June 6 the first concert was given at the Grauman at 11 A. M., the seats being reserved, and the holders being given the privilege of remaining for the first performance of the regular theatre program. The orchestra, under Director Kay, was augmented for the occasion to the number of sixty pieces, the new members having been recruited from the local Philharmonic organization.

The California has been giving an organ recital, beginning at 12.30 on Sunday, for the past few weeks, the patrons of the concert also having the privilege of remaining for the moving picture program, which begins at 1 P. M.

Alterations to Be Made at Night.

Arthur S. Wenzel, new manager of the Victory Theatre, has let contracts for the remodeling of the Victory, which will result in carpenters, carpet men, drapery men, painters, electricians, ventilation experts, projection room experts and other artisans working all night long for the next two months, putting the house in shape. No work will be done during show hours.

Takes Kosmik Serial to New York.

L. C. Wheeler, treasurer of Kosmik Films, Inc., with his wife and little son, will leave in a few days with a print of the new Kosmik serial, "The Hope Diamond Mystery," written by May Yohe and featuring Grace Darmond, for New York, where the releasing arrangements will be completed. Mr. Wheeler will stop over in Chicago for a brief conference with George Kleine, president of Kosmik.

Stuart Paton, director of the serial, and Mrs. Paton will also go to New York while waiting to begin on the next Kosmik production, which Paton will direct.

The entire Kosmik personnel expects to return to the West Coast in about six weeks, when plans for the new Kosmik studio will be discussed and agreed upon and final arrangements made for the purchase of a building site.

Studio Club Launches Drive.

A membership drive for the Hollywood Studio Club is one of the features of the week in Filmland. During the four years of its existence the Studio Club, located at 6129 Carlos street, Hollywood, has made for itself an increasingly important place in the motion picture colony. It now plans to double its importance by offering to all members of the club the privileges of education and recreation essential in the film world.

A course of continuity writing will be given under the instruction of Miss Harner, head of the reading department at Lasky's studio. A class in dramatics under Helen Jerome Eddy; a class in dancing under Priscilla Collum, a pupil of Theodore Kosloff; courses in gymnasium, art embroidery, remodeling clothes inexpensively, and a reducing squad.

The recreation program includes Sunday afternoon teas, monthly dances, beach parties, week-end camping trips and hikes. The membership dues are one dollar a year, and the Studio Club committee backing the membership drive includes Mmes. C. De Mille, William De Mille, Jesse Lasky, Wilfred Buckland, William Worthington, Phillips Smalley and others.

Hope Hampton a Deputy Sheriff.

Hope Hampton, who has just recently come out here from the east to star in a Tourneur production, has been sworn in as a deputy sheriff by Sheriff John C. Cline, of Los Angeles County, so that she may protect the valuable collection of jewelry she brought with her as part of the "props" she is to use in the coming feature.

Karns-Frass.

Roscoe Karns, leading man in a recent King Vidor production, was married recently to Miss Mary Matilda Frass, daughter of a wealthy cattle king of Texas. The couple, after a short honeymoon in Santa Barbara, will live in Hollywood.

Furthman-Sealey.

Jules Furthman, scenario writer, and Sybil Sealey, leading woman for Buster Keaton in his new Metro comedies, were married recently by Judge Taft, noted divorce judge of Los Angeles. The ceremony was witnessed by Bill Russell, Fox star, and Phillis Haver, of the Mack Sennett studio.

Australians Visit Brunton.

A party of twenty-six exhibitors from Sydney and Melbourne, Australia, were visitors recently at the Brunton studios in Los Angeles. Among the guests were H. L. Townsend, who controls a string of thirty-one Australian picture houses, and James Colby, head of the Colby theatre syndicate.

Hoosier Happenings

New Fort Wayne Theatre.

PLANS for the erection of a new motion picture theatre, to cost approximately $40,000, at the southwest corner of Ohio and Lewis streets, Fort Wayne, were announced this week by Theodore Beierdorfer, manager of the Idle Hour Theatre, that city. It is Mr. Beierdorfer's plans to be able to open the new theatre about the first of November.

The seating capacity of the proposed new theatre will be 1,000; the main lobby will be 14 feet wide and 50 feet long, and the interior of the house will be artistically decorated in soft colors. When opened, the theatre will take the place of the Idle Hour, which, according to Mr. Beierdorfer, is too small to accommodate the increasing number of patrons.

New Film Corporation.

The Herman Film Corporation, a newly organized concern at Anderson, has been incorporated under the laws of Indiana with a capital stock of $3,000. The purpose of the corporation, it is stated, is to buy, sell and lease motion picture films. The incorporators, all Anderson men, are Harry Greyer, Edward Waddell, Ralph Cecil, Howard K. Armstrong, Michael W. Straub, Herman C. Biest, William Mathews, Charles G. Bujarsky, Emmett Masterson, John Lambros, Amos N. Gustin, Frank A. Eppley, William Breen, Charles Williamson and Joseph Cook.

Pipe Organ in South Bend.

An expensive new pipe organ has been installed in the Castle Theatre, South Bend, and in the future a special program of music will be presented with the photoplay attractions. It was necessary to build a special platform and special sound boxes for the installation of the mammoth organ.

Crack Rowland & Clark's Safe.

EARLY morning of June 2 thieves gained entrance through an unlocked window in the basement of Rowland & Clark's Liberty Theatre, East Liberty, and stole $900. They broke the combination knob from a safe in the office and punched the tumblers out.

The money consisted of $430 in change, $70 in pennies and the rest in bills of various denominations. The thieves overlooked $350 in Liberty bonds which were in the safe.

Woman Exhibitor Marries.

Miss Cosatch, well-known exhibitoress of Rankin, Pa., where she conducts the Oxford Theatre, was married recently to William Whitman.

Brief Theatre Notes.

The Star Theatre, Monessen, Pa., a vaudeville house, will run pictures during the summer.

H. G. Berry has sold his Edyth Theatre, Brownsville road, Pittsburgh, to Jacob Podolsky.

Mr. Redfoot, proprietor of the Seven Stars Theatre, Phillipsburg, Pa., is closing his theatre for a few days to do some renovating. Film salesmen say Redfoot is one of the most courtiest exhibitors in the territory.

Adds Another Theatre Holding.

W. C. McCartney, the film magnate of Punxsutawney, has added another theatre to his already large chain. The Temple Theatre at St. Marys is the last acquisition. Mac took charge June 15.

New House Starts Business.

The New Palace Theatre at St. Benedict, Pa., will throw open its doors to the public about June 20. It will seat about 300 and be devoted to pictures only. The house is opening with an entire new equipment.

Huntingdon Theatre in Repair.

Plans have been approved and contractors will begin work on the remodeling and enlarging of the Gamble Theatre at Huntingdon, Pa., on July 1. The house will be closed on that date and the manager, J. L. Blackford, expects to have the improvements completed and the house ready for reopening about the first of September.

Dominion of Canada

Famous Players-Lasky's Plans.

FOLLOWING a tour through western Canada to Vancouver, N. L. Nathanson, of Toronto, managing director of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation and of Regal Films, Limited, announced that it was the intention of the Famous Players' Corporation to have a chain of fifty theatres in Canada, all to be large, high-class houses. During his stay in Vancouver, the contract for the erection of the big Regal Theatre in that city was awarded. Mr. Nathanson also visited Regina, Sask., and Calgary, Alta., where the company has arranged to build large theatres. Work on the new Paramount Theatre in Winnipeg is well under way, this being another film palace to be operated under the Famous Players' banner.

Theatre Managers Traveling.

George W. Weeks, of Toronto, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Film Service, Limited, has returned to Toronto after an extended visit in California.

Ben Davis, manager of the Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, Man., has gone to the Western States to visit relatives. The Dominion Theatre will reopen in August.

To Handle Government Scenics.

The Specialty Film Import, Limited, of Vancouver, has been appointed by the British Columbia government to handle the distribution of official scenic and industrial reels, the first of which were released June 7. The legislature of the province recently enacted legislation compelling every moving picture and vaudeville theatre in British Columbia to include one 1,000-foot reel of official British Columbia pictures in every program presented.

Thirty thousand feet of government scenics had been prepared up to the time that the first official reels were released on June 7, and announcement was made that eight subjects would be released every two weeks, sufficient prints being prepared to enable all theatres in the province to comply with the law. A schedule of bookings covering every theatre in the whole province has been drawn up, even the Orpheum and Pantages vaudeville theatres in Vancouver being listed in the government bookings.

Gagnier Man of Accomplishments.

A big event at the Theatre Francais, Ottawa, was a Sunday evening performance on June 6 under the auspices of the Cadets of the De LaSalle Academy. A varied musical and picture program was presented. Several numbers were contributed, and one of the soloists was none other than J, A. Gagnier, Montreal manager of the Vitagraph Company, who is a talented vocalist.

Smashes Car and Escapes Injury.

In attempting to avoid an accident on one of Ottawa's beautiful driveways, the son of J. T. Moxley, manager of the Regent and Russell theatres, Ottawa, drove his car from the roadway and into a tree. The car, practically a new model, was badly smashed and the tree was uprooted, but on one was injured.

Changes in Government Bureau.

B. E. Norrish, director of the Exhibits and Publicity Bureau of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, has resigned. Mr. Norrish has been in charge of the government branch which has been preparing and releasing official Canadian scenic and industrial pictures for the past two or three years.

Intimation is made in official circles that Raymond S. Peck, scenario editor of the bureau, will succeed Mr. Norrish as the manager. Mr. Peck has had considerable experience in film exchange circles in Canada, having been with the Canadian Universal and Mutual organizations for a number of years.

Raymond Locates in Winnipeg.

J. J. Raymond has assumed the management of the Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg. This is one of the larger theatres in the Manitoba capital that are controlled by the Allen Theatre Enterprises. Mr. Raymond was associated with the Nathan H. Gordon interests in New England for ten years. In 1913, Raymond opened the first large theatre in Rochester, N. Y., to be devoted exclusively to the presentation of moving pictures.

ROBERT ABRAHAMS, who has been with the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit for more than eight years, most of the time in the capacity of manager, has resigned as manager of the New Mission and Realart Theatres on Mission street and will shortly announce new connections. He will be succeeded as manager of these houses by Charles Newman, for the past twelve years manager of the Curran Theatre, devoted to road attractions.

Frolic to Hold Talmadge Week.

The management of the Frolic Theatre has booked seven Norma Talmadge productions and will show a different one each day during the week of June 13. Commencing June 20, Manager Feehan will offer his patrons a serial again, having booked "The Vanishing Dagger," with Eddie Polo. This will be the first serial shown here in many months.

Visitors at San Francisco.

Jules E. Brulatour, one of the executive officers of the Eastman Kodak Company, and western distributor for this concern, was here recently on a business mission.

Maurice Tourneur, moving picture producer, was here recently with a company which included Hope Hamilton. The trip was made by steamer to get two scenes for "The Tiger Lady," but fogs off the coast of Southern California made it impossible to film them until San Francisco Bay was reached.

S. Holbrook, of the Sunset Pictures Company, a scenic feature concern, spent a few days here early in June.

Reeves Eason, casting director for Universal, dropped into town recently and discovered that he was being impersonated by one Alfred Deutsch, who was making contracts with young men and women having aspirations to become screen stars.

Theatre for Gilroy.

The Masonic lodge at Gilroy, Cal., has closed a deal for the erection of a moving picture theatre and lodge room to cost $75,000.

Rex Theatre to Be Enlarged.

The Rex Theatre at Santa Clara, Cal., is to be enlarged and remodeled, a marquis added and a modern heating and ventilating system installed.

To Increase Capital.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the F. S. Wythe Pictures Corporation will be held at headquarters in San Francisco August 3 for the purpose of considering an increase of the capital stock. A. J. Urvain is secretary.

Goldwyn to Have New Building.

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has taken a long term lease on a building to be erected on Leavenworth street, near Golden Gate avenue, for its exclusive requirements. This structure, which will be modern in every detail, will adjoin the film exchange building now being erected for the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. and others. Located on a corner, it will have exceptional lighting facilities.

Irving Lesser Offering Own Film.

Irving Lesser, of "That Something," a story of modern business life, arrived here recently and has arranged for a two weeks' showing of this feature at the Strand Theatre in July. The picture recently completed a long run in Los Angeles.

Changes in Management.

William Matthews has resigned as San Francisco representative of the Special Pictures Corporation to accept a position with All Star. He has been succeeded as manager by Joe Deitsch.

Harry Schmidt, who has been connected with various local exchanges since the passing of the General Film Company, is now acting as manager of Consolidated.

Cory Is Busy Man.

The recent resignations of Harry L. Knappen and Haddon Stephens, managers, respectively, for Select and Republic, with a wholesale departure of bookers and road men, has thrown the duties of these on M. E. Cory, for some time salesman for Select. He seems to be bearing up well under these burdens.

Personal Mention.

Robert Amador, formerly with Consolidated, is now with First National as road man.

Arthur Aronson has returned from a long stay at Seattle, Wash., where the Western Poster Company has opened a branch.

E. H. Emmick, owner of the Peerless Film Exchange, recently returned from a trip to the Los Angeles branch. Gene is some speed burner, having negotiated the trip down in one night in his new car.

Marion H. Kohn, producer and distributor, came up from Los Angeles recently to look over the local exchange.

CINCINNATI is about to test a musical experiment. McMahan & Jackson, directors of the Grand Opera House, will replace the regular orchestra in that theatre with a jazz band during the run of "Love Without Question."

Havlin Wins "Assault" Case.

John H. Havlin, lessee of the Grand Opera House, and Phil. S. Honeyman, manager of the theatre during the movie season, charged with assault and battery by a negro school teacher, have been dismissed in Municipal Court. The woman has alleged that she purchased three tickets for the performance and had been treated roughly when she tried to gain entrance to the theatre. The Court held that Havlin had a right to order her from his private office and that Honeyman had a right to take a telephone from the woman as she was calling for a lawyer.

Race Film for Race Meet.

"In Old Kentucky" played to such record-breaking crowds at B. F. Keith's during the first week of the Latonia race meeting that the film was held over for another week. Ned Hastings, manager, is using his newspaper training in wording the posters that he has spread about town, offering "feed box information on the Kentucky Derby with Queen Bess as favorite." Hastings booked a winner when he booked "In Old Kentucky" during the first two weeks of the racing at Latonia.

Hold "Confession" Second Week.

Acceding to the demands of many movie fans who could not get to see "The Confession," the management of the Lyric Theatre consented to hold the film over for the week beginning June 13.

Buffalo Bulletins

Skinner at Victoria.

A. L. SKINNER, formerly connected with several local exchanges as sales representative, has succeeded J. H. Michael as manager of the New Victoria Theatre, owned by the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Company. The Victoria is one of Buffalo's most attractive and largest neighborhood houses and has been managed by Gus Schlesinger, now foreign sales manager of Inter-Ocean; Edward L. Hyman, now manager of the Strand, Brooklyn, Bruce Fowler, now manager of the Elmwood, Buffalo and Mr. Michael.

Elk Theatre Is Sold.

The Elk motion picture theatre has been sold for Donaldson & Granlik through Charles S. Hunt to A. Minuse, who will take possession imediately. The Elk is in the thickly populated first ward and enjoys an excellent business.

Malivinsky in Buffalo.

M. L. Malivinsky, attorney for the Associated Exhibitors, was the guest of Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome and a member of the Associated Board of Directors on June 11. Mr. Malivinsky stopped off in Buffalo with a party of exhibitors enroute home from the Cleveland convention.

Will Not Delay Loew Theatre.

The building of Loew's Buffalo theatre will not be delayed in any way because of the lawsuit now pending between the theatre concern and the Golde clothes shop.

"We are proceeding with the building of the theatre," said Secretary Albert E. Jones. "Nothing will hold that up. No matter how the lawsuit is decided, the theatre will be able to go ahead, even if it is necessary to rearrange the plans."

If the theatre wins the case, the lease can be terminated with three months' notice. The plans call for a lobby to be placed where the clothing store is located. The theatre is back of the disputed property and its entrance is on Mohawk street, so that, even if the lobby is abandoned, the work on the theatre will not be halted. Actual construction on the new house has already started.

Placing Mammoth Signs.

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, has designed two mammoth signs to be placed on the framework in front of the new Metropolitan Theatre site in Main street, above Chippewa. The signs call attention to the building of the Metropolitan, the latest word in theatrical construction and also boost Shea's vaudeville house and Shea's Hippodrome. Workmen are now busy tearing down property on the Metropolitan site, and the picture palace will open in August, 1921, announces Mr. Franklin.

Film Men Congratulate Hayman.

Film men in Buffalo are congratulating Charlie Hayman, of the Cataract Theatre, Niagara Falls, who was elected a member of the executive committee of the Theatre Owners of America at the Cleveland convention. Mr. Hayman is well known in Buffalo exhibitor and exchange circles. In association with Joseph A. Schuchert, Mr. Hayman is planning to build a mammoth picture house in Niagara Falls soon which will be one of the most lavish structures in the country.

Winegar "Shoots" Shriners.

Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Premier Theatres, left Buffalo Monday morning, June 14, with the delegation representing Ismailia Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, for Seattle, Wash., where the annual convention will be held this month. Mr. Winegar, who is a member of the temple, will make a film history of the trip and also represent some of the news weeklies at the convention. Upon the return of the Buffalo men, the film will be shown throughout western New York, the Shriners planning to send out a special train filled with Ismailia Buffalo boosters.

Rivoli Theatre Nearly Complete.

The new Rivoli Theatre is nearing completion. This house will be one of the largest neighborhood theatres in the city and will be in the heart of the great Polish district. Harry Dixon, now on the Realart sales staff, will guide the policies of the Rivoli when it opens to the public on September 1. Mr. Dixon is a veteran film man and has managed several local houses at various times.

Heat Offensive Fails.

The warm weather of the past several days has failed to make any appreciable dent on local box-office receipts. No better proof of the popularity of the motion picture can be given than a capacity audience in a theatre on an evening when the mercury is running out of the top of the thermometer. Buffalo business is holding up excellently, and the World representative noticed 'em standing up out to the street in one downtown house this week on the sixth day of a week presentation. War weather has no horrors for Buffalo exhibitors. All aim to make the patron forget the heat and turning their houses into veritable summer gardens.

Miss Kavanaugh Again With Metro.

HAVING placed her enterprises in Baltimore in the hands of her assistants, Katherine Kavanaugh has gone to New York to become associated with the reading and writing forces of Metro. While in New York, Miss Kavanaugh will do some free lance work also. She and June Mathis will collaborate on a play which will be used as a vehicle for Theda Bara who will return to screen work.

Another Theatre for Baltimore.

The lot located on Pennsylvania avenue, south of Lafayette, unimproved for seventy years, has been purchased by Frederick H. Keiser, of Pottstown, Pa., and he will erect a motion picture theatre upon it. The property was purchased several months ago by Mr. Keiser, and plans for the new playhouse are being drawn up by architect Lockman Murphy.

Theatres Under Way.

A moving picture theatre is nearing completion at St. Michaels, Md., which will have a seating capacity of 500 and cost approximately $18,000. It is a three-story brick and concrete structure and will have a marquise in front. There will be a balcony for colored people. Lee & Cosden are the owners.

A brick constructed moving picture theatre with a seating capacity of 300 is being constructed at Only, Va., by Davis & King. The structure will cost approximately $15,000 and be open to the public about July 1.

A theatre, to cost about $48,000, is to be built at Kimball, W. Va., by Charles K. Wagner, Pocahontas, Va. The structure will be two stories.

Out of Town Notes.

The Apollo Theatre, at Martinsburg, W. Va., which is operated by H. P. Thorn, is to be extensively remodeled and enlarged .

A two-story theatre and office building is to be erected at Welch, W Va., by the Welch Insurance Company. The building will cost approximately $20,000 and measure 40 by 60 feet.

Personal Notes of Baltimore.

Charles Frederick Nirdlinger, whose play, "The World and His Wife," will soon be released by Cosmopolitan as a film feature, has recently recovered from an operation which was performed at a Baltimore hospital. Mr. Nirdlinger is one of the Nixon-Nirdlinger family of Philadelphia.

W. Howard Birch, publicity representative of Ford's Opera House, and Ethel M. Feete, who formerly worked in the business office of the Baltimore American, were married by the Rev. Dr. Edwin Ide, at the parsonage of the Trinity Lutheran Church. Mr. and Mrs. Birch are spending their honeymoon in Atlantic City and New York.

Frederick C. Schanberger, president of the James L. Kernan Company, operating the Maryland Theatre and Hotel, was elected president of the Hotel Men's Association on Monday night, June 7, when this organization held a meeting in the Southern Hotel.

Apollo Theatre Changes Owners.

THE Apollo Theatre changed ownership on June 9, when O. D. Rose sold a 99-year lease to the H. & R. Amusement Company. The lease covers 80 feet frontage on Troost avenue and 120 feet on Forest avenue. The H. & R. Amusement Company is composed of Thomas M. Henneberry, of the Empress Theater, Fort Scott, Kan.; Jack H. Roth, formerly manager of the Isis Theatre, and who will now manage the Apollo Theatre, and William H. Wagner, of the Wagner Music Company, Independence, Mo.

Harold Lloyd Sees K. C.

Harold Lloyd arrived in Kansas City Tuesday evening at 10:30 and stayed for a brief half hour while changing trains on his way to Cleveland to attend the convention there. Accompanying Mr. Lloyd were his manager, Al Roach, and F. C. Quimby, general manager of the Associated Film Exchange.

Newman Theatre Celebrates.

Week ending June 5 the Newman celebrated the first anniversary of its opening, with a program de luxe. The feature picture was Wallace Reid in "The Dancing Fool." Kuhn-Chacquette's Jazz Band, a musical revue by thirty-five people, and a chorus of "Dancin' Fools" lent enchantment to the gala program.

Musical Numbers Appreciated.

The other musical numbers were the overture from "William Tell" and the beautiful contralto voice of Marjorie Squires. This program was fully appreciated by the theatregoing public if one may judge by the enormous crowds that clamored for entrance each evening and the many that were turned away.

Strand Property Changes Hands.

BY a deal completed recently the Masonic Temple Building, present home of the Strand Theatre, was sold to a newly formed company which is now in the process of organization and in which it is said the Shuberts will hold large interests. Marcus Loew is also believed to be concerned with the new organization. The Strand, a movie house, is operated by the Keith interests under lease from the Masonic order. The lease has not yet expired and there are rumors that Keith's had been trying to buy the building. The purchase price was $300,000, plus whatever is necessary to pay the Strand for cancellation of its lease. Edward M. Flexner, local distiller, is one of the Louisville men in the new combination.

New House for Ashland.

Dick Martin, manager of the Edisonian Amusement Company, Ashland, Ky., has just closed a deal for the L. E. Veysie residence, in the center of the city, for $45,000. Work will begin at once on the construction of a modern moving picture theatre.

Heavy Deal at Lexington.

The Phoenix Amusement Company of Lexington has leased the Leonard Hotel property and the business house adjoining the hotel and will erect a $250,000 theatre for motion pictures and vaudeville on the site. It is one of the biggest real estate transactions ever negotiated in Lexington.

The plans of the company include the sale of the old Lexington Opera House, on North Broadway, for business property and the utilization of the Ben Ali, now running pictures, for legitimate drama.

Honors for Showmen-Elks.

At a recent meeting of the Louisville Lodge of Elks, Sylvester Groves, of the Preston Theatre, was appointed chairman of the committee on music, and Fred Dolle, manager of the Alamo, was named chairman of the committee on entertainment. Louis Steuerle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, was appointed inner guard at the same meeting.

Turns from Vaude to Pictures.

Keith's Mary Anderson, Louisville, has discontinued vaudeville for the summer and will run high class pictures until the winter season opens again.

National Academy of Visual Instruction Outlines By-Laws and Constitution Plan

THE National Academy of Visual Instruction, which is to hold its first convention in Madison, Wis., July 14, 15 and 16, represents the most important movement which has been made in the non-theatrical field. The following outline of the by-laws and constitution, received from W. H. Dudley, president of the National Academy of Visual Instruction, holds interest for the producer as well as for the educator.

About forty of the leading University Extension Divisions of the country which, through their visual instruction departments, are now offering a free service in a wide range of educational motion picture films and slides are organized into a national association, with a standing committee on visual instruction.

In January, 1920, this committee, recognizing the need of more systematic effort in all phases of visual education, sent out a call to about a hundred educators and others actively interested in the cause to an informal conference at Cleveland during the meetings of the National Educational Association. Between forty and fifty responded to this call, and as a result of earnest and enthusiastic deliberations a committee of nine was appointed to take the necessary preliminary steps and organize a national association. The committee selected was as representative as possible, both as to the type of interests involved and the territory included, and consisted of the following persons:

G. E. Condra, Director of State Conservation and Soil Surveys, University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebraska.

W. C. Crosby, Director of Community Welfare for the State of North Carolina, Raleigh, North Carolina.

W. H. Dudley, Chief of the Bureau of Visual Instruction, University Extension Division, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisconsin.

W. M. Gregory, Curator of the Educational Museum, Cleveland City Schools, Cleveland, Ohio.

S. G. Reinertsen, Superintendent of Schools, Alta, Iowa.

F. W. Reynolds, Director of Extension, University of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Charles Roach, Visual Instruction Service, State College, Ames, Iowa.

J. H. Wilson, Director of Visual Instruction, Detroit Public Schools, Detroit, Michigan.

Mr. Burchard, Director of Community Center Work, Chicago, Illinois.

A. J. Klein, Executive Secretary of the National University Extension Association, Inc., Washington, D. C., acted as secretary of the committee.

This committee, with only one member lacking, met at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, April 7,1920, drew up a constitution and by-laws and completed an organization which was named the National Academy of Visual Instruction.

Temporary officers were elected, Madison, Wisconsin, was chosen as the place of the first national meeting of the academy, July 14, 15 and 16, 1920, and an executive committee of seven members with power to prepare a program and assume the responsibility of other preliminary arrangements was appointed.

Purposes.

The purposes of the National Academy of Visual Instruction, as set forth in the constitution, are the following:

1. To establish and maintain an organization through which schools and other educational institutions, churches, parent-teacher associations, clubs, welfare organizations, Y. M. C. A.'s, K. C.'s, Red Cross and other societies engaged in educational or semi-educational work may co-operate in furthering better production of and a more intelligent and systematic use of visual aids, such as motion picture films, lantern slides, charts, art collections, exhibits and models.

2. To prosecute research in visual instruction methods and materials, make educational tests, make and publish observations on the socializing influence of the "movies," etc.

3. To investigate sources of supply, and put members in touch with the best films and slides, etc., suited to their purposes as rapidly as such materials become available.

4. To maintain an authentic clearing house of information on all matters pertaining to visual education, such as publications, inventions and discoveries whose worth has been established, etc.

5. To devise methods of co-operative buying, renting and bargaining.

6. To work out standards of method and practice.

7. To promote in every way possible the knowledge and use of better films and slides and other visual education aids.

8. To promote universally the cause of and equipment for visual instruction service so that wherever it has not become an established factor in school and mass education and in community betterment, it may be speedily introduced.

Membership.

Six classes of membership are provided for; viz. active, associate, contributing, honorary, life and institutional.

Active members will be drawn from the schools, churches, clubs, welfare organizations, semi-educational, and semi-religious societies; and will include persons in distinct sympathy with the aims and purposes of the Academy, without commercial visual instruction affiliations, and who are active in the use of visual instruction materials and methods.

Associate members will have the same qualifications as active members, except that they may not have any connection, direct or indirect, with practical film and slide service.

Contributing members will come in general from the laity, but in particular from manufacturers of or dealers in machines, films, slides, and other visual instruction aids—persons who are committed to the fundamental aims of the Academy, who recognize that the accomplishment of these aims is bound to result in reflex benefit to commercial interests, and who, therefore, will be glad to become thus identified with the Academy and contribute to the expense of its maintenance.

Honorary membership is provided for those who have made some outstanding contribution to the cause of visual education.

Life membership is provided for those who may desire to enjoy and foster the fruits of the Academy's research, and who are disposed, through such membership, to contribute to research funds.

Institutional memberships will be held by universities now carrying on visual instruction service through their extension divisions (there are now over forty institutions thus engaged), by churches, museums, libraries, societies and welfare organizations.

Fees.

Annual fees for the different classes of membership have been fixed as follows:

Active membership	$3.00
Associate membership	1.00
Contributing membership ...	50.00
Life membership 1,000.00
Institutional membership	25.00

The constitution provides for at least one meeting or convention of the Academy annually. The executive committee decided upon July 14, 15 and 16, 1920, as the date for the first national convention, to be held at Madison, Wisconsin. The Bureau of Visual Instruction of the University of Wisconsin, Extension Division, is making ample provision for meeting places, display space for school and educational exhibits and convenient and commodious quarters for commercial displays and demnstrations.

Program for the Meeting July 14, 15 and 16, 1920.

Unusual effort has been made to provide a program for the first annual meeting that will serve most definitely the needs of such an initial gathering. Men and women who have been pioneers in the field of visual education and who have won nationwide recognition for such service, will be heard from; notable achievements in schools, churches and community undertakings will be recounted; the status of visual education today will be carefully set forth; the immediate and practical needs of the future will be thoroughly discussed. It will be a great time of stock taking and plan making. Send in your application at once to the secretary, and make your plans to come to the Madison meeting without fail. Madison is one of the most attractive summer resorts in the country. You will enjoy its charming lakes, and benefit from the meetings to repay you many times over for the expense involved.

Temporary Officers.

The following officers were chosen, to hold office till the July meeting:

President, William H. Dudley, Bureau of Visual Instruction, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisconsin.

Secretary, J. H. Wilson, Department of Visual Instruction, Detroit Public Schools, Detroit, Michigan.

Treasurer, Charles Roach, Visual Instruction Service, State College, Ames, Iowa.

Executive Committee.

G. E. Condra, Director of State Surveys, Lincoln, Nebraska.

J. W. Scroggs, Director of Extension, University of Oklahoma, Norman, Oklahoma.

S. G. Reinertsen, Superintendent of Schools, Alta, Iowa.

A. W. Abrams, Director of Visual Instruction, State Department of Education, Albany, New York.

W. M. Gregory, Curator Educational Museum, Cleveland, Ohio.

W. C. Crosby, Director Community Service, Raleigh, N. C.

The president, ex-officio.

Pictograph Shows Process and Effect of Respiration

THE Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7043 contains cleverly devised animated drawing J. F. Leventhal, which shows in a clear and interesting manner the function of breathing. Attention is first drawn to a single cell, the simplest form of life, showing the necessity for a constant supply of oxygen to keep it alive. It is then pointed out that the human body consists of billions of these cells, which receive their supply of oxygen from the vast number of tiny blood vessels all over the body. The function of the heart and lungs in pumping the pure blood to the cells, absorbing the carbon dioxide, taking it into the lungs to be purified, is also explained, and the complete respiratory action shown.

The other subjects of the Pictograph are "A Dog Musician," which is an entertaining performance by a clever dog and his master, and a comic cartoon "A Punk Piper" from the Jerry series.

Cupid Clinched Job in "Way Down East" and Now "Dick" Barthlemess Is Married

THE marriage in New York of Miss Mary Hay and Richard Barthelmess on Friday, June 18, in the Church of the Heavenly Rest, settles once and for all whether the popular "Dick" Barthelmess is to be lost to the thousands of matinee girls who "just adore him." But most of the matinee girls will be delighted to take out their little handkerchiefs and offer three cheers and a tiger for Mary Hay, the girl who won this popular idol of the screen.

Mary Hay Caldwell (now Mrs. Barthelmess, unless something suddenly has interfered between the writing of this and the actual wedding) selected the name of Mary Hay when she decided on a motion picture career. She first came into prominence as the principal dancing girl in the replica of a German dugout in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World." Mr. Griffith at that time advised her to study for two years and not hurry back into the films until she had time to decide what particular kind of work she preferred to do.

Cupid in "Way Down East."

Little Mary followed his advice and returned to her dancing studies. She appeared on the New York stage in the "Follies of 1919" and later in the Ziegfeld "Midnight Frolic" and the "Nine O'Clock Revue." But the movies beckoned to Mary and she returned to Mr. Griffith to play the part of Kate Brewster in his forthcoming production of "Way Down East."

It was during the "Way Down East" rehearsals that the romance between Miss Hay and Mr. Barthelmess found its ripe fruition in their engagement. As Mr. Barthelmess also will have a prominent role in this latest of the Griffith features, the fans will have an opportunity to see "Mr. and Mrs. Barthelmess" in the very scenes they were playing when Dan Cupid aimed his arrow at their hearts.

Theatres Play Wedding March.

Mr. Barthelmess has been gaining in popularity every year from the time when he appeared with Dorothy Gish in "The Hope Chest." His personal triumph as the Chinaman in Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" established him as a character actor of force and intelligence. Later he was seen in "The Idol Dancer," another Griffith picture. His next appearance will be in "The Gamest Girl," to be released by United Artists in a few weeks, and after that he will be the David Bartlett in "Way Down East," the finishing touches to which are now being made at the Griffith studios at Mamaroneck, N. Y.

As a tribute to the bride and groom, many exhibitors throughout the country had their organs play the Mendelssohn wedding march on Friday afternoon at about the hour of the ceremony in New York. Many theatres showed a special slide of the young couple during the playing of the music.

Mr. and Mrs. Barthelmess expect to make their home in New York.

Next Mildred Harris Release

The title of Louis B. Mayer's First National release, starring Mildred Harris Chaplin, which has been almost six months in the making, is to be "The Woman in His House." This picture is directed by John M. Stahl from his original manuscript.

Shown without titles at the First National convention, held recently at Chicago, it proved to be as startling as it is beautiful and dramatic. So big is the importance of this picture that Mr. Mayer has decided to hold it up until fall.

The cast, which includes Ramsey Wallace, Gareth Hughes, Bob Walker, Richard Headrik, Thomas Holding and Catherine Van Buren, is an admirable support.

Brandt Resigns as Director General of the National Film Corporation

JOE BRANDT, director general of the National Film Corporation and eastern representative of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, has resigned from National, according to personal telegraphic advices received by Joe Weil, director of publicity for these companies.

Mr. Brandt intimates that his resignation will take effect as soon as he can complete the marketing arrangements for "Kentucky Colonel." He left New York for the coast about a month ago to supervise the production of "The Son of Tarzan" serial, which Harry Revier is now making for National. This is now well on its way toward completion.

Joe Brandt has always been a dominating figure in the state rights field. He has not as yet revealed his future plans, but it is expected that he will go into the producing business himself. It is also said that he will head a big sales organization in New York for independent producers.

He is expected back in New York within the week.

Penn Import and Export Moves to Larger Quarters

THE Penn Import and Export Company, which for the past year and a half has had its offices in the Park Row Building, has moved to 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, occupying about one-quarter of the Hallmark floor in the Leavitt Building.

This move was made under the direction of Adolph Penn, head of the company, for two reasons: first, to provide more space for the growing organization which comprises the general export division, division of films, and the chemical and lubricating departments, as well as providing a place for the advertising staff.

The second thought in Mr. Penn's mind is to keep closer to the Hallmark Picture Corporation's home offices, because Penn Import is going to handle the entire foreign distribution of Hallmark's product. This will include all serials, features and comedies.

The new quarters have been completely refinished and provide Penn Import with projection room, film vaults, and provide offices for the various divisions which are increasing in size to such extent that the former quarters were inadequate.

Hope Hampton Coming East

The call of the East, which has been exemplified by the marked return from the West Coast studios to New York, which has been taking place all season, is again demonstrated in the case of Hope Hampton. It will be recalled that after returning from Europe, where she assisted in the sale of the foreign rights to her first production with her own company, "A Modern Salome," Miss Hampton and her production staff went to Hollywood, where she is now busily engaged in working under the direction of Maurice Tourneur. The picture which she is now filming is entitled "The Tiger Lady."

The officers of Hope Hampton Productions, Inc., have announced that upon the conclusion of the actual camera work on "The Tiger Lady," Miss Hampton and her production staff will return to the East, where she will commence work forthwith upon an unusual melodramatic scenario written for her by H. H. Van Loan.

Three Excellent Views of a Forthcoming Paramount Production, "The City of Masks," Starring Robert Warwick.

Didn't take the star very long to decide that he wanted to wed. Just one scene between their initial meeting and the marriage. Suppose he gets an opportunity to be a real hero when the young lady's pet dog leaps into the ocean and he has to rescue it.

"Ga-Bye, Rebecca, Ga-Bye."
Mary Pickford seen here in "Rebecca of Sunny Brook Farm," an Artcraft production reissue.

Arrow Campaign Books Ready.

Three new campaign books are ready for distribution, according to an Arrow announcement. The books include one for the second group of three "Tex" productions, "The Trail of the Cigarette," "The Bromley Case," and "The Sacred Ruby," one for "Woman's Man," which stars Romaine Fielding, and the other for "Love's Protege," which stars Ora Carew.

Selznick Adds Two Players to "Red Foam," Ince Special

MYRON SELZNICK, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, announced that he has added two well known screen players to the cast of "Red Foam," a Ralph Ince special production with Zena Keefe, the Selznick 1920 star, playing the leading feminine role.

The players are Huntley Gordon and Daniel Hayes who, according to Mr. Selznick, are slated to play two important roles in the production. Messrs. Gordon and Hayes have appeared in many notable screen successes, and their addition to an already prominent cast rapidly being assembled is said to promise a production that will bring to light all the striking phases of the much sought for story, "Red Foam."

William H. Hamby, author of the story which originally appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, is a contributor to many of the leading fiction magazines.

Last Scenes for "Point of View" Completed.

Final scenes for "The Point of View," a forthcoming Selznick production starring Elaine Hammerstein, are announced as having been taken by Director Alan Crosland.

With this announcement there is revealed the fact that Miss Hammerstein, whose current Selznick picture is "Whispers," portrays a role that embodies all the essentials of a strong box office attraction. In the cast supporting Miss Hammerstein are found the names of several prominent screen players.

"The Point of View" is a screen adaptation of the famous stage success written by Edith Ellis.

Work Progressing on New Mayo Picture.

Word comes from Universal City that the new Frank Mayo picture, "Hitchin' Post," is well under way. It is being adapted from a story of Southern life by H. M. Shumate and it presents a charming picture of Mississippi River life in the old days.

One of the largest sets ever constructed at Universal City, has been set up for this picture. It represents a huge Southern plantation, including the colonial mansion and grounds, and the rows of plantation houses, negro quarters and barns.

Jack Ford is directing the picture. Supporting Mayo are Beatrice Burnham, Joseph Harris, Dagmar Godowsky, J. Farrell McDonald, Mark Fenton, Charles Anderson and Duke Lee.

Charlie Chaplin Dominates Prize Impersonation Dance

POPULAR moving picture actors and actresses of today were impersonated at the Moving Picture Ball held June 11 in the Atlanta City Auditorium. The ball was held under the auspices of the Atlanta Woman's Club, more than $500 in prizes being awarded for the best impersonations.

There were more Charlie Chaplins in attendance than all the rest put together.

Most of the prizes were given by local moving picture houses, film exchanges and other local business concerns.

"Virgin of Stamboul" Pulls Despite Hot Summer Weather

UNIVERSAL officials are still surprised at the success of "The Virgin of Stamboul." Letters and telegrams of praise and congratulation continue to come in from exhibitors. N. Rosen, of the Park Theatre, Pittsburgh, has written the home office that he made 50 per cent. more money with "The Virgin of Stamboul" than with any other picture he ever played, and he says he runs the largest productions produced.

Earle W. Forsythe of the Star Theatre Canonsburg, Pa., wrote in calling for more pictures like it. He explained that Canonsburg is a small town, but that no picture is too big for him to play. He asked for a return engagement for the Priscilla Dean picture.

From the Liberty Theatre, Sacramento, Cal., and the New Garrick, Minneapolis, have come word that "The Virgin of Stamboul" opened big in those cities although in competition with the season's greatest activity on the part of old Sol.

In Rockingma.., N. C., the picture played date and date with a heavy rain storm and came out in the lead. Manager W. Atkinson sent word that it was the best picture that ever had been shown there. Another booster was Horace W. Kruse, manager of the welfare department of the St. Louis, Rocky Mountain and Pacific Company, who booked it for all of that company's construction camps in the Southwest.

Olive Thomas Portrays Three Distinct Roles in "Jenny"

WALTER McGRAIL, who appears opposite Olive Thomas in her forthcoming Selznick picture, "Jenny," spent five years in musical comedy, comic opera and vaudeville before he joined the ranks of screen players. Mr. McGrail was born in Brooklyn and studied art at the Pratt Institute there.

"Jenny" is reported in the course of production at the Selznick west coast studios under the direction of Laurence Trimble. In this latest Olive Thomas picture, the star is said to portray three distinct roles,, first as an East Side girl, then as a Broadway star, and finally as the wife of a society man.

Included in the cast supporting Miss Thomas are Barney Sherry, Colin Kenny, Andrew Arbuckle, Margaret McQuade, and Mrs. George Hernandez. The story was written by Roy Horniman ,a noted British novelist.

Carew in Cast of "Palace of Darkened Windows."

Portraying the part of a Rajah in the fourth production of National Picture Theatres, "The Palace of Darkened Windows," is Arthur Edmund Carew who, according to an announcement, mapped his early career with the idea of becoming an artist. Born in Trebizond, Armenia, Mr. Carew attended school at the Annotalian College, an institution conducted in Armenia by Americans.

"The Palace of Darkened Windows," said to be a story of East India life, is being directed by Henry Kolker, under the supervision of Henry Rapf at the Selznick west coast studios.

Goldwyn Reports Records Broken by "Silver Horde"

REX BEACH'S "The Silver Horde" is breaking records for extended bookings at large theatres, according to reports received by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation from its exchanges. In a number of instances, exhibitors have varied from a policy of two and three day showings in order to keep "The Silver Horde" for a full week. Extensive exploitation campaigns have been launched and advertising appropriations increased. Goldwyn has received many enthusiastic letters from exhibitors.

The exploitation campaign, as found effective in New York, is being used with variations in other cities. All of the physical requisites are available at Goldwyn exchanges.

The popularity of Rex Beach's works in book form is being capitalized through tie-ups with book stores that are making a special display of the novel along with announcements of the showing of the picture. The nature of the story makes it possible to arrange appropriate window displays in sporting good stores, also department stores that cater to the sportsman.

Announces Engagements for Coming Kaufman Weeklies

FOR two forthcoming Herbert Kaufman Weeklies, Myron Selznick, just prior to his recent departure for the Selznick west coast studios, announced that he had selected William J. Scully, formerly assistant to director Alan Crosland, to direct "The Household Bully," and engaged Gertrude Kaufman, a sister of Herbert Kaufman, for an important role in "The Faded Butterfly," under the direction of Edmund Goulding.

"The Herbert Kaufman Weeklies are progressing very favorably," said Mr. Selznick, "and my endeavors to make them unique in presentation are being fulfilled by the experienced directors and well tried actors and actresses we are engaging for each production. Thus far it is gratifying to note the popularity of the release, and the new wave of comment relative to their exhibition speaks in the highest terms of Mr. Kaufman's ability as an editorial writer.

"It is safe to state that in the forthcoming Kaufman Weeklies we have an array of corking good material that will more than uphold the standard maintained by previous releases. And I feel confident that those persons who have been entrusted with the carrying out of my plans in regard to the Herbert Kaufman Weeklies will fulfill my greatest expectations."

A Tom Terriss Production

"TRUMPET ISLAND"

Adapted by

MR. AND MRS.
GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER

From the story

By GOUVERNEUR MORRIS

Directed by TOM TERRISS
With An All-Star Cast

Impatient with his own excesses, following the sudden acquisition of great wealth, the man seeks seclusion on an uninhabited island to work out his own salvation. The Girl, seeking to escape life with a man who has proved loathesome to her, plans to jump from an airplane in which she is riding—but an electrical storm changes her plans. The airplane is wrecked, and crashes on Trumpet Island. The man and the woman meet.

This is only the beginning. The story was judged big enough to spend more than a quarter of a million dollars in producing it, over a period of several months. It will be the big picture of the year.

As the heroine of this absorbing story, proves the age-old truth that the heart of a woman may beat as sadly beneath silks and satins as beneath more humble garb.

ALICE JOYCE

A play with great, crashing moments of drama which at no time becomes melodrama—a story of unexpected twistings and turnings which create SUSPENSE—a picture which will add still more prestige to the name of this beautiful star.

CORINNE GRIFFITH

in

"THE WHISPER MARKET"

An exciting story of consular service in South America. Strong in drama and intrigue. Corinne Griffith, one of the best gowned screen stars in the world, appears as the wife of an American consul, and to help fatten his lean purse, becomes a silent partner in the shop of a fashionable modiste. Gorgeous gowns by the hundred.

EARLE WILLIAMS

in

"THE PURPLE CIPHER"

A melodramatic story of Chinese tongs in which Earle Williams will score as notable a success as he did in the now famous production of "The Fortune Hunter." He appears as an amateur detective. Replete with surprises, exciting situations and creepy, Oriental mystery.

LARRY SEMON

in

"THE STAGE HAND"

Vitagraph's comedy ace in another one of his inimitable comedies which have laugh-swept the country. He goes backstage in a vaudeville theatre this time, flirts with the "actorines" and is assisted in his fun by dogs, cats, ponies and other animals which will make grown-ups chuckle and the kiddies shout with glee. And a big beauty squad, headed by Lucille Carlisle.

Pallette on Trip to New York

Eugene Pallette, who is featured with Ruth Stonehouse in the Metro all-star production of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," a filmization of the stage farce by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, is en route from Hollywood to New York for a visit. Prior to and since his term of service in the army as an aerial pilot, Mr. Pallette has been on the Pacific Coast, and recently has appeared in three Metro specials—"Fair and Warmer," starring May Allison; "Alias Jimmy Valentine," starring Bert Lytell, and "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath."

International News Reel Has Fast Workers at Convention

TWO hours after the Republican national convention opened its session at the Coliseum in Chicago, International News Reels showing the assembling of the delegates, the opening of the session and many of the nationally known delegates and candidates were exhibited in Chicago and suburban theatres. The scenes were made at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning, which is 1 o'clock New York time, and finished prints ready for projection were at the New York Theatres in time for the first show Wednesday evening.

Two negatives were taken. One was rushed to the laboratory, where it was developed and prints hurried to the local theatres, thereby establishing the two-hour record, while the other, in charge of William Hearfield, of the International camera staff, was sent on to New York by airplane as far as Cleveland, and from then on by the Twentieth Century. Arriving in New York, Mr. Hearfield was met by a fast automobile, which rushed him to the New York laboratory, where the negative was developed and prints made in time for showing at the first show Wednesday evening.

Metro Is Completing Eleven Special Productions at Its Studios in East and West; Ten in Hands of Editors

THE Metro Pictures Corporation announces the completion of camera work on ten new special productions and virtual completion of the eleventh, the eleven being the combined output of the company's two large studios situated, respectively, in Hollywood, Cal., and in New York. Of the eleven new productions ten are in the hands of editors, cutters and title writers, who will spend several weeks on them in the process of assembling them for release. With a few exceptions these pictures will not be distributed until the early fall.

Eight of the specials were produced at Metro's western studios. They are "The Price of Redemption," starring Bert Lytell; "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," with an all-star cast; "The Saphead," co-starring William H. Crane and Buster Keaton; "Held in Trust," starring May Allison; "The Chorus Girl's Romance," starring Viola Dana; "The Misfit Wife," featuring Alice Lake; "Hearts Are Trumps," with an all-star cast, and "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," a C. E. Shurtleff production, featuring Mitchell Lewis.

First New York S-L Film.

The first New York S-L production to be completed is "Love, Honor and Obey," an adaptation by Eugene Walter of Charles Neville Buck's novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness." The all-star cast includes Wilda Bennett, Claire Whitney, Kenneth Harlan, Henry Harmon and E. J. Ratcliffe.

"The Marriages of Mayfair" is an adaptation by Julia Burnham of Cecil Raleigh's Drury Lane melodrama. The all-star cast includes Thomas Ross, Wilfred Lytell, Frank Currier, Francis X. Conlan, Jack Crosby, Gladys Coburn, Thea Talbot and Florence Court.

"Clothes" is the stage drama by Avery Hopwood and Channing Pollock in which Grace George starred some years ago. The scenario was written by Arthur Zellner. It has an all-star cast, including Olive Tell and Crauford Kent.

Bert Lytell's "The Price of Redemption" is an adaptation of I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Temple of Dawn." The scenario was written by June Mathis.

Crane to Play Role He Created.

"The Saphead" is an adaptation by June Mathis of "The New Henrietta," by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes, founded on Bronson Howard's drama "The Henrietta." In addition to William H. Crane, who will play the role of Nicholas Van Alystyne, which he created on the stage, and Buster Keaton, the cast includes Irving Cummings, Edward Connelly, Jack Livingston, Odette Tyler, Carol Holloway and Beulah Booker.

"Held in Trust" is a picturization of George Kibbe Turner's novel, which appeared in the Red Book Magazine. Sarah Y. Mason wrote the scenario. Miss Allison plays a shopgirl who fraudulently impersonates a wealthy woman.

"The Chorus Girl's Romance" was first told in short story form by F. Scott Fitzgerald under the title of "Head and Shoulders" in the Saturday Evening Post. Percy Heath made it into a screen play. Viola Dana plays a shimmy dancer who marries a Yale "grind."

Alice Lake as Manicurist.

"The Misfit Wife" shows Alice Lake as a manicurist who marriese into a New York family where footmen and a Harvard accent prevail. The story is founded on Julie Herne's stage play "The Outsider." The adaptation was made by Lois Zellner and A. P. Younger.

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" is an adaptation of the stage success by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan. The cast includes Eugene Pallette, Ruth Stonehouse, Kathleen Kirkham and Henry Miller, Jr. The scenario is by June Mathis and A. P. Younger.

"Hearts Are Trumps" is an adaptation by June Mathis of Cecil Raleigh's Drury Lane melodrama. The cast includes Joseph Kilgour, Frank Brownlee, Thomas Jefferson, Edward Connelly, Alice Terry and Francelia Billington.

"The Mutiny of the Elsinore" is a picturization of Jack London's novel by A. S. Le Vino. The cast includes Mitchell Lewis, Helen Ferguson and William V. Mong.

Bebe Daniels Begins Her Realart Career with "You Never Can Tell" for Vehicle

BEBE DANIELS started work at the Realart studios in Hollywood on June 7 on her first production as a star, "You Never Can Tell." Many of her friends were on hand to watch the taking of the first scenes and to wish her the best of luck.

A Deep Talk About Purple.
Confidentially speaking this is a scene from "The Deep Purple," a Realart release.

Miss Daniels was recently installed at the studios in a star dressing room along with Wanda Hawley, who has completed one picture as a Realart star and is now at work on her second. The two are old companions at the Lasky studios, where they worked together in DeMille productions.

Chester Franklin has been engaged to direct the new Realartist. He is a veteran and capable director, with a number of successful productions to his credit. He comes to Realart after having completed a series of popular "kid" productions, and has already been installed in "Directors' Row" at the Hollywood studios.

Helmar Walton Bergman wrote the scenario for the picture from two stories by Grace Lovell Bryan published in the Saturday Evening Post about six months ago, entitled "You Never Can Tell" and "Class." Mr. Bergman has been a continuity writer for many years and is best nown for his work in adapting fifteen O. Henry stories for the screen.

The story selected for Miss Daniels' first vehicle is that of a girl of vaulting ambition. Dissatisfied with her home surroundings, where money is even scarcer than soap, she starts out to earn her own living. She gets a job behind a cigar counter in a big New York City hotel, and, with a knack for dressing and a lively personality, things begin to come her way.

Miss Daniels is said to be suited to the role both by temperament and appearance. Her distinctive type of beauty, it is believed, will emphasize the high spots in the role provided for her.

Hamilton Writes Serial Story

James Shelly Hamilton, the author of numerous magazine fiction stories, and now attached to the scenario staff of the George B. Seitz organization, has completed a story for production in fifteen episodes, which will be produced as a Pathe serial in the near future. The player to star in the serial has not been designated as yet, but it is expected Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, will assign a star and director soon.

Blackwell with Cosmopolitan

Carlyle Blackwell has placed his name to a Cosmopolitan contract and will make his first appearance with Marion Davies in her latest starring vehicle, "The Restless Sex," from the Robert W. Chambers novel of the same name.

Seventeen Mayflower Specials Scheduled To Be Released One Every Third Week

ACCORDING to Benjamin A. Prager, president, the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation is carrying out one of the largest programs of production undertaken by any independent producing unit in the industry. The Mayflower schedule for the year which began on January 1, 1920, calls for the output of a minimum of seventeen specials to be released at the rate of one every three weeks. Six of the industry's foremost directors, George Loane Tucker, Allan Dwan, R. A. Walsh, Sidney A. Franklin, Emile Chautard and Charles Miller, have or will contribute one or more independent productions to Mayflower's program for the current year.

The large scale on which directors whose product is presented by Mayflower are operating is indicated by the fact that twelve productions have already been completed, representing an announced aggregate investment of approximately $3,000,000. The list of subjects completed and in the distributor's branch offices include Allan Dwan's "Soldiers of Fortune," "The Luck of the Irish," "A Splendid Hazard," "The Scoffer" and "In the Heart of a Fool"; R. A. Walsh's "The Deep Purple"; Sidney A. Franklin's "Athalie"; Charles Miller's "The Law of the Yukon," and Chautard's "The Mystery of the Yellow Room."

Four Already Shown.

Since the beginning of the current year, four Mayflower productions have already been shown to theatre-goers. They include Dwan's "The Luck of the Irish" and "Soldiers of Fortune," Walsh's "The Deep Purple" and Chautard's "The Mystery of the Yellow Room." All of which were released under the Realart banner. "A Splendid Hazard," an Allan Dwan production with Henry B. Walthall in the leading role, is now receiving pre-release showings in seven key cities, preparatory to its general distribution through First National franchise holders.

Allan Dwan's "The Scoffer" is tentatively scheduled for release by First National on August 23, to be followed on September 27 by "Athalie," founded on Robert W. Chambers' novel of that name and completed last week by Director Franklin. Mr. Dwan's "In the Heart of a Fool" will probably be presented on November 15. "The Law of the Yukon," adapted by Charles Miller from Robert W. Services' verse classic of that name, will be released by Realart early this fall.

Four More Tucker Specials.

In addition to this, Emile Chautard has completed two productions to be presented by Mayflower, neither of which has been definitely titled.

George Loane Tucker is now cutting and titling "Ladies Must Live." Mr. Tucker is under contract to make four additional specials to be presented by Mayflower, two of which, in addition to "Ladies Must Live," will be released during the present year.

Allan Dwan is now working on the sixth of his independent productions which in all probability also will be released this year, following "In the Heart of a Fool." R. A. Welsh has just begun his second production, which, together with "The Deep Purple" and a third subject to follow the one now in course of production, will constitute this director's contribution to Mayflower's 1920 schedule.

Denison Clift to Europe

Denison Clift, writer of screen stories for Lasky, Ince and Fox, left Hollywood on June 6 to take a long-contemplated trip abroad, to study new conditions caused by the world war. Mr. Clift will sail from New York on June 26, and will go first to France, arriving in Paris in time for the celebration of the Fall of the Bastile on July 14.

From Paris, Mr. Clift, who will be accompanied by his wife, will go into Italy, to study the world's great paintings in the galleries of Rome and Florence. From Italy he will tour Southern France, Switzerland and Belgium, visiting all the important battlefields.

In September Mr. Clift will reach London, where, it is understood, he will accept an offer to make three pictures in one of the largest studios there.

Harry Carey's "Human Stuff" Is Set for June 28 Release

UNIVERSAL announces the release of Harry Carey's latest picture, "Human Stuff," for June 28. It is an adaptation from a story by Tarkington Baker and was directed by Reeves Eason.

When Mr. Carey read the scenario of "Human Stuff" and discovered that about seventy scenes were laid in a western ranch, he suggested using his own ranch for the purpose. He could not accommodate the entire company in his spacious house, but a dozen tents were erected for the use of those who could not find room within the Carey mansion. Charlie, Carey's Chinese cook, engaged several cousins and uncles from Los Angeles to help him in the kitchen, and considerable inroad was made into the cellar to supply the wants of the forty or more people who took part in the production.

Will Supply Capitol Programs

For the benefit of exhibitors who are interested in the most modern angles of showmanship and those who want to model their presentations along the most approved lines, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is prepared to supply each week programs of the "Rothapfel type of bill," as shown at New York's magnificent motion picture palace, the Capitol. This service will be supplied regularly to any exhibitor sending his name and address to the Goldwyn office.

William Desmond in "A Broadway Cowboy" Heads Pathe Release Schedule for July

UNDER the pretentious arrangements made by Pathe for supplying exhibitors with big photoplay attractions for the summer, William Desmond in "A Broadway Cowboy" will be the initial "hot weather" release by Pathe. The Jesse D. Hampton production will be issued on July 4, and according to Pathe, exhibitors who play this production will have double cause for celebrating Independence Day.

The play was produced from "The Man from Make Believe," a story by Byron Morgan, one of America's best known fiction writers. As a romantic comedy it is said to be both amusing and spectacular. The direction of Joseph Franz, who has contributed many successes to the Hampton list during the last year, is considered noteworthy.

Betty Francisco, whose beauty and charm won her a legion of admirers when she was in the Ziegfeld Follies, is certain to augment her supporters with her work as Betty Jordan, the girl for whom Burke Randolph, matinee idol, slew "scores of red-skins." Other characterizations are given by Evelyn Selbie, Thomas Delmar, J. P. Lockney, Paddy McGuire and Clark Comstock.

Striking locations were selected for this picture and its atmosphere is that of the West, where most of the action is set after the principals got away from Broadway and the theatrical district. The outdoor scenes are of such attractive nature as to make "A Broadway Cowboy," an ideal summer offering.

A fine line of paper is offered with the new Desmond picture. The twenty-four sheet shows Miss Francisco and Mr. Desmond mounted upon a "rarin' broncho," leaping athwart the New York skyline.

Pathe's Southern Manager Says Conditions Are Fine in South

WILLIAM T. YODER, southern district manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., on a recent visit to the home office, stated that the southern territory is in a more flourishing condition than ever before.

The general prosperity of the country is the basic cause, Mr. Yoder states, but the exhibitors of the South in particular are taking advantage of the situation so intelligently and effectively that at their present rate of progress they will make the South a leader in the picture industry.

The most encouraging point, according to Mr. Yoder, is the improvement in their manner of picture presentation and exploitation. Metropolitan methods of staging obtain. Special effects are used in showing films and the musical scores are given particular care and attention.

"One familiar with the Southern film territory," said Mr. Yoder, "cannot view the present conditions there without being conscious that a marvelous improvement has been made. There is a demand for higher class of feature production than formerly, and new theatres, constructed according to the most up-to-date design in architecture and equipment, are being built at a surprising rate."

Educational Aims to Supply Short Subjects That Will Match Up with Features on Bill

WITH its large number of short subject releases and the number constantly increasing, Educational Films Corporation is planning a new aid for exhibitors through its exchanges in twenty-four principal cities. This, in brief, will be the selection of short subjects to give just the right balance to programs.

"Since we are not concerned with feature productions," says a statement, "we feel that we are in a position to give the exhibitor expert advice on the best material with which to complete his bill. Our large variety of product will enable us to give a wide selection. Manifestly we are interested in making the short subjects stand out as an important portion of the bill, and therefore from a selfish motive alone we would be concerned in supplying the material that offers the best results to the exhibitor.

"While we expect those exhibitors who can do so to actually see our pictures, it is nevertheless a fact that the greater number of theatre managers cannot do this. It is to them that this phase of our service will be of the greatest value. The exhibitors, as a whole, have passed the point where they regard the short subject merely as a filler, and our exchanges, instead of merely shipping them a reel, will be able to send just the sort of pictures that fill the need.

Material to Suit the Feature.

"Every one of our exchange men will be thoroughly familiar with all of our product. We will keep them advised in advance and then they will see the pictures. They will also see as many feature pictures as possible, and at least keep informed of their character through the trade journals. Therefore, when an exhibitor writes he has Mary Jones in 'The Fickleness of Fanny' for a certain date, we will be able to supply just the comedy and other material that will best suit.

Vast Film Library.

"We will further be able to supply pictures that fit very closely in with various pictures to the extent that they have been used at leading theatres in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Indianapolis and other cities. As a matter of fact, it would be surprising to register the extent to which our vast film library is called upon for such purposes. New prints of all the subjects that we have retained will be always available in territories where they have not been shown. We will be able to do for all theatres the same thing we did for two leading New York houses in a single week recently, supplying single reels that formed perfect preludes for the features.

Educational's Policy.

"While we are firmly of the belief that many of our pictures deserve to be featured above many of the so-called 'features,' we are not urging the exhibitor to do this. He has had that advice too often. We would much rather be able to supply him with the type of comedies, scenics and other subjects that will send his patrons away from the theatre feeling that they have seen a perfect performance. We are not satisfied with merely booking a picture; we want to be sure that the picture we do book really adds something to every program."

"The Breath of the Gods," Tsuru Aoki's Last Universal, To Be Released Shortly

TSURU AOKI'S last and biggest picture made under the Universal banner will be released in a few weeks, it has just been announced by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal. It is called "The Breath of the Gods" and is a six-reel super-production featuring the Japanese film star in a story of her native land. It is a Universal-Jewel picture.

"The Breath of the Gods" is said to be among the most perfect Oriental photo-dramas. Forty some odd different sets were constructed at Universal City during the filming of the feature, each personally supervised by Miss Aoki herself and by Corley T. Ito, a Japanese artist engaged especially as advisor and designer for the picture settings.

Climax Is Not Happy.

The picture was adapted from the novel "The Breath of the Gods," by Sidney McCall. The climax is not a happy one, but is so logical and so necessary to the artistic and satisfactory evolution of the story that Universal officials have no qualms as to the popularity of the picture.

The story sounds the depths of human affections. The little Oriental actress plays the role of a daughter of the Samurai who is sent to Washington to acquaint herself with the customs of the Occident and to be of service to her native land. She falls in love with a young French diplomat, who follows her to Japan and becomes embroiled in the political intrigues of the Japanese court.

Few stories of Japan have been as rich in color as this production and Universal has gone to every extreme to make the picture an artistic masterpiece. So skilfully is the atmosphere of Japan worked into the plot and presentation of the pictured story that it sacrifices not even the slightest interest to western eyes.

Will Be a Summer Release.

One of the strongest characters seen on the screen in many days helps to give dignity and force to the majestic unfolding of the Oriental-Occidental plot. He is Prince Hagane, the War-Lord of Japan. The role is taken by Arthur Carewe, the only Armenian actor on the screen, and the husband of Madame Pavloska, of the Chicago Opera Company.

Stanhope Wheatcroft plays the part of the young French attaché. Others in the cast are Barney Sherry, Ethel Shannon, Paul Weigel, Pat O'Malley, Marion Skinner, Mai Wells and M. Seki, a Japanese actor of great attainments. The director is Rollin Sturgeon.

"The Breath of the Gods" will be released simultaneously with "Under Crimson Skies," a Universal-Jewel picture of sea-life and South American revolution featuring Elmo Lincoln.

The twin-release will be the result of Universal's promise to put several big pictures on the market in midsummer so that Universal exhibitors will be provided with big productions with which to hold their patrons during the hot summer months.

Cast of "Midchannel" Speaks Its Parts Before the Camera

AN innovation in screen technique is said to have been marked by the decision of Clara Kimball Young and Director Harry Garson to have the entire cast of "Midchannel," Miss Young's latest starring vehicle, memorize the original play, which was written by England's foremost dramatist, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, and adapted to the screen with the author's supervision.

The novelty was felt to be a necessity by Miss Young, who found that an easier naturalness of characterization would result if she uttered her lines with full voice instead of occasional outbursts of speech. Mr. Garson approved of the idea, feeling that a drama based on the most stormy period of married life could be done more powerfully if the cast spoke their parts freely and with full force. And the results, now that the picture is nearing completion, are said to be more than hoped for.

Filming "Passionate Pilgrim."

"The Passionate Pilgrim," Samuel Merwin's famous novel which ran serially in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, is now in the process of picturization by Cosmopolitan Productions, under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. The cast so far engaged consists of Matt Moore, Charles Gerard, Arthur McDonald, Tom Ryan, Albert Riccardi, Frankie Mann, Ruby De Remer, Claire Whitney and Helen Lindroth.

Los Angeles Newspaper Critics Praise Annette Kellerman in "What Women Love"

SOL LESSER is in receipt of a wire from his Los Angeles office, quoting the reviews on the Annette Kellerman production, "What Women Love," whose premiere was given at the Temple Theatre, Santa Ana, June 1.

Mr. Lesser is highly elated at the expressions of the press, as he feels that in Los Angeles, where critics see, hear and eat pictures, a production must have considerable merit before receiving the following criticisms.

May Markson of the Record says: "Refreshingly different production, some remarkable underwater scenes."

Grace Kingsley of the Times says: "A humdinger, fresh, bubbling, thoroughly delightful from all standpoints. Reveals Annette Kellerman as delightful comedienne in a role in which she presents an entirely new self to the world. Sol Lesser will give all directors a run for their money."

Guy Price of the Herald says: "Lightning like action, marvelous submarine photography, subtle situations, novel pieces of comedy business, well woven love story with melodramatic climaxes that furnish a variety of entertaining features."

"Every Inch Crammed with Action."

Maude Cheatham of the Examiner says: "Without a doubt it will be a sensation with its novelty and excellence. Miss Kellerman is the speediest worker on the screen today, even throwing the strenuous Doug Fairbanks in the shade by a safe margin. Every inch of the six-reels is crammed with action."

Monroe Lathrop of the Express says: "An assured winner. Miss Kellerman alone among women stars could do the things she does with grace and physical snap."

All the critics agree that the picture gives Wheeler Oakman, who plays opposite Miss Kellerman, a role which shows new insight into his dramatic ability. Also that the entire cast, settings, photoplay titles, and story are of the highest order.

Mr. Lesser arrived from Los Angeles last week, stopping off at the Convention in Cleveland en route. He brought a completed print of the Kellerman picture with him. This is the second trip within a month that Mr. Lesser has made, and this time his sojourn will last about a month, at which time he will announce the distributing policy of the picture, and also arrange for a Broadway opening.

Mr. Lesser has surrounded Miss Kellerman with a strong cast, every name well known. Wheeler Oakman plays the lead. Walter Long plays the villain and others are "Bull"Montana and Ralph Lewis. The story was written by Bernard McConville, author of many Mary Pickford and Norma Talmadge successes, and directed by N. C. Watt. The titles are by Katharine Hilliker.

Fast News Reel Work

A fine pictorial news record was made by Kinograms and Selznick News at the opening of the Republican Convention in Chicago. The cameramen, after filming the outbursts of the convention, developed the negative in Chicago and dispatched the prints from that point to all sections of the country. Through this method more than three days were saved, for it is generally known that all pictorial news is first sent to New York to be developed and later distributed to exhibitors.

Audience Acclaims Marion Davies at Private View of "The Restless Sex"

MORE than a thousand specially invited guests thronging the grand ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel on the evening of Wednesday, June 9, to see a private showing of Cosmopolitan Productions' "The Restless Sex," stood up at the close and acclaimed Marion Davies, the star.

A list of those present would read like a page from the social register and the judicial, literary, stage and screen directories. Banks of roses, carnations, chrysanthemums, ferns and potted palms were arranged about in restful and beautiful decorative effect, and the foyer immediately outside the grand ballroom was filled with baskets of flowers sent to Miss Davies by her many friends. During the showing of the picture a twenty-piece orchestra under the leadership of James Bradford furnished the incidental music.

A partial list of those present included Alice Joyce, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Joseph M. Schenck, Vera Gordon, William Rosells, John W. Considine, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. MacLean, Jr., Mr. and Mrs Penrhyn Stanlaws, Harrison Fisher, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Borzage, Robert Z. Leonard, Mae Murray, George D. Baker, Hamilton King, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wanger, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Joseph Vance, Daniel Frohman, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Selden, Alma Rubens, Montagu Love, Dore Davidson, Gaston Glass, Anna Wheaton, Mrs. Irene Lorber, Matt Moore, Mr. and Mrs. George Fitzmaurice, Arline Savage, Mr. and Mrs. John McGinnis, Theodore May, Joseph King, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Kerry and Albert Capellani. In Miss Davies' personal party, which occupied the entire bolcany, were Judge and Mrs. Douras, her parents, Mrs. George Van Cleve, Paul Chalfonte and Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Page and Henry M. Hobart.

This is the first time that any one outside of the company's officials has seen "The Restless Sex," and the showing was only for personal friends. The public will not be privileged to see it for several weeks, when it is scheduled to open for a pre-release New York run at a Broadway theatre.

Cosmopolitan Productions claim "The Restless Sex" is one of the most stupendous and spectacular dramas. The interior settings are magnificent in beauty and colossal in size. Joseph Urban, the noted scenic designer, created them. Of particular interest are the settings in the episodes depicting Bohemian life in New York's Greenwich Village, and the famous "Ball of the Gods." The costumes for these scenes were designed by Erte, the famous Parisian artist.

In the ballroom scenes more than six hundred persons were used, and the floor space necessary to put them on in keeping with the rest of the picture was so great that the entire studio floor, which ordinarily accommodates four companies at one time, was turned into one huge stage for this purpose.

Robert Z. Leonard directed the production, while the unusual photographic effects are credited to Albert Ziegler.

Actor's Chat with Stranger Arouses Police Suspicions

DIRECTOR BURTON GEORGE, guiding the Selznick pictures, "Wilderness Fear," who recently returned from a five weeks' trip to Banff, Canada, where exterior scenes for the production were taken, is said to bring a tale of woe that almost robbed him of two members of the cast, namely, Maurice Costello and Patrick Hartigan.

Mr. George stated that Mr. Costello and Mr. Hartigan, while in the lobby of a Banff hotel, got into conversation with a stranger. The stranger was arrested and charged with shooting a deer within the confines of the Canadian National Park. The two actors, having been observed in conversation with the stranger, were held.

Despite the protests of Mr. George the police invited him to tell his troubles to the judge the next morning at the trial. After much eloquence on the part of Director George, Messrs. Costello and Hartigan were released.

Applestein Buys the Grand

The Grand Theatre, Alexandria, Va., has been purchased at auction by F. L. Applestein, of Baltimore, for $5,125. The new owner will continue to operate the house as a moving picture theatre. The bidding was spirited, the opening bid being $3,500, and many of those present endeavored to secure the place.

Marshall Neilan Leaves New York After Short Visit to Begin Summer Production

MARSHALL NEILAN, recently elected vice-president of Associated Productions, Inc., arrived in New York last week and after a short business visit, in which he closed several important deals, returned to California to begin work on a plan of intensive summer production preparatory to the fall releasing season.

While in New York Mr. Neilan held several conferences with executives of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in connection with his summer producing plans involving future pictures to be released through this organization in accordance with his present arrangement. Several interesting announcements are expected as a result of these meetings.

Mr. Neilan announced that the title of his fourth independent production is "Dinty" and features Wesley Barry. The story is an original script by Reed Heustis, the newspaper humorist, and Mr. Neilan himself, and presents a typical Neilan subject in which the little freckle-faced youngster is called upon to do the greatest acting of his career. Opposite Barry is Colleen Moore in the second big part of the picture. Tom Wilson, who scored as a foil for Barry in "Don't Ever Marry," is cast in a similar part in this picture.

Next Release Not Yet Titled.

The third Neilan picture for First National release, following "The River's End" and "Don't Ever Marry," is now complete with the exception of the title. Considerable time and effort is being devoted to the selection of a title that will do justice to the plot, said to present a mystery drama featuring a number of spectacular thrills.

The plot presents a newspaper story in which Pat O'Malley appears opposite Agnes Ayres, who makes her debut under the Neilan banner in this film in the part of a reporter. Others in the cast are Wesley Barry, J. Barney Sherry, Charles Mailes, Lydia Yeamans Titus, George Dromgold, Noah Beery, Walter Long, Charles West and "Bull" Montana.

On Mr. Neilan's return to his studio the plant will witness the busiest period since it was opened several months ago. In accordance with Mr. Neilan's new plans, Pete Smith, director of advertising and publicity, will leave New York for the West Coast shortly to work with the producer in the preparation of special exploitation material for exhibitors. Within two weeks every available inch of space will be occupied by Mr. Neilan as well as Albert Kaufman companies, in accordance with the recent Neilan-Kaufman producing alliance whereby both producers share the facilities and personnel of the plant.

PROHIBITION struck one of its hardest blows in Milwaukee, the home of the art of making good beverage out of fine hops, but it is having a favorable reaction upon motion picture conditions there. This statement is made by Joseph H. Mergener, manager of the Pathe Milwaukee office, who recently spent a week in New York consulting with the home office officials.

The general depression in business has not had any effect on the financial condition of the general public in the Wisconsin metropolis, according to Mr. Mergener. Motion picture exhibitors are now doing better than ever before and conditions are so promising that several new theatres are under course of construction.

Without his saloons the Milwaukee man must have some place to spend his spare time and the picture theatre is gaining his patronage. There has been a marked increase in the male patronage of theatres, Mr. Mergener reports.

Tire of Problem Play.

"Exhibitors here," said Manager Mergener, "are already contemplating the construction of three or four theatres in the downtown district to relieve the overflow in the other houses, and I believe that with the enormous impetus of business more will follow. Milwaukee always has been more conservative than other cities of her size in regard to amusement, but the day of the showman has now arrived.

"They are tiring of the problem play. An example of this is the way the big outdoor production, 'Rio. Grande,' was received. Played in a first-run house it was recognized as a picture of unusual worth, and return engagements are not only contemplated in this theatre, but also in other houses where it was shown.

"We are looking forward to big business on 'Passers By,' the Blackton production. An advance screening was given and local exhibitors were all highly pleased. 'Other Men's Shoes' and the new features starring Blanche Sweet have met with the highest approval in my territory and bookings have increased beyond all expectation. We are now looking forward to the H. B. Warner productions. Of course Harold Lloyd is making them all sit up and take notice. The Rolin Comedies featuring Snub Pollard and the 'Bringing Up Father' Comedies are also doing a big business.

"Serials gradually are gaining more ground here with the success of George Seiz in 'Bound and Gagged,' 'The Third Eye,' 'Trailed by Three' and 'Daredevil Jack.' Showmen now are looking forward to the new Seitz output, 'Pirate Gold,' and 'The Phantom Foe,' which introduces Juanita Hansen as a Pathe star."

Latin America and Far East Pay Big Prices for "Tarzan"

IN the foreign market as well as in America, "The Return of Tarzan," the Numa production of Edgar Rice Burrough's book, is starting off with a rush that bids fair to place it ahead of even "Tarzan of the Apes" as a box office success. Arthur Ziehm, manager of foreign sales for Goldwyn, reports record-breaking bids for the foreign territory that remains open, and this week closed two big contracts, one for Japan, China and the Philippines and the other for all of Latin America.

The strong appeal of "The Return of Tarzan" to foreign buyers is due to the success of "Tarzan of the Apes" and to the belief that the current release contains more jungle scenes, more wild animals, more fights and more thrills. Comparatively few productions have received so much publicity in advance and offer so many opportunities for business-pulling exploitation.

The Latin American countries included in the contract closed by Mr. Ziehm are Cuba, Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Brazil, Chile, Bolivia, Peru, Ecuador, Columbia, Venezuela, Mexico and Central America.

De Vassey Buys "Twin Brothers"

Thomas de Vassey, vice-president of the Wistaria Productions, announces that he has bought the story, "Twin Brothers," by Phillip Van Loan, which he is getting ready to produce.

"Our further announcements will be forthcoming in a few weeks. Production on "Twin Brothers" will start in July," said Mr. de Vassey.

Collier and Moore Star in Selznick and Select Films

DURING the latter part of June, Selznick Enterprises will distribute through Select Pictures "The Servant Question," starring William Collier, the stage comedian, and "The Desperate Hero, starring Owen Moore. The former is a Select picture and the latter a Selznick.

In "The Servant Question," William Collier as "Larry Butler," is said to imbue his role with all the ludicrousness that has made him a leading stage comedian. Supporting Mr. Collier are "Buster" Collier, his son, Armand Cortez, Virginia Lee and Rapley Holmes.

Owen Moore in "The Desperate Hero" portrays the role of a newspaperman endeavoring to get rid of his only inheritance, an oil lease, and incidentally displaying a certain amount of braggadocio in order to convince prospective clients.

Goldwyn's First Year Product Sold for Holland and Finland

TWO more deals for the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in European countries were closed last week by Arthur Ziehm, manager of Goldwyn's foreign sales department. The transactions cover the entire first year output of Goldwyn for Holland and Finland. The figure paid was not disclosed, but it is said to be unusually high in view of market conditions as they exist today in the two countries.

There are twenty-six productions in Goldwyn's first year output, including pictures starring Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, Maxine Elliott, Mabel Normand, Mary Garden and Jane Cowl; also Rex Beach's phenomenally successful picture, "The Auction Block." Most of the Goldwyn stars will be new to the audiences of Holland and Finland, and it is planned to give them liberal exploitation.

Natives of India Like Fox Pictures, E. Lloyd Sheldon Writes from Orient

FROM E. Lloyd Sheldon, writer of original stories, many of which have been produced on the screen by Fox Film Corporation, J. Gordon Edwards, veteran director of the Fox staff, now engaged in making William Farnum special productions on the Pacific Coast, has received a long communication regarding the film situation in the Orient and particularly in India, where the writer is at present.

Mr. Sheldon left America several months ago for the Orient with a photographic company for the purpose of securing educational features. In travelling from point to point in India he has made a constant study of the motion picture situation in the various cities visited, and in his letter to Mr. Edwards he speaks highly of the popularity of Fox pictures in this territory.

During his entire trip Mr. Shelden has found Fox pictures in great demand among exhibitors. Fox lithographs confront the traveler from billboards and house-stands wherever motion pictures are known. At Agra, about 200 miles midway between the famous cities of Delhi and Lucknow, the writer had a long talk with the proprietor of the picture theatre adjoining the hotel where he was staying. From this exhibitor he learned that "Cleopatra," the screen spectacle staged by Director Edwards for Fox at a great cost, is considered by Indian showmen among the greatest and most successful American motion pictures ever viewed in the Orient.

"Cleopatra" was playing at this house at the time and the Fox executives have received word that the biggest business of the year was done at this theatre with this picture, repeating the success it has achieved all through that territory.

The Sheldon party will remain in India several months more at least, and from there will go north and west into Tibet and Afghanistan, thence to Persia and Arabia, the while collecting photographic copy and notes on material for educational features and new photodramas to which Sheldon will give his attention upon his return to this country.

The report from Mr. Sheldon is enthusiastically confirmed by the Fox sales branch in Bombay. This office, established in the early days of 1919, now handles the Fox business for the greater half of India and Afghanistan, the firm having divided this territory at that time between the new branch and the old distributing center at Calcutta.

Advertising Men Oppose Addition to Trade Journals

THE contemplated launching of an additional motion picture trade paper was brought to the attention of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at its regular luncheon last week when members announced that as space buyers for their respective firms they had been solicited by representatives of the contemplated new organ.

While the general sense of the members as individually expressed was firmly opposed to any addition to the present number of trade journals, a proposal to put the body on record to that effect was nullified when it was pointed out that such a proceeding involved principles of policy on which it was necessary for the board of governors to pass, whereupon the matter rested pending the governors' meeting, set for the coming week.

Among advertisers returned from the Cleveland convention who addressed the A. M. P. A. and reported their views of the happenings in the lake city were Harry Reichenbach, Jerome Beatty and others.

An invitation from Harry Reichenbach to the members to play a golf tournament as his guests the coming week at the Bayside Golf Club met with few takers when it was explained that non-golfing members would be expected to caddy, but upon Reichenbach's adding that a complimentary luncheon would be served the members accepted in a body.

To Picturize "Charm School"

Wallace Reid soon again will be a prominent figure around the Lasky studio, and his long vacation, which he devoted to stage work, will have ended. His new picture will be Alice Duer Miller's "The Charm School," a comedy said to have an abundance of delightful and original situations and a plot that is quite unique.

Lila Lee will be his leading woman. Tom Geraghty is responsible for the scenario. James Cruze will be the director.

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., Co-ordinate Effort in Behalf of Other Independents

FOLLOWING the powerful co-ordination of effort resulting from the convention of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., at Cleveland, influential exhibitor-officers and exhibitor-members stated that the Associated Exhibitors are working progressively as a single, positive unit. According to announcement they are working forcefully and carefully with the sole purpose in view of soon presenting to the independent exhibitors of the country a plan whereby the showman is given the right to pictures, profits and protection without strings attached.

With one stream of de luxe product already flowing, and with the assurance of further sources of product forthcoming from F. C. Quimby, general manager, who recently arrived in New York from the Coast, the Associated Exhibitors believe that within a few days they will have information to impart to other independent exhibitors which will irrevocably prove Associated's claim to "the perfect plan."

Sub-Franchise Plan Ready.

Associated's sub-franchise plan, which now is being tuned into absolute harmony with the aims and purposes of independent exhibitors, as gleaned from the exhibitors themselves during the big Cleveland convention, is virtually ready to submit to the sincerely independent theatre owners of the United States.

An interesting feature surrounding the sub-franchise proposition is that it is said to embody the spirit of every constructive resolution adopted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at Cleveland. This is especially true as regards those passages of the resolutions whose prime purpose is to obtain for the exhibitor protection from the forces and powers that seek to destroy his independence. The plan is claimed to be thoroughly sound in principle and fully equitable in application.

Officers Who Attended Meeting.

During the meetings of Associated members showmen problems were discussed at great length and in minute detail. The members worked together day and night in what proved to be a successful endeavor to put into final form the plan whereby the independent exhibitor, be he big or small, is assured the opportunity of sharing in an honest-to-goodness co-operative proposition.

Among the officers and members who attended the meetings were Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; H. H. Wellenbrink, Montclair; James Q. Clemmer, Seattle; I. Libson, Cincinnati; Dennis Harris, Pittsburgh, Saul Harris, Little Rock; Samuel Harding, Kansas City; Joseph Morgan, Washington, D. C.; Paul Gusdanovic, Cleveland, M. S. Cohen, Council Bluffs; J. H. Cooper, Wichita; Harold Franklin, Buffalo; Lubliner & Trinz, Chicago; R. D. Craver and F. R. Rogers, Charlotte; M. L. Malevinsky, F. C. Quimby and Phil Ryan.

Jury Picks New Realart Star; Will Not Reveal Identity Yet

THE unique method adopted by Realart Pictures Corporation in putting the selection of its sixth star up to a jury of twelve prominent professional persons in varied pursuits of life has aroused considerable interest and comment in trade circles.

The jury has already reached a decision and it is in the hands of the company's officials. According to J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, this method has never before been employed in selecting a star. "We hope and fully expect this selection to be one of the most popular star decisions ever made," he said. "The very method which we have adopted should guarantee this.

"It is rather remarkable that twelve persons so prominent in their different professions as those on the Realart star jury should have been able to agree on one person as the best qualified for the honor. Let anyone pick at random twelve persons of his acquaintance and allow them to attempt the same task, and I venture to say the Republican convention deadlock would seem like a barnyard cackle disturbance in comparison.

"We are highly pleased with the choice the jury has made for us and very enthusiastic over the plans we are framing for the new star. Since last week we have been deluged with inquiries as to her identity but the public curiosity will have to go unsatisfied for a brief season. When the announcement is made I am certain everyone will be as jubilant as Realart that this new star has come to the screen."

No Respite for Stars and Directors at Lasky Studio; Many New Films Are Begun

MID-SUMMER promises no let up in production activities at the Lasky studio and stars and directors are having no respite from their labors between pictures. Those who will start work on new pictures within the next few days are Directors George Melford and William DeMille, while those who shortly will be changing roles include Roscoe Arbuckle, Bryant Washburn and Wallace Reid.

Ethel Clayton Starts Work.

Ethel Clayton already has begun work on her last picture to be made for Paramount prior to her vacation, after which she will go to London to make at least two pictures there for the company. Tom Forman is directing the present film, which is an adaptation by Mary O'Connor from Cynthia Stockley's short story, "Rosanne Ozanne."

It seems probable that Cecil B. DeMille will not start work on his next special before July 1 or at least not until the last of June. The nature or title of it is as yet not announced. The famous producer has several stories in mind and from these will choose one which he will make.

George Melford starts this week on Opie Read's "The Jucklins," scenario by Frank Condon, with Monte Blue, Mabel Juliene Scott and Charles Ogle in the leading roles. A number of important settings are being constructed for this and there will be a considerable amount of location work as well.

Walter Woods has just about completed the scenario for "The Traveling Salesman," which will afford a starring vehicle for Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle. He will be directed by Joseph Henabery. Wallace Reid will start next week on "The Charm School," by Alice Duer Miller, scenario by Tom Geraghty, and James Cruze will be the director.

New Washburn Play.

Bryant Washburn will begin in a short time on "Wanted: A Blemish," directed by Maurice Campbell with scenario by Douglas Bronston. William DeMille is about ready to start on "His Friend and His Wife," by Cosmo Hamilton, which was recently published in book form. Following this, it is understood, he will produce "Footlights," by Rita Weiman, scenario by Olga Printzlau. Miss Weiman, besides being a playwright of note, is one of the best known contributors to the Saturday Evening Post.

Selznick Acquires Paragon Studios at Fort Lee; Entire Force Will Soon Be East

STRIKING evidences of the size of the production units of Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises are contained in the announcement by Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, that his company has just signed a long term lease for the acquisition of the Paragon studio, at Fort Lee, N. J. With the taking over of the Paragon studio on June 7, two-thirds of all the studio space at Fort Lee will be controlled by Selznick.

Coincident with this announcement, Mr. Selznick stated that a crew of fifty workmen is employed on a day and night shift making extensive alterations in the property and installing an entire new lighting system. Work is said to have progressed so rapidly that complete sets were erected in time for the shooting of the first Selznick picture on the morning of June 7.

All in Fort Lee by July 1.

The acquisition of the Paragon studio is said to be the sequel to Mr. Selznick's recent announcement that hereafter all productions of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises will be made exclusively in the East. It is intimated that by July 1 all stars, directors and technical experts now working at the Selznick west coast studios will have arrived in New York. All interior scenes for Selznick and National Picture Theatres productions made for Selznick will be shot in the three Fort Lee studios now controlled by the organization.

Mr. Selznick declared that the studio facilities for his staff in the production unit of Selznick pictures will be practically unlimited. On the main studio stage at Fort Lee, it is said, four companies can work simultaneously without interfering with the production work there of the Herbert Kaufman Weekly. The Paragon studio stage will accommodate an equal number of companies.

About a month ago Mr. Selznick announced the acquisition of the Solax studio, also at Fort Lee. The stage space there will accommodate two more companies.

The grounds of these three studio buildings are said to embrace a total acreage about ten times the area of their stages. This will provide much space for the erection of elaborate exterior sets. A force of more than three hundred employes is employed at the main Selznick studio at Fort Lee.

Moss to Take Time from Work to Aid Jews in Money Drive

B. S. MOSS, vaudeville and motion picture theatre magnate, has volunteered to give up several business hours every week for an entire year to assist the Business Men's Council of the Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies in its drive against drives, which was recently launched.

This drive is intended to eliminate the necessity of further campaigns for funds to support the ninety-one leading hospitals, sanatoria, day nurseries and other leading social service institutions that are affiliated with Federation, by substituting intensive drives. This propaganda will be carried on by the Business Men's Council in every trade and by an Auxiliary Women's Council in a block-to-block and house-to-house canvass of the city.

The workers will choose their own hours and give as much time as possible to this work throughout the remainder of 1920 and the early months of 1921. It is hoped that as a result of this drive against drives, every Jew of New York will become a subscriber of Federation according to his means.

Mr. Moss will endeavor to enlist the support of every man and woman in all branches of the vaudeville and motion picture industry. His voluntary effort to give up part of his business time to Federation for an entire year has met with much favorable comment.

Prisoners See "Evangeline"

Following a novel entertainment bill arranged by the inmates of Clinton Prison, Dannemora, N. Y., for which Fox Film Corporation furnished the feature, the Longfellow art classic "Evangeline," N. L. Burdick, as correspondence clerk of the prison, has reported the affair a success. Sufficient funds were raised by the entertainment for the support of the prison baseball league.

A letter addressed to President William Fox from the prison shows the appreciation of the authorities and the inmates for the presentation of the screen classic.

Approves "Mormon Maid" as Revival

"A Mormon Maid," featuring Mae Murray, Hobart Bosworth and Frank Borzage, has been selected and approved as the first feature for revival in the "American Films for American Theatres" campaign of the American Educational Motion Picture Association, of 69 West Ninetieth street, New York, as an offset to the importation of foreign films suggested at the recent exhibitors' national convention.

The revival of good pictures committee announces that exhibitors no longer fear the release date bugaboo—states a picture is always new while it is a good and an interesting production—and calls attention to the demands of the present day for extended runs in its arguments for the revival of the many good pictures in American vaults before introducing to this country the pictures of foreign producers.

Director Rothapfel Books "Passers-By," Blackton Release, for Capitol Theatre

"PASSERS-BY," J. Stuart Blackton's screen version of the stage success by C. Haddon Chambers, has been booked to the Capitol Theatre by the New York exchange of Pathe. It will be the feature attraction here during the week of June 20. Samuel L. Rothapfel, who has just assumed the managing directorship of the Capitol, saw "Passers-By" soon after he came to New York and was thoroughly impressed by it. He plans to give it wide exploitation.

Herbert Rawlinson, who plays the lead, is an established favorite at the Capitol, where he has appeared in a series of detective pictures during the last six months. In the role of Peter Waverton, Rawlinson assumes the part which thousands of New York theatregoers remember as played in the stage version by Charles Cherry and Richard Bennett.

Two other favorites with New York audiences are prominent in the cast—William J. Ferguson, who plays Pine, the butler, and Tom Lewis, who portrays Nighty, the cabby. Mr. Ferguson only recently closed his New York engagement in "The Little Whopper," a musical comedy which played an entire season at the Casino Theatre. In the last few months Tom Lewis has been a headliner at the Palace Theatre, and on Sunday night, June 6, he was featured in the Lambs Gambol at the Hippodrome.

Another well known character, Dick Lee, is included in the cast. Lee is favorably known for his character delineations, and, as Burns, the derelict in "Passers-By," he is said to give one of the most finished performances of his career.

Leile Valentine, who has the leading female role, is well known on stage and screen. She played for three years in "The Boomerang" on tour, and in her film career has appeared with Olive Thomas and other stars.

Young Charles Stuart Blackton, 6-year-old son of Commodore Blackton, plays a highly important part as Little Peter. The youngster offers exploitation possibilities. He is known to thousands of film enthusiasts, for his work in the "Country Life" series, produced by Paula Blackton, and for his efforts in other pictures produced by Commodore Blackton. He had an important part in "The Moonshine Trail."

Sues for One-Third of Money Paid to Film "So Long Letty"

EARL CARROLL, who collaborated with Oliver M. Morosco and Elmer Harris in adapting the play entitled "My Neighbor's Wife" into a musical comedy, which was produced under the title of "So Long Letty," has commenced an action in the United States District Court at New York against the producers to secure a third interest in the film rights to the production.

The author alleges that it was the understanding when he wrote the lyrics and composed the music for "So Long Letty" that he was to receive 3 per cent. of the gross receipts earned by the musical comedy and that he was to have a one-third interest in the production.

The plaintiff charges that the producers sold the motion picture rights to the Christie Film Corporation, which he alleges are of the value of at least $30,000, without his knowledge or consent, and that he is being unjustly deprived of a one-third interest in the royalties.

Pollock Story for Norma

"The Sign On the Door," by Channing Pollock, in which Majorie Rambeau is now appearing at the Republic Theatre, has been sold to Norma Talmadge, as one of her forthcoming First National pictures. Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge Film Company, recently closed the deal for the picture rights.

Kremer to Make Two-Reelers

Victor Kremer, Inc., announces the coming production of twenty-six two-reelers, featuring Shorty Hamilton, and eight specials directed by Chester De Vonde. The company already has completed, and now being marketed, a pretentious six-part subject entitled "Voices."

Oil in San Diego?

The productions of the company will be made in Mr. Kremer's own studio in San Diego, where he has a plot of 215 acres. The property may be drilled for oil if present indications are verified by further investigation. Mr. Kremer will in future spend his time equally between San Diego and New York.

Vitagraph to Start Production August 1 on Chester's "The Son of Wallingford"

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has selected "The Son of Wallingford," written by George Randolph Chester in collaboration with Mrs. Chester, as another Vitagraph special production. Production on it will be started about August 1, it is announced.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester have been busy for several months past writing "The Son of Wallingford," and have now practically completed the novel. This will be published serially in one of America's best known magazines, which will run the opening installment within the next few weeks. During the serial publication of the novel, production on the film version will be in progress at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio under the personal supervision of Mr. Chester, and the picture will be released at the time of the publication of the final installment in the magazine. The novel will also make its appearance in book form at this time.

Mr. Chester, who is editor-in-chief of Vitagraph, and Mrs. Chester, will put the story in scenario form, and will assist in the selection of the special cast.

George Randolph Chester is internationally known in the world of letters as the creator of that lovable vagabond, J. Rufus Wallingford. While J. Rufus and his side-partner, Blackie Daw, will appear in the new adventures of the Wallingford family, "The Son of Wallingford" will not be in any way a sequel to the earlier stories of Wallingford. J. Rufus, indeed, comes out a poor second best in the new series, when he tries conclusions with James R. Wallingford, his son.

Those who have read the story, as far as it has gone, declare that all the cleverness and ingenuity which characterized the earlier Wallingford episodes, are manifested in the new series, with the added charm of a riper style.

The best resources of the Vitagraph organization will be devoted to making the picture one of the most notable productions ever offered.

Seek Alleged Imposter

An imposter posing as Courtney Ryley Cooper and as the author of the "Boston Blackie" stories under the nom de plume of Jack Boyle, has fleeced several Los Angeles producers and is now in New York, according to a telegram received from the West Coast by R. L. Giffen from Courtney Ryley Cooper.

Cosmopolitan Productions particularly is interested in the matter, since it has only recently signed a contract with Jack Boyle, who is in the East, whereby it acquires all motion picture rights to all his stories, including the "Boston Blackie" stories published in Cosmopolitan Magazine for a number of years.

The telegram reads: "Be on the lookout for a man posing as Courtney Ryley Cooper and as author of 'Boston Blackie' stories under nom de plume of Jack Boyle. This man is an imposter. He has fleeced some of the local producing companies, using both names. He is about 42 years of age, silver gray hair, about 4 feet ten, and weighs about 160 pounds. Understand he is now in New York. He claims to be a brother of Mabel Dunham Thayer, who had a story in the Saturday Evening Post on May 8. This is also false."

Building Scenario Annex

The Lasky studio scenario department is shortly to be enlarged by the addition of eleven rooms to be included in a two-story annex to the present structure housing the literary fraternity of the plant.

Don't Forget to Give Your Half-Witted Messenger Boys Carfare When They Tote Film

POLICE and detectives were called off in the case of the mysterious disappearance of ten reels of "Civilization," when George Felker, manager of the Shawnee Theatre, Louisville, returned them to E. R. Day, who had leased them. It was reported that the film had been sold for a nickel by a half-witted negro boy, Jim, employed by Day.

Jim was taking the film to Day's home, when he became confused on a street car and found himself in need of fare. Felker, fortunately, happened to be on the same car, recognized the boy, and took charge of the film after setting Jim right on the way home.

Thea Talbot

Who is playing in Metro pictures. Now cast as Bessie Bissett in "The Marriages of Mayfair," a Drury Lane melodrama.

To Cut Henley Regatta Scenes Into "Marriages of Mayfair"

METRO has just received from England pictures of the Henley Regatta which will be used in the forthcoming production of the spectacular melodrama "The Marriages of Mayfair," by Cecil Raleigh. The scenes show close-ups of the races and of the arrival of King George and Queen Mary in the royal barge. There are also scenes showing the crowds and the shifting panorama of the Thames.

Director George W. Terwilliger, who has had "The Marriages of Mayfair" company for the past few weeks on location at Stamford, Conn., has worked these scenes into the story, matching them up with the scenes taken on Long Island Sound.

The characters in the story who are gathered at the famous Henley race are shown in their stage coaches and at the fashionable clubhouse on the Thames. The Stamford Yacht Club, one of the most exclusive in the East, was turned over to Metro for the production and in the past two weeks has been turned into a regular motion picture studio.

Zellner to Put on Metro's Americanization Films.

Arthur Zellner, of the scenario department, has been selected by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, to represent Metro on the Federal Government's Americanization Pictures Committee. The committee, headed by Rupert Hughes, is to write and select stories for production. The productions will be made in various studios.

The productions made in Metro's studios will be produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Zellner, who also expects to write a number of them.

Woods Will Direct Wanda Hawley's Third Picture.

Sam Woods, former assistant to Cecil B. DeMille and more recently director for Wallace Reid and Ethel Clayton, has been engaged by Realart to direct the third Wanda Hawley production, which will be started in a short time. Mr. Woods was originally engaged to handle "Miss Hobbs," the successful initial vehicle for the new Realartist. Owing to a conflict of dates the arrangement had to be abandoned.

Universal's "The Red Lane" a Strong Story of Outdoor Life; Listed for Early Release

THE recent completion of "The Red Lane" at Universal City assures the early presentation of one of the most unusual outdoor photodramas the screen has offered in a long time. Frank Mayo is the star of this virile drama and the production was supervised by Lynn Reynolds. It will be released early next month.

"The Red Lane" is from the pen of Holman Day, the New England novelist, whose stories of the North woods possess all the tang of the pine and the hemlock and pulsate with red-blooded action. This story is probably more typical of this author than any other tale he has written and for that reason was selected for Frank Mayo to serve as a sequel to "The Brute Breaker," produced some months ago.

The scenes of this Frank Mayo story are laid on the Canadian border—the unguarded line which divides Northern Maine from the maritime provinces. The smuggling of livestock and merchandise across the line is the chief occupation of a band of unscrupulous ruffians whose headquarters is the low border dive of Vetal Beaulieu, a French Canadian, opposed to whom is Norman Aldrich, an American secret service agent, who had been assigned to the task of breaking up the traffic of contraband. The love interest is furnished by the arrival of Marie Beaulieu, the daughter of the saloon-keeper, whose life had been spent in a convent since her mother had left her a babe, and who is horrified to discover her father's occupation.

A strong cast gives life and character to every part in the story. Supporting Frank Mayo are Lillian Rich, James L. Mason, Jean Hersholt, James O'Neill, Earl Formes, Paul Weigel, Frank Thorne, Harry Lamont, Frederick Herzog, Margaret Mann and Mila Davenport.

Universal was prodigal in providing settings for "The Red Lane," constructing a Canadian village for the story, and sending the entire company to the picturesque Big Bear Valley for a sequence of important scenes.

New American Picture Announced.

"A Live-Wire Hick" adapted from American's "New York Luck," one of William Russell's big successes, will follow "The Week-End," a Cosmo Hamilton popular novel recently screened.

Francelia Billington, who plays opposite William Russell, is exactly the type of heroine for such a quick-action drama as "A Live-Wire Hick," and she plays into Russell's hands to perfection. In fact these two lovers of Westerns put over this comedy with the acme of zest—a comedy with a New York City locale, the action of which might well be attributed to "Lone Star."

The supporting cast includes Harvey Clark, Clarence Burton, Edward Peil, Alfred Ferguson, Frederic Vroom and Carl Stockdale complete the cast. The story was written by Charles T. and Frank Dazey, and adapted for the screen by Chester Clapp. Edward Sloman directed the filming of the picture.

Walsh Working on Second Mayflower.

R. A. Walsh has started work at the Biograph studio on his second independent production to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. This will be the first Walsh production to be distributed by First National. After filming the opening interior scenes, Director Walsh, accompanied by a cast of ten players and a complete technical staff, will entrain for Maryland, where a number of important exteriors will be "shot."

The title of the story and its origin are being withheld for the present. The production, it is said, will be distinguished by a number of photographic innovations devised by Dal Clawson, one of the most skilled cameramen in the profession.

Official of Mounted Police Praises "The River's End"

MARSHALL NEILAN'S production "The River's End" again received indorsement and praise from members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

At the invitation of Joe F. Pierce, manager of the Allen Theatre, Calgary, Inspector Spaulding and the local detachment viewed a special showing, and Inspector Spaulding said: "I take off my hat to the maker of this picture. Some one who was very familiar with the mounted police must have been associated with its production."

When Mr. Neilan produced "The River's End" he followed his usual policy of calling in an expert on the detail of the technicalities involved. From Canada he brought Sergeant A. Leslie Martin, a veteran of the Northwest Mounted Police of eight years, who passed upon the detail before the scenes were shot.

At the New York offices of the Neilan organization it was stated that "The River's End" is now rapidly nearing the $700,000 gross mark for this country alone. It is also stated that, judging from present indications, the picture will easily exceed this original quota.

Interest in Spiritualism Expected to Aid "Athalie"

THE wave of public interest in spiritualism now sweeping over the country is expected to contribute much to the box office success of "Athalie," which Director Sidney A. Franklin has just completed for the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, assert officials of that producing organization. "Athalie" is based on the Robert W. Chambers novel of that name and deals with an interesting phase of psychic phenomena.

The story relates the experiences of a beautiful girl endowed with psychic powers. Through her ability to establish communication with those beyond the horizon and her gifts of clairvoyance she attracts the attention of New York's elite and becomes a successful mystic. In the high-powered climax the young seeress, before a large and fashionable gathering, startles society by revealing in the crystal globe an illicit love affair between the wife of the man with whom she is in love and a dissolute social parasite.

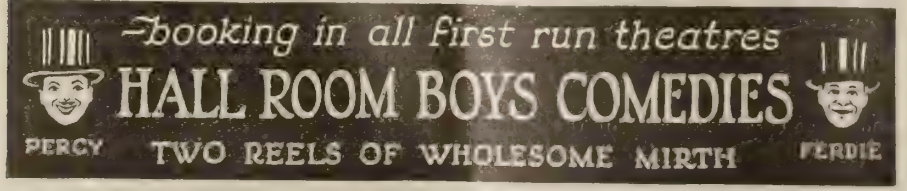
"Athalie" is played by a large cast of screen favorites, headed by Sylvia Breamer as the medium, and including Conrad Nagle, as her lover; Rosemary Theby, as the perfidious wife; Robert Cain, as the unscrupulous philanderer; Edward Martindel and Fred Warren. The production will be distributed by First National.

Evolves Artistic Setting for Realart Film.

Una Nixon Hopkins, art director at the Realart studios in Hollywood, has evolved a Spanish-American interior for the second Wanda Hawley picture, said to be a composite of six historic old ranches. "We searched Southern California," said Mrs. Hopkins, "and finally combined the best points of the most typical ones into a set. By doing this we will give the East at one view an understanding of California's distinctive decorative school."

Titling "The Inside of the Cup."

"The Inside of the Cup," the novel of Winston Churchill's which created so much discussion a few years ago, has been put into a picture by Cosmopolitan Productions under the direction of Albert Capellani. All the scenes have been made and the cutting and titling is nearly completed. In the cast are Edith Hallor, Margaret Clayton, Margaret Seddon, W. P. Carleton, David Torrence, Richard Carlyle, Jack Bohn, Albert Roccardi, Frank A. Lyon and George Storey.



"I Am an Exhibitor First, Last and All the Time," Says Loew, Decrying Rumors

MARCUS LOEW, president of Loew's Inc., addressing the Metro exchange managers and district managers at their recent convention at the Hotel Astor, New York, explained the purchase by Loew's, Inc., of a controlling interest in Metro Pictures Corporation as a matter of self-protection to himself as an exhibitor in order to insure his string of theatres a continuous supply of first-class attractions.

"I am an exhibitor first, last and all the time," he said, "and because I have become interested in a big producing organization does not mean that I have changed my attitude. When I effected a business affiliation with Metro I had no intention of opposing other independent exhibitors. I have no such intention now. I want to help rather than fight other exhibitors.

"My watchword is co-operation. There's more to be gained by working together every time than in fighting. A motion picture war would be disastrous to the industry. I want exhibitors to co-operate and I want to co-operate with them. This is my answer to rumors that have been spread—you probably have heard them—by people who want to embarrass me.

No Hand in Producing End.

"Let me tell you that I am taking absolutely no hand in the producing end of Metro Pictures Corporation. The two organizations are separate and distinct. I have always been absolutely satisfied with Metro productions and I'm more than satisfied with them now.

"I take no credit for those productions. I have nothing to do with them. The producing end of Metro is up to the president of the corporation, Richard A. Rowland. And it's going to continue to be up to him. My end of the business is the exhibiting end and that's the only end for which I assume responsibility. For the productions I have absolute faith in Mr. Rowland's judgment."

Mr. Loew went on to explain, however, that the new capital he had brought to Metro would enable it to keep on expanding in the producing line, and with the enlargement of the screen output, the general quality would be improved.

"I am as an exhibitor to give my patrons the finest entertainment in the world," he continued. "I have millions of dollars tied up in the theatre properties and I have to assure for these theatres a supply of the best pictures that can be made. I count on Metro to give me such pictures.

"I expect Metro will make about fifty pictures during the coming year and fifty pictures insure me a constant supply of first class entertainment. Mr. Rowland estimates the cost of production will be more than $9,000,000. He expects to spend from $125,000 to $250,000 on each of these productions. Then, in addition to the producing studios in Hollywood and New York, there's to be the third studio on Long Island which I figure to cost about $2,000,000. The three studios have to be operating to make all the pictures Mr. Rowland intends to have produced."

Franey Comedies Make Record.

Nearly two thousand theatres throughout the United States have booked the new series of single reel comedies in which Billy Franey is being featured by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, according to an estimate by the Sales Department.

Working on Summer Schedule Theatres Divide Patronage

LAST summer the exhibitors of Carnegie, Pa., worked a schedule of closing days, in order to overcome slow business. The scheme worked so well that it is being repeated this summer, having gone into effect June 1. The plan provides for the closing of two of the three houses in the town three nights each week, alternating in such a way that each theatre has an equal chance for business.

The schedule for the present summer is as follows: on Monday nights the Grand is open; on Wednesdays the Arcade and on Friday the Lyric. All houses are open Saturdays and on Tuesday and Thursday nights two of the houses are open, alternating between the three.

Hallmark General Sales Manager Sees Ever Widening Field for Recreation

GEORGE N. MONTGOMERY, general sales manager of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, who recently returned from a nation-wide tour of exchanges, reviews the possibilities for a volume of business during the coming season. Having covered all of the Hallmark exchanges from coast to coast with a view toward getting a proper line on the requirements of exhibitors in all territories, and in order to make recommendations for the issuing of product to best fulfil these requirements, he reports:

"The common demand of the exhibitor for 1920 seems to be for 'bigger' pictures to a far greater extent than in any year past. As a consequence a field is opened to the company which can offer the exhibitor, both large and small, a volume of big creations with stars of merit. This condition is of special benefit to Hallmark, whose acquisition from Triangle of more than 800 negatives of star productions available for recreations has been announced.

"Exhibitors everywhere are interested in Hallmark's announcement of the release of fifty-two recreated Triangle star productions for the coming year. They feel that these pictures are needed because of the recent announcements of other distributing companies of policies calling for fewer and bigger pictures. The feeling is said to prevail that there will not be enough of the latter subjects on regular release to meet the requirements of the larger or first run exhibitors alone, to say nothing of the second and subsequent runs of the small community exhibitor, who must necessarily be limited from a rental standpoint.

"A market should therefore be waiting for the Triangle Specials starring Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Frank Keenan, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Charles Ray, Louise Glaum and the choice of various productions of Griffith and Ince.

"About a year ago Hallmark announced its Famous Directors Series of twenty-six productions and has yet failed to find an exhibitor who has not 'cashed in' on any production received under his contract, so that in announcing further new releases we feel that we are but fulfilling a demand for high class features at equitable prices along lines of the standard set by this company. Under this arrangement the features announced for June, July, August and September are 'The Discarded Woman,' with Grace Darling and Rod La Rocque; 'The Common Sin,' with Grace Darling; 'Should a Wife Work?' with Edith Stockton, and 'For Love of Money,' with Virginia Lee.

"Hallmark also announces the release of its fourth serial within the year, 'The Fatal Sign,' starring Harry Carter and Claire Anderson, and is making two more."

1—"A Master Stroke" Is Wielded by "Bab's Candidate" When Amid "Hidden Dangers"—All Vitagraph Releases.

The first mentioned stars Earle Williams; No. 2 stars Corinne Griffith, while No. 3 features Jean Paige and Joe Ryan in a forthcoming serial. All that danger that was supposed to be hidden in Scene 3 appears to have been uncovered.

Harry Diggs Succeeds Hopp Hadley as Frank G. Hall's Advertising Manager

HARRY P. DIGGS, who for the past three years has handled special exploitation for Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, has been made advertising manager to succeed Hopp Hadley, recently promoted to production manager of Hallmark Pictures. Mr. Diggs takes office immediately, assuming all the duties in connection with the advertising of Hallmark productions and a series of fifty-two recreated Triangle productions.

Live Showman of Experience.

Mr. Diggs' association with the industry has included the handling of executive and creative work in connection with nearly everyone of its phases. Prior to his connections with Frank G. Hall he was a prominent theatre manager, operating some of the biggest and best houses in the South, his activities in this capacity being largely confined to Georgia. Before his entry into the picture business, Mr. Diggs was prominently connected with the speaking stage, being advance-man and manager of many of the prominent road shows which played through the southern states. He also has been manager and promoter of a number of champion wrestling bouts.

Fifteen Years in Business.

Mr. Diggs was graduated from Mercersberg Academy and Baltimore Polytechnic Institute. About fifteen years ago he entered the picture field. Since that time he has owned and managed more than fourteen theatre, playing both the "legitimate" and pictures. It was he who first introduced Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, to Georgia. He also managed Ivan Linow, Russian wrestler.

Prior to associating himself with the Frank G. Hall Enterprises, he was connected with Wid's Daily. During his three years spent with Mr. Hall, Mr. Diggs has directed special runs of Hallmark productions in nearly every important city in the United States, his last special exploitation work being in connection with the presentation of the Willard-Dempsey fight pictures in Cleveland. Mr. Diggs also supervised the taking of the Willard-Dempsey fight pictures at Toledo last July and gave this picture a special showing at the Theatre Francois, Montreal.

Mr. Diggs' duties in his new office will include the writing of all "copy" in connection with Hallmark releases. Joseph L. Kelley will handle the daily, trade and fan-paper publicity, holding the office of director of publicity.

Change of Plans at London Studio of Famous Players; Goldwyn Going Well

London, June 1.

HUGH FORD did not get to work as quickly as he expected at the Famous Players British studios. Trouble arose with Marie Corelli over the scenario of "The Sorrows of Satan," which was scheduled for the first production and the film has been abandoned. Its place has been taken by "The Great Day," the Drury Lane drama which ran last fall. Ford has gone to Switzerland on location for his picture.

Money from Hudson Bay.

Ideal Film Renting Company is being reconstructed with a big influx of new capital, reputed to have come from the Hudson Bay Company, which has already backed one educational film corporation on this side.

Goldwyn Going Well.

The new Goldwyn British Distributing Unit has had its first two trade shows, screening "The Woman in Room 13," a Bray Pictograph and a Harold Lloyd comedy at the first, and "Jubilo," a Bray Pictograph and an Edgar comedy at the second. Both sets of pictures have created a sensation, and the prospects here for Goldwyn are very big. The "controversy" is a dead letter so far as exhibitors are concerned.

A Candy Kick-up.

The sale of chocolates and sweetmeats is prohibited after eight o'clock under a Defence of the Realm Act, which was a war-time measure still being inflicted on the public. Big demonstrations are being held by exhibitors to get the measure repealed, and a powerful publicity campaign is being conducted by a deputation, when a monster petition will go to Parliament on June 3.

Hammons Arrives.

E. H. Hammons has just arrived here and says he intends to erect the largest picture theatre in the world in London. But sites are almost priceless and the authorities will not allow theatre building, so how he is going to manage it remains a mystery.

Goldwyn Didn't Go Home.

Three weeks ago Samuel Goldwyn left London for the ostensible purpose of returning to New York, but ten days later cropped up in Paris talking French studios. His British executive was unaware he had gone there and had, in fact, been calling him in New York meanwhile.

Odds and Ends.

Dan Russell, an L-KO comedian, is making short comedies over here.

There has been trouble at the Alliance studios, followed by a strike, because Sidney Reynolds wanted some of the hands to work instead of merely drawing their pay.

J. C. Graham, of Famous Players-Lasky, is in Copenhagen for a fortnight, presumably in connection with the reported U. F. A. deal.

The Labor Party is preparing to use the screen for propaganda and intends to make its own pictures—and sell them to the trade.

A fusion of two of the oldest British producing units with a new and highly capitalized concern is under discussion.

Garson Signs Sada Cowan

R. M. YOST, publicity manager for Harry Garson's Los Angeles studio, has wired the Moving Picture World as follows:

"One of the most important events of the film year comes in the announcement from Harry Garson and Herbert K. Somborn that they have just placed under contract Sada Cowan, author of many great successes of both screen and stage, by which she is to write exclusively for them original stories for production as specials.

"Miss Cowan wrote the scenario for 'Why Change Your Wife,' one of the biggest successes of many seasons. In addition to her many big screen successes, she is author of such well-known dramas as 'Playing the Game,' produced by the Henry Harris Estate; 'The State Forbids,' 'In the Morgue,' 'The Moonlit Way,' 'The Honor of America,' 'The Wonder of the Age,' a comedy produced by Grace George, and a dozen others.

"Miss Cowan's stories will be produced and released as special super-productions and work on the preparation of the first one is being rapidly carried on."

Wilson Likes Fine Arts Film

President Wilson has asked that "A Dream of Fair Women," one of the Fine Arts Picture Corporation's productions, be screened a second time at the White House. Produced a year ago to feature the winners in a beauty contest, this film especially pleased the President when he saw it in Washington recently, and he asked Secretary Tumulty to arrange for its display in the executive mansion. A hurry call was sent out to obtain a copy of it.

Year's Rentals May Reach High Mark of $83,360,222

ACCORDING to records of the Bureau of Internal Revenue at Washington, D. C., the total volume of business done by all the distributing organizations in the industry reached $11,317,089.40 for the month of March, 1920. The figures are gained by estimating on a basis of the 5 per cent. film rental tax.

For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1919, up to and including March 31, 1920, the government received $3,126,008.36 in rental taxes. Therefore, the total business in film rentals for those months reached $62,520,167.20. Estimating further, the average amount paid to the revenue department in taxes for every month of 1919, beginning with July, and every month of 1920 up to and including March, is $6,946,685.24 4/9 for each month, in terms of gross rentals.

As the fiscal year ends on June 30, the total rental taxes paid into the national treasury for 1919-1920 will reach $4,168,011.14 2/3. This indicates that the total business done by distributors will reach $83,360,222.93 1/3. Of course, no provision can be made for the fact that business generally falls off during the summer months.

Educational Exchanges Give Exhibitors Chance to See Subjects Before Release

FULL opportunity to view all short subjects well in advance of their release is promised by Educational Films Corporation as the result of the operation of its own exchange system. Each office will be supplied with copies of all subjects several weeks ahead and exhibitors will be invited to inquire as fully into the quality of one and two reel pictures as they do into their features.

This plan is made possible because the company and its various producing units are well ahead of their schedule. Two comedies of each series were ready when the company started its release through its own exchanges on June 20 and all the studios are reported working at such a satisfactory rate that the margin will be fully maintained. Educational points out that this is important, not only in giving exhibitors views of the pictures well in advance, but in enabling the preparation of advertising and exploitation material so that the best salesmanship to the public can be put behind each offering.

Many Comedies Scheduled.

"Four Times Foiled" was the initial two-reel comedy release, this being scheduled for the week of June 20. However, some of the exchanges were not quite ready for business at that time and this picture remains to be first shown in some territories. Delay was caused in completing the second of the comedies, "An Overall Hero," because a young monkey that was cast for one of the roles died during the making of the picture. However, it has been completed, and while the necessary scenes were being retaken for this, the third comedy was made and work is now started on the fourth. All of these feature animals and Arthur Nowell, the child actor, and are under the direction of William S. Campbell.

"Mermaid Comedies" is a new brand, the first year's output including six comedies made under the direction of Jack White of Sennett and Sunshine directorial fame, and six featuring Lloyd Hamilton. The first two of the Mermaids are now in the Educational vaults, "A Fresh Start," the first White comedy, in which Marvel Rea has the leading role, and the initial Lloyd Hamilton, "Duck Inn." Work is well under way on the third, and the fourth will be begun in a short time. The two sets of comedies comprising the Mermaid series can be made at the same time, so that there can be no possibility of their falling behind the schedule. These pictures are being made at the Astra studios in Glendale, Cal.

Start Third "Torchy."

"Torchy" and "Torchy Comes Through," the first two of the Torchy Comedies, made from the well known stories by Sewell Ford and produced by Master Films, Inc., have been entirely completed and work is starting on the third. Johnny Hines, the comedian, is reported to be a bear for work, and with the first release of the "Torchys" set for the week of July 11 he will be well on the third by that time. These pictures are being made at the Cliffside studios in Fort Lee, this being the only one of the Educational comedy producing units that is working in the East.

Since signing the contract which provides for the distribution of all two reel Christie Comedies through Educational, Al and Charles Christie have been speeding up things in Los Angeles. The first two, "Kiss Me Caroline," with Bobby Vernon," and "A Seaside Siren," with Fay Tincher, were started when negotiations between Educational and Christie had reached a satisfactory stage. They are now completed and in the New York offices.

The third Christie Comedy, with Bobby Vernon and Dorothy Devore, has been finished and is now being cut and titled in Los Angeles. Work has started on the fourth, in which Eddie Barry, Neal Burns, Margaret Fitz-Roy and Charlotte Merriam appear, and on the fifth which includes Harry Gribbon, who was formerly featured in Sennett productions, Teddy Sampson and Helen Darling. Work on the sixth starts next week.

Months Ahead on Scenics.

Educational reports that it is months ahead on Robert Bruce Scenics Beautiful, Chester-Outings, Screenics and a number of "Specials," and that it has completed several other series which have not yet been announced. In short, the entire schedule is ready for a period well into the autumn.

First National Men to Tour by Auto from Coast to Coast

COMPLETLY equipped for a motor tour from Broadway and Forty-second street, New York, to the Truckee woodlands in California, Joe Sinel and Matthew Singer, for the greater part of a year connected with the publicity department of First National Exhibitors' Circuit's home office, left New York last week.

Both Messrs. Sinel and Singer are known in New York film circles as well as throughout the West. On their trip, which will be made entirely by auto, they carry a semi-official assignment to spread the doctrine of First National, especially as relates to the sub-franchising plan of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

They plan to visit a number of theatres, and Mr. Sinel, whose specialty is drawing and painting, will illustrate the various news items which Mr. Singer may see fit to write from time to time. The news items will deal almost entirely with novel and humorous incidents centering about motion picture exploitation encountered during the trip.

An elaborate dinner was tendered Mr. Singer and Mr. Sinel by Jack Roosevelt Bruggy, of the First National home office projection department, on the eve of the departure from New York.

Claim Great Booking Records For Six Republic Productions

SIX Republic productions which are forging to the front in popularity, and which, according to Sam E. Morris, general manager of Republic Distributing Corporation, are creating an unusual booking record daily and weekly, have convinced the organization of their unwavering belief in the pictures as powerful box-office attractions.

Mr. Morris announced that the six productions are "Twelve-Ten," starring Marie Doro; "The One Way Trail," with Edythe Sterling; "The Gift Supreme," with Bernard Durning; "Romany, Where Love Runs Wild," with an all-star cast; "Trilby," starring Clara Kimball Young, and "The Blue Pearl," with an all-star cast.

"Our constant hammering on the value of these six productions," said Mr. Morris, "has more than proven its worth to those exhibitors who have taken advantage of our pictures. And those exhibitors seeking clean and wholesome pictures for their summer audiences will do well to consider the Republic productions. They are powerful in the trend of their delineation, and this power will manifest itself at the box office within a short time after screening them to audiences."

Robert G. Vignola
Who directed "The World and His Wife" for Cosmopolitan.

Although Twelve Years in the Industry Director Vignola Has Been With Only Three Firms

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA, who has just completed "The World and His Wife," his first production for Cosmopolitan Productions, and which is regarded as one of the big pictures of the year, is a most interesting personality.

Twelve years in the silent art and associated with but three producers during that time, Director Vignola probably holds the record for long distance, fancy, and catch-as-catch-can stability. * * * He has directed Pauline Frederick, Marguerite Clark, Ethel Clayton, Clara Kimball Young, Billie Burke, Alice Brady, Alice Joyce, Tom Moore, Jack Pickford, Vivian Martin, Constance Talmadge and Alma Rubens.

Born in Trivigno, Italy, thirty-eight years ago and coming to this country at the age of three, Robert G. Vignola was reared and educated in Albany. At the age of seventeen he joined a local stock company where he played everything from omnes to heavies and character leads.

In 1908 Sidney Olcott inveigled him into motion pictures and he joined Kalem. He remained with Kalem for seven years, during which he went to the Holy Land, England, Ireland, Scotland, etc., with Sidney Olcott, where they made "From the Manger to the Cross." Kalem gave him his first chance at directing.

In 1915 he joined Famous Players-Lasky, where he remained until January of this year, when he associated himself with Cosmopolitan Productions.

Shipman Family Reunion

For the first time since war was declared the Shipman brothers will meet at the summer home of Ernest Shipman on Long Island for a family reunion. The occasion will be the arrival in America of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Shipman, who have just completed a four years' tour of Australia, India, Japan and the Eastern Orient, with such noted artists as Nordica, Melba, David Bispham, as well as a number of touring companies and feature pictures.

Present also will be Joseph Shipman of Los Angeles. The Rev. Dr. Shipman will absent himself temporarily from his church in Pasadena to officiate at the family reunion.

Edna Shipman will be queen of the occasion celebrating her success as a motion picture actress.

"Me Bringie Chop Sluey!"
"Hope I can eat it," says June Elvidge in "The Law of the Yukon," released by Realart.

Distributors Report Heavy Business on Urban's "Movie Chats" and Kineto Reviews

CHARLES URBAN announced last week that "Movie Chats" have been meeting with such demand that Messrs. Butcher, of England, have increased their order fifty per cent. David P. Howells' office, according to Mr. Urban, is meeting with equal success in the foreign distribution of this product, and the Kineto Reviews, also, in other parts of the world.

In the United States, the Empire State Film Corporation, A. G. White, manager (covering New York State and Northern New Jersey); the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, J. L. Friedman, president (covering Illinois and Indiana); the Standard Film Service Company, Harry Charnas, president (covering Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky); the Elliott Film Corporation (covering Minnesota and the Dakotas), and several other distributors, contracts with whom have already been drawn, report big business on these subjects.

"In fact," said Mr. Urban, "the interest in this and similar subjects, and the profits that are being made by short reel exchanges which deal exclusively with this class of material, are noticeable.

Short Subjects Becoming More Popular.

"The five-reel feature has its place, but the one-reel educational dealing with topics of interest throughout the world, like the 'Movie Chats' and the Kineto Review, has its definite place also, for people are exhibiting an interest in the things that happen in other places and the things that other people do and the manner in which they live. This interest is growing so rapidly that there is no question that such one-reel features will come more and more into their own.

"This verifies the feeling that I have entertained for years. I have, for example, prepared for twenty-three years a library which includes just such topics of interest. Things of this character never grow old.

"Not so the fact about nature or science. The forming of crystals along invisible lines of force give thoughts and present pictures to the mind of which it will never weary. The formations of sand on a plate by means of a violin bow drawn over the edge of it; the shape of a bee's cell; the manner in which birds care for and feed their young; the birth of a dragon-fly or of a butterfly; the transition of insects—all these and a multitude of other kindred subjects will not fail to hold the attention of mankind as long as the human mind exists.

Growing Desire for Information.

"Therefore I maintain this class of subject is bound to increasingly earn money for exchange owners and theatre managers, for the people (as David P. Howells pointed out to us the other day) are making up to a desire for information the like of which the world has never before seen.

"In Russia, for example, acting on my suggestion of film libraries, there have been formed sixty film libraries as a nucleus for further dissemination of information and learning. The people—some of them—cannot read, but they can see, and their eyes record to them what their untrained senses might not convey in a hundred years.

"Therefore, through the efforts of Mr. Howells and aided by the splendid work of the Y. M. C. A., which is to show films from trucks to districts that otherwise could not ever obtain a view of them, this insatiable demand of the human race to learn things will be partially satisfied."

Robertson-Cole Acquires 460-Acre Tract at Santa Monica for Its Producing Units

TO finish the task of giving to its producing units, situated on the Pacific Coast, the most complete possible equipment, Robertson-Cole has acquired an extensive property at Santa Monica, Cal., which is to be known as the R-C Ranch. Its acquisition supplements the purchase of ground in Los Angeles, announced last week, upon which the erection of a studio, to house the producing units, has been begun.

The R-C Ranch was secured for the purpose of giving the various producing units which are making pictures for Robertson-Cole, open space on which to make their exterior scenes. Work on some of the early releases of Robertson-Cole already has been started at the ranch, and, within a short time all Robertson-Cole exterior scenes which do not call for an extraordinary background will be made here.

Has Total of 460 Acres.

There is a total of 460 acres of ground in the R-C Ranch, which is so situated that it has a broad sweep of ocean along one side. Besides this feature, which provides admirably for the making of beach, seaside, marine and deep-water productions, there is a great wealth of other sorts of backgrounds. The ranch contains streams of several sizes, ranging from a river down to a brook. Not only has it flat grounds, but there are great stretches of rolling country, as well as an elevation high enough to furnish mountains.

The ranch, as it now stands, is partly improved, containing a number of buildings of various sorts, which may be used in the making of a wide variety of pictures. It is the intention of Robertson-Cole immediately to start further improvements of the R-C Ranch, so that it will equal, before many months have passed, any similar tract.

The R-C Ranch will be under the direction of H. R. Hough. He is general manager of Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc., the company which recently incorporated to erect the Robertson-Cole Studio which is under way in Los Angeles.

The acquisition of the ranch and the studio are merely for the purpose of obtaining greater efficiency and higher artistic standards by providing that Robertson-Cole lift from the minds of directors the vast amount of detail which is connected with studio management. In this way the directors and the managers of the companies which are producing for Robertson-Cole can concentrate completely on artistic and dramatic values and throw off all the worry of seeking new and better quarters. Robertson-Cole, by arranging for production on such a large scale, both in Los Angeles and in the great open, can make its producing allies better terms.

Irvine Joins "Big Six"; to Exploit Tourneur Productions

CLARKE IRVINE, fromerly Los Angeles correspondent of Moving Picture World, and who served eighteen months in the Navy, has joined the new Associated Producers to handle exclusive exploitation on Maurice Tourneur's forthcoming features. Headquarters have been established at the Tourneur studio in Universal City.

Irvine was with Goldwyn for the past year, writing news matter and directing publicity motion pictures, doing the cutting and titling himself. He spent two weeks on a "vacation," putting over the American Legion's all star production of "Arizona" at Los Angeles and San Diego. He made the box office turn them away for four big nights.

"I'm highly satisfied to be with the 'Big Six'," says Irvine, "and especially to be with Maurice Tourneur, as he is a regular news mine for good features, not press agent stuff, because he is a student, a traveler, a soldier, a painter, and you don't have to sit behind the typewriter and concoct a lot of bunk about a man of this broad calibre."

To Continue Writing for Constance

John Emerson and Anita Loos, noted photoplay authors, have completed an arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck whereby they will continue to write screen stories for Constance Talmadge during the next year. They are at work on one of these new photoplays now and will write three more during the next season. The prospective stories will be satires, with a star part which will keep Miss Talmadge in the novel character which Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos have built for her.

Black Extends Coolidge Industry's Best Wishes

President Alfred S. Black, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., has sent Governor Calvin Coolidge, of Massachusetts, the following letter:

"It is with the warmest possible feeling that I congratulate you upon your nomination for vice-president of the United States. No man in public life today has shown more respect for right and justice, recently demonstrated by your veto of the Massachusetts censorship bill, than your good self.

"I can assure you that you have the very best wishes, not only of the exhibitors of the United States, but, in fact, the whole motion picture industry."

Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven
Noted comedy team just signed by Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation for series to be released through First National.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven Affiliate with Arthur S. Kane

MR. AND MRS. CARTER DE HAVEN have effected a tie-up during the past week with the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. The comedians will henceforth be affiliated with Mr. Kane, who will handle their business with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, through which their productions are to be released and who will supervise all their eastern interests. The tie-up brings to the young film concern two of the foremost comedians of the stage and screen.

The news of the union of Mr. and Mrs. De Haven and Arthur S. Kane received favorable comment from keen observers of the picture business. It was pointed out that the De Havens under the supervision of a film man of Mr. Kane's acknowledged standing are assured of bringing out productions of great box office value.

The new affiliation of Mr. and Mrs. De Haven brings to attention their rapid rise in popularity. The De Havens are credited with being among the top-notchers in their particular field and are rated as big drawing cards of continuous growth at the box office.

Selects Horseshoe as Mark

If there is any virtue in the old belief that a horseshoe is lucky, Hemmer Superior Productions should have a fortunate career, for Edward Hemmer has selected as the brand of his new producing company a horseshoe, upright, "so that the luck won't run out of it," as the boy in "The Luck of the Irish" explains.

Within the circle of the horseshoe is a shamrock and the name of the company appears on the leaves of the Irish national emblem. This should certainly bring to the new concern the proverbial "luck of the Irish."

Whiteside Enters Oil Field

Lloyd F. Whiteside, who recently resigned from Vitagraph's publicity department to join his father in an oil enterprise, has left New York this week for Bowling Green, Ky. His new identity is that of field manager for Texas Shell Petroleum Company.

Mr. Whiteside is scheduled to attend to a few little things such as buying oil pipe lines, loading tanks and railroad sidings. He probably will be out of the movie world's ken for the next three months. His operations will include trips through west Texas.

"Loyalty, Progress and Art" Is Slogan of West Coast Club of Cinematographers

LOS ANGELES has a unique club in the American Society of Cinematographers, an organization of "ace" cameramen banded together under the slogan of "Loyalty, Progress and Art." The organization is built from the embers of the old Static Club and was launched by Philip Rosen and other pioneer cameramen.

For exclusiveness the American Society of Cinematographers makes the famous King's Club of London look like a come-one-come-all picnic, it is said. Membership is by invitation only and the selection of members occupies the attention of the entire board of directors. There is never any question of a man's eligibility, for if a question exists he is not invited to membership.

Call on Each Other for Help.

The society is somewhat mysterious in its working. An obscure cameraman in a little studio may be dumfounded by an invitation to membership. Looking back over his past work he may discover some one picture that contained excellent work. It is likely that the board of directors viewed that picture in its club, agreed that it was meritorious, investigated the prospective candidate's personal and professional life and finally decided to invite him to membership, after an exhaustive survey of his private and artistic activities.

The society has perfected a service said to be equally valuable to both the big and small producer. When a cameraman encounters a difficult problem in his work which he cannot solve he can call on sixty-five fellow cameramen. The small producer with limited facilities for experimentation is benefited with this arrangement. It is equivalent to putting on his payroll the entire membership of the society, without the exhausting exercise of signing checks to cover their salaries, says the society.

When a member is made a director he retains his standing in the society. Among the members who have been called to the directorial megaphone are Philip E. Rosen, now directing at Metro; Fred Leroy Granville, producing features for G. B. Samuelson in England, and Edward Kull, who has taken a speaking trumpet at Universal.

Those Filming the Stars.

Among the cameramen who are recording the actions of the better known stars are: John F. Seitz, filming Metro features under the direction of Rex Ingram; R. H. Totheroh, with Charlie Chaplin; Harry Thorpe and William M. McGann, photographing Douglas Fairbanks; Homer A. Scott, working for Tourneur Productions; Charles G. Rosher, with Mary Pickford; Robert S. Newhard, with Dustin Farnum; Ira H. Morgan, with Monroe Salisbury; Jack Mackenzie, photographer-in-chief for Earl Williams; Sam Landers, Annette Kellerman's photographer; Frank B. Charles Ray and Dorothy Gish Are Stars in Paramount Releases Week of June 13

A TYPICAL Charles Ray picture bearing the more or less cryptic title, "Paris Green," a Thomas H. Ince production, and Dorothy Gish in "Remodeling Her Husband," are the Paramount releases scheduled for June 13.

Julien Josephson, author of "The Busher," "The Egg Crate Wallop," "Bill Henry" and other small-town classics which have "made" Charlie Ray, wrote the story and scenario of "Paris Green." The work of the Julien Josephson stories and the sympathetic direction of Jerome Storm, who was the man behind the megaphone in the production of "Paris Green," have been strong factors in the star's success.

Meets French Miss.

In "Paris Green" Ray is seen as Luther Green, corporal, who takes advantage of an hour in Paris before sailing home to make the acquaintance of a dainty little French miss. He returns to America to find that his American sweetheart has transferred her affections to another man. His Parisian friend comes to America in search of a missing uncle and seeks Luther's protection against some crooks who are pursuing her. Luther disposes of them quite handily and wins her heart as well.

Ann May plays opposite Ray in the role of the little Parisienne, while Norris Johnson is the less faithful girl. The remainder of the cast includes Bert Woodruff, Donald McDonald, Gordon D. Mullen, William Courtright, Ida Lewis and Otto Hoffman.

Lillian Gish Directed Dorothy.

The Dorothy Gish picture, "Remodeling Her Husband," has an added claim to distinction in the fact that it was directed by the star's sister, Lillian Gish. The story and scenario were written by Dorothy Elizabeth Carter. Miss Gish has the role of Janie Wakefield, who marries a handsome young philanderer. The bridegroom has a failing for pretty faces, but Janie soon devises a novel means of curing her husband of his flirtatiousness.

For Miss Gish's leading man the legitimate stage was drawn upon, the choice falling upon James Rennie, who never had appeared in pictures before, but whose work opposite Ruth Chatterton in "Moonlight and Honeysuckle" attracted much attention. The cast also includes Marie Burke, Downing Clarke and Frank Kingdon, the last named having been for years a conspicuous figure on the stage.

Stop! And Stop They Did.

Peculiar that Eddie Polo, serial star, and Thelma Percy, Universal player, should halt in the same position. No rehearsal either.

Elaborate Airdome Opened by Famous Players in St. Louis

ON Sunday, June 13, the Kings Theatre Airdome, St. Louis, operated in conjunction with the Kings by the Famous Players-Missouri Corporation, was opened. In planning the auditorium the directors desired to erect an open-air theatre that would be equally as comfortable as any indoor house but possessing the feature of being an outdoor one.

Local exhibitors have found that the chief objections to the majority of outdoor theatres are these: A cinder or gravel flooring which causes dirt and dust to settle on the seats and permits the growing of weeds.

Accordingly it was decided to equip the Kings with a composition granitoid flooring. The individual opera chairs are white enameled. The seats are arranged on a grade and the screen is easily visible from each chair.

The theatre is beautifully decorated and appointed throughout. Flower boxes cover the walls, while they also have been placed on all posts and cornices.

The acoustics also proved to be especially good, something found in few airdomes. Ordinarily, noise from street cars and automobiles, and the fact that they are playing in the open air, detracts from the work of the musicians. Here, however, a natural sounding board is formed by the screen and a high wall directly behind it, together with the sloping floor, which leaves the orchestra in a deep pit.

New Company to Screen the Big Questions of the Day

WILLIAM MOORE PATCH, the theatrical producer, returns to the film world after a three-year absence, with the announcement that he is to head Greater America Films, Inc., whose policy will be to screen vital questions of the day.

Greater America Films, Inc., which has been formed with a capital of $600,000 to exploit this field, will have the menace of radicalism as the subject of its first production, tentatively titled "The Crimson Dawn."

Captain Wheeler has associated himself with Mr. Patch as treasurer and general manager of the company, and expects to have "The Crimson Dawn" ready for the beginning of the fall season.

Lewis J. Selznick Announces Conway Tearle as Star for National Picture Theatres, Inc.

A NEW STAR announcement of significance to the motion picture industry and undoubtedly of unusual interest to all exhibitors is made by Lewis J. Selznick, head of National Picture Theatres, Inc., to the effect that Conway Tearle is to become a stellar light of that organization. Mr Tearle has been appearling as leading man in Selznick Pictures and through his excellent work requests were made by franchise holders and directors of National that he be made a star on the national program.

Although details of the contract whereby this popular leading man becomes a star have not been made public, it is understood that the engagement covers a period of several years, beginning with the near future. It is expected that a production starring Mr. Tearle will be started shortly, as he has completed work in the Selznick special, "Marooned Hearts," in which he was featured with Zena Keefe. "Marooned Hearts" is also to be a National release, according to information received from the office of Mr. Selznick.

The engagement of Conway Tearle as a star is looked upon as another indication that National Picture Theatres, Inc., is forging to the front with a steadiness that leaves no doubt of its success. Its productions thus far include "Just a Wife," "Blind Youth" and "The Invisible Divorce," which is now in the exchanges for distribution, and they have met with instant approval throughout the country and have been voted unusual in cast, story and production.

Conway Tearle, as exhibitors know, is one of the most popular leading men in the industry, his success having been gained in some of the bigger box office attractions that have been released. That he will be even more popular as a star is freely predicted.

Heretofore the productions of National have been of the all-star variety, and in announcing Conway Tearle as star it is not made known what type of stories will be used.

Mary Miles Minter's Age Is Shown by Decision of Court

RUMORS persistently circulated that Mary Miles Minter is 26 or 27 or any of a dozen ages that found a credible listener were definitely set at rest in Los Angeles when a recent federal court decision put on record that the Realartist reached her eighteenth birthday on April 1, 1920.

The question of whether or not Miss Minter was a minor at the time of signing a contract with the American Film Company was a pivotal one in the suit by which Miss Minter sought to recover $4,125 in back salary. She was awarded $4,000 by the jury.

Famous Players-Lasky Leases Biograph Studio for Meighan

THE increased activities of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the East having made additional studio space a necessity, Arthur V. Smith, general manager of the Eastern studios, has obtained a short lease on the Biograph studio at 807 East 175th street. This studio will be used for the production of the Thomas Meighan picture, "The Frontier of the Stars," under the direction of Charles Maigne.

In adition to the main studio at 130 West 56th street, both the upper and lower stages of the Amsterdam Opera House are now being utilized, the current productions being George Fitzmaurice's "Idols of Clay," Dorothy Dalton in "A Winter City Favorite" and Billie Burke in "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson."

Work on the new studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Long Island City is progressing rapidly. The various departments will be put in operation as they are completed. Mr. Smith expects to commence making pictures there between the fifteenth of July and the first of August. All productions in the East will ultimately be housed under this one roof, the studio providing space for twenty companies if necessary.

Lichtman Names Promotions in F.-P. Sales Organization

AL LICHTMAN, general manager of the department of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced the following promotions in the sales organization:

Harold G. Ballance, formerly branch manager at Los Angeles, is appointed district manager of district No. 1, which includes the New England states, with headquarters at Boston, succeeding Harry Asher, resigned. In the same territory, Herbert I. Kraus, formerly sales manager at the Detroit office, is appointed branch manager at Boston, succeeding J. A. McConville, resigned. Succeeding Mr. Ballance as branch manager at Los Angeles is O. V. Traggardh, who is promoted from the office of sales manager in that exchange.

Myron H. Lewis, formerly special representative, with headquarters in Kansas City, is coming to the home office in New York as assistant to S. R. Kent, general sales manager, and R. C. LiBeau is promoted from the position of branch manager at Des Moines to the post vacated by Mr. Lewis.

Sarah Lyons has been promoted to the position of manager of the exchange service department, succeeding Joseph di Lorenzo, who recently resigned to take charge of distribution for Baumer Films.

Inrtoducing John Kingston Greenland

Christian name, Greenland. Surname, John. Middle name, Kingston. Taking an air plane view of the whole moniker, we have John Kingston Greenland. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Al K. Greenland Thursday, June 10. John Kingston weighed in at seven and a half pounds. Al Greenland, of the New York office of the Rochester Film Manufacturing Company and formerly with Cine-Mundial, Chalmers Publishing Company's Spanish ace, has been so busy denying reports that it was seven and a quarter pounds that his sales for Rothacker only went up seventy-six per cent. last week.

Sherman Productions Formed

The Sherman Productions Corporation was incorporated last week, under the laws of the State of Delaware, by Harry A. Sherman. His plan is to sell a franchise to independent exchanges in each distribution zone, with the proviso that each franchised exchange will guarantee to handle and distribute a certain number of the productions by the Sherman Production Corporation, to be supplied by the corporation yearly. Mr. Sherman has been working on this project for the past year and already has a large number of subscribers to his plan. He will start on a tour of the United States, within a few days, prepared to execute contracts.

"Hidden Dangers" Two-Thirds Finished; Release of First Episode Month Away

WITH the release date of "Hidden Dangers," the scientific serial co-starring Joe Ryan and Jean Paige, still a month away, a wire received from the West Coast last week by John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, Inc., states that the serial is more than two-thirds completed.

On the strength of the earlier episodes and its reported novelty, the serial has rolled up a big pre-release record. Vitagraph's claim is that its figures have passed each of its previous serials except one, and that this one will doubtless be passed before release date. It will be released next month. Albert E. Smith made this decision immediately upon his return from the West Coast, where the production is being made under the direction of William Bertram.

Vitagraph will follow the policy of giving patrons a large slice of the story at the start. In this way the plot is unforgettably "planted." One of the many twists which "Hidden Dangers" takes from the routine serial is that its hero is also its villain, and for this reason it is being referred to all over the country as "the Jekyll-Hyde serial."

Another Goldwyn Picture Featured at the Capitol

FOLLOWING the successful engagement of the Rupert Hughes comedy, "Scratch My Back," at the Capitol Theatre, another Goldwyn picture is featured on the program at New York's largest theatre. The attraction is Jack Pickford in "A Double-Dyed Deceiver," an O. Henry story directed by Al Green. In point of sympathy and human appeal this production is said to be particularly strong, with a true O. Henry atmosphere.

The "Llano Kid," played by Jack Pickford, has a reputation throughout Texas as a "bad hombre." He goes to South America and becomes involved in a plot to rob and deceive an aristocratic Spanish family by posing as a son who ran away. Later, when he has felt the first kind and loving influence he had ever known, a great transformation takes place.

The picturesque and colorful settings are said to be beautiful and to reflect in a realistic fashion the atmosphere of a typical South American town. There is no attempt to point a moral. But the message that O. Henry wove into his thrilling plot is driven home—that no man is wholly bad and love and kindness are the only true methods of reformation.

In the cast supporting Jack Pickford are Marie Dunn, James Neill, Edythe Chapman, Sydney Ainsworth and Manuel R. Ojeda.

"The Lure of the Loreley."

The occupied territory of the Rhine is covered in the Paramount-Burton Holmes picture, "The Lure of the Loreley." In this film the beauties of the famous river are set forth, including the rock around which the Loreley is woven. Many old castles on the terraced banks of the Rhine pay tribute to past ages. Among the historic spots visited by the cameraman are Bingen, Andernach, Castle Rheinstein, Coblenz, and Drachenfele. A goodly display of American soldiery in the occupied territory is noticeable in the picture.

"A Gold Star Pilgrimage."

The Paramount-Holmes picture, taken on the scenes in France where so many of our American boys were cut down, recalls vividly the loss of life caused by the late war. Scenes at Chateau-Thierry, Balleau Wood, and in the Argonne bear witness still to the fierceness of the struggle between the contending forces; while the fields of Flanders cover their wounds beneath a wealth of flowers. Then there are other fields with row upon row of white crosses, stretching as far as the eye can see, cemeteries of American dead, beautifully cared for by the French people. The picture is one that should be treasured in the archives of the great war's history.

Brentwood Picture Is Given High Praise by Review Board

TO sustain its contention that the series of Brentwood comedies which it has been releasing are among the most wholesomely entertaining pictures now being produced, Robertson-Cole has just received from the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures a special report on "The Heart of Twenty," the latest of the Brentwood pictures.

This production, featuring ZaSu Pitts and presenting a company among which are found Tom Gallery, Jack Pratt, Percy Challenger, Aileen Manning, Hugh Saxon and Billie Lind, tells the story of an interesting group of people in a small town.

The National Board's special report is convincing evidence of the value of this picture to the exhibitor who is seeking pictures which are clean, full of fun and of strong optimistic tone.

The special report is as follows:

"We wish to advise you that the majority comment on your photoplay "Heart of Twenty," reviewed by the National Board of Review, was as follows:

"Entertainment value, excellent; artistic value, comedy sustained; coherence of narnative, excellent; acting, very good; photography, good; technical handling, exceptional; scenic setting, effective; moral effect, excellent.

"General Comment—This was considered one of the most effective pictures of the year. The spirit of its atmosphere and its characters is created with the great charm and humor. The picture as a whole seems to warrant its being placed in the National Board's list of exceptional pictures."

Constance Binney Starts on "39 East," Her Stage Success

CONSTANCE BINNEY started work recently on the film version of "39 East" for Realart in New York City. It was in this play, a little over a year ago, that Miss Binney made a popular success on the stage and was greeted widely as one of the country's most promising young actresses.

The romantic comedy is the work of Rachel Crothers, who has been one of America's most successful woman playwrights. Among her plays are "Old Lady 31," "A Little Journey," "Mother Carey's Chickens," "The Heart of Paddy Whack," "Ourselves," "Young Wisdom," "Once Upon a Time," "The Coming of Mrs. Patrick" and "Myself Bettina."

Miss Binney opened in "39 East" early in the spring of 1919 at the Broadhurst Theatre, New York. On the opening night she carried off the acting honors of the production and almost instantly found herself greeted as a star. The popularity of the play increased. During the summer it was shifted to the Maxine Elliott Theatre and finished out its long New York City run at the Princess Theatre. Subsequently it played prolonged engagements in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities.

The picturization of "39 East" will be available in the middle of the present summer, it is believed by Realart officials. It will be the third picture made by Miss Binney for the company during the year. Her two previous screen appearances were in "Erstwhile Susan" and "The Stolen Kiss."

To Be—Be S—Sure; It's Bebe!

Bebe Daniels, who is now a full-fledged Realart star, "breaking" into the starring hemisphere.

Boston Orpheum Circuit Man Wants More Like "Checkers"

IT is motion pictures like "Checkers" that will build up for the exhibitor a business which is both a pleasure and a profit," said Arthur L. McGrory, president of the Orpheum Circuit, which operates a chain of six picture theatres in and around Boston, while on a visit to New York City last week in search of decorative material and ideas for the ornamentation of the seventh Orpheum theatre, now in course of construction in East Weymouth, Mass.

Mr. McGrory visited the new Fox building in West Fifty-fifth street and incidentally met the directors now engaged in making special productions there. Among those was Richard Stanton, who staged "Checkers" for William Fox and who now is busy on the special feature film about which there is much secrecy at this time. Mr. McGrory saw one scene taken and was enthusiastic.

"I never had a picture like 'Checkers' in my life," said the Boston theatre owner in discussion the merits of various pictures released during the 1919 season. "We have six theatres now in our circuit where we play only pictures. These houses average a capacity of 800 and we run our features half and half; that is, three days to a picture, two pictures a week, at each house."

Titles a Feature of Latest Equity Release, "Midchannel"

A NEW step in the perfection of photo-dramatization is marked by the titling of Clara Kimball Young's next production, according to an announcement by Equity Pictures. Those who have read Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's "Mid-Channel," or who have seen it produced on the legitimate stage ten years ago, with Ethel Barrymore in the feminine lea will recall that the idiomatic language used in the play forms one of its chief charms.

Accordingly, Director Harry Garson hit on the novel idea of preserving the punch and pepper of dialogue in the sub-titles of the film. By this means the expressiveness of the play will be retained, while much in the way of sumptuous scenic effects and properties that could not be embodied on the stage will be introduced, making the ensemble a pre-entious presentation.

Oklahoma Showman Praises Fox News.

The kind of praise which offers real encouragement to a producer today has come to William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation and editor-in-chief of Fox News, from an exhibitor in Madill, Okla.

J. H. Long, owner of the Princess Theatre in that town—known to fans in that locality as "the home of good pictures"—is the theatre man who, unsolicited, has offered high praise to Fox News. In a letter addressed to William Fox, the Oklahoman writes as follows:

"Please permit me to offer my congratulations to you on the quality of your Fox News reel. It is by far the greatest 'news' that is published anywhere today, and is the best money-maker that I have ever booked."

Courtenay Foote Leaves for California to Play Leading Role in "Star Rover"

COURTENAY FOOTE, who has just closed an engagement in the stage success, "Adam and Eva," has left New York for Hollywood, Cal., to play the leading role in "The Star Rover" for C. E. Shurtleff, Inc. This production will be a special picturization of the novel by Jack London, and will be released through Metro Pictures Corporation's system of exchanges.

Mr. Foote has had a wealth of experience on the speaking stage as well as before the camera. He is considered by C. E. Shurtleff, president of Shurtleff, Inc., as ideally suited to the unusual role of Darrell Standing, hero of the Jack London tale.

Courtenay Foote is an Englishman, a native of Yorkshire. He was educated at Oxford and in France and Germany.

Mr. Foote began his career as a screen player with Vitagraph. Among the two-score pictures he appeared in were "The Great Diamond Mystery," "The Reincarnation of Karma," "The Master Painter," "The Woman," "The Wonderful Statue," "The Web," "Sisters All" and "The Wonderful Sex."

A short period with D. W. Griffith in short subjects was followed by a series of pictures under the direction of Hobart Bosworth. These included "The Pursuit of the Phantom," "Hypocrites," "False Colors," "Captain Courtesy," "An International Marriage" and "Caprices of Kitty."

Leaving Bosworth, Mr. Foote was engaged by Oliver Morosco to play the part of Terence O'Keefe in the Hattons' stage comedy, "Upstairs and Down." He followed with a brief road tour in William Hurlburt's "Saturday to Monday," and then did two pictures for Famous Players opposite Lina Cavalieri.

In January, 1919, Mr. Foote was engaged for the role of Lord Andrew Gordon in "Adam and Eva," the comedy by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, produced by Robert Milton. The long New York run of the piece has recently been terminated. In it Mr. Foote, by the unanimous verdict of reviewers, scored a distinct success.

Pathe Sets July 11 as Release Date for First of Harold Lloyd's Second Series

A NEW standard in high comedy making has been established by Harold Lloyd in "High and Busy," first of his new series of $100,000 two-reel comedy specials for distribution through Pathe. Surpassing even "Haunted Spooks," which in every quarter was hailed as the best comedy of 1920, "High and Busy" will be released on July 11.

The initial release of the new two-reel series was longer in the making than any other comedy ever produced by the Rolin Film Company starring Harold Lloyd. It took nearly two months to create "High and Busy," but the time and money spent on its production is more than justified by the results. "High and Busy" will mark the launching of Lloyd as a feature at the Capitol Theatre, New York.

As the forerunner of the second series of Lloyds, "High and Busy" will be played by three times as many theatres as exploited "Bumping Into Broadway," which introduced the Pathe star in two-reel comedies. Virtually all the big first run houses of the country have signed for the new Lloyds. Box office results never fail to gauge the merit of any star, and Lloyd has passed this test with supreme honors.

Foremost exhibitors have contributed their views on this score, and all are unanimous in acclaiming the young mirth-maker as one of their surest money-getters. Aside from the host of first run accounts signed for the New Lloyds, Pittsburgh's leading houses, the Grand and Camerophone, were added to the list during the last week, as was the Strand, Brooklyn; the Avon, Watertown, and the American, Troy, N. Y.

Commendations of Lloyd Comedies are so numerous as to pass as a matter of course in the Pathe offices, but so noteworthy is the following, written by W. S. Canning, general manager of the Manchester Amusement Company, to Manager Holah, of the Boston exchange, that it is cited herewith:

"I have played two of the Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies, and they are, without an exception, as good and I might say better than any other comedies I have ever played. My patrons can't seem to get enough of them. They are certainly all that you said they would be, and I congratulate Lloyd and his excellent company."

"Between You and Me—" Pardon for Interrupting, But We'll Say It's a Donkey.
We never like to break up these players' conversation, but we just felt like joking. Jimmy Aubrey was only going to tell the pretty lass that he's sheriff. Scene from "He Laughs Last," a Vitagraph comedy.

Willat Production Is Begun in First Independent Film

IRVIN V. WILLAT has begun his first independent production under the name of Willat Productions, Inc., and is filming a New England drama from the book of "Dobney Todd," by F. N. Westcott. Director Willat promises some new angles an rural drama and feels assured that he will strike a note that will put his first picture as an independent producer into the first rank of quality pictures for September, when, according to the present schedude announced by the Hodkinson Corporation, it will be released to the trade.

Irvin Willat has completed the work of gathering together the men he wanted around him to assist in the production of Willat pictures, and has secured many of those who have been associated with him in his previous work.

John S. Waters is assistant director. Andrew Webber and Frank M. Blount are doing the photography, while H. G. Oliver, who was responsible for the technical work in Mr. Willat's most recent productions for Thos. H. Ince, "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," is technical director. F. G. Erickson has charge of properties and J. J Murray is handling the business affairs and publicity. C. A. ("Doc") Willat, who organized the company, is president and general manager. The product for the coming year will be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Marion Davies and Cast Off for Coast to Make Exteriors

MARION DAVIES and her co-players have left for Los Angeles for the purpose of making the exteriors and some interiors for "Buried Treasure," a forthcoming Cosmopolitan Production of which Miss Davies is the star. Many of the interiors for this picture have already been made at the Cosmopolitan Studio, 127th street and Second avenue, New York, and the few remaining ones will be completed after the exteriors are finished.

This production is a picturization of the story of the same name by F. Britten Austen, which appeared recently in Hearst's Magazine. George D. Baker is directing from his own scenario of the story.

The entire cast of principals supporting Miss Davies, accompanied her to the Coast. They are Edith Shayne, Norman Kerry, Anders Randolph, Earl Schenk, John Charles and Thomas Findlay.

Some very unusual water scenes are called for in the action of this story in which two distinct types of ships are needed. Arrangements have been made for the chartering of these vessels so that they will be at Director Baker's disposal as soon as the company arrives.

While Miss Davies is in Callfornia, upon the completion of this picture, she will also make some of the exteriors for another Cosmopolitan Production.

Eastman Gives Another Million

That the Eastman School of Music and National Academy of Motion Pictures may have the best modern equipment, George Eastman has given an additional $1,000,000 to the institution. The gift was made several months ago, but no intimation of it was made public until the announcement of Dr. Rush Rhees, president of the university, in his annual report during commencement week.

The founding of the institution was announced by Mr. Eastman and Dr. Rhees last summer at a dinner in Rochester to the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. At that time he announced gifts of $3,520,000, as follows: Cost of building site, $381,000; building fund, $1,000,000; endowment fund, $2,139,000. The additional gift brings the total up to $4,520,000.

Bessie Love to Visit Gotham and Replenish Her Wardrobe

BESSIE LOVE is the latest luminary to make reservations in Los Angeles for a trip to little old New York City. Miss Love is working the final scenes of her second Andrew J. Callaghan production, "Bonnie May," and will leave the West in a week. She is coming to New York principally to purchase a complete wardrobe and to take a vacation prior to beginning work on her lavish production of Charles Dickens' "The Old Curiosity Shop."

Work on Miss Love's second Andrew J. Callaghan production, which is being adapted from the popular novel "Bonnie May," by Louis Dodge, is proceeding rapidly under the direction of Ida May Park and Joseph de Grasse. The work of these directors in Miss Love's first Callaghan offering, "The Midlanders," resulted in their being retained by the producers for her next big independent production.

Awaiting the star in New York City is Andrew J. Callaghan, head of the western producing concern. Mr. Callaghan is planning a varied program of reception for Miss Love. Star and producer will confer on the merits of several well-known stage and novel vehicles.

Invention Allows Selznick to Photograph in Natural Colors

JUNE 15 marked the date of an innovation in motion picture production. On that day work started on a full-length color photoplay. This will be a five-reel production, a Prizma picture, made for Selznick and released by Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises. It will be made under the personal supervision of Myron Selznick in charge of all work of the Selznick production units.

"The colored Photoplay is possible through a new type of camera, perfected and patented by Prizma," Myron Selznick explains. "William Van Dorn Kelley, of the Prizma technical staff, who perfected the camera, will direct the photoplay.

"This perfected camera will permit of photographing scenes in a daylight studio. Formerly, interior sets had to be erected and photographed in the open and, consequently, natural shadow effects were lost. The camera will reproduce any shade of the spectrum's colors. It will dissolve, make double and triple exposures and will take night scenes as well as day scenes. The actors and actresses will use regular street make-up, discarding the yellow powder generally used."

Myron Selznick has just taken possession of the Paragon studio in Fort Lee, which has been fitted up for this particular type of photography and has special daylight facilities for its stage.

Mack Sennett Seen Here Directing "Married Life."
We don't know whose married career it is, but Ben Turpin seems to be an interested party. This new picture is a five-reel comedy and will be distributed by First National.

J. G. Barnstyn, of Holland Arrives And Opens Offices in New York City

J. C. BARNSTYN, of the British and Continental Trading Company, has arrived in America after an extended stay in Holland and a tour of the principal film centers of Continental Europe.

Mr. Barnstyn visited the United States on two previous occasions as the representative of the H. A. P. Film Company of Holland, a big distributing organization with executive offices in The Hague and branch offices in different sections of the country, and which also operate a number of first-run theatres in Holland.

Mr. Barnstyn's trip is to export American films and to dispose of the motion picture offerings of our European makers. He will remain in America permanently and has opened offices at 220 West Forty-second street. "I retain my interest in the H. A. P. Film Company of Holland, which organization I shall represent in this country as their exclusive buyer," says Mr. Barnstyn, "in the Holland territory. Plans are well under way for the acquisition of a number of 'special' productions. I have been appointed the American representative for the Cinematographic M. Hacken, Societe Annonyme of Belgium, France and Switzerland, and the J. Lundin Photoplay Company of Stockholm. I am desirous of obtaining big American productions. I have the facilities for marketing these pictures and the money to pay for same.

"While my interests will be chiefly devoted to the purchase of American productions for my clients in Continental Europe, I have also arranged to bring over the product of some of the largest European producers for distribution in this country."

Pathe Has World Rights to Hy Mayer's Travelaughs; to Add to Screen Magazine

THE world rights to the Capitol Travelaughs produced by Hy Mayer, cartoonist, which have been featured at the Capitol Theatre, New York, since its opening, have been taken over by Pathe Exchange, Inc. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager, concluded the contract with Edward Bowes, representing the Moredall Realty Corporation, owners of the Capitol Theatre. Pathe takes possession of the Mayer creations immediately following their showing at the Capitol, which has pre-release rights to each of the series.

Beginning sometime in August, the Travelaughs will be incorporated in the Pathe Review, which, with its other varied subjects, is well established as a screen magazine. The series is unique in many respects. First, they are a combination of Mr. Mayer's cartoons, which are known in England, France, Germany and throughout the Continent, in addition to this side of the Atlantic, and scenes photographed from actual life. They are little human interest documents, which record life as seen through the happily lighted lenses of humor.

An idea of just what the Capital Travelaughs series presents is furnished by one of the recent issues. This "production" opened with one of Mr. Mayer's cartoons, showing how a citizen of the Orient would appear garbed in his native costume and in his own lands. Then it dissolves into a street scene, photographed right in the highways of New York, showing this same Oriental in the costume of the Occident.

In exploiting the Capitol Travelaughs throughout the world, Pathe reports it has a product that will have a universal appeal, because they broadly visualize life in such a manner as to make them entertaining and instructive to any type of audience.

The Man in the Dark Suit Is the Barrier—Not Very Silent, Though.
A striking view of Hodkinson's "The Silent Barrier." In this scene are Donald Cameron, Florence Dixon and Sheldon Lewis, the latter endeavoring to apply his villainous methods.

"One Hour Before Dawn" To Be Warner's First Production Under the Pathe Banner

H. B. WARNER, who has just been announced as a new Pathe star, will make his debut under the Gold Rooster emblem in a Jesse D. Hampton production, "One Hour Before Dawn." In fulfilment of its policy to give exhibitors the highest class type of features for summer consumption, Pathe will release "One Hour Before Dawn" some time in August. The exact date will be set within a week.

The first Warner-Pathe vehicle is an adaptation of "Behind Red Curtains," the book by Mansfield Scott. The screen version was made by Fred Myton. The picture was directed by Henry King.

Playing opposite Warner is Anna Q. Nilsson. Others in the cast include Dorothy Hagan, Thomas Guise, Augustus Phillips, Ralph McCullough, Lillian Rich, Adele Farrington, Frank Leigh, Howard Davies and Winton Taylor.

Pathe reports "One Hour Before Dawn" surpasses in mystery and interesting sustaining element "The Thirteenth Chair," Bayard Veiller's noted success, which in recent years has stood as the premier mystery drama. Hypnotic influence and other psychic phenomena are introduced in the five reels of compelling, stirring drama. Many exploitation angles are offered by the production, which, Pathe asserts, is the best picture Warner has made since his return to the screen, following a series of Broadway stage successes.

It is the intention of Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, and Jesse D. Hampton to make the Warner productions strong enough to compare with the finest pictures on the market. His stories are to be selected from the works of world famous writers of fiction.

American Issues Campaign Book on "The House of Toys"

A CAMPAIGN book expressing the high standards of the new American special, "The House of Toys," the six-act all star photonovel written by Henry Russell Miller, is ready for distribution to exhibitors. From the snappy art cover through to the twenty-fourth page the dignity and purpose of this drama are kept well in mind, combined with the appeal to all classes of picturegoers.

The problem of steering the matrimonial bark through the shoals and ebbing waters of H. C. L. comes into the experience of every man and woman who reads billboards from some angle, either first hand or second. And its corollary, "Is your husband faithful?" follows so closely on the heels of the dollar sign in real life as well as in the story that there is no lack of material for exploitation purposes.

"A Little Probe Into the Factors Which Part Jack from Jill," "The Other Woman," "Incompatibility," "The Money Question" and "Some Others" are captions for newspaper stories which give a clue to the subject matter of "The House of Toys." "The Vexing Question of Money" and "A Play for Wives and Sweethearts," "Stenographers vs. Wife" also point to fetching advertising suggestions.

Reproductions of the most attractive posters, which include a 24-sheet, two 3-sheets, 1-sheet and a 6-sheet, besides the 22 by 28 lobby portrait of Seena Owen in color and a striking scene, all piquing the curiosity and leaving the viewers in a speculative frame of mind; suggestions for lobby displays, practical tie-up suggestions, snappy queries for snipes and slides, and helps for a direct mail campaign crowd the pages of a very complete press book.

"The Week End" Nearly Completed.

The new American Special, filmed from the original script by Cosmo Hamilton, "The End," is in the process of titling, tinting and toning. The American gives particular attention to the important matter of title writing, and as the surplus of titles has been eliminated, as in all high class productions of the present day, those remaining, together with the illustrations, are more carefully worked out.

"The Week End" was produced under the expert direction of George L. Cox. Margarita Fisher receives excellent support from Milton Sills and Bertram Grassby. Also included in the cast are Mary Lee Wise, Harvey Clark, Mayme Kelso and Beverly Travers.

Bracey Joins Wanda Hawley Company.

Sidney Bracey, for years a famous Gilbert and Sullivan light opera tenor in England and Australia, has been engaged to play an important character role in Wanda Hawley's second starring vehicle, upon which work has been started at the Realart studios in Hollywood.

"The World and His Wife" Is Next Cosmopolitan Release

SOME years ago Jose Echegaray, the illustrious Spanish poet, wrote a dramatic verse which was universally accredited as being a masterpiece and which immediately took its place among the poem classics. Charles Frederic Nirdlinger dramatized this verse and as a play under the title of "The World and His Wife," it created even a greater sensation and was spoken of as the most perfectly constructed and one of the most human plays seen on the boards in a decade. Now Cosmopolitan Productions has made a feature picture of this play, which is said to excel, in point of strength, realism and characterization either the poem or the play.

One of the big reasons for the success of this idea in its three phases of expression is the personal appeal of the theme. It deals with an existing condition in the social system from which every individual, at some time or other, has suffered—that most insidious of trouble makers and destroyer of happiness, gossip. In this picture gossip undermines a life-long friendship, sows the seed of distrust in the mind of a man of wonderful understanding and brings tragedy into the lives of two young people who are absolutely guiltless, but love proves the stronger force in the end and the sunshine of happiness disperses the clouds of sorrow.

Robert G. Vignola directed the picture. The Spanish scenes, of which there are many, were built from original sketches of actual places in Spain.

Alma Rubens, who did such excellent work as the heroine in "Humoresque," is the featured player of a strong cast inducing Montague Love, Pedro de Cordova, Charles Gerard, Gaston Glass, who was the hero in "Humoresque"; Byron Russell, Peter Barbier, Leon Gendron; Vincent Macchia, James Savold, Margaret Dale, Mrs. Allan Walker and Ray Allen.

The general release of "The World and His Wife" is scheduled for July 25.

Gives List of Bray Cartoon Comics.

Judge Rummy, in his comedy cartoons, continues to be the chief laugh-maker in the Goldwyn-Bray Comics released each week. A cartoon subject leads off the reel that closes with a dozen or so clever jokes, or pointed paragraphs, gathered from the press of the world and issued under the general head of "Lampoons." These "Lampoons" are selected with the greatest care to strike a popular vein of humor and give crisp expression to happenings of the day.

The schedule of Comics soon to be issued reads: Judge Rummy in "His Last Legs," Judge Rummy in "Turn to the Right," Judge Rummy in "Smokey Smokes" and Judge Rummy in "One Good Turn Deserves Another."

Working on Fourteenth Episode of "Phantom Foe."

Director Bertram Millhauser, in charge of the production of "The Phantom Foe," has obtained permission to use the grounds of a large estate in New Haven, to film scenes for the fourteenth episode of the forthcoming Pathe serial.

The director is planning to take Juanita Hansen, Warner Oland and the principals of the cast to New Haven soon. Miss Hansen is to perform some diving and swimming stunts in the pool on the estate and she is preparing to make them the most thrilling scenes she has ever done for the serials.

City of Dallas Books Pathe Serial.

The Commissioner of Parks of Dallas has selected the Pathe serial "Wolves of Kulture" for exhibition in the two local parks at public entertainments given by the city.

The Pathe offering is the first serial booked in Dallas for presentation at these municipal entertainments. After viewing the serial, the Commissioner made arrangements with Manager D. J. Coughlin, of Pathe's Dallas branch to show the picture in Summit and Trinity Parks.

The arrangements are that two episodes of "Wolves of Kultur" will be used each week.

Campaign Book Ready.

A campaign book that is offered by Selznick Pictures Corporation in conjunction with "The Desperate Hero," starring Owen Moore. Smile-producing newspaper ads, production cuts and poster displays play a prominent part in the make-up. In addition there are publicity stories, catch lines, advance notices and current reviews, model letters for a mail campaign and snappy shorts.

"The Desperate Hero" was written by Edgar Franklin and tells the tale of a young newspaper man who, while putting on a certain amount of "front," tries to get rid of this only inheritance, an oil lease.

"Riders of the Dawn" Books for Week Runs in California

CALIFORNIA is alive to the picture qualities of the Benjamin B. Hampton Production, "Riders of the Dawn," which is the latest Hodkinson release of the Zane Grey pictures, says an announcement.

The Liberty Theatre at Spokane, Wash., has booked "Riders of the Dawn" for a big week and the Liberty Theatre, of Portland, Ore., will also feature it for a seven-day program. The Strand at San Francisco has booked it following its success at the Mark Strand, New York, and Tom Moore's Strand at Washington, D. C. Exhibitors who have played previous Benjamin B. Hampton Productions, such as "Desert Gold" and the "Westerners," are in line for it.

In Des Moines, Iowa, B. I. Van Dyke has linked up his run of "Riders of the Dawn" with a large store, arranging for a big window display that advertises Zane Grey novels and the Zane Grey picture at the Royal Theatre.

Elaborate preparations have been made by Hodkinson for the exploitation of this photoplay, which is said to have one of the best casts yet seen in a Hampton Production. Hugh Ryan Conway directed the company, which includes Roy Stewart, Claire Adams, Marc Robbins, Robert McKim, Joseph J. Dowling, Frederick Starr, Arthur Morrison, Violet Schram, Frank Brownlee and Marie Messenger.

Something new in the way of art titles is promised for "The Isle of Destiny" by Character Pictures Corporation. The company has engaged I. J. Martin, Neil McGuire and Warren A. Newcomb, three of the foremost title experts and formerly with Thomas H. Ince, to do special titles for the production.

The Character Pictures Corporation believes that the importance of titles in dramatic values as well as in pictorial values cannot be overestimated. Consequently the best talent attainable was secured to do the work. Men have been working day ang night developing some new ideas, and these attractive titles should be one of the many features of "The Isle of Destiny."

Hutchison Does Another Daredevil Stunt.

Charles Hutchison, his director, W. S. Van Dyke, and a company of extras made a journey into the mountains to film a thrill stunt for the sixth episode of the star's serial for Pathe. Hutchison made a jump from an oil derrick sixty feet high to a tree nearby without sustaining even a scratch, it is reported.

The first episode of the picture has been assembled, cut and titled. This forthcoming Pathe thriller, the working title of which is "The Double Adventure," was put into production at the Brunton studios April 19.

Begin Work on New Dean Picture.

Production on Priscilla Dean's new picture, "Outside the Law," has begun at Universal City. Tod Browning, who directed the star in "The Virgin of Stamboul," also is in charge of her current production. He wrote the story.

The cast resembles an all-star cast. Among those already selected are Lon Chaney, Wheeler Oakman, Ralph Lewis and E. A. Warren.

Branch Offices Tell Lewis J. Selznick There Is Big Demand for His Pictures

THROUGHOUT all the Selznick Enterprises branch offices, which include Select, Selznick, Republic and National Picture Theatres, there is reported an unusual demand for the productions released by these organizations.

From the Atlanta branch office word is received that "A Fool and His Money," starring Eugene O'Brien, and "The Whirlwind" are romping home with big honors and high plaudits from exhibitors. The report is said to also include the statement that "The Flapper," Olive Thomas' current Selznick picture, and "Sooner or Later," with Owen Moore, are creating favorable results for exhibitors.

Another report from the Boston branch is said to contain the news that "The Man Who Lost Himself," starring William Faversham in his initial Selznick picture, and "The Valley of Doubt," a story of the north woods by Willard Mack, the leading playwright, have been booked by the Victory Theatre of that city.

Further indications of the growing popularity of Selznick Enterprises pictures are said to be revealed in a report from the Chicago branch, which states that Selznick News will soon have a 100 per cent. representation in the Chicago Loop theatres. The new Barbee Theatre, Randolph and Ziegfeld and other theatres have signed for Selznick News. William Faversham in "The Man Who Lost Himself" was run for two weeks in the biggest house in the "Loop" district.

The Cleveland office reports that "A Regular Girl," starring Elsie Janis, is still running at the two Schade theatres with great results, and from the Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and other branch offices equally enthusiastic booking reports have been received at the Selznick Enterprises home office in New York City.

Carefully Selected Cast in First Hemmer Picture

CLAY DAVIS, casting director for Hemmer Superior Productions, with headquarters at 137 West Forty-eighth street, New York, has assembled a notable cast for the first picture to be produced by Mary Pickford's former manager under his own trademark.

"We are not merely picking types," says Mr. Davis. "We are selecting actors and actresses of experience who can interpret character and who not only look a part but know how to act it intelligently. Mr. Hemmer believes that a well-balanced cast assures finished acting and that acting is more important than photography, though, for that matter, the photography is in the hands of William Tuers, an expert in artistic cinema work.

"First, then, in importance with us is the selection of the cast—locations, sets and all other considerations come afterward. You will note in this cast Flora Finch, remembered by all picture enthusiasts for her work with Biograph, Pathe, Paramount, Blackton and others; Pete Raymond, John Boone, Horace Weston and others—all people of wide and varied stage experience and all accomplished actors.

"One could take this cast and produce a Broadway play with it and be sure that these people would give a creditable performance. This cast has a quality which, to my mind, is just as essential on the screen as it is on the stage—and that is intelligence."

F. W. Seitz Member of His Son's Company.

F. W. Seitz, father of George B. Seitz, of Pathe serial fame, has joined his son's producing organization as vice-president and general manager.

Mr. Seitz, the elder, has taken over full charge of the studio at 134th street and Park avenue, New York, assuming the responsibilities of studio manager immediately upon his entrance to the organization.

Since its beginning less than a year ago, the Seitz Company has grown so rapidly and increased its scope to such an extent that George B. Seitz, its president, in addition to being chief director and star, was no longer able to keep pace with the duties it entailed and he invited his father to join him.

Mary Miles Minter at Pomona College.

Mary Miles Minter and her company will arrive at Pomona College, California, to take location shots in her current Realart production during the celebration of the institution's commencement exercises. The college is installing a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, the national honor fraternity, this year. Scores of the most prominent men in California, members of the order, will be present during the filming of the Realart picture.

"Get Out! Get Out! 'Fore I Accidently Say Something That'll Offend Ya.,"

Says Elmo Lincoln in Universal's new production, "Under Crimson Skies." He is sort of a highbrow so he mixes up the ordinary and classy English in his demand upon the bearded intruder.

India Physician Blames Motion Pictures for Suicides and Censorship Is Adopted

By S. B. BANERJEA Calcutta Correspondent

COINCIDENT with the enforcement of censorship in British India in May came an attack on the films by a well known Calcutta physician, who declared they have something to do with an increase in female suicides. He advised the authorities to supervise the film exhibitions in an effort to eradicate the evil. I am not a medical man, but I would like to ask the doctor about sentimental novels which are being brought out by the score nowadays, and about poorly ventilated rooms.

The censorship is based on the Kinematograph Act, No. 2, of 1918, as amended by the Kinematograph Amendment, Act 23, of 1919. Examining and certifying boards will be instituted in Madras, Bombay, Calcutta and Rangoon, with jurisdiction over films exhibited in all of British India, including British Baluchistan. Each member of the boards will receive a fee of fifteen rupees for each meeting.

Rumor Worries Local Magnates.

Until now, so far as Calcutta is concerned, the films of each picture house have been supervised by a board including a deputy commissioner of police and representatives of the Trades Association and the European Association. Under the new act there will be one authority for Calcutta, composed of local representatives.

The rumor that a big American combine will shortly establish a large number of picture theatres in India has caused some uneasiness among our theatre magnates.

Scenic Opportunities.

I have urged more than once that some of the enterprising American producers should send out companies to India to exploit this virgin field. But they are apathetic. I addressed some of them personally, but beyond certain vague remarks they have not moved in the matter at all. Why an endless series of American and Mexican pictures which are bound to become monotonous?

English Producer Enters Field.

The other night a boy who gave his name as Charlie Chaplin was found wandering in the streets of Calcutta. The police thought it was some advertising dodge, but closer inquiries showed the boy had lost his way. Nobody has claimed him as yet. Evidently he has forgotten his name and address and is "Chaplin-struck."

Plans Extensive Activities.

I understand from an Anglo-Indian paper that Mrs. Donald Campbell, wife of the well known anthropologist, will shortly come to India with a company of English players to produce a series of Anglo-Indian dramas and some Indian topical films. After producing Indian plays written by her husband Mrs. Campbell will follow with an industrial series. She is also seeking the rights to important Indian romances based on the real history of the country.

I take the following from The Empress: "A great expansion in the film business in India is in prospect and when the details are made public it will be found that Mr. Incasse, who has been so successful with previous ventures, is taking a prominent part."

Local Theatre Combine.

A public limited company under the style of the Pioneer Cinematograph Company has just been floated in Bombay. Its capital is twenty lakhs. It will carry on cinema shows. B. Laljee and Company is the managing agent.

The Empire cinema, one of the two picture houses in Paona cantonment, was recently burned out. Many of the fittings, films and apparatus were saved but the building was gutted.

Nadan Theatres, Ltd., has opened a new house at Rangoon under the name of the Excelsior.

We have had a child welfare exhibition in Calcutta, at which Mr. Nadan showed interesting films relating to the mosquito, common housefly, plague fly and other insects.

Margaret Ettinger Joins Condon

Margaret Ettinger, for several years connected with the trade and fan papers of the motion picture industry, has made a connection with the Mabel Condon Exchange, an agency in Hollywood, which handles casting, publicity, the sale of books and plays for the screen.

Miss Ettinger succeeds Mrs. Lloyd Whitlock, formerly Miss M. E. M. Gibsone, who has been a valued member of the Exchange for more than three years. Miss Ettinger will interest herself in all branches of the work conducted through the exchange and particularly in publicity and casting.

"Better Go Home Now, Son, 'Fore We Separate You from That Coin."
Rod La Rocque is meditating in this new Hallmark release, "The Discarded Woman," starring Grace Darling.

Jerome Storm Resigns as Director of Charles Ray

JEROME STORM, who has directed Charles Ray in his last fourteen pictures, has resigned from the Ray organization following the completion of "Peaceful Valley," the star's First National production, the final scenes were filmed recently.

"I regret that I feel it necessary to part company with Mr. Ray," stated Mr. Storm when he learned that the announcement had become public. "Work with him has been an inspiration which I truly appreciate. I consider Mr. Ray a genius, and I know that his ability and personality will carry any picture no matter who directs it. Thus, for the sake of my own ambition, I decided to take the step which I have contemplated for a long time but which I continually postponed because of the fine association with the star."

Stanton Going to Europe to Make Feature Productions

RICHARD STANTON is the most recent of the big directors to announce that he is going to Europe. For some time it has been rumored that Mr. Stanton is to head his own producing company, and it now appears that at least two of his future pictures will be made abroad.

Mr. Stanton intends to leave this country next month upon the completion of his present Fox special feature. Incidentally, it is the eighth anniversary of Stanton's work in motion pictures. The first four years he spent under the banner of Thomas H. Ince, and the last four he has been directing special features for William Fox.

All of the Stanton productions have broken box-office records. "Checkers" has made a notable record as a money-making feature, while his productions "The Spy," "The Jungle Trail," "The Love Thief" and many others have been reissued and are cleaning up again, which is the ultimate test of the value of any picture.

On his trip abroad he will be accompanied by a complete American producing organization, consisting of his principal players, two cameramen and a small crew of technical experts. The outfit will work in France and Italy, where Mr. Stanton will use the actual locale required by the script.

The expedition will be abroad at least three months, and upon Mr. Stanton's return the interior scenes of the features will be photographed in New York.

Acord to Compete in Rodeo

Art Acord, the Universal cowboy star of the serial "The Moon Riders," the final scenes of which now are being completed at Universal City, is speeding his company as fast as he can. He wants to finish the picture so he can rush to New York and compete in a Weld West exposition to be held here this summer.

Shortly before the United States entered the war, a rodeo or stempede was held at Sheepshead Bay, New York City, in which cowboys and cowgirls from all over the United States competed in riding, roping, bulldogging and other Western contests. Acord was the winner of many prizes.

"The Misleading Lady" To Be Lytell's First Metro Special Produced in East

THE MISLEADING LADY," by Charles Goddard and Paul Dickey, has been purchased by Metro Pictures Corporation as a starring vehicle for Bert Lytell. It will be Mr. Lytell's first picture to be made at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street following his return from California, where he spent nearly two years making special productions. Announcement of the acquisition of this stage success for Mr. Lytell's use is made by Richard A. Rowland, Metro president. It will be scenariozed by Arthur Zellner.

Mr. Lytell, in "The Misleading Lady," a comedy-drama, will have an excellent opportunity to demonstrate his versatility. The role of Jack Craigen, the construction engineer, who is "led on" by a stage-struck society woman in an effort to get backing and who develops into a "cave man" in order to teach her a lesson, is far removed from the parts in which Mr. Lytell scored his most recent successes as "Alias Jimmy Valentine" and as Charley Steele in "The Right of Way."

"The Misleading Lady" was one of the Broadway successes of several seasons ago and it was kept up for years on the road. The stage play had its settings in a country home on the Hudson and a bungalow in the Adirondack. The screen play will have its backgrounds in South Africa, New York and Westchester as well.

Outside of Mr. Lytell, the only member of the cast already engaged is Frank Currier, "the grand old man of Metro." Mr. Currier will play the part of an escaped lunatic who surprised Craigen and the misleading lady in the mountain bungalow.

Pathe Reports Big Bookings on Seitz Serial, "Desert Gold"

FOLLOWING the announcement last week by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that "Pirate Gold," the new serial starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot would be released August 15, a report from the serial sales department states that the picture has already proven itself one of the most attractive ever offered the exhibitors by Pathe.

Contracts signed for the new serial have already reached an amount which more than doubles the bookings written on "Bound and Gagged," the first serial in which Seitz starred, at the date of release of that picture.

Requests for bookings have poured into the Pathe sales organization with such a rush and within a week assumed such a volume that work on the paper and campaign books has been pressed forward with the greatest possible speed in order to have the necessary exhibitor aids on the serial ready in time to permit an early opening of the campaign which theatre managers are seeking to affect.

The sponsors of the "Pirate Gold" serial, which is in ten episodes of two reels each, are confident that when previews of the picture are held the records for all episode pictures preceding it will go smash, for "Pirate Gold," judged strictly on its own merits as a serial play, surpasses in quality the highest standards set by Pathe for its productions.

Viola Dana Proves Equal to Toe Dance as Well as Shimmy

TAKE it from Viola Dana, it's easier to make one's shoulders misbehave than to make one's toes perform. The dainty Metro star is doing both in "The Chorus Girl's Romance," her newest special production now being filmed at Metro's studios in Hollywood, Cal. Several shimmy dances and a reproduction of a Pavlowa toe dance are included in the list of novelties contributed to the picture by Miss Dana.

When the production of the present picture first was undertaken it was planned to have only the shimmy dance, largely because of the difficulty of arranging for the "long shots" that are required when a double performs for a star, as Miss Dana was not expected to do a toe dance,

"But we can have the toe dance," she protested. "The picture really requires it and I'm going to be a real dancer for this picture."

Then it developed that the star had been practicing with toes as well as shoulders. The result was that she appeared before the camera the following day armed with a dainty pair of the short vamped, stuffed-toed slippers that are required for this acrobatic dance, and she made good.

"Splendid Hazard" Given Premiere in Middle West

THE First National Exhibitor's Circuit has chosen the Middle West as the setting for the inaugural presentation of Allan Dwan's "A Splendid Hazard," presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. The Dwan production received its premiere at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, and the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, opening at both houses on June 6.

Following its runs at the Circle and Alhambra, the production opened simultaneously on June 13 at the Waldorf Theatre, Akron, Ohio, and the Madison, one of Detroit's largest first run houses and a unit in the Kunsky Circuit. One June 27 the Dwan production, which is based on Harold MacGrath's novel of that name, will start a week's engagement at the New Garrick Theatre in St. Paul, while on July 18 the production enters the New Garrick, Minneapolis, for a seven-day run.

The engagement of "A Splendid Hazard" at the Circle Theatre was marked by an extensive and original exploitation campaign devised by S. Barret MacCormick. Details of the campaign, which is regarded as one of the most elaborate and ingenious ever launched by MacCormick, will be made public next week.

Immediately following its pre-release presentation in the Middle West the picture will be ready for general distribution in that territory. The same procedure of release will be followed in all sections of the country, according to John W. McKay, general manager of Mayflower. The eastern premiere of the Dwan production will take place on Broadway shortly.

"The present influx of bookings on the subject," said Mr. McKay, "indicates that this production is destined to top the distribution records of all productions presented by Mayflower up to date, with the exception of George Loane Tucker's 'The Miracle Man.'"

"A Splendid Hazard" is presented with an all-star cast, headed by Henry A. Walthall, and including Norman Kerry, Rosemary Theby, Ann Forrest, Thomas Jefferson and Joseph Dowling, of "Miracle Man" fame.

New Player of Cowboy Parts in "Young Buffalo Series"

REPORTS of the favor with which the series of Western two-reelers which Pathe will release July 11 as the "Young Buffalo Series" makes it appear as though another actor from the speaking stage is to be added to the list of the screen's famous interpreters of the cowboy character.

Howard Yale Drew, who for years has portrayed the Western hero on the vaudeville stages in America and Europe, is the star of the new Pathe series. He is known to the stage as Young Buffalo and he has made the step from the boards to the films with success.

When he decided to play in pictures Young Buffalo insisted that the settings for his stories were of first importance and that no effort was to be spared in obtaining locations which would produce the picturesque and realistic effects for which the screen excels.

Accordingly, for his first picture in the series, "Tex of the Timberlands," he went with his company to the Canadian Northwest, and those who have seen the picture declare that it furnishes a faithful and vivid impression of life in the great lumber camps. It has been pronounced a film remarkable not only as entertainment but as a reproduction of the grandeur of the country, the methods of lumber handling and the influences upon man's character exercised by the living conditions.

Two Crandall Theatres Show Dana Picture Simultaneously

PLAYED to capacity business" is the report on "Dangerous to Men," the new Metro special production starring Viola Dana, when it was shown simultaneously at Crandall's Metropolitan and Knickerbocker theatres in the national capital. News of the success of this picture was conveyed to Metro's home offices in New York by George W. Fuller, manager of the company's Washington exchange, in a telegram dated June 8 and worded as follows:

"'Dangerous to Men' at Crandall's Metropolitan and Knickerbocker theatres yesterday and today played to capacity business and is pleasing so well that every one is talking about the picture. That Miss Dana, given similar stories, will prove to be one of the most popular stars in motion pictures is the opinion of all exhibitors who have seen 'Dangerous to Men.'"

This production is an adaptation by A. P. Younger of the stage play by H. V. Esmond, "Eliza Comes to Stay." It was directed by William C. Dowlan and photographed by John Arnold, with special art interiors designed and executed by A. E. Freuderman.

Jack Pickford to Start on Popular Aide Comedy; Rinehart Story Finished

WITH the completion of "The Man Who Had Everything" at Goldwyn's Culver City studios, Jack Pickford will take a few days' rest before starting work in a film version of George Ade's "Just Out of College," a comedy that enjoyed great popularity on the stage a number of years ago. The leading character is perfectly adapted to the personality of the star, who will continue under the direction of Al Green. The play is rich in comedy types.

Another interesting announcement from the Culver City studios concerns the forthcoming appearance of Mabel Normand in "Head Over Heels," the successful stage play in which Mitzie Hajos was starred. As in all of her recent photoplays, the Goldwyn comedienne will be directed by Victor Schertzinger. Those selected for the supporting cast thus far are Otto Hoffman, Hugh Thompson and Doris Deane.

During the past week a seventy-five piece symphony orchestra has figured in the making of scenes for "The Great Lover," a film version of Leo Ditrichstein's stage triumph being produced under the direction of Frank Lloyd. In order to secure impressive atmosphere for the grand opera sequences of the play the scenes in which the orchestra takes part were photographed in Clune's Auditorium.

Buffalo Exhibitor Praises Selznick's Exploitation

SAM E. MORRIS, vice-president and general manager of Select Pictures, is in receipt of a letter from B. E. Cornell, manager of the Eckel Theatre, Syracuse, praising the exploitation methods used by Andy Sharick, the Selznick exploitation representative at Buffalo, in putting over "Just a Wife," a National Picture Theatres production.

"Say, Mr. Selznick," writes Mr. Cornell, "I'm taking the trouble to write you a personal letter—just to let you know how good I think your Mr. Sharick is as an exploitation manager. For the second time he has put across a successful campaign in Syracuse, the last being for 'Just a Wife.'

"Window displays in three of the largest department stores in Syracuse featuring this film, two being stores that never before could be reached on such a proposition. The picture drew large audiences, and we feel no small share of the patronage was due to excellent exploitation methods by Mr. Sharick."

Hopper Completes Story.

E. Mason Hopper has finished the picturization of Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, "It's a Great Life," and is ready to resume work on the Booth Tarkington "Edgar Comedies," the next one in the series going under the title of "Edgar's Sunday Courtship." Director Harry Beaumont is in the midst of "Stop Thief," in which Tom Moore is being starred, and Reginald Barker, with an all-star company, is still at Catalina Island working on an elaborate version of a dramatic story of the sea by Ben Ames Williams.

"The Green Flame" Scheduled as Next Kerrigan Production

THE GREEN FLAME," directed by Ernest C. Warde, is the next Kerrigan production, following his two latest successes, "Number 99" and "The Dream Cheater." The popular star plays the role of Frank Markham, and has one of the best parts in his career as a screen favorite. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation reports a continued demand for Kerrigan pictures especially for "Live Sparks" and "$30,000," and expects great summer business on "The Green Flame."

J. Warren Kerrigan, as Frank Markham, is in wrong twice in twenty-four hours. For one thing he gives the wrong girl flowers. He is left alone in a taxi, where appearances are all against him. The villain is an excellent characterization. He makes a convincing villain, and certainly gets all that is coming to him in the last two reels.

In the company surrounding J. W. Kerrigan are Fritzi Brunette as Ruth Gardner; Jay Morley as Dan Lantry; Edwin Wallock as Roger Imlay; Myles McCarthy as Freeman Hardy, Claire De Brey as Lou Fremain, and William Moran as Julius Block.

Elaine Hammerstein Next to Be "The Daughter Pays"

MYRON SELZNICK announces that Elaine Hammerstein's next subject will be "The Daughter Pays," from a novel by Mrs. Baillie Reynolds that is said to have created a sensation.

"I believe the public will talk about 'The Daughter Pays' for many moons to come, and Miss Hammerstein will create a vogue that few screen artists have ever obtained from any one production," says Mr. Selznick. "The author presents a new angle to the question of whether a woman should risk her happiness by marrying for money, and intertwines this problem with another more intricate. How much should a mother demand of her daughter as sacrifice in the name of filial piety. The solution of the problems will be left to motion picture audiences, and thus will exhibitors have one of the biggest tie-ups that has ever been placed within their grasp."

R. Cecil Smith adapted the story.

Eugene Walter Will Scenarioize "Fine Feathers."

Eugene Walter, of Metro's staff of distinguished authors, at the New York studios of the company will shortly begin work on the scenarioization of "Fine Feathers," his own stage success, in which Robert Edeson, Rose Coghlan and Crystal Herne appeared several seasons ago.

New York Theatre Books William Collier Picture

CHARLES R. ROGERS, director of sales for Select Pictures, announces that "The Servant Question," starring William Collier, booked by the Broadway Theatre, New York, for a pre-release showing. This production not alone lends itself to high class motion picture houses, but is also being booked by a number of big vaudeville circuits.

Mr. Collier portrays the role of Larry Butler, a young man about town. Following a series of ludicrous situations, Larry is said to heighten the farcical moments by capturing a Count Amboy and two confederates aiming to gain possession of a necklace owned by his chum's father. Through this he wins the hand of his chum's sister, Muriel.

Included in the cast are Rapley Holmes, Virginia Lee, Armand Cortez and "Buster" Collier, the comedian's son.

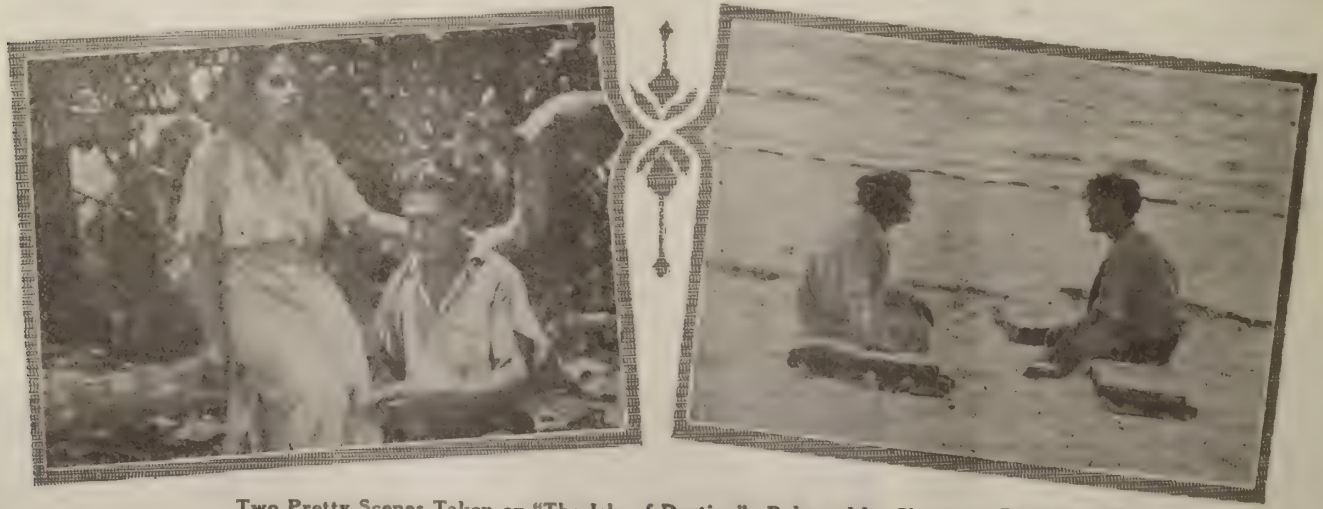
Assembling Cast for Second Betty Compson Production

BETTY COMPSON is preparing to commence production on her second starring picture at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles. Arthur Rosson, who directed Miss Compson's initial release, "Prisoners of Love," which is now in the process of cutting, has been re-engaged by Miss Compson, and will be assisted by his brother Richard in the direction of the second production.

Miss Compson's work in the George Loane Tucker production of "The Miracle Man," firmly established her as a universal favorite with the theatre-going public, and in order to display her versatility in her future productions she has decided that each of her first six or eight pictures must be entirely different from one another from both the standpoint of theme and her own stellar characterizations. In keeping with the plan Miss Compson selected for her own picture a story that is radically unlike "Prisoners of Love."

Huntington Lake Chosen as Location.

Huntington Lake has been chosen as location for the new production upon which Mary Miles Minter is now engaged for Realart Pictures Corporation. Director Paul Powell and his company left early in June, expecting to spend more than a week at this spot.



Two Pretty Scenes Taken on "The Isle of Destiny"—Released by Character Pictures.

In these pictures are seen Hazel Hudson and Frank Williams. Guess the trunk belonging to Hazel must have floated in after the ship was wrecked, 'cause she's wearing a different dress in scene 2. Her director might have been thoughtful enough and brought one for her.

Consensus of Trade Press Reviews

Here are extracts from available news printed in the five motion picture trade papers. It is the aim to present one sentence that will reflect the spirit of the writer's opinion. The papers are indicated as follows: Moving Picture World (M. P. W.); Moton Picture News (N.); Exhibitor's Trade Review (T. R.); Wid's (W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E. H.).

Girl of the Sea

(Betty Hilburn and Chester Barnet—Republic)

M. P. W.—It has all that is necessary for the success of a good photoplay and, in addition, fascinating scenes below the water, all a part of a thrilling drama.

T. R.—Judged as a novelty the picture ranks high. Its water scenes are in themselves worth the price of admission.

E. H.—Properly exploited, it should prove a sensation.

Nothing But Lies

(Taylor Holmes—Metro)

M. P. W.—Taylor Holmes, featured in Metro screen version of Aaron Hoffman play, finds scant opportunities.

N.—Farce picture drags and carries very little humor.

T. R.—Is only mildly amusing and does not reach Metro's high comedy standard.

E. H.—Presents facially adept Taylor Holmes in a characteristic portrayal.

Forbidden Trails

(Buck Jones—Fox)

M. P. W.—A consistent Western story of good dramatic structure, punctuated at intervals by big melodramatic incidents.

N.—Contains enough plot to make it really interesting, and the star contributes his bit by getting in some good action.

T. R.—Nothing has been overlooked to make this production sensationally interesting for the lovers of the melodrama.

E. H.—Marks another step in Buck Jones' advance to popular favor.

Wits vs. Wits

(Marguerite Marsh—Hallmark)

M. P. W.—The production is an interesting one, carrying the usual amount of suspense supplied by a detective story.

N.—Too much mystery in confusing crook picture.

T. R.—Good play with suspense.

W.—Very awful attempt at production of a feature.

Thou Art the Man

(Robert Warwick—Paramount-Artcraft)

M. P. W.—As stirring a moving picture drama as has been seen on the screen for some time.

N.—Average romantic drama.

T. R.—The situations are well conceived, the emotional lure strong, there are thrills in plenty and the element of suspense never slackens.

W.—Very jerky and episodic production that fails to hold the interest.

E. H.—The picture is very satisfying and should give followers of Warwick and others pleasant diversion.

The Wonder Man.

(Georges Carpentier—Robertson-Cole)

M. P. W.—Will prove a sure winner.

N.—Picture carries interest and a colorful personality.

T. R.—Should prove popular.

W.—A very pleasant surprise—should register with sporting element.

E. H.—Destined for success.

The Sea Rider

(Harry Morey—Vitagraph)

M. P. W.—One of the best of the Harry T. Morey productions for Vitagraph.

N.—Seafaring tale carries an adequate punch for Morey.

W.—A trifle better than the average program offering.

E. H.—Should please generally.

The Courage of Marge O'Doone

(Pauline Starke—Vitagraph)

M. P. W.—Is an outdoor subject of first rank, carrying an appealing story and abundantly supplied with suspenseful melodramatic moments.

N.—Curwood's story makes vivid and vital picture.

T. R.—Proves excellent attraction.

W.—Lack of proper atmosphere prevents this from achieving real strength.

The House of Toys

(Seena Owen—American)

M. P. W.—A sure winner.

N.—Picture lacks moving moments through its overworked theme and draggy action.

T. R.—Drama of domestic entanglements simply and appealing told.

W.—Good idea unable to stand up against avalanche of padding.

The Iron Heart

(Madlaine Traverse—Fox)

M. P. W.—Will undoubtedly prove one of wide general interest.

N.—Conventional steel mill story does not convince.

T. R.—It is not up to the standard of program releases by any manner of means.

W.—Story is poorly handled.

Romance

(Doris Keane—United Artists)

M. P. W.—Doris Keane repeats her stage triumph in fine screen version of "Romance."

N.—Artistic production given play of love and sentiment.

T. R.—Picture of remarkable charm.

E. H.—Brings to the screen a play of unusual merit and a star whose work on the stage placed her at the top.

Below the Surface

(Hobart Bosworth—Paramount)

M. P. W.—Fine quality of entertainment.

N.—Bosworth's acting and graphic incidents make entertaining picture.

T. R.—A big picture viewed from every angle.

W.—Wonderful production with great under sea scenes given story of thrills.

E. H.—Is another worthy addition to Mr. Bosworth's splendid repertoire of screen classics.

Alias Miss Dodd

(Edith Roberts—Universal)

M. P. W.—A humorous and quite original plot is the outstanding feature of this five-reel production.

N.—Little entertainment value in this slight story.

T. R.—Is light and rather silly.

W.—Fine comedy idea spoiled by unsympathetic treatment.

Remodeling Her Husband

(Dorothy Gish—Paramount)

M. P. W.—Clean class of pleasing entertainment.

N.—Moth-eaten story lifted by Dorothy Gish's inimitable humor.

T. R.—Play of breezy action.

W.—Star puts very weak story over by personality and comedy business.

Scratch My Back

(Helene Chatwick—T. Roy Barnes—Goldwyn)

M. P. W.—A delightful light comedy.

N.—Is a sure-fire hit.

T. R.—Very amusing light society comedy.

W.—A comedy riot.

White Lies

(Gladys Brockwell—Fox)

M. P. W.—Type of production that is sure to have strong appeal with the family theatre.

N.—Story of France in war times is strong in plot.

T. R.—This is a moderately interesting drama.

W.—Averagely interesting picture with rather negative effect.

Comments

THE TOUGH TENDERFOOT (Western), July 3.—A two-reel subject, by Louis D. Lighton, with Frank Hayes, Jack Carlyle and Helen Lynch in the cast. Ranch humor prevails in this, the two men being rivals for the girl's hand. One arranges to have the other "hazed" and the cowboys lower the unfortunate victim into a well. Later the girl comes to the rescue. This is light in treatment and without much suspense, but proves on the whole quite entertaining.

THE GUMPS (Celebrated Players), ANDY'S WASHDAY.—In this, Andy, irate because of Min's deficiency as a housekeeper, drowns his fury in the wash-tub. While in this act, he is snapped by Min, who is trying to get a photograph of him for a popular magazine. Exit Andy, mad all over again, and trying vainly to get hold of the negative. This is a sure-to-amuse slant on domestic duties.

ANDY ON SKATES.—Andy does some stunt on ice for Chester's edification. He bumps into a stout lady and knocks her down, braces himself for the task of picking her up, fails utterly and is clubbed by her policeman friend, whom Andy eventually pushes into an ice hole. Min does not appear in this number, which is more of the slapstick variety than the usual Gump pictures.

ANDY'S MOTHER-IN-LAW PAYS HIM A VISIT.—A very humorous treatment of the old, old theme. Andy goes to meet Min's mama at 3:45 a. m. She is one hour late. Min forbids her mother to do any work, and Andy has to wash the dishes. His mother-in-law presents him with a gift—the inevitable necktie—a highly colored article. This number is a great success. There is a laugh in almost every move.

MONKEY BUSINESS (SUNSHINE-FOX).—A two-reel comic, directed by Edward F. Cline, with Ethel Teare, Dave Morris, Harry Brooker and others in the cast. The "others" includes, in this instance, a particularly funny monkey, a big dog and a good-natured baby. The monkey is carried up in the air by some toy baloons and great excitement follows, as it is thought to be the baby. The subject is full of amusing action. The first scenes are in a cabaret, where a beauty chorus in breezy attire takes part.

BACK FIRE (Western), July 10.—A two-reel number, written by A. W. Kruckeberg, with J. Farrel McDonald and Ethel Ritchie in the cast. The story leans heavily toward melodrama—a little too much so to be entirely pleasant. The hero receives a shot of powder in the eyes and is totally blinded for life. After losing his sight he almost kills his enemy in a hand-to-hand struggle. The fight is extremely realistic. This has the usual country town settings and is strong in action.

This Is "The Truth!"

STAR: Madge Kennedy, whose delightful comedy mannerisms and winsome personality have endeared her to a vast public.

AUTHOR: "The Truth" is generally regarded as the best play from the pen of America's great dramatist, Clyde Fitch.

CAST: Zelda Sears, Tom Carrigan, Frank Doane, Helen Greene, Kenneth Hill, Horace Haine.

DIRECTOR: Lawrence C. Windom.

STORY: Becky Warder was an artful dodger of the truth. She told her husband flocks of little fibs. She practiced on her friends and made "white" lying a fine and fascinating art. Then one day all the half-truths, white lies and plain, downright whoppers she had told her patient hubby exploded and threatened to wreck their happiness forever.

Her best girl friend accused her of stealing her husband. A detective agency camped on her trail. Her own husband turned cold and repulsed her. There was nothing left to do but to go to her Dad in his boarding house in Baltimore.

And here takes place a final scene that will bring tears and chuckles from the stoniest audience in Christendom. The end is a surprise—a heart-warming climax to a remarkably entertaining picture.

A WINNER FROM EVERY ANGLE—AND THAT'S "THE TRUTH!"

"The Restless Sex"

Marion Davies Delightful in a Playful Satire by Robert W. Chambers. Cosmopolitan Production, Paramount Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Restless Sex" is the first picture in which Marion Davies has appeared which approaches true art, meaning by that a stimulus to an appreciation of life. Other mediums in which she has been starred have created the idea that she was an attractive girl who could not act; an impression made because she was given roles without distinction of character. They lacked what "The Restless Sex" contains, the convincing quality of pictures done with inspiration and definite purpose, those well worth doing on their own account. In "The Restless Sex" mere method of doing, dressing the body regardless of whether it contains a soul, is not depended on alone. The treatment is elaborate and beautiful, but there is glimpsed besides the spirit of modern woman. To be sure this is according to the viewpoint of Robert W. Chambers, but it is interesting. The mood of the story, that of the author, is preserved, and this means highly intelligent treatment of the theme.

The ladies of Robert W. Chambers move around in silks and satins as a matter of course, but he has conceived of a very interesting situation between the son of a wealthy man and the latter's adopted daughter. Around this situation are grouped all other incidents of the story. Many of the latter are conventional, but there is permitted a delightful characterization, that of a girl of warm impulses and pure mind tormented with emotions she must suppress. To the interpretation of this delicate role Miss Davies is assigned.

In the charm of life's romantic comedy Marion Davies seems to have been born for the part she plays. Her mental attitude there is more or less of a natural one. When she comes to brood over the peculiar situation in which Fate has placed her, we first see the awakening of an artiste. That fine quality is expressed with delicacy and sympathetic appreciation of what is required in the difficult role. With grace of movement and nice poise, she reveals the soul of a tormented woman, instead of strutting, eye-rolling and attempting to tear passion to tatters. It is an artistic performance straight through. In it all she is admirably supported. She even dares have such grace and beauty as that of lovely Vivian Osborne in the support. The production is so rich in values that it must be accorded high place as a fascinating and beautiful entertainment.

The Story.

Stephanie, adopted daughter of John Cleland, only becomes a member of "The Restless Sex" after his death. She has been brought up in affectionate intimacy with his son Jim, but he is to go abroad for two years and the tender-hearted girl is without spiritual resource. After Jim's departure, she knows that her heart has gone with him. She has always loved him, but not with full understanding of the nature of her love. Now she is without the spiritual support of either adopted father or adopted brother, she seeks in vain the distractions her wealth permits. Her property is in the charge of lawyer Crismer, and she is thrown often into the society of his son Osward. Through Osward's influence she drifts gradually into self expression through art. He is a sculptor with a magnificent studio. Their intimacy brings warm friendship on Stephanie's part and ardent love on his. Through an automobile accident which lands them for the night in a house raided as disorderly, she is so badly compromised that a marriage follows, but it is in name only. Their marriage is instantly followed by the suicide of Osward's father, who has been misusing the funds entrusted to him for Stephanie. She and Osward live apart thereafter, he in poverty, declining to accept her charity.

Jim Cleland's sudden return from abroad brings matter to an acute crisis. His old affection becomes passionate love. It is so intensely reciprocated by Stephanie that her husband's life becomes a torment. When he finds that Cleland and Stephanie have gone away together to the family country place, he knows that his hopes of winning her are in vain. He contemplates suicide, but realizes that his death must be made to appear as accidental. Stephanie and Jim Cleland at the lodge in the country become so enamoured that they are about to disregard all moral obligations. They are checked by a view of the elder Cleland's picture. They are about to separate, when news comes that Osward has been accidentally killed. When time has healed the sadness of heart over Osward's fate, they are at last accorded the opportunity of expressing their natural love as heaven intended and the world approves, through little children.

"The City of Masks"

Robert Warwick in a Mysterious and Highly Entertaining Paramount Photoplay.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

WITH a rather out-of-date associate theme in the plot, yet highly entertaining, "The City of Masks" is a picture that should give universal satisfaction.

It was written by George Barr McCutcheon, famous as a writer of love and adventure among nobles of Europe and dashing Americans. There are not as many heroics as characterizes most of his stories, and perhaps this has made the story more human, though not melodramatic.

The star is Robert Warwick. At least he is the hero, but the entire cast is made up of talented people quite faithful to their types. Warwick's late pictures have not given his big parts. Nevertheless that is nothing against "The City of Masks" because each role has a bigness that makes one rather forget the actors and become absorbed in the story.

"The City of Masks" gets its name from the assertion made by some one or other that everybody in New York has a past that is concealed by a "mask." For instance a dirty poodle, when washed, comes from behind his mask and reveals himself as a beautiful dog. A wealthy politician many years ago was a butler, though now it is not generally known. And so it is with a group of former nobles who are now Americans. One has been an earl, another a marchioness, another a lord, etc. They are now all masked, yet keep in communication with each other. Here develops the love story, and the attempts by an unscrupulous young idler to break it up, which provides most of the excitement. There are many beautiful scenes, notably a gathering of the nobles at a party in New York attired in their former costumes. And another feature of the production is the very realistic snowstorm scenes in the first reel.

Mr. Warwick, as usual, gives a fine account of himself. He is graceful and as gentlemanly as the part demands. Lois Wilson is a very sweet heroine. Theo. Kosloff, as an ambitious young violinist, furnishes many fine comedy bits. Others deserving of special commendation are Edward Jobson as the butler-politician and J. M. Dumont as the young idler.

The Story.

In the lower part of New York, "City of Masks," the Duchess of Camelford, known as Deborah, has a dressmaking establishment. Every Wednesday evening she holds a salon for those of noble blood who have become impoverished. A popular attendant is Lord Temple, known as Tommy Trotter, a chauffeur employed by a Mr. Carpenter. Another is Lady Jane Thorne, known as Miss Emsdale, who is a governess in the family of Smith-Parvis, Sr. They are in love.

Stuyvesant, only son of Smith-Parvis, a man of loose morals, decides to make a conquest of Miss Emsdale. She treats him coldly, so he thereupon decides to "take her off her high horse." His mother wants to get into society, while his father hopes his son will be a diplomat. The father gets in touch with McFadden, a political boss, who, for money, looks with favor upon a diplomatic position for the son. McFadden accepts an invitation to dine with the Smith-Parvises when the deal will be closed.

Miss Emsdale tells Trotter of Stuyvesant's attentions. Trotter pulls the rich boy's nose. The latter procures Trotter's discharge and tells the girl that if the chauffeur does not leave New York, he will be arrested. Trotter falls into a trap when he accepts marked money which was paid him when discharged and is put in jail charged with theft. Stuyvesant promises to obtain his release if the girl will accept him, and she is about to yield when MacFadden, who actually is Deborah's butler, takes a hand.

McFadden tells the police to release Trotter, then goes to the Smith-Parvis home, denounces Stuyvesant, tears up the check he has received and quits the place. Meanwhile Stuyvesant has bribed a taxi driver to take Miss Emsdale to a questionable place. He is insulting her when Trotter appears and thrashes him. Trotter then proposes to the girl and their wedding is set to take place at Deborah's.

The night of the wedding Stuyvesant causes the police to raid the place, but when they appear, they are ordered away by McFadden. When Stuyvesant learns the truth regarding the social status of Miss Emsdale and Trotter, he is amazed and it does not surprise him to find that Trotter has been appointed to the diplomatic post he coveted. So he withdraws and all ends happily for the young couple.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the fact that this is another story by the author of "Graustark." Use in your advertising the cut of a city, partly masked, which you will find in the press book. And don't forget that Warwick's name means something. A very novel stunt for your theatre would be for all your attendants to wear black masks and you might also have a masked woman walking around the streets with a grip labeled "I am looking for 'The City of Masks' at the Blank Theatre."

In the cast is J. M. Dumont, who had a big part in "The Miracle Man"; also Theo Kosloff, who had a good part in "Why Change Your Wife?" Mention this in your ads, as it may bring some people who admire their acting. Also remember that Lois Wilson has a following.

"A World of Folly"

Five-Reel Fox Production Features Vivian Rich in Story of Love and Intrigue.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

WHILE not constructed with the dramatic suspense necessary to achieve a powerful subject of its kind, this five-reel Fox production, entitled "A World of Folly," has a great deal in it to hold the interest. It is a quietly developed psychological study of family life, in which a designing male of high social standing intrudes himself and attempts to win the love of a happy wife and mother. The main situation has been wrought with considerable delicacy of perception and feeling on the part of both author and director. The acting is sincere and intelligent and if the one element of suspense had been accomplished the subject would have reached first rank. As it stands, it is above the average in high aim and entertaining subject matter.

Vivian Rich is cast in the role of the young wife and mother, who meets Duke Tremaine, the handsome tempter portrayed by P. M. McCullough. Aaron Edwards plays the role of husband. These three figures represent the eternal triangle, but the incidents escape much of the usual obvious treatment. There is, for instance, refreshing novelty in the fact that Tremaine's attack on Helene is not the customary physical tussle, but a more daring and subtle approach, in which he relies more upon his personal fascinations. It is hard to account for the way in which he took his sweetheart, Jeanne, into his confidence, for by so doing he deliberately invited the retaliation of the scorned woman. The dinner of the business men's club is new and well staged. The closing scenes, in which Blair drives Tremaine out to meet the waiting dog, bring the story to a good climax.

The Story.

Raoul Blair and his young wife, Helene, in "A World of Folly," lead an ideal family life, being devoted to each other and their two children. One day, while watching a game of polo, Helen meets Duke Tremaine, a society pet and leader in various sports. Tremaine is instantly attracted to Helene and is glad to receive an introduction to her.

Tremaine is at a loss as to how to proceed in winning the love of this happy woman, who has no eyes for anyone but her husband. One day, however, he assists the Blair children in a threatened automobile accident and takes them home. Helene is naturally grateful to him and invites Tremaine to visit them. The latter accepts with alacrity and often comes to see the Blairs.

After a considerable time Raoul Blair hears outside comment on this friendship and warns Helene that she should not see too much of Tremaine. The wife agrees to this and they do not invite Tremaine again. He persists, however, in forcing his attentions upon her and one night enters the house while Blair is at a club dinner. Tremaine's intention is to make a fool of Blair, as he has done with other married men, but through the intervention of others his scheme is nipped in the bud. Tremaine is forced to make a balcony exit, where he is attacked by a dog.

"Madonnas and Men"

B. A. Rolfe Presents a Romantic Drama of High Inspirational Sentiment Produced by Jans Pictures, Incorporated.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A PICTURE of fine sentiment and high ideals, "Madonnas and Men," is a fascinating compound of spiritual beauty and purely sensuous charm. It is as romantic as a night dream of dark centuries long passed which takes on new meaning in the clear light of the modern day. Into this dream-like fantasy there is woven an up-to-date motive in favor of splendid womanhood. It is a dream setting forth some of the truest sort of truths, but in an entertaining way. It refreshes weariness of spirit for those who seek to escape from the narrowness of their lives, escape from themselves, hence it is true art.

The play's the thing; the eternal play that eases our hearts with the triumph of light over darkness. In real life we rarely triumph. Most of us fail, unable to cope with the overwhelming power of circumstances, or because our hopes far exceed our strength, hence stories like "Madonnas and Men" enrich and stimulate our dull lives. The play is well conceived by Cary Wilson and Edmund Goulding, the scenario worked out with skill by Violet Clark, all in harmony with remarkably artistic direction by B. A. Rolfe. Rolfe has most carefully preserved the "Mood," the soul of the piece, without which there is no real art. Thus it is that "Madonnas and Men" is an admirably worked out composition from a purely technical point of view. Then, glory be! it contains a cluster of brilliant performers, each chosen to typify the role, to interpret, to intensify it in a glow which sheds light beyond the production upon how moving pictures should be produced.

There are really five star performers, Anders Randolph, an expression of ruthless power, Edmond Lowe, an exponent of dawning enlightenment, G. von Seyffertitz, a remarkable type of humanity in revolt against ignorance and oppression, Raye Dean, exquisite example of pure and sweet womanhood, and Evan-Burrows Fontaine as an ideal of enchantment and grace. There is also a support of fine types in the minor roles, notably Faire Binney, and a "chorus" abundant enough and capable enough for grand opera. The producers are prodigal in the use of true artists in every department.

As magnificently presented at the 44th Street Theatre, the orchestra conducted by B. A. Rolfe in person, "Madonnas and Men" represents a very high order of pictural entertainment, a delight to the eye, an inspiration to the soul. It is one of the rare examples we count upon to stand as a justification of the art of motion picture production.

The Story.

"Madonnas and Men" are in evidence at the Roman Colosseum when Emperor Turnerius sits with his son, Gordian, his soothsayer Grimaldo, and Nenissa, his favorite dancer watching a sacrifice of human lives made to satisfy his brutish passions. When the young Christian girl is brought in to be eaten alive by lions, Grimaldo holds up the spectacle while he tells Gordian a story of the future which may be prophetic of his own.

The story is of a modern emperor of finance who attempts the sacrifice of just such a young girl to satisfy a low desire for revenge on her mother. In it the same characters are reincarnated. Because the younger man is led by manliness to put a stop to the plan of his father. It is a highly dramatic story, ending in a convulsion of rage which destroys the brutal example of ruthless power, crowning the son in his stead.

The young prince is entertained by the story from time to time, but he is only impressed with its possible truth of his own tacit recognition that it is "better to defy all Rome than to dishonor womankind." He knows that Rome has reveled too long in licentious brutality, that the glory of a race lies in its women. His imagination is kindled by the prophecy of a super-race which shall rise afar, with magic cities and great wealth, because of honor paid to women. His better nature thus aroused, he springs into the arena to save the Christian girl. His father, the emperor, is convulsed with rage. He orders his guard to kill his own son. He dies before they can do so. The son becomes emperor and saves both the girl and the fair name of his race by his manly defense of pure and exalted womankind.

"A Double Dyed Deceiver"

Goldwyn Presents Jack Pickford in a Pictured Version of an O. Henry Story.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A DOUBLE DYED DECEIVER" is very frankly a vehicle for Jack Pickford to appear in as a rather boyish-looking bad man from Texas, who turns up in a small South American town with a notch in his gun. He announces himself as a "killer," and he looks like one of the lady-killing kind. Adventure, a great fortune and a fair lady await him. Fate is kind to the "killer," notwithstanding his entire willingness to rob his benefactors and play the part of a sneak toward kind-hearted people who receive him into their household under a mistaken impression. There is no attempt at a moral, unless it is indicated in the killer's transformation. That he is converted to living a life of ease he has done nothing to earn may not be edifying, but it is certainly lucky for the youth.

Jack Pickford assumes the role with the easy grace of a young man who realizes in advance that everything is coming to him. Being a child of destiny, why should he worry? His support is fairly good. They utilize to the best advantage whatever opportunity is afforded them. The feature of the picture is its handling, particularly as to settings. These are pleasing to the eye and in exceedingly good taste. In the summing up of values "A Double Dyed Deceiver" provides fair entertainment.

The Story.

"A Double Dyed Deceiver" is the Llano Kid when he lands in a forlorn little South American town. He goes directly to the American consul, Thacker. He confesses to the consul that he is a killer, exhibiting the notch on his gun. The consul conceives of a plot to rob rich Senor Urique. The latter mourns a runaway boy he has not seen for many years, particularly on account of the boy's mother. Her mind is becoming affected. The scheme proposed by the consul is for the Llano Kid to impersonate the runaway boy, who bore a tattoo mark of the Urique coat-of-arms on the back of his hand. The consul does the tattooing, then adroitly brings about recognition of the Kid as the long-lost boy. He is treated with great kindness by the entire family, including Estella, a charming niece. The mother is nearly overcome with joy. In spite of all this, the Kid agrees to rob the Urique safe, whose combination has been given him. He actually steals the money and starts away with it, but changes his mind and returns it to the safe. The latter act is seen by Estelle. To her he confesses his true identity. She begs him to keep the pretended one rather than break a loving mother's heart. On account of the loving kindness he has received from her he consents to play the role and forces the consul to sustain him in it. His reward is a brilliant future, in which Estella is plainly destined to play a part.

"The Cheater"

May Allison Plays Role of Fake Healer in Six-Part Metro Adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones Drama.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Henry Arthur Jones play "The Cheater" has been adapted to the screen by Metro with fair success. May Allison, the star of the production, displays considerable versatility in portraying the different moods of the heroine and King Baggot in the male lead gives a satisfactory and dignified portrayal. The pictures registers a slight note of burlesque and graduates into a highly dramatic situation, which gathers suspense as the pictures approaches its climax. The play contains an interesting characterization which is moderately well outlined, and while the adventurous nature of the production causes it to hold the interest of the spectator well, the narrative style in which the story is told detracts from the forcefulness of the drama.

Length, Six Reels.

The Story.

The chief character in "The Cheater" is a young woman, Lilly Meany, whose beauty and natural character fit her for better surroundings than those supplied by her father, Peg Meany. His antipathy to work and general lack of principle make it easy for Lilly to follow lines of deception in earning a livelihood. Her chief associate, Bill Tozer, is a fake healer, posing as an East Indian, and among the frequenters of a nearby health resort he is considered a past master in the art of healing. One day a bright idea strikes the trio, and Lilly is sent to visit Mrs. Prall, one of the richest and most hypochrondiacal of the guests at the health resort. Mrs. Prall, believing herself cured by Vashti Dethic, under which name Lilly poses, tells her nephew, Lord Asgarby, of Vashti and of the healing powers of which she believes the young woman to be possessed. Vashti is immediately engaged to apply herself to the curing of Asgarby's young sister. Complications then arise, in which Mr. Prall, skeptical of Vashti's powers, watches the castle in which she is confined with her patient and makes it difficult for Peg Meany to smuggle food to his daughter while she perpetrates her farce of fasting.

Finally a change of heart takes place in Lilly. She becomes fond of her little patient, and still fonder of Lord Asgarby, and in the end, when the child, through faith in the supposed healer, becomes perfectly well, Lilly opens her heart to Asgarby and is forgiven. The close of the picture suggests the betrothal of Lilly and Asgarby.

If your patrons like stunts, stage a fake healer the week before the showing with a patter lecture on the value of faith in making cures. Treat it seriously, but wind up with an allusion to the showing of "The Cheater" the following week. Use the healer for street work if the authorities will permit.

"Man's Plaything"

Melodramatic Story on Blackmail in Picture Released by Republic.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

BLACKMAIL is the theme of "Man's Plaything." It is highly melodramatic, has a good cast and is fairly well made.

The plot has many ramifications and perhaps if there was not so much dialogue the story would be more to the point and consequently contain much more force. As presented, however, it is in that class of pictures that delights lovers of "high life" and "low life" drama. The story touches upon three classes of people—the poor, the night life gamblers and the wealthy. It brings them to the point where one clashes with another and involves the third. It provides good climaxes, resulting in fights and shootings. Everything looks bad for the good until the very last. Then a surprise finish turns the tide.

"Man's Plaything," of course, is a woman. She is the victim of the blackmailers, although she thinks she is only a part of her plan to get revenge on a wealthy young man whom she really loved.

The production is given class by the several big scenes in cabaret and dancing places and the rich costumes worn by the women. However, there is but one big female role among the half-dozen big parts.

The principal role is that of Nellie Vaughan, played by Grace Davison. She works hard to make it human, in spite of highly dramatic demands, and does so very successfully. Her method of contrasting the part of Nellie as a young flower girl and as a grown-up miss with a knowledge of the world is well done. Next in importance is Stuart Holmes, who is the leader of the blackmailers. As usual, Mr. Holmes lives his part. The wealthy hero is Montagu Love, who deserves credit for not overplaying a part that might have easily been spoiled.

The Cast.

Pelton Van Teel.....Montague Love
Nellie Vaughan.....Grace Davison
Devlin Maddox.....Stuart Holmes
Dan Vaughan.....J. W. Johnson
Wyne Cottrell.....Eric Mayne

Directed by Charles T. Horan.
Length, 6,000 Feet.

The Story.

Nellie Vaughan lives with her father, mother and brother, Dan. The father and brother quarrel continuously because the father will not help support the family. During a brawl she is accidentally hit and leaves home. She is employed as a flower girl in a dancing cafe, and is admired by Pelton Van Teel, a wealthy young frequenter of the place. Maddox, a swindler, desires to use her as a tool in blackmailing Van Teel and tells her that Van Teel has been telling everybody that he is keeping her. In her anger she agrees to a plan to get revenge on the young man by marrying him and then holding up his father for a separation settlement.

Her brother gets into a fight with another man who taunts him about his sister's alleged relations with Van Teel. The man is almost killed and Dan goes to jail. Meantime Nellie cannot go through with the scheme because she loves him. He has been losing money at gambling to Maddox, and although having fitted up an apartment for Nellie and installed her therein, he desires her to wait a short time before getting married. She demands to be wedded at once and this is done. Van Teel's father, hearing of it, denounces her and offers her $50,000 if she will consent to a divorce. She refuses. Going to their apartment, Van Teel is shot by her brother, who has been released on bail, and thinks Van Teel has seduced her. But she shows him her marriage certificate and he gets away by a fire escape. Maddox then threatens to break up their happiness by producing a check, which Van Teel had given him and which was worthless. Nellie then goes to his apartment for a show down. She snatches the check from his hands, and levels a gun at him, backing out of the room. He picks up a lamp, hurls it at her, and she shoots him.

Maddox offers his butler $500 if he will tell the police that Nellie shot him with provocation. He agrees, but when the police come, tells the truth, revealing the fact that he is a detective, who had been hired by the elder Van Teel, who had suspected that Maddox was playing his son for "easy money."

Maddox is arrested and happiness looms for the couple.

"Let's Be Fashionable"

Paramount-Artcraft Presents Doris May and Douglas MacLean in Light Comedy, Ince Supervision.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

LET'S Be Fashionable" assumes a condition that it is "the thing" for man and wife not to be attentive to each other, to the contrary, each must have an outside affair. There is good material for comedy in this assumption, but there is only a limited amount of it used and practically all of the same kind. It is distinctly pleasing as far as it goes, but this is due to good workmanship, fine acting and capable treatment, rather than to any particular play merit outside of the central idea.

Douglas MacLean puts his heart and soul into all he has to do. He would win by main strength if he could. Doris May is sweet and intelligent in her interpretation. There is a pleasing harmony of action on the part of the supporting cast, and the settings are in good taste. The sum of values in "Let's Be Fashionable," as presented at the Rivoli Theatre, is high enough to characterize it as pleasing entertainment.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

"Let's Be Fashionable" declares young Mrs. Langdon, not yet out of her honeymoon, though installed in a pretty suburban house. She and her husband are at their first club dance when they decide that their social progress depends upon each seeking out some other kindred soul than is intended by nature and their marriage relation. She is very innocent in going home with a young bachelor, attempting to entertain him with pictures and souvenirs of her husband. Langdon makes a martyr of himself in the society of an experience society flirt. On his way home, his new car needs water. In attempting to get a fresh supply he is chased up a tree by a dog who tears out the seat of his trousers. He steals a pair from a garage and reaches home in time to find a hysterical wife, but they make up before morning.

Their attempts to be fashionable result in a more serious complication. Mrs. Langdon is ardently pursued by the bachelor. He even dares propose that she accompany him on a prospective trip, naming the train on which he expects to leave. She is unresponsive at the moment. That night she passes alone. Her husband has gone off with a jazzy young girl to play golf and has not returned. She decides in a moment of anger to take the train on which the bachelor is leaving. Her unfortunate husband is innocent. He and his companion have been marooned on an island all night, through the drifting away of their skiff. He manages to escape in the morning and hurries home, only to find a note from his wife announcing her departure. He reaches the train as it is leaving and just in time to rescue his wife from the attentions of the adventurous bachelor, which he throws off the train. He and wifey decide there and then to discard their ideas of fashion in favor of good old simple, true-hearted love.

Five-Reel Universal Production Features Harry Carey in Story of Ranch Life.

THERE are many familiar plot ingredients in this five-reel Harry Carey subject, written by Tarkington Baker and directed by Reeves Eason. It is not so powerful as certain subjects in which Carey has been starred, but contains some new situations and on the whole averages well. It will entertain the Carey enthusiasts, even though it does not add greatly to his reputation. The story is pictured in familiar ranch settings. Its high moments are the melodramatic fight for the girl in the cabin of Bull Elkins.

The Story.

James Pearce, Jr., in "Human Stuff," is the son of an Eastern manufacturer. Jim tries business life for a while, but develops a strong dislike for it. He goes the pace and takes no interest in carrying on his father's business. Finally, after a disgraceful party, he suggests that his father permit him to go West, as he has always yearned for this life.

In due time Jim arrives in the West, where he buys out a cattle ranch. It has never made money, but he conceives the idea of putting sheep on it. He does this and makes a success of the ranch, but at the same time incurs the enmity of the surrounding cattle raisers. Jim defies these men openly in a public meeting.

He has written his father to send out some marriageable girl to him, as he thinks the ranch should have a mistress. About this time a girl named Lee Tyndal appears, a friend of his sister, who is desirous of buying a ranch. Jim mistakes her for someone sent out by his father, and the letter sent by his sister is intercepted by an enemy. He greatly offends Lee by assuming that she came to wed him.

Later the girl is kidnapped by some of his enemies and Jim battles vigorously to free her. Explanations follow in due time and a real love romance takes place.

Gaumont Tricolor Features

Parisian Visitor Brings Excellent Program Pictured in Natural Colors.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SCREEN epicures were delighted with the splendid program given at the Astor Hotel by Leon Gaumont, revealing new wonders of cinematography in natural colors. The trichrome, or three-color, process, which was described at considerable length in the Moving Picture World of June 12, brings a wealth of clear, soft hues to the screen, fairly dazzling at times but never irritating. The projection, on a comparatively long throw, was satisfactory throughout, though bad focus at moments caused some blurring. This is a matter pertaining to operation adjustment and not an inherent fault of the process. A great richness and depth is attained, and there is apparently almost a complete freedom from the fire streaks which marred the original efforts along this line.

Mr. Gaumont's program itself was a thing of artistic beauty and fine selection. It ranged from an opening view of antiques, miniatures, paintings, sculptures and other art products, all in fine colors, to picturesque scenes from Morocco, fruits, flowers, butterflies, seacoasts and other geographical effects, mountain vistas and views of glass manufacture in Venice. The crowning feature of the evening was "The Victory Parade," described as the "most important documentary film ever recorded throughout the world." There are of course many other views of this great event of July 14, 1919, but the sublime color effects in this lend a particular interest.

"Sick Abed"

Wallace Reid Proves to Be a Facile Fun Maker in Paramount-Artcraft Product.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

SO much clean, spontaneous comedy prevails in "Sick Abed," so well has it been directed and so adroitly does the star manage his role, that the picture easily slips into the A1 class. Almost every scene is a laugh. The scenarist, Clara Genevieve Kennedy has had excellent material in the original play which was written by Ethel Watts Mumford, and she has handled it most advantageously. Sam Wood, the director, has shown a like sympathy with the spirit of the play, and it is largely due to him that the many amusing scenes are a success.

Comedy comes naturally to Wallace Reid. This role exploits his ability and originality to a much greater degree than have some of his recent vehicles. A capable cast supports him. Bebe Daniels is clever as the nurse and the Chinese servant is an interesting study as interpreted by George Kuwa.

Directed by Sam Wood.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story.

Trouble starts when Constance Weems decides to become a scenario writer. Unable to get any inspiration from her husband, she turns to Reginald Jay and recognizes in him a perfect type for the hero of her story. Much against his will she gets him to rehearse some of the scenes with her, so as to try them out. While they are in the woods one day a terrible rain storm comes up. It grows dark and they lose their way in the thicket. They reach a shed where they take refuge and where they are discovered by a small colored boy. Reginald bribes the boy to take them home and to keep mum about it all.

In the meantime Constance's husband, who has just sold Reginald's ranch to a lady, is caught in the rain in another section of the wood. He takes the lady to a near-by inn, where they expect to find warmth and food, but there he discovers that they are in a notorious roadhouse, and they immediately depart. By this time Reginald determined to escape the persistent Constance, has started off in his car for distant parts. Weems and the lady meet him and beg him to take them home. He does this, agreeing to say nothing of the adventure.

Constance finds out about her husband's escapade and prepares to get a divorce, as she already thinks she is in love with Reginald. She tells Reginald that he must act as a witness against her husband. He refuses and goes back to the city. Here he is traced by the suppliant Weems, who begs him not to testify against him. But a habeas corpus has already been served against Reginald and to prevent his appearing in court, Weems and his lawyer conjure up a plan. They call in two fake doctors and have them examine Reginald and pronounce him a hopeless sufferer from softening of the brain. He is obliged to stay indoors for an indefinite period. He raves at this until he meets his day nurse, with whom he promptly falls in love.

Constance meantime knows that he is only pretending and she calls in a real specialist. Weems then learns that Reginald is the man of Constance's dreams and proceeds to get vengeance. Constance interferes and tearfully reclaims her husband—and all ends well.

Comments

THREE RAISINS AND A CAKE OF YEAST (Fox).—Mutt and Jeff touch "the spot that makes 'em laugh right out in meeting" in this animated. Jeff concocts a home brew of powerful ingredients and tries it out on Mutt. The result is intensely laughable and results in the usual disaster for Jeff.

KID-ING THE LANDLORD (Star Comedy-Universal), July 12.—There is a fine idea in this one reel comedy, by Ben Cohen, though it might have had a little more expert handling. Still, it gets over satisfactorily. It pictures the experiences of a small family whose landlord will not permit babies on the premises. The baby itself softens the landlord's heart in this case and thus wins a home for itself. A theme like this is worth expanding into a large feature.

HOME BREW (Century-Universal), July 28.—A comic subject, in two reels, with Charles Doerty and Connie Henley in the cast. There is plenty of amusing incidents in this, some of the small business being original and laughable. The connecting idea is hardly strong enough to give proper direction to the numerous events that occur, but this should get over quite well. A number of the stunts are certain to interest children in particular.

A ONE-CYLINDER LOVE RIOT (Rainbow-Universal).—A two-reel comic, with Bud Jamelson, Billy Engel and others in the cast, and Thomas Buckingham directing. The hero's approach is good; he comes in a cloud of smoke and flame, which presently dispels and reveals him sitting in a Ford car. The subject has a lot of new and interesting comedy stunts of the small, laughable sort and keeps the spectator in constant good humor. Connie Henley plays the girl. A pleasing comic.

MONKEY BUSINESS (Sunshine).—An amusing farce comedy in which a dog and a monkey have much to do with the fun. It is founded on the old story of the wayward husband, and there are many pretty girls with abbreviated costumes, also closeups, which would bar the film from use in Sunday school, for instance. One of the spectacles of the film occurs when the monkey is carried out over the sea by a bunch of toy balloons. It lands on a rock and is rescued by the dog, on whose back he rides to safety.

WORRIES AND WOBBLES (Vitagraph).—In this comedy there is a great deal of genuinely funny action. The hero of the production gets drunk, and with complications which occur in his association with the various other characters, and the slapstick comedy that naturally results, the picture is an enjoyable one.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

As to Titles

CHESTER KITZMAN, of Duluth, Minn., orders four more lens charts and says:

I think that every member of Local No. 509 now has a lens chart, so this will be my last order. And now, Brother Richardson, as to the shutters with perforated blades now being used, and high amperage. Do you think that combination is practical? By "high amperage" I mean from, say, 70 to 90.

My own opinion is that, while this type of shutter is all right on ordinary amperage, it dulls the focus and sets up slight travel ghost on high, the latter being up and down and only discernible on close inspection. It shows most plainly when a sub-title of only one line is on. You will, if you watch closely, see a faint streak both up and down from each letter.

This has been watched and tried out in four or five houses and I have never yet seen an absolutely sharp picture with high amperage and a shutter of the kind named.

A Suggestion to Producers.

Another thing: I have lately seen many films six months or so old which had no titles, or practically none. This works an outrage on the small town exhibitor and upon small town audiences. It is no joke for an audience which has paid its good money to see a complete show to watch a photoplay start off thus:

Directed by Adolphus Asyouwere.

Scenario by William Gillworthy Writeum.

Photographed by Hustleemup Getawiggle Overspeedum.

Followed by maybe two hundred feet of pure footage in the shape of "introductions" of artists and near artists, some of whom the audience will most likely get entirely too well acquainted with before the show is done, followed by the picture, without a word of title to tell them what it is all about.

Cause and Remedy.

The cause of title wastage is, according to my observation, as follows: In many theatres, especially large houses, they don't and won't run all the junk about the director, scenario writer and cameraman. They amputate it and join the main title to the body of the play. But this and the placing of the aforesaid junk back where it was before sending the film to the exchange means wastage of title. Now if producers would put the director, writer and cameraman stuff ahead of the title, with the latter joined directly to the main story, those who don't want to run that stuff could use it as a leader, without any trouble or mutilation of the film, and thus titles, which are of real importance, would be protected and saved. Any wastage which might occur would be of the before named junk, which no one wants anyhow.

That we projectionists have the right to enter protest in this matter is due to the fact that in nine cases out of ten when a title is missing, the audience, which knows not the whys and wherefores of such matters, promptly lays not some, but ALL of the blame on the projectionist, even to the extent of, in some instances, hissing him. And when the latter occurs and the manager becomes aware of it he very often, not knowing the real cause, attributes it to some balk the projectionist has made which he did not happen to see.

100 Per Cent. Up to Date.

As to the lens charts, Brother Kitzman, Duluth local union 509 is to be congratulated as 100 per cent. up to date in the matter of lens charts. So far as we know she is the only one, though the charts are very well distributed and that remark is not intended as a reflection on any one.

Notice to All.

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. Threy indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it to both himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times inknowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Don't "guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

As to the perforated blade projection revolving shutter, why we have ourself failed to observe anything of the kind you name, nor have we had complaint of anything of the sort. We publish your comments, however, for the reason that sharpness of definition is an extremely important matter, and if there really is any such effect we all want to know it. Will those using these shutters on high amperage be good enough to make close observations and report to this department.

Comments Most Excellent.

Your comments on the title matter are most excellent. We firmly believe, as we have repeatedly said, that the audience would be very much more interested in knowing the name of the projectionist, who is right there with them. But be that as it may, the suggestion made as to the placing of the aforesaid names AHEAD of the title is just plain common sense.

As to the Projectionist.

With regard to the right of the projectionist to kick at such things we heartily agree with Brother Kitzman. But it is a sad fact that, aside from this department, no one seems to care one tinker's damn how much blame and abuse the projectionist gets for what is the fault of others. The producer likes to see his stuff displayed before the audience artistically, but is he willing to assist the projectionist by giving his legitimate kicks prompt and proper attention. He is NOT, though in the end he is himself the one greatest sufferer by reason of the fact that his productions cannot be placed on the screen as they should be.

Now don't imagine this is a "roast" on the producer. It is NOT. It is a plain statement of FACT, set forth for the real good of all concerned. When the time comes that the producer gives half the concentrated attention to the possibility for artistic reproduction (projection) of his productions upon the screen that he pays to the artistic production of the original, the abuses which projectionists justly complain of will automatically cease.

Auerbach Replies

The following letter is self-explanatory:

Dear Mr. Richardson: With regard to the article in the current number of the "World" entitled "Something to Study," I beg to offer the following comment. The idea therein contained is nothing new. The diagram accompanying the article is merely a diagrammatic or occular demonstration of a certain accepted fact, long ago recognized, that "increasing the distance from center of shutter shaft to center of light beam allows us to decrease the number of degrees of circumference which must be added to a certain basic number of degrees, dependent upon the speed of the intermittent, in order to keep the light beam completely covered by the master blade during the period in which intermittent is moving."

May I respectfully call your attention to my letter which you were kind enough to print in the department of February 28, 1920. The whole thing is there set forth. No unfavorable comment has as yet been made in the department, so I take the liberty of presuming that you and your readers agree with me.

Further Proof.

The further proof of this general proposition may be found in the formula deduced from John Stringer's solution of the shutter blade problem which you will find in my letter in the issue of March 13, 1920, on page 1806. The formula was as follows:

$$\frac{\text{½ diameter of light beam}}{\text{Distance from center of shutter shaft to center of light beam}} = \text{Sine of angle B A C}$$

where angle B A C was equal to one-half of angle of circumference necessary to cover over light beam (in addition to intermittent angle). It is clear that any INCREASE in

GE Compensarcs Insure Good Projection

Because the use of the right compensarc on any circuit insures the proper current for the projection lamps, theatres so equipped can give their patrons pictures that are uniformly strong, steady and devoid of flicker or sudden fading of light.

Because, with the GE outfit, it is so easy for the operator to handle the change-over between reels, there is, even at this time, no flickering or diminution of light on the screen. The outfit is so arranged that the arc on the second machine can be started and adjusted just before the first machine comes to the end of the reel. Then, by throwing a single switch at the actual time of change-over the shift is effected without the slightest break in the projection.

Operating Advantages of Compensarcs

1. Steady strong arc.
2. Easily operates two arcs at the same time for change-over.
3. Quiet arc strike and quick settle-down.
4. Self-regulating arc voltage.
5. Current stays at set value.
6. Current easily raised and lowered.
7. Cannot be damaged by short circuit.
8. Fading made easy.
9. Not affected by changes in current conditions.
10. Quiet in operation.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable. GE offices or distributors everywhere for prompt deliveries and service distance from center of shutter shaft to center of light beam will DECREASE the sine of angle B A C, which means that the total angle will be less.

To go back to the article in the current number of the "World," you say in your comment, "of course all this is, however, somewhat far fetched, inasmuch as the ray diameter would not in practice remain the same at the various distances named." I think here you have forgotten just what the distances represent. They do NOT represent the distances from the center of the lens toward the screen as your comment infers. They represent the distances from center of shutter shaft to center of light beam, all in the same plane with regard to distance of beam from lens.

Friend Auerbach is quite correct. It was stupid of me, but I did commit the error of mistaking the meaning of the distances, due probably to the form of the diagram.

Yes, I think we all agree with the matter contained in the February 28 article, but for some reason the diagram in question had me puzzled. It seemed to be what Auerbach says it is, yet when I looked at it from another angle, I was not certain but that I was mistaken.

Power's Intermittent Lubrication

Hal C. Faulkner, Streator, Illinois, says:

We have just installed two new Power's projectors, and I of course wish to take the best possible care of them. Have projected pictures for several years in a locality where vaseline was considered the best lubricant for intermittent movements.

Here, however, the popular idea seems to be to use an oil in the oil well of the same grade that is used for the rest of the projector. I do not know whether this is merely an idea prevalent in this community, or is a new one discovered while I was in the service. Would thank you for correct dope on this subject.

For quite a long time one projector manufacturer, the Enterprise Optical and Mfg. Company, recommended the use of high grade vaseline in the intermittent oil well of its projector, the Motiograph. Aside from this we do not know of any projector manufacturer who has, for many years, recommended vaseline.

This department has always discouraged its use. If you have a handbook (if you have none then, by all means get one, and at once) turn to page 457, and beginning at the paragraph headed "Oil," read all of page 458 and half of page 459, whereupon you will have acquired pretty thoroughly up-to-date knowledge of projector lubrication. On page 459 occurs the answer to your particular question, as follows:

If the intermittent movement of your machine runs in an oil well, a good grade of lubricant should be used therein. Some manufacturers recommend high grade vaseline for this purpose, which should be melted and poured in.

Personally the writer does not regard vaseline as a satisfactory lubricant. He believes that a good medium-bodied oil, such as a fairly heavy dynamo oil, is much better. But whatever you use in the oil well, remember that the intermittent is subjected to exceedingly heavy service, therefore, unless the lubricant be of high grade, you may expect the cam pins to wear very rapidly.

To this we would add that under no circumstances should graphite, or anything else other than clear oil, be used in an intermittent oil well. The use of graphite in oil wells hase been a prolific source of trouble. It has been known to spring the pins, break them off and even bind up the whole movement.

Never, never use "Three-in-One" or sewing machine oil in the intermittent, on any part of the projector, for that matter. Most—in fact, we believe that all projector manufacturers sell lubricants which they recommend for their projectors. We advise that projectionists either purchase these oils, or else secure from the local light plant the oil they use on their generators.

The latter is, in the very nature of things, bound to be a good lubricant; also it is adapted to the climate, which is a distinct advantage as against an oil sold to be used under all climatic conditions. You need a heavier bodied oil in hot climate than in cold.

From San Quentin Prison

From one of the involuntary boarders in San Quentin (California) State Prison comes a letter which reads, in part, as follows:

Dear Sir and Friend—I take the liberty of thus addressing you because you are the true friend of all projectionists, even though some few still fail to recognize that fact. I am an inmate of the California State Prison, serving a life sentence. In this state after a man has served seven years of such a sentence he is eligible to parole, though he may have to wait ten years before he actually gets it.

I am a subscriber to The World, which is, in my opinion, a leader and not an imitator, and get a great deal of valuable information from every department therein contained. Very often it is amusing to read things in the projection department. After seven years' experience as operator and, later, projectionist, I know there is still much more to learn than we now know about the profession. For that reason, and the further reason that I want to keep as nearly as possible up to date, I inclose forty cents for the question booklets; also four cents for carbon of your reply. It is very hard to keep up with the times, although I have plenty of opportunity for study and have practical experience. The question is what to study and from what.

Prison Has Entertainment.

Every Sunday and holiday we have moving pictures, and for the past year it has been my pleasure and my privilege to exhibit these to the other inmates. As I was in the business before coming here, this not only enables me to put on a good picture but also to keep my hand in.

Possibly a brief description of our equipment might be of interest to yourself and the department readers. At present we have for our own use one No. 2 1910 model Motiograph and one Powers Six, 1910 model. We have no D C, so use a Fort Wayne Compensarc for the Motiograph and an inductor for the Powers. Our throw is 110 feet and the picture 14 feet 2 inches. Use sixty amperes and get a very good picture.

For the women's department we have a De Vry, which is at times also used in the educational department, in which latter there is a Balopticon as well.

There is one other projector in another hall. It is a 1918 model Motiograph, with Mazda equipment. The throw there is sixty feet.

Besides all these projectors, and four shows given every Sunday and holidays, I am employed in the furniture factory, doing bench work. If you would care for it, I will write in greater detail as to kind of shows we have, interest taken by the inmates, etc.

Grabbed the Hoe.

The good friend (I say friend because the fact that a man has done wrong does not necessarily mean that he is basically evil, or even particularly bad, and I believe in giving the sinner a chance. Whisper: I've been quite a sinner myself several time, only I didn't get caught with the goods) is hoeing a hard row of stumps, but from his letter we gather that he has grabbed the hoe, spit on his hands, girded up his loins and went after the aforesaid "row" like a man, instead of whining like a kid because he got what probably was coming to him. I sincerely hope he will get his parole on time, come forth among us again and behave himself. So much for that.

As to what to study if you have not already a handbook I shall be very glad to send you one, free of charge. The question

Defeat Instead of Victory

On page 803 of May 8 issue Sydney Cohen reports the defeat of the Flynn bill, introduced in the New York Legislature for the purpose of at least making a start toward efficiency and competency in projection rooms.

He reports the defeat as a victory for the exhibitors, and says that the proposed law would compel every exhibitor in the territory covered to employ an assistant for his projectionist.

Might I humbly suggest to Mr. Cohen that he at least read the bills he presumes to oppose before he opposes them. The editor of this department went over the bill in question very carefully before it was presented to the Legislature, also after it was printed. There is nothing therein which could, by even the wildest stretch of imagination, be construed as obliging the exhibitor to employ an assistant for his projectionist.

Was a Defeat.

I make unqualified assertion that the defeat of the bill was a DEFEAT and NOT a victory for the exhibitor. And now let me tell Mr. Cohen another little secret which he probably does not know. The bill in question, together with all other license bills, was and is opposed by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators. You don't believe it? Huh, call up union headquarters, Bryant 8676, and be convinced.

The intent of the bill was, as before stated, merely to foster competency, and Mr. Cohen may be assured that the attempt will NOT be abandoned, even though opposed by the Exhibitors' League and International Union.

It is not understandable to me that a man in Mr. Cohen's position would oppose competency—for that is what it amounts to. It would seem that the proposition that competency in so important a place as the theatre projection room is a most excellent investment, even though it involved an advanced price. and is so very simple that its questioning would be impossible.

Does Mr. Cohen honestly believe that cheap, blundering incompetency is preferable to well paid competency? If he owned a theatre would he hunt around for the very cheapest man he could find for manager, regardless of his ability?

We would not say that high class competency in the projection room is as important as high class competency in the manager's office where a high class theatre is concerned, but we do say it is of equal or even greater importance in the small theatre, and is of great importance even in the best.

In opposing the bill in question Mr. Cohen made a very serious mistake and one which will be alike costly to exhibitors and projectionists, because it operates to put off just that much longer the day when a really effective license law can be made effective.

Lecture Recommended

We are in receipt of the following letter from the American Projection Society, an organization of what is commonly termed "Broadway men," meaning the best projectionists in New York City. The letter speaks for itself:

Mr. F. H. Richardson,
516 Fifth Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Sir—The members of the American Projection Society have instructed me to express to you their thanks and appreciation for the very interesting and valuable lecture you gave us recently on "The Optics of Projection."

The lecture points the way to proper procedure in selection and adjustment of the various elements of the projector optical system t secure a maximum result in efficiency and in screen results. It points out all too common errors committed, the evils of heavy pitch in projection and the errors in auditorium lighting which work such great injury in many theatres.

There can, therefore, be no question as to the large value of the lecture, which we heartily commend to projectionists everywhere.

Fraternally yours,
J. HOPKINS, Secretary.

Pine Notch's Grizzly Is a Bear; It Has a Photoplayer, Two Simplexes 'n Everything

THE Grizzly Theatre of Pine Knot, Big Bear Lake, in the San Bernardino Mountains, is a bear of a theatre. One look at the accompanying illustrations will convince you of the fact.

The Grizzly Theatre proprietor has shown what a wide-awake exhibitor can do to make a little five hundred seat house particularly attractive in a unique way.

The exterior of the front of the house is of bark slabs and logs, producing a regular "Forty-Nine" cabin effect. The outside side walls are shingled.

The interior of the house is decorated to resemble a live oak arbor. For one-half of their height the walls are lattice, and from behind this lattice the branches of real oaks extend and meet in the center of the roof, forming a rustic arch that resembles an aisle of the forest.

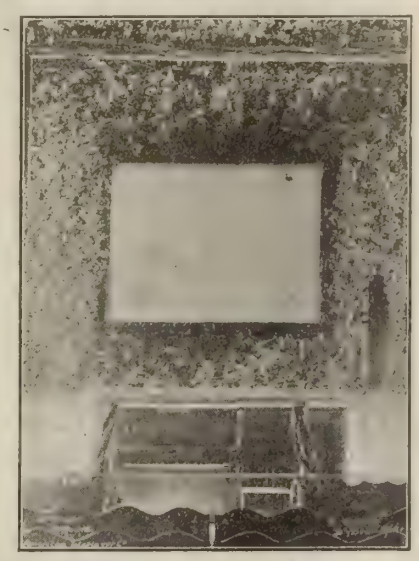
A Rustic Effect.

The oaks were cut after being frost-bitten and the foliage has all the beautiful colors of autumn, which is increased by the lighting system, which consists of inverted electric fixtures which distribute the illumination through the trees.

The stage setting for the screen is a cedar frame surrounded by oak trees.

Although the Grizzly is a little house, the appointments are first class, the music being furnished by a late model Fotoplayer, manufactured by the American Photoplayer Company, while the projection room contains two of the latest model Simplex machines. A ten to fifteen horsepower gasoline motor, belted to a four kilowatt, one hundred and ten volt General Electric generator, furnishes the lights.

The house is heated by gasoline radiators and has its own private and personal artesian well, from which its water supply is obtained.



The American Fotoplayer
That adds so much to the attractiveness of the house.

The theatre plays all the latest pictures and presents a complete change of program every night.

Edwards Aided by Powers

The National People's Liberty League is showing a film booming Gov. Edwards, of New Jersey, for President and using a Power's for the work.

The screen is on the marquee of the Hermitage and the machine is on the second floor of the Subway Central Building projecting across Seventh avenue.

Making the House Look Like More Money Helps to Get It

THE average man does not particularly object paying a fair price if he appears to be getting his money's worth. On this merchandising principle the sales of numerous products have been built up by keen judges of human nature.

Consider the neat and attractive packages in which the average trade marked and advertised product reaches the ultimate consumer. The container adds nothing to the value of the article, but it impresses the purchaser with belief that anything on which so much care and art work has been lavished must be mighty good and worthy all of the attention that it has received from the manufacturer.

This viewpoint of the purchaser is something that the exhibitor can study to advantage and he will be wise to let practice follow the study when he has mastered the particular twist of mentality which was more patently perceptible in the days before the U. S. A. discarded the eagle for the camel as its pet emblem.

You can all remember Pat's joint, down by the railway. There was sawdust on the floor and a roughly chalked "Biggest Schooner in Town" bulletin at the entrance. The bar glassware was of a texture suitable

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

In summers gone by, empty seats have invariably been the cause of considerable loss to exhibitors—people would simply not patronize the hot, stuffy houses.

TYPHOONS, however, have changed all this so that now it is possible to continue right through the hottest weather without the least drop in attendance.

Provide your patrons with a delightfully cool, refreshing TYPHOON breeze during the summer months and your business is bound to increase.

Here is some real '49 atmosphere for you.

for usage as an argument emphasizer and was often utilized as such.

They Felt at Home.

Every rough-neck in town felt at home there and acted accordingly. It did not matter how good the case goods or how liberal the draught of brew, no one but the rough-necks patronized the place intentionally the second time and Pat's charges were of necessity scaled to his patron's ideas of what constituted a proper expenditure for a thirst quencher.

Poor old Pat, he might have purveyed the best grade of wet goods in town, but no one would have believed it or been willing to pay for it if he had been convinced. High prices did not seem appropriate to a place with the facial aspect and interior decorations such as his.

While you may not be willing to admit it, you probably have a fairly distinct recollection of Tony's place, around the corner. It was scrupulously clean. The glassware was of better quality than decorated your own sideboard and a suave and efficient, low voiced Gannymede mixed up decoctions that looked worth all that Tony robbed you for them.

And you glorified in the fact that Tony's scale was a goodly percentage higher than Pat's and paid it willingly because the surroundings made the former's merchandise seem worth it.

Make Your House Harmonize.

All right. Now put yourself in your patron's shoes and see if you cannot realize that it is not sufficient to provide the quality of goods, but that you must also make your house harmonize, inside and out with the grade of your screenings if you would inject into your patrons a willingness to pay that extra amount on admission that means the real velvet of the show business.

If one's lobby looks like an accident and the poster display like an afterthought, how can one expect patrons to hypnotize themselves into belief that they are in refined surroundings and pay accordingly. And how can one expect to make roughnecks feel out of place and make the desirable people feel at home?

It is not a question of size—the smallest houses may be made the cosiest and at least expense. It is simply a matter of taste and willingness to make everything harmonize.

And it is not as if one must take a course in interior decorating complicated with architecture for the whole matter has been thought out for the busy exhibitor and the results put into a new catalog that the Newman Manufacturing Company, of Cincinnati, will gladly send to any exhibitor who would like to make his patrons feel, from the moment that they enter the house that they are about to see a cracking good show.

Here's a Plan for Indirect Lighting of Interest to Those Planning a House

FROM Alexander & Roth, proprietors of the Queen Theatre, Marshall, Texas, comes a request for suggestions regarding the installation of indirect lighting fixtures for a new house which they are building.

The floor plan of the house, which accompanied their inquiry, and which is reproduced herewith, shows that the new theatre will be ninety-nine feet from screen to rear wall and twenty-six feet nine inches wide.

We put the matter up to some of our friends in the lighting business and the first to come across with advice is the X-Ray Reflector Company of New York, who make the following recommendations.

An X-Ray View.

We would suggest the installation of nineteen fixtures, as indicated in the plan. Sixteen of these to be installed in the body of the house and arranged eight fixtures to a row. The rows being thirteen feet five inches apart, with a distance of twelve feet four inches between the fixtures in each row. This will leave a distance of six feet four inches between the front fixtures and the screen, and six feet four inches between the end fixtures and the rear wall of the house.

In addition, it will be noticed that there is a fixture lighting the stairway back of the screen, and two in the toilet room.

These fixtures, as manufactured by the X-Ray Reflector New York, Inc., 31 West 46th street, are known as Eye Comfort fixtures Number 1072D. Each fixture contains a standard X-Ray Reflector interior, equipped with two lights, one of these being a fifty watt and the other a one hundred fifty watt type C lamp. The fixture should be wired for two circuits, so that the reflector containing the fifty watt lamp may be switched on for dim illumination to provide sufficient light to accommodate patrons entering and leaving the house during the showing of a picture, but which will, on account of the soft diffusion from the ceiling, cause no intereference with the screening. The bowls are opaque, which obviates all glare.

Two Degrees of Light.

The one hundred fifty-watt type C lamp may be switched on in addition to the fifty-watt lamp when a brighter illumination is desired during intermission or before shows.

This double installment to each fixture has proven successful in practice, and is well worth the small additional expense.

The X-ray fixtures mentioned may be procured in diameters of either twenty or sixteen inches, and can be obtained in flat white cream or dark gold brown finishes, as desired.

An important fact in connection with a lighting fixture is the color and texture of the ceiling finish. This must be relied upon to properly reflect the light from the fixture source and so distribute it that there will be neither glare nor excessive absorption. A white, cream or even light yellow will be found suitable, but a matte instead of a gloss finish should be chosen, as the latter has too much the properties of a mirror and would tend to produce harsh effects in the lighting scheme.

Absolute cleanliness of the fixtures is important and a thorough blowing out, with a vacuum cleaner, at intervals not less than one week, will be found to insure the best results.

De Hart Returns from Indianapolis Convention

E. E. DE HART, assistant sales manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has just returned from Indianapolis, where he represented the company at the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

The Power's Projectors were used exclusively at the convention and Mr. de Hart states that advertisers and advertising men were greatly interested in several more or less technical talks which he gave them in reference to motion picture projectors

Advertising men in common with most people outside of the motion picture field are rather ignorant regarding the machine which throws the picture on the screen. With the increasing demand for films for advertising purposes has come an increased desire to know more about the machine.

The Nicholas Power Company has been one of the pioneers in the advertising field and the film industry will benefit from its activities in this direction.

Nicholas Power Company,
90 Gold Street,
New York City, N.Y.

Attention of Mr. Will C. Smith, General Manager.

Gentlemen:

As I am about to begin the construction of two additional theaters in this City, I am most naturally concerned as to whether or not I will be able to get six of your latest model machines. I will not require them for four or five months, but, knowing the demand for your machine, want to get my order in early.

I have, as you know, been using your machines for the past 15 years, during which time I have of course tried about every machine manufactured, with the result that I have always had to replace such other makes with Powers to be sure I had the best. I am taking no chances of further experimenting--hence the above order.

I look upon your concern as not only having the best and the most reliable machine on the market, but the matter of personal service and attention that follows the sale of your machines is one that gains for you full confidence of the purchaser. Your accomplishments in the direction of putting a perfect picture on the screen and in the durability of your outfit are especially deserving of my high praise.

"More power to the Powers."

With thanks for past and future courtesies, believe me to be Very sincerely yours,

Tom Moore

President,
